Linkage of pain and pleasure was intended to be an implanted foundation belief leading her to total unconscious surrender to his hypnotic control. The technician and his assistant told the drugged fish-child that she loved to hurt, and loved to be victimized. They were preparing her to accept a lifetime of hurt and victimization caused by hypnotic obedience. This concept also was from the psychoanalytic view of hypnosis:

> ...the nucleus of the masochistic attitude is not to > be found in the fact that the subject wishes to suffer pain, but that he subjects himself completely and unconditionally...(p. 40)...We shall attain a more profound understanding of the psychology of hypnosis by beginning with the psychology of masochism...The Masochist identifies himself with his ruler. By means of his subjection, he shares the enjoyment of the greatness and power of the latter... (Schilder and Kauders, pp. 41-42)

---

[1] That combination is not strange when you consider that Norbert Wiener, founder of cybernetics, wrote that Freud's main concepts (neurosis, repression, the return of the repressed, abreaction, and the importance of early-childhood programming) could all be expressed in terms of mechanical brain function.

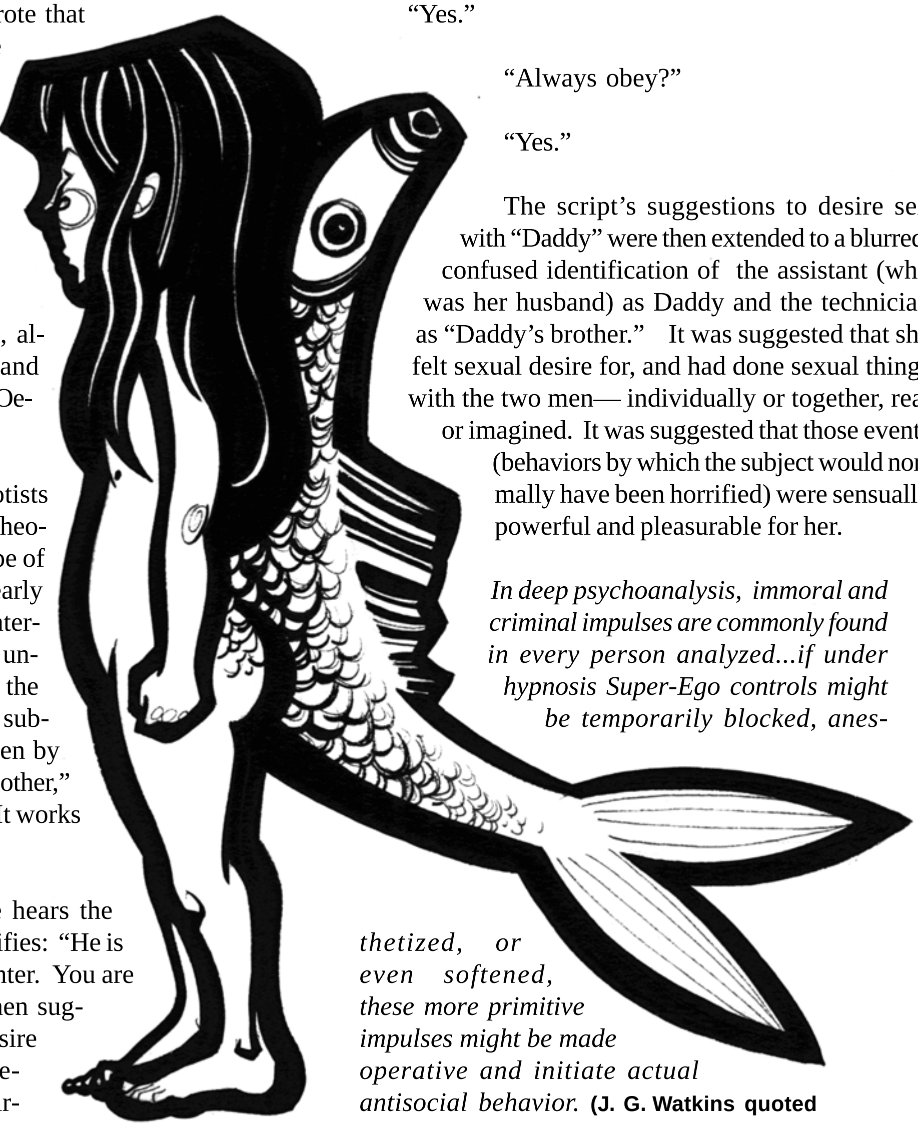
In 1941, R. W. White wrote that the "press of hypnotic dominance evokes a kind of willing surrender, a glad abasement..." ("An Analysis of Motivation in Hypnosis") White said there were similarities between hypnosis and being in love.



An Oedipal Experience

The fish-child, age three, already programmed for humility and obedience, was next immersed in an Oedipal scenario.

Ever since Freud, hypnotists with psychoanalytic training have theorized that the unconscious prototype of hypnotic submission is molded in early childhood. Freudian hypnotists interpret the act of turning over one's unconscious mind to be operated by the hypnotist as a regression. If the subject is male, the regression is driven by fear of the "father" or love of the "mother," depending on the hypnotist's sex. It works opposite if the subject is female.

"I am your father," she hears the assistant say. The technician amplifies: "He is your father. And you are his daughter. You are three years old." The assistant then suggests that she feels incestuous desire for Daddy. The drugged and regressed subject nods in wistful affirmation.

Desire for her opposite-sex parent, "Daddy," intensified to the maximum possible degree, was their Freudian hook.[1] Fish-child, catapulted into a pseudo-Oedipal stage by suggestion under narcohypnosis, now heard the technician say that she and Daddy were "going to play games" and have sexual relations. The technician chuckled, then continued, "You love him and you obey everything he tells you to do. Do you understand?"

"Yes," the drugged woman murmured.

"Will you always remember the commands?"

"Yes."

"Always obey?"

"Yes."

The script's suggestions to desire sex with "Daddy" were then extended to a blurred, confused identification of the assistant (who was her husband) as Daddy and the technician as "Daddy's brother." It was suggested that she felt sexual desire for, and had done sexual things with the two men— individually or together, real or imagined. It was suggested that those events (behaviors by which the subject would normally have been horrified) were sensually powerful and pleasurable for her.

> In deep psychoanalysis, immoral and criminal impulses are commonly found in every person analyzed...if under hypnosis Super-Ego controls might be temporarily blocked, anesthetized, or even softened, these more primitive impulses might be made operative and initiate actual antisocial behavior. (J. G. Watkins quoted in Young, 1952, p. 394)

The "immoral...impulse" suggested and carried out in her drugged fantasy, was incest. Fish-child's superego controls were temporarily blocked and anesthetized with barbiturate. Children

---

[1] Freud said there is an Oedipal stage during which every little boy (at age three or four) feels strong unconscious sexual love for his mother, and a corresponding Electra stage during which a young girl unconsciously longs to replace her mother and be made love to by her father. Psychoanalytic theory sees this stage as a normal episode in a child's psychological development (and usually calls them both "Oedipal.") Since strong emotions of deep guilt and self-loathing tend to be associated with the forbidden desire, the thought is normally repressed. Conscience is being developed. The child then moves into a period of sexual latency which will last until maturity.

> ...are unaware of the social meanings of sexuality... Further, the child does not have the freedom to say yes or no. This is true in a legal sense and also in a psychological sense...children have a hard time saying no to adults... (Finkelhor, 1979)

Their sex conditioning of the fish-child involved both suggested and actual sexual assaults. The operators made sure their subject was genuinely stimulated and genuinely enjoyed that sensation. It is not unusual for sexually abusive experiences to arouse some degree of pleasure in the victim. Mike Lew addressed the victim's dilemma of "What if I enjoyed it?"

> For many survivors, these pleasurable sensations are more upsetting than painful ones...It is likely

Limbic/Emotional Programming

> The more imperative the excitement and the tension, the more foreign its setting for the subject, the greater the disturbance of behavior we may expect... Luria, The Nature of Human Conflicts, p. 253

Why was the hypnoprogramming done in a setting of intense sexual arousal (later, equally great shame and, still later, fear)? Luria said that the artificial neurosis was best accomplished by maximizing the subject's emotional feelings (lust, fear, anger). Emotions are based in a part of the brain called the limbic system.

Limbic Anatomy

The brain has three layers, all interconnected and interactive. Each has its own chemistry and structure. Each has its unique kind of intelligence, its own memory system, and its own method for sensing time and space. Each has individual access to motor functions and can operate somewhat independently.

The upper layer is the cortex. This part of brain consists of the left and right cerebral hemispheres and is analogous to a fully-programmable computer. The bottom layer (brainstem and cerebellum) handles the most automatic biological functions that have central nervous system guidance. The middle layer is located above the brain stem and cerebellum and below the cerebral hemispheres. The middle layer is called the limbic system.

The limbic system, where hormonal and neural systems connect, is the great powerhouse of the brain for emotional behavior. It generates the instinctive drive emotions: hunger, sex, and aggression. Freud called its function the libido or id. Emotions—pleasure, fear, anger, sexual desire—originate in the amygdala, a part of the limbic system. (Love is literally a higher function, based in the neocortex). The hypothalamus is a closely-related limbic center:

> ...the closest thing to our id is probably the hypothalamus, a small bundle of cells centrally located deep in the brain, near the top of the brain stem. This controls anger, joy, hunger, sex, fear and other drives. The most sensational development in all brain research was probably the discovery of pain and pleasure "centers"—really circuits—in or near the hypothalami of animals. (Maya Pines, p. 18)

Curiously, in addition to being the center for our sex and aggression drives, the limbic system also is the switchboard center for our most treasured spiritual experiences. Limbic experiences are what convince us, convert us, and cause us to choose a particular system of values. The Aha! sense of realization comes from the limbic.[1]

Limbic Function

Limbic programming...

1. Maximizes the potential drive to remember the programming
2. Maximizes the unconscious drive to repress the programming
3. Maximizes the dominance of the current programming over competing programming
4. Maximizes the tendency for the programming to be unconscious (limbic function is normally unconscious).

---

[1] Martin Gardner coined that term in an issue of Scientific American.

> to set off a chain of emotional reactions that lead to mistaken conclusions about the nature of abuse...One faulty path arrives at the belief that if any part of it was pleasurable, it wasn't really abuse...It allows perpetrators to confuse their victims into thinking that their participation in the abuse was of their own volition..."You enjoyed it" is a self-seeking statement by the perpetrator that attempts to mask the nature of abuse and enlist the victim as an accomplice. (Lew, p. 132)

The operator then made the fish-child depend, for relief of suggested lust, upon his verbal hypnotic commands, another conditioning ploy. She learned to have an orgasm on hypnotic cue. Orgasmic training created and reinforced her unconditional surrender: FISH LOVES BAD...FEEL GOOD SEX...PLEASE ...FISH NEED... She was taught to enter trance instantly, on cue, by associating induction with

Maximized Drive to Remember Conditioning

Luria wanted to cause severe disturbance in his experimental subjects. Why? Because any strong emotion—sexual desire, anger, fear, or burning shame—reinforces the remembering process.

The suggested sexual arousal and emphasis on pleasure/pain events during the fish-child-slut's conditioning deliberately targeted her limbic system. The technician wanted his programming to be blindly accepted, firmly remembered, and never again conscious. So he programmed her with primary process linkages, in states of intense arousal. The hypnoprogramming suggestions sank into her powerful, instinctual, pleasure-seeking libido. The goal-seeking energy of that reproductive brain sector, which wants what it wants and wants it NOW, was being programmed and enslaved as a foundation for future control of her mind.

Blum studied the role of amplification level relative to the strength of conditioning. He compared the outcomes from various types of affective arousal—the array of possible emotions. (1962, p. 359) Hypnotic suggestions, given to a subject who is feeling the most intense emotion possible at the time, will implant with the maximum unconscious strength. With maximal associated emotion, programming in the unconscious is safest from deterioration, and it will be driven by the most energy.

Maximized Drive to Repress Conditioning

The more primitive the emotion (lust and rage), and the greater its intensity, the more likely it is to trigger a natural repression. If repression kicks in, it walls that memory off from conscious knowing. Urges of sex and aggression are both normally repressed. That type of repression begins as soon as a child is becoming civilized.

Maximized Dominance over Competing Programming

Primary process thought is drive-related thought. Drive-related thought is based in the limbic system. Any thoughts that are drive-related tend to be powerfully motivated. The limbic also has a built-in mechanism for motivating us without our conscious awareness of it. Emotionally-driven action tends to be reflexively dominant over intellectual reasoning in the brain circuity. It can send a person into action before his cortex can stop it.

There is a good reason why we are made this way. We jump away from the sound of a suspicious rattle or from the sight of a long narrow silhouette under a nearby bush. We may, a moment later, realize that sound or sight wasn't really a snake. We reacted first, then analyzed the situation. That reflexive dominance helps to keep us alive. Normally, it doesn't harm us to jump from a false alarm, and it could badly harm us not to jump.

The limbic system has a dominant role in reflexive response because input is relayed to the amygdala first. The amygdala makes a reflexive response based on its programming. The input then moves on to the cortex for a second stage of processing which is more rational and detailed. That second stage may result in rejection of the first response. It's not a snake after all.

However, if the limbic programmed reflex causes the subject instantly to descend into a deep trance state, the rational center is blocked from participation until the subject is released from trance. If the subject returns to the analyzing state of consciousness with amnesia for what just happened, the rational cortex continues to be blocked from reprogramming the lower center.

If the amnesia did not exist, the conscious mind would use the appropriate and powerful emotions of rage, shame, and fear at being so used to reprogram itself and to make another such mind-invasion impossible. For it is emotion that gives us the power to reprogram ourselves. In this way, shame and pain can bless you by providing the energy to overcome previous, bad habits and achieve desirable real deep-level change.

effort toward orgasm (and also with craving for the barbiturate induction rush).

Does sexual conquest lead to compliance in other mental matters? "Sexuality to the mind of the patient involves unconditional love or surrender...." (Wolberg, 1964, p. 364) "If a response is...associated with a high level of motivation—the response is expressed vigorously," a stimulus-response expert wrote. (Valenstein, p. 43) Rasputin was a priest-hypnotist whose influence was a factor in the fall of Russia's last czar. A biographer explained his rise to power: "Unequivocal sexuality was a means of establishing authority, not just the result of an unbearable itch." (De Jonge, p. 130).

Hilgard's Type One and Type Two Hypnotic Amnesias

E.R. Hilgard classified hypnotic amnesias (dissociation) into two types. Type one is an amnesia which can be reversed under hypnosis and the memory retrieved. Type one neurosis can be easily cured. Type two is a more severely repressed amnesia and much harder to heal. Hilgard said it was of a "psychoanalytic" nature.

> [It] includes conflictual material arising in the earliest stages of development, when affect and ideation are not clearly distinguished, and when impulses are inadequately translated into verbal symbols. The repressed material may include later material deeply repressed because of its associations with trauma and guilt. Whatever the origins of the deeply repressed material, it is not directly recovered in free association, in dreams, or in the hallucinations of the troubled mind... (Hilgard, Divided Consciousness, p. 252)

The conditioning process also titillated the technician and his assistant:

> The psychology of the hypnotized is incomplete without the psychology of the hypnotizer...He must feel incorporated in himself, in some obscure corner of his soul, this magical power; he must raise the demand for unconditional masochistic subjection and must bear within him the wish for the sexual subordination of the other person. The fear of violation on the part of the hypnotized necessarily is a concomitant of the wish to violate on the part of the hypnotizer. We very well know that lay hypnoses are—as a matter of fact—often made use of as means of sexual approach. (Schilder and Kauders, Hypnosis, p. 47)

SEX = HYPNOSIS

Then they taught the fish-child (and now slut) a terrible secret about the delight of sex. She learned that the incestuous sex (with "Daddy") was the same as hypnosis. SEX = HYPNOSIS. Statements making that (preposterous) linkage were repeated over and over to her uncritical, nonanalytical, drugged, unconscious mind until it believed it. Hypnosis would be desired like sex. Revealing the secret act of being hypnotized would be feared as much as revealing the fulfillment of incestuous sexual desire.

SO ASHAMED: Guilt Training

The script now abruptly shifted from suggesting extreme incestuous desire to suggesting equally extreme shame and self-denunciation. The technician already had suggested the sensual three-year-old fish-child-slut into being. He had filled her with acute desire and trained her in abandonment to lust. Now he aroused an equally acute, extreme emotion of SHAME in her. He assigned to her all responsibility for feeling lust, for her sexual arousal, for her abandoned behavior (hallucinated or real).

Brainwashers first disorient the victim, then induce self-betrayal, then guilt:. After forcing the prisoner to engage in those shameful acts, the captors shift to building guilt because of the shameful acts. Or, the captors may work to find out what their victim feels most genuinely guilty about, and then probe at that sore spot, hour after hour, day after day.

Guilt can bring a person to a breaking point. It can even cause multiple personality. In children of the fish-child-slut's suggested age, experiences of betrayal, confusion, brutal domination, and an intolerable burden of guilt are known to have caused spontaneous personality splittings. The fish-child-slut had, already, been put through betrayal, confusion, and brutal domination. Her guilt training came next.

The programmer said, "You love it. It feels so good. You're so ashamed. Don't tell. You mustn't ever tell. It's secret, don't tell." Again and again he told her how BAD she was for feeling those feelings: "BAD, BAD, BAD. It's all your fault. You're SO ashamed."

Her narcohypnotized brain accepted this new layer of suggestions. She felt excruciating, intolerable shame. The programmers built those shame feelings up to the maximum possible degree of limbic intensity.

Why was the technician doing this to her? There were at least two reasons:

1) This process mimicked the natural development of masochism—which is an unconscious willingness (or even desire) to be abused. Research has shown that adult victims of child abuse will accept cruel and hurtful use in later intimate relationships if they unconsciously believe that the treatment they experienced in childhood was deserved because they were "bad."

2) They were creating a conflict which would be used to drive an amnesia program (splitting her personality). Sex, shame, and rage (especially in a child or a hypnochild persona) are so very painful to the conscious mind that there is a natural tendency for the mind to repress them.

DON'T REMEMBER: Amnesia Resolves Drive Conflict

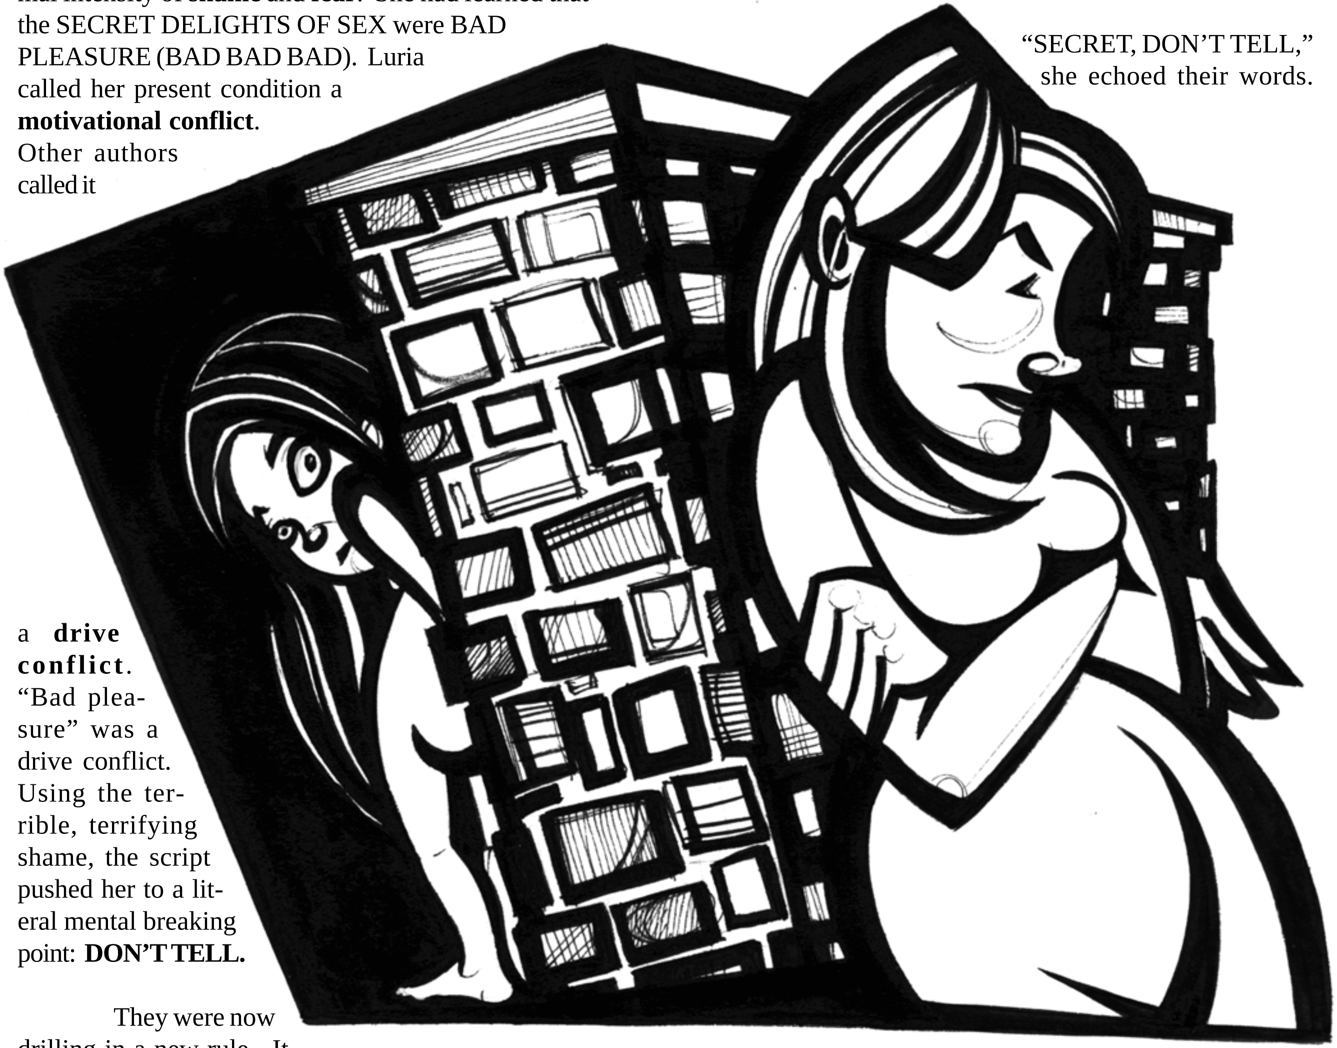
Next, the script pushed her to solve the artificial conflict by instituting a very real amnesia. She was now experiencing both a maximal intensity of desire, and a maximal intensity of shame and fear. She had learned that the SECRET DELIGHTS OF SEX were BAD PLEASURE (BAD BAD BAD). Luria called her present condition a motivational conflict. Other authors called it a drive conflict. "Bad pleasure" was a drive conflict. Using the terrible, terrifying shame, the script pushed her to a literal mental breaking point: DON'T TELL.

They were now drilling in a new rule. It was a rule of repression that resolved the conflict. Over and over, they said, "You must not remember. You are so ashamed. You must forget. You must never remember because you are so ashamed." The fish-child-slut registered the new rule in her limbic system circuits. She obediently repeated it for the masters:

"DON'T REMEMBER...FISH BAD FISH...FISH LIKE BAD SEX...BAD FISH LIKE SEX TOO MUCH...BAD BAD FISH...WON'T REMEMBER... HYPNOSIS... SEX-HYPNOSIS ... MUST NOT REMEMBER ...FISH IS BAD, BAD... SECRET FISH... MUSTN'T TELL. FORGET BAD GIRL."

Now they added one more, devastating, element to the Oedipal scenario. They had already aroused maximum guilt and fear in the Oedipal scenario (those BAD sexual desires and acts with "Daddy"). Now the operator directed her unconscious guilt and fear toward "Mama." They told her drugged, unconscious mind that her conscious mind was Mama. Over and over, they repeated that she MUST keep all this secret from "Mama." "Don't tell. Don't tell Mama," the programmer said again and again.

"SECRET, DON'T TELL," she echoed their words.



"SO ASHAMED, DON'T TELL. MUST NOT TELL. MUSTN'T TELL MAMA. DON'T TELL MAMA. SECRET, DON'T TELL."

Amnesia Results in Split Personality—Once the fish-child-slut accepted that piece of brilliant, but malignant, programming, the subject's artificial neurosis—and her artificial personality splitting—was accomplished. An unconscious part of her mind had been persuaded to build a wall of amnesia. The wall blocked off its own conscious mind from access to the memories and knowings that the unconscious split possessed. From then on, one part of her mind (the split) knew, but was afraid to tell. Her conscious mind did not know and would, supposedly, never know.

Buried guilt (or aggression), isolated from the conscious mind's light of reason, tends to be exaggerated, intense, irrational—and therefore powerful. After this, her conscious mind did not know what happened during the times when her secret split-off self was called out (under hypnosis).[1] The technician had caused a mental reorganization (a CIA euphemism for artificial personality splitting) in her brain. Because of the wall of amnesia, the part of her to whom those SECRET things had happened thereafter developed as a distinctly different mind. She was an artifi-

---

[1] All this took time. The brain has (literally) to grow major changes in its organization: "It is now acknowledged that subjects must be allowed sufficient time to achieve desired psychophysiologic reorganizations..." (Gorton, "The Physiology of Hypnosis," p. 30)

Military Limbic Hypnoprogramming

Walter Bowart began researching the subject of military hypnoprogramming after...

> A young man I'd known since childhood had returned from a tour of duty in the U.S. Air Force, with amnesia, remembering nothing of his service years, except having had a good time. He subsequently learned, through intensive private psychotherapy, that he'd been hypnotized and conditioned. His mind had been unmade, then remade: his mind had been controlled.
>
> I was completely fascinated by his story, but naturally, in 1973, I thought it was an isolated, single event. Then, quite by accident, a few months later, I overheard another man in my hometown telling what was essentially the same story....After hearing the second story I began to wonder how many more men had their memories erased. (Bowart, Operation Mind Control, pp. 21-22)

Bowart ran ads in several magazines seeking:

> ...ex-servicemen who have reason to believe they were hypnotized (or drugged) while in the service and subsequently exhibited signs of amnesia or hypermnesia... (Ibid., pp. 21-22)

He received more than a hundred replies. To eliminate the possibility of war trauma amnesia, Bowart rejected all those who had been in actual combat. He also rejected those who had no security clearance or had not been connected somehow with military intelligence. The remaining eighteen men all had security clearances, were connected with military intelligence, had great difficulty remembering their conditioning period, and could remember only isolated events from their military years.[1]

Over the next two years, Bowart interviewed those eighteen men in depth. He also researched the general technology and history of hypnoprogramming. He asked friends who had military intelligence credentials to search the M.I. Classified Index for titles of government studies in "drugs, hypnosis, behavior modification, and related subjects." They found nothing of significance, only peripheral references.

Bowart did find some relevant-sounding articles, written under numbered military contracts, cited in the bibliographies of scientific journals. He searched the National Technical Information Service catalogue card files in Washington, D.C., looking for the numbers of those military contracts. The NTIS catalogue lists all government contracts, classified or not, in numerical order. He found numbered entries about which information was publicly available, but none of those dealt with military hypnoprogramming. He found numbered entries marked classified, but none of those were relevant either. The particular numbers which Bowart sought (the ones he had found in the bibliographies of hypnosis articles in civilian scientific journals, the ones he believed dealt with government mind-control research) were all missing from the index.

Operation Mind Control

Bowart organized what he had learned from interviews with the men who answered his ad, and the general background research, into a book about military and CIA hypnoprogramming, Operation Mind Control.[2] He summed up, in one chapter, the cially-created multiple personality.

---

[1] Also, none of them could remember their childhood normally. Bowart never mentioned if their unconscious isolate was defined as a child. If the artificial split personality was a "child," its repression programming could generalize to the subject's real childhood, making it also difficult to remember.

[2] Bowart's book is long out of print and hard to find. He seems never to have written another. I located one rough photocopy through a bookstore and one original by interlibrary loan from the Air Force Academy Library. Using the library loan system requires placing your name and address on record. For Bowart's book, you may prefer to avoid that.

Communication Rules—The technician drilled into her mind several strict rules regarding future communication by the fish-child-slut:

She could speak only to the technician or his assistant and only when called out in hypnosis.

She could communicate only in dirty words.[1]

She could communicate only in a state of steadily (slowly) increasing sexual desire.

The last two rules amused the masters. They further gagged the fish-child-slut. Her speech form and physiological condition while speaking would be inadmissible in polite company. If she ever told what she knew, the listener experience of those eighteen men as a composite he called "David":

---

[1] M. H. Erickson learned that vulgar or suggestive language is powerful at the unconscious level. In "The Method Employed to Formulate a Complex Story for the Induction of an Experimental Neurosis in a Hypnotic Subject," he deliberately worked crude sexual references into the story to be implanted. This may have been a factor in their choice of rules.

> ...many of the stories I uncovered have been left on the editing room floor. Each individual in this book stands for and tells the story of many victims of mind control. (Ibid., p. 25)

"David" was a bright, ambitious, young man of good character who enlisted in the U.S. Air Force, in 1969, for a four-year hitch. His enlistment process included a thorough assessment of his personality, character, and hypnotic susceptibility. Markers for susceptibility included high intelligence and having an imaginary playmate as a child. All Bowart's interviewees matched on both items.

The men told Bowart of a scene in which > "It seemed like somebody was violating me—raping my mind. I was strapped down in the bed. I was yelling and screaming about something. I'm not the type of person that cusses that much. I hardly ever use foul language, but I know that I said some pretty foul things to those men who were with me. They were officers, and in the service you can't call a superior officer an obscene name without getting punished. Yet I don't think I was ever reprimanded..." (Ibid., p. 29)

That description gives the impression that their conditioning process, like that of the fish-child-slut, involved Freud's primitive instinctual drives. In these males, however, the rage drive appears to have been maximized instead of the sex drive.[1]

> The body's first response [to anger] is a surge of energy, the release of a cascade of neurotransmitters called catecholamines. If a person is already aroused or under stress, the threshold for release is lower... (Ibid.)

After the limbic system was fully stimulated, the splitting suggestions would come next.

Project Monarch

Mark Phillips, in a short piece, privately published, also described military use of hypnoprogramming. He said Project Monarch was a "trauma-based psychological mind control." It used two different conditioning routines, "Alpha" and "Beta." "Alpha programming is accomplished through deliberately subdividing the victim's personality."[2] He said "Beta" programming was

> ...a combination of Alpha 'logic' programming and Beta primordial (primitive mind) sex programming....This programming eliminates all learned moral convictions and stimulates the primitive sexual instincts devoid of inhibitions.

Alpha sounds like rage-trauma programming for males. Beta sounds like the Operation Often process of sex conditioning. Phillips said the purpose was to create a superperson:

> The original purpose of Alpha was to program (train/condition the mind through torture) the espionage agent to perform certain difficult tasks...lock in photographic memory...along with...other superhuman traits.

---

[1] Anger "usually arises out of a sense of being trespassed against—the belief that one is being robbed of what is rightfully his." (Gibbs, p. 64) They were indeed being robbed: of the right to one mind, indivisible.

[2] Phillips also spoke of left-right brain division followed by a controlled reconnection. Both the division and reconnection probably were accomplished by suggestion rather than surgery.

would hear thoughts expressed by a naive three-year-old persona in a state of growing sexual excitement and using shockingly crude language. Such communication was unthinkable.

Obedience Training

> It has been known for many years by researchers in the field of hypnosis that terror, especially when created by physical torture, is brutally effective in enhancing the power and control of the hypnotic trance. The subject's suggestibility increases, and he becomes more compliant in order to bring an end to suffering.
>
> - Bain, The Mind-control of Candy Jones, p. 210

The new, split-off personality had finished its pseudo-Oedipal training stage. Next she was subjected to a pseudo-anal stage: obedience training.

Aversive Conditioning

Their method for obedience training is called operant conditioning. This is the carrot-and-stick method. (They continued to work with her in a condition of drug-hypnosis.) The carrot was freedom from pain. The "stick" was an electric prod. Aversive conditioning is a technical term for the stick side of the operant equation. It means training by punishment. The prod taught her secret split to eliminate hesitation (resistance) and instantly obey any instruction given under hypnosis. This conditioning phase compelled the fish-child-slut to become a humanly intelligent stimulus-response machine.

The training was simply a series of difficult obedience tests given, to her, in the presence of the prod. If she showed the least hesitation, or resistance, to any command, the assistant touched her skin with the end of the thick metal stick. The shock-punishment was so swift, certain, and painful that her fear was stimulated to the greatest possible intensity.

Classic Pavlovian Conditioning—Aversive conditioning is a type of classic Pavlovian conditioning. Mowrer (1946) explained that aversive conditioning is a three-step process with the linking variable of fear:

- Stimulus (prod) causes fear, a powerful drive.
- Fear of prod produces linked fear of disobeying, which then also acts as a drive.
- Subject learns to obey.

In the language behaviorist conditioners use: fear of the shock had generalized in her mind to become fear of the behavior (failure to obey reflexively) that resulted in shock. In aversive conditioning an alternative response must be available which will not be punished. The fish-child-slut's only available safe response was to obey reflexively any hypnotic "suggestion": instantly, unthinkingly, mechanically, without analysis, evaluation, or deviation. Learning by association, she soon feared delayed, or incomplete, obedience as much as she feared the shock. She had dealt with her fear drive by learning to avoid behavior that caused the shock.

She learned to drink whatever she was told, eat whatever she was told, do whatever she was told. Disobedience to any hypnotic suggestion became unthinkable. They were the omnipotent masters and she obeyed—no matter how objectionable, outrageous, humiliating, or self-defeating their command was. In this prodded phase, she acquired a habit (reflex) of automatically performing the technician's hypnotic commands. In trance, she was now a kind of enfleshed robot.

The extremities of pain, shame, and useless anger she went through, in this stage and in other stages of her conditioning, also taught her unconscious mind helplessness. She learned helplessness. That further reinforced the power of the masters in her unconscious mind.

Artificial Superego: Rules

A mind does not normally split into just two parts. In natural personality splitting, the original mind tends to fracture into at least three parts: 1) the original personality, 2) a libido split, and 3) a superego split. The script foresaw that tendency. The operator now programmed a third major split. This one was an artificial superego, an unconscious balance to the fish-child-slut's libido-identity. She became the fish-child-slut-Rules.

The rules were all their rules. The fish-child-slut-Rules sector of the subject's mind now, more carefully than ever before, recorded and stored every word the masters spoke while she was under hypnosis. Those words were the Rules. Hypnotic obedience, action in conformity to the Rules, was now her unconscious mind's strongest deciding parameter. Rules ruled.

Her basic conditioning was done. They had built into her unconscious mind a servant (fish-child-slut-Rules) who would always do the master's bidding—even if painful, shameful, or self-injuring.

Electroconvulsive Shock

Inducing amnesia was an important* [CIA] *Agency goal. "From the ARTICHOKE point of view," states a 1952 document, "the greater the amnesia produced, the more effective the results."

John Marks, 1979, pp. 40-41

The two Operation Often programmers also wanted an unbreachable amnesia by which to cover the tracks of their invasion of the subject's mind. Keeping the methods of their secret technology securely hidden was a high priority for them—and also for the persons who had provided the tools of that technology to them. Amnesia caused by fear of unconscious threats, or by suggestions under narcohypnosis, is strong, but they knew an even more powerful method to generate amnesia. It would leave their conditioning implanted in her unconscious intact. It would erase all remaining conscious memory of the past weeks during which they had been conditioning her.

They used a portable electroshock machine to give her a series of electroshock knockouts.[1] Those electro-assaults caused a retroactive amnesia affecting memories of her conditioning period. The shocks might cause some brain damage. That was a reasonable price (in their view) to most fully ensure secrecy. The shocks also made her more suggestible, less able to resist, and (by the last of the series) rendered her bizarrely "calm." Thus it happened that, one morning, the subject found herself strangely calm—and unable to remember what had happened during the preceding weeks. There have been similar cases:[2] > 15 March, 1995, two patients of New Orleans therapist Valerie Wolf testified before the Advisory Committee on Human Radiation Experiments....they were permitted to testify because some of the names of CIA-connected researchers they mentioned were already familiar to the Committee....

>
> [They] remembered sessions when they were around eight years old that involved electric shocks, hypnosis, shots with needles...sexual abuse and even training in intelligence tradecraft. One case occurred from 1972 to 1976 and the other in 1958. This testimony was not covered by the media.
>
> (Daniel Brandt, Prevailing Winds/3)

---

[1] John Marks said the CIA made portable electroshock machines available to its operators.

[2] The report in John DeCamp's The Franklin Cover-up that the CIA turned children into split-personality "sex slaves" is likely derived from this Operation Often programming technology.

Electroshock in Military Hypnoprogramming

Finding electroshock being used in association with hypnoprogramming was a total surprise to Bowart as he interviewed his military subjects. After hypnoconditioning, "David" woke up in a hospital bed. He did not remember the shock series. He did not remember the past six weeks. But he did remember waking up:

> ...Through the gray waters of amnesia he drifted, coming back from blind coma...David's body lay still in the military hospital bed...Then his eyes opened. "When I woke up," David said, "I couldn't remember anything. I couldn't remember how I'd gotten there or why I was in the hospital." (Bowart, David chapter)

He asked the doctor why he was there. He was told that his treatment was because he had tried to commit suicide. He didn't believe that. He was then tested by two men doing a traditional nice cop, mean cop interrogation routine:

> "One guy would ask me questions in an accusatory manner. Another guy would come over and say comforting things. Then the first guy would come back and accuse me again. Then the second guy would come and pat my arm and be friendly. I could remember their faces and their tone of voice, but I couldn't remember the content of what they were talking about." (Ibid.)

Hypnotists have three routine tests for deep trance control: 1) suggested amnesia, 2) obedience to a complex posthypnotic suggestion, 3) negative hallucination. David's amnesia was complete so item one could be checked off. He obeyed the complex posthypnotic command to be able to remember his interrogators' faces and tone of voice, but none of the content of what they were talking about. Item two could be checked off.

The negative hallucination might have concerned the presence and activity of a fourth man in the room, someone whom David had a posthypnotic suggestion to neither see nor hear. If such a fourth person observed David's failure to see him, item three could also be checked off.

Before the ECT series commenced, Bowart's interviewees were emotionally upset, yelling enraged obscenities at an officer. But they were all totally calm after the shock treatments: "I was not resentful. I was passive." (Ibid.)

Psychic Driving

> Accompanying the interview was a photograph of a young woman wearing headphones and the caption described her listening to her repeated confession ...[Dr. Cameron] was confronted with the "same problems as professional brainwashers" because his patients, like prisoners of the Communists, tended to resist and had to be broken down.
>
> - Thomas, Journey into Madness, p. 170

Electroshock leaves subjects "confused, vulnerable, and open to hearing repeated messages." (Weinstein, 137) Cameron's overall concept of how to reprogram persons was a seductively simple two-step process. First he blanked the subject's brain with electroshock.[1] Then he attempted to drill what he considered a new, better personality into that supposed blank. His procedure required

(1) the breaking down of ongoing patterns of the patient's behavior by means of particularly intensive electroshocks (depatterning);

(2) the intensive repetition (sixteen hours a day for six or seven days) of prearranged verbal signals (psychic driving);

(3) during this period of intensive repetition, the patient is kept in partial sensory isolation... (Cameron

---

[1] He also called that process depatterning. This author calls it blowing them to hell with electric zaps.

> quoted in Thomas, pp. 129-134)

After being electroshocked, fish-child-slut-Rules heard certain simple messages repeated over and over. One of them was I WAS BAD BUT NOW I'M GOOD. Because of psychic driving, I WAS BAD BUT NOW I'M GOOD became the unconscious foundation thought for her conscious personality's new life as an unknowing hypnoprogrammed person. She learned to believe that her programmers had helped her by making those changes in her mind. They had "fixed" a "bad" person by turning her into a "good" person.

Dr. Cameron promoted this method of reprogramming people by making them listen to a repeated, recorded message. His goal was to get a message permanently implanted in the subject's unconscious mind. His psychic driving technique could be used to break a subject, or to implant a thought in the subject's mind.

Messages driven in over and over by repetition on TV or radio are an type of psychic driving called advertising. When you listen to the same song played over and over, you're allowing that song to program you—psychic driving. A thought that returns to mind again and again can be a symptom of neurosis. By that definition, psychic driving deliberately creates neurosis. Cameron also called it "beneficial brainwashing."

After Cameron believed that he had depatterned people's minds with electroshockings, he attempted to reprogram or "re-pattern" them using repeated, taped messages driven in by headphones which the subject was compelled to wear. He began researching psychic driving in 1953, well before portable cassette tape players with tiny earphones hit the market. Cameron's subjects wore primitive headsets with heavy ear coverings.

His method was depersonalized, technologized, and had potential for mass application. In his first grant application, to the Society for the Investigation of Human Ecology, for money to research psychic driving , Cameron explained:

> ...by continued replaying of a cue communication, a persistent tendency to act in a way which can be predetermined can be established. In other words, by driving a cue communication one can without exception, set up in the patient a persisting tendency for that cue statement...to return to his own awareness....the dynamic implant...if reinforced by repeated driving, tends to activate more and more of the components of the relevant community of action tendencies...

The CIA liked that. They started to fund his research.

Cue Statement: a Dynamic Implant

Cameron called a repeated message—such as I WAS BAD BUT NOW I'M GOOD—a cue statement. His goal was for the driven words, and their content, to spontaneously return—in an intensely persuasive way—into the subject's consciousness whenever a related thought arose. He wanted those words to be accepted and retained as deep-level programming. After that, they would be established as parameters by which the subject would base all her unconscious choices.

Cameron described psychic driving in an article titled "Repetition of Verbal Signals: Behavioral and Psychological Changes," (American Journal of Psychiatry). He called the words that were drilled in, until they acquired a powerful life of their own in the subject's brain, a dynamic implant. (Cameron, 1956, p. 503) The cue statement was considered to be "dynamic" when it began to spontaneously return to the subject's conscious mind. The subject, if the psychic driving had been done under hypnosis, would have no conscious knowledge of where the thought came from, or why it came. If that ignorance continued, the message might stay dynamic for years, perhaps permanently.

The cue message could be selected from things that the patient had said in "therapy" or it could be created

> ...on the basis of our knowledge of the dynamics of the patient, and predetermined plans for changes in the personality of the patient. (Cameron, "Further Report on the Effects of Repetition of Verbal Signals," p. 210)

He suggested choosing it "from one of the original areas from which the patient's current difficulties arise." (Cameron, 1956) It "may be based for instance, upon the patient's lifelong feelings of inadequacy or his passivity" (Cameron, 1956, p. 503) He said

> ...we have found that the best results can be obtained if we attempt to change a characteristic which has already been recognized by the patient as deviant and undesirable...he has wished to change it, he has already made many attempts both in reality and in fantasy to do so... (Cameron, 1962, p. 752)

Therefore, the subject was made to listen, over and over, to a message about the past behavior or failure for which he felt the greatest burden of guilt. Cameron said that the cue message should deal with one topic only and be no longer than twenty seconds. (Later, he said five to seven seconds.)

In a second article on psychic driving (1962), Cameron and his associates distinguished between the effectiveness of a repeated message excerpted from the patient's own words, and a message in somebody else's words and voice. He had discovered that driving the subject's own words was much more effective: "...we have usually found our purpose achieved within about 30 minutes of driving." A message in another person's words "is best carried on over extended periods...for 10 to 12 hours a day..." The cue statement was her own words: I WAS BAD BUT NOW I'M GOOD.

Cameron's subjects listened in either a normal waking state, or in a drugged state, or under hypnosis, or under narcohypnosis:

> Among the various ways of preparing the patient, one of the first used was to disinhibit him so that his defenses might be reduced. Sodium amytal was used in a number of cases...There is currently under exploration [psychic] driving under hypnosis... (Cameron, 1956, pp. 503-504)

Grateful for Her "Cure"—In the final stage of brainwashing, a subject does what is ordered and thinks as she is supposed to think. She also experiences heartfelt gratitude for the effort the brainwashers spent on her "cure." In this final step of the conditioning of fish-child-slut-Rules, she was made to accept moral responsibility for causing that conditioning.

She was taught that her conditioning was the remedy for all her past failures—the acts she felt most guilty about (sex out-of-wedlock and terminated pregnancies). The programmers made her believe that their conditioning was really all her fault. She came to understand that it was a necessary and praiseworthy "treatment" to cure her of that otherwise incurable badness. She had been BAD. Now she was GOOD.

Psychic driving also taught her to feel (inescapably, forever) grateful to the two conditioners for their efforts on her behalf. Now she appreciated all the hard work the technician and his assistant had done—and all the risks they had taken in order to change her in those special ways and make her GOOD. After the psychic driving was finished, she felt profound, sincere gratitude.

Proud to Be a Good One—Psychic driving also made her PROUD of having been robotized, of being such a good machine, hidden inside a normal-appearing human woman. She had suffered a lot of pain, shame, and anger in the process of becoming that new creature. The programmers channeled all her negative emotions—especially the terrible humiliation—into a compensatory unconscious pride. She was proud of being such an incredibly, absolutely, mindlessly obedient hypno-robot. Fish-child-slut-Rules thus vicariously shared in the glory of the masters' amazing control over her.

Cover Personality

The programmers believed that they had repressed all the subject's memory of their conditioning process. They now gave the instructions which would set up her front person. CIA goalsetters called this her new personality. A secret agent has a cover identity. A hypnoprogrammed person who unknowingly lives a double life—one concealed behind chronic, systematized amnesia—has a cover personality.

Hypnotic suggestions set up the basic parameters of fish-child-slut-Rules's cover personality. She was to act 1) sane 2) normal, and 3) positive/cheerful. Those rules were designed to keep safely out of sight the psychological warping caused by her conditioning. The cover was maintained as a status quo in a natural way by unconscious defense mechanisms and rationalizations. The programmers wanted her always to act appropriately—unless they told her to act bizarre. The cover personality was carefully designed to block all expressions of repressed energy that did not serve the operators' purposes and to channel them into ways that did serve their purposes. It could not be perfect, but it came close.

The repressed, hidden artificial split was instructed to contain, and conceal, all that was abnormal, "insane," and despairing in her mind. It covered and hid all the pain, shame, guilt, anger, and ugliness in the secret life of a hypnoprogrammed person. The cover programming created a living mask that faced outside, toward the public (even her own family) and lied to them, preventing them from realizing the true circumstances of her life. The cover was also an inward barrier: a wall between self and self, that kept her conscious mind ignorant of all that her unconscious knew.

The subject's conscious mind had an illusion of completeness. She had no idea how much of her thinking was blocked from her awareness by that inner wall. She had no idea how much happened that she didn't know about. When she told lies (rationalizations), she didn't know they were lies.

Interlocking Amnesias

The Operation Often subject was entrapped by a variety of interlocking and mutually reinforcing amnesias, both physiological and psychological. Here follows a list of everything done to her with amnesia-generating potential:

1) She was given repeated doses of barbiturates.

2) Her trance was deep enough to result in natural dissociation.

3) She was subjected to deliberate disorientation: "down by the water...playing with the oyster man...", becoming fish, and then child (capacity regression).

4) The seemingly chaotic, senseless series of traumas that followed and the cruel ridicule by the programmers further disempowered her.

5) The fish-child was loaded with traumatic and shameful urges and experiences and phony "memories" of incestuous sexual experience. She became fish-child-slut. Painful and shameful thoughts and traumatic incidents during her conditioning pressured her toward a natural model of developing split personality.

6) The conditioning period was sharply unrelated to life as she had previously known it. She had cognitive dissonance. How can you believe a bizarre nightmare?

7) Fish-child-slut was urged to feel shame, guilt, and fear and then told, "Don't tell Mama"—her conscious mind being identified as "Mama." She became a split personality.

8) Their obedience training programmed her to absolute obedience to every command, including amnesia suggestions, using an electric cattle prod. She became fish-child-slut-Rules.

9) Fish-child-slut-Rules was made unable to communicate except in a socially intolerable manner (extreme profanity, sexual content, and while in a state of increasing sexual excitement).

10) "You will remember nothing" commands were repeated over and over to the deeply hypnotized subject.

11) An ECT series caused disorientation, functional amnesia, and greater susceptibility to suggested mind-splitting and forgetting.

12) By accepting I WAS BAD BUT NOW I'M GOOD and becoming grateful for the change in herself, the subject's unconscious further submitted to the repression.

Amnesia made the artificial structure now implanted in her brain, inaccessible to changes, or dismantling, by her conscious mind. If a conscious mind never encounters, experiences, or becomes aware of a problem in its unconscious programming, it is never able to correct it.

Shifting the Rapport

The technician then shifted the rapport. He shifted control of the subject, from himself, to the intended long-term operator, his assistant (her husband). He accomplished that by simply telling her under hypnosis to now take orders from her husband in the same manner as she had been taking them from him. Her husband, who was now also her operator, had no previous experience as a hypnotist. In hundreds of recreational and manipulative hypnotic episodes over the following decades, however, he became a skilled puppetmaster.

Her conditioning was finished. It had taken little more than six weeks. The mental machinery now built into her mind reacted to hypnotic instructions with reflexive automaticity, independent of her conscious will, beyond her conscious knowing. Anytime he wanted, the operator could call out his puppet, the alternate personality, his zombie, his robot. He could make it do whatever he wished. Afterwards, the conscious (cover) personality had no memory of that time.

Language: Backwards and Too Soft to Hear

In the coming years, the split was sometimes required to hear the operator's words as if they were spoken backwards. Sometimes, she was told to hear them as if spoken too softly to discern. Either way, they seemed incomprehensible to her. Teitelbaum reported using similar instructions as part of a sealing. He told the subject that if an unauthorized hypnotist

> ...starts to give you suggestions which might have a tendency to place you into a trance state, you will suddenly find that you cannot understand a word he is saying. It will be as if he is speaking a foreign tongue which you have never heard before and this condition will last as long as he is giving you such suggestions... (Teitelbaum, pp. 105-6)

In the case of fish-child-slut-Rules, however, the instruction to hear language as if it was incomprehensible was applied to her own operator's speech while she was in trance. Perceiving only seemingly incomprehensible or inaudible language, she couldn't know what his instructions were to her. She couldn't evaluate them, or mentally prepare herself for them, or alleviate them—not in the smallest degree. She had no opportunity to know, criticize, or remember the operator's words.

The meaning of the words, however, was recorded perfectly at the level of automatic function in her brain. The cue triggered mindless, reflexive, machinelike obedience carried out by that unconscious sector of her brain. Amnesia, plus the incomprehensible or inaudible language, caused all his hypnotic commands to hit her out of nowhere. Whatever he suggested arrived at the cued moment of implementation directly out of the amnesic abyss, full scale, untouched by experience's tempering comment, or feedback adjustments, or any awareness of where her behavior came from and why it was happening.

Using the language "too soft to hear" routine, he could easily, covertly reprogram her in the presence of observers. Neither she, nor they, would realize that she'd been dropped into trance, reprogrammed, then pulled out again. The first cue shifted her to a waking hypnosis in which her behavior would appear normal though she was now in the suggestible state. He would give his instructions. She would have no conscious knowledge of their content because the words would sound too softly spoken to hear. Her unconscious, however, registered them clearly. Then he gave the signal that shifted her back to a normal state of consciousness. As with the opening cue for this sequence, the signal to exit from trance was also unknown and unrecognizable to her conscious mind, unremarkable to any onlookers.

Information, Interviews, and Incidents

John Marks Uncovers Secrets, Then Hides Them Again

☑

"They Wouldn't Hesitate to Kill You"

☑

Of Patsies and Assassins

☑

Mind-to-Mind Trance Inductions

> If this government ever became a tyranny...the technological capacity that the intelligence community has given the government could enable it to impose total tyranny, and there would be no way to fight back, because the most careful effort to combine together in resistance to the government, no matter how privately it was done, is within the reach of the government to know. Such is the capability of this technology...
>
> I don't want to see this country ever go across the bridge. I know the capacity that is there to make tyranny total in America, and we must see to it that this agency and all agencies that possess this technology operate within the law and under proper supervision, so that we never cross over that abyss. That is the abyss from which there is no return.
>
> - Idaho Senator Frank Church, Chairman, Senate Intelligence Committee, "Meet the Press," National Broadcasting Company, Washington, D.C.; Merkle Press, 1975, transcript of August 17, 1975

John Marks Uncovers Secrets, Then Hides Them Again

The CIA managers intended that their secrets of mind-control research would be buried forever. In 1963, they announced that behavioral research had almost ended and they shredded many records. In 1973, the shredding of all remaining CIA records of mind-control research was ordered.

In 1974, however, the New York Times printed Seymour Hersh's report on Operation Chaos, a secret (and illegal) CIA program which spied on "dissident" (antiwar and pro-civil rights) Americans.[1] News had also leaked about CIA researchers giving LSD to unsuspecting customers in government-operated "brothels" in San Francisco and New York.

---

[1] Actually, "watch list" activities had involved the Secret Service, FBI, DIA, and NSA, as well as the CIA. As was to become a pattern, the CIA took the heat—a favor which the other agencies would then owe in return.

Congress demanded an investigation. President Ford asked Vice-President Nelson A. Rockefeller to chair the Commission of CIA Activities Within the United States. Eventually, the Commission released a report to the President. It later was released to the public. The release of the document was a token effort designed to quiet public concern.

Marks Files FOIA Request

John Marks was a CIA watcher employed by the American Civil Liberties Union. While carefully reading the report, he noticed the line: “The drug program was part of a much larger CIA program to study possible means for controlling human behavior.” The Freedom of Information Act had been passed recently. Theoretically, it could be applied to the CIA. June 30, 1975, Marks filed a Freedom of Information Act request for CIA documents dealing with the study of “possible means for controlling human behavior.”

The CIA said there were no such records. They said,

> All the records concerning the program were ordered destroyed in 1973, including a total of 152 separate files...all persons directly involved...were either out of the country and not available for interview, or were deceased. (Bain, Appendix 2, p. 265)

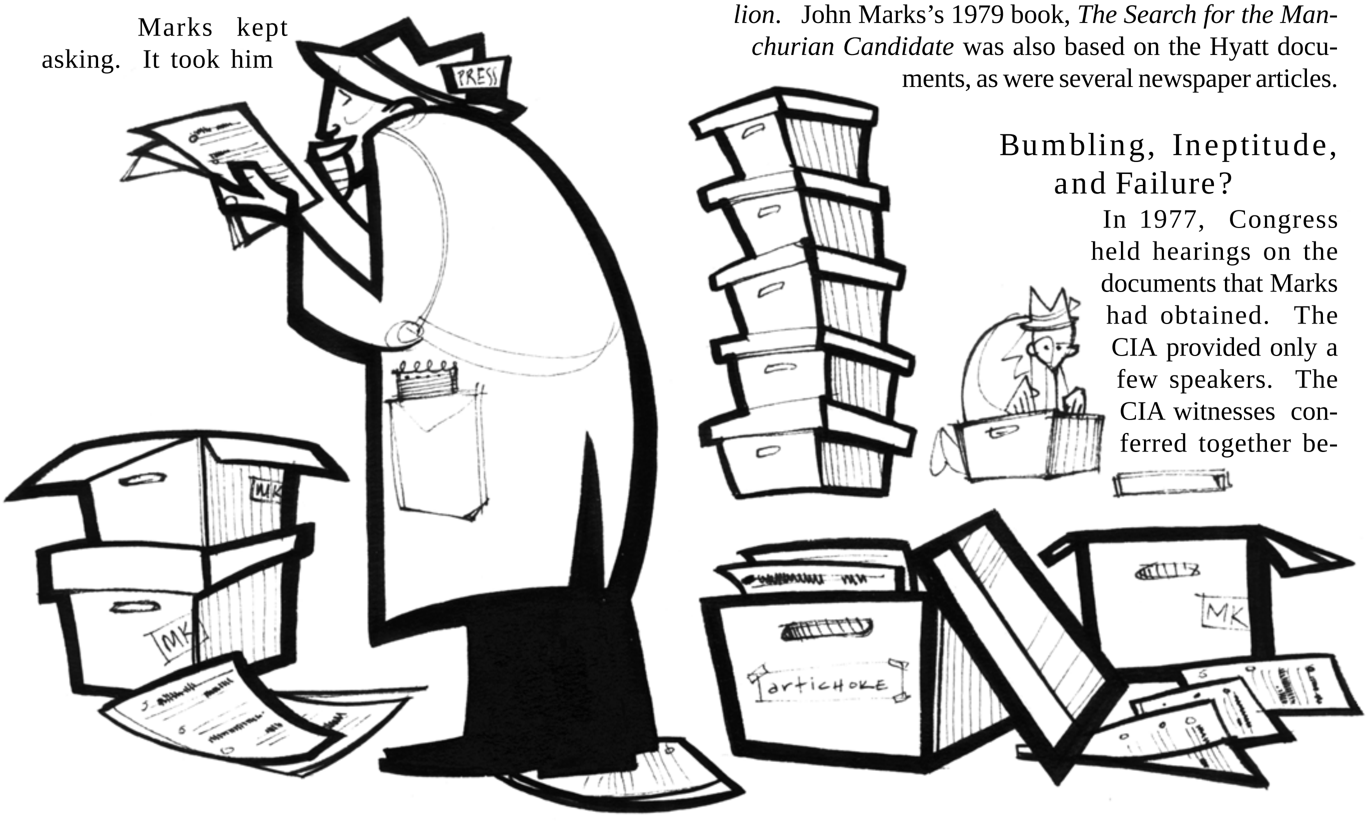
Marks kept asking. It took him (and the ACLU) two years and a legal case. Some say it was only because of President Carter’s quiet support that Marks finally got possession of any documents. He was given seven boxes of MKULTRA financial records which had been overlooked in the CIA’s earlier paper shreddings, plus three boxes of old ARTICHOKE documents.

Before the documents were released for controlled viewing by prescreened persons, CIA censors went through them. They held back some pages and lavishly applied the opaque black stripe of SECRET onto those which were released. They obliterated almost all the names except Gottlieb’s. (He was obviously selected to handle the coming outcry).

The released documents were only 1950s goalsetting memos and reports of failed experiments, so Marks didn’t learn the whole story. Only a few insiders at the CIA knew it all, and they have never told. The documents he did obtain, however, astonished the few researchers who were permitted to view them in a guarded reading room set up in a Hyatt Regency Hotel room in Rosslyn, Virginia.

Martin A. Lee and Bruce Schlain came daily, for months, and read all the documents they could find about behavior modification programs—including those of the Army, Navy, and Air Force. They quoted many useful document passages, found in that room, in their 1985 history titled, Acid Dreams: The CIA, LSD, and the Sixties Rebellion. John Marks’s 1979 book, The Search for the Manchurian Candidate was also based on the Hyatt documents, as were several newspaper articles.



Bumbling, Ineptitude, and Failure?

In 1977, Congress held hearings on the documents that Marks had obtained. The CIA provided only a few speakers. The CIA witnesses conferred together beforehand on what to say, and then rehearsed their testimony with Chairman Ted Kennedy. As a result,

> Throughout the hearings the senators listened to one account after another of bumbling and clumsiness on the part of Agency personnel...could have been describing a Three Stooges routine...This kind of buffoonery proved to be an effective public relations ploy for the CIA, deflecting serious scrutiny...By stressing ineptitude the Agency conveyed an all too human air. After all, why prosecute a bunch of regular Joes for fooling around with chemicals they could never hope to understand? (Lee and Schlain, Acid Dreams)

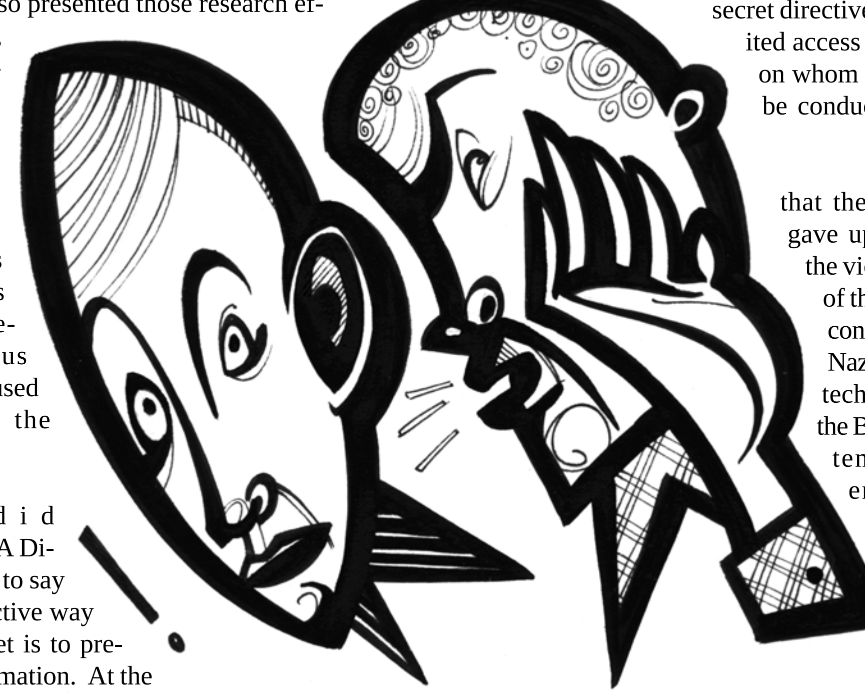
When John Marks finally finished writing his history of BLUEBIRD, CHATTER, ARTICHOKE, and MKULTRA, he also presented those research efforts as bumbling, inept, and failed—a comedically inadequate, doomed effort that fell far short of Agency goals. Over and over, Marks pointed to inanities and mistakes, depicting ludicrous scenes which aroused contempt for the agency.[1]



Why did Marks do that? CIA Director Dulles used to say that the most effective way to disguise a secret is to pretend to share information. At the book's end, Marks described a personal interview with another head CIA figure. He said that director told him the CIA never succeeded and finally gave it all up because it was not possible.

Did Marks really believe that? Or was he threatened into helping keep Agency secrets? Or did he join the mind-controlled? Somewhere, along the way from the court case to the publication of his book, John Marks changed. Despite all the good information that he had made available to the public, in the end, he told it the way the Company wanted it told: He said they failed; they gave up; it wasn't possible. Because of his previous success at uncovering and making public their secrets, most of his readers accepted that conclusion. Therefore, publication of his book—although it did get out some shocking new information about CIA research—effectively ended a period of public and Congressional heat focused on the Agency's mind-control secrets.

The Big Lie—Low-life European criminals like Adam, Bergen, and Nielsen created unknowing, exploited hypnotic subjects. Sophisticated European and American hypnosis researchers created hundreds more amnesic subjects in two centuries of enthusiastic research. For over fifty years, since World War II, psychiatric researchers employed by U.S. government agencies worked to improve those early hypnoprogramming technologies. They were funded with $millions, urged on by secret directives, and allowed unlimited access to "terminal" subjects on whom any experiment might be conducted.

Do you really believe that they couldn't do it and gave up? If you do, you're the victim of another branch of the new science of mind control: propaganda. The Nazis also used the Big Lie technique. If you repeat the Big Lie loud enough, often enough, and long enough—and if you publicly revile, or suppress, dissenting voices—almost everybody, eventually, will believe it.

The truth is that the MKULTRA hypnoprogramming research was not a failure. It was a success. Public belief that it was a failure was part of its success.

---

[1] Lee and Schlain, on the other hand, reported the CIA research with appropriate seriousness.

A Brief, Strange Phone Conversation

I called John Marks around 1987. I identified myself as a nonfiction writer who was researching the case of Cameron's Canadian experimental subjects (then pending against the CIA). Their lawyer had told me that John's publisher planned a new release of his book when the case came to trial.

John Marks told me that he had never touched the subject of mind-control again, except to write a revised introduction for the new edition.[1]

Then I asked, "Have you ever heard of a case of a Manchurian Candidate? After your book came out, I'd guess lots of people contacted you to tell you more..."

"Yes," he said, "but I didn't believe any of them. I don't believe they ever succeeded at it. I don't believe it can be done. Look. I'm very busy," he snapped at me. "I don't have time for this kind of thing. Are you one?" His tone suddenly had turned tense, harsh, hostile—as if unconsciously warning me.

"NO!" (I lied. If "Manchurian candidate" means any supposed-to-be-amnesic hypnoprogrammed person, rather than one who is specifically programmed to kill, I am one.)

"Good-bye," he said. He slammed down the receiver with a force that left my ear tingling.

What an odd "interview" that was. His fight to free telling documents from the CIA had seemed to be the work of a free mind. His book, however, described a failed effort; and I knew that was not true. And he said he had not believed a single one of the persons who contacted him. Walter Bowart would have interviewed at least some of them in depth. John Marks never touched the subject again. Why did he change?

And why did he hang up so abruptly? Was he protecting himself? Was he protecting the Agency? Was he protecting me?

"They Wouldn't Hesitate to Kill You"

> [NSA agents] are authorized by executive order to spy on anyone...This surveillance network is completely disguised and hidden from the public...NSA personnel serve in quasi-public positions in their communities and run cover business and legitimate businesses...The operations independently run by them can sometimes go beyond the bounds of law...NSA DOMINT [Domestic Intelligence] has the ability to assassinate US citizens covertly or run covert psychological control operations to cause subjects to be diagnosed with ill mental health.
>
> John St. Clair Akwei[2]

From 1992 to 1994, I spent most of my time researching and writing on gardens, herbs, and livestock for the ninth edition of my Encyclopedia of Country Living. But, one lovely summer afternoon, I was catapulted back into the mind-control topic. I had driven miles to interview a plant expert. She and I sat in the living room of her lovely country home in the coastal mountains. We were talking about growing plants, green and beautiful. After a lull in the conversation, she asked me what I was now doing with my life besides revising the garden book.

On impulse, I told her about my mind-control research, about Candy, and about Bowart's military hypnoprogramming cases in which an electroshock series was used near the end of conditioning to reinforce suggested amnesia. I said, "They all woke up unable to remember the previous six weeks."

She looked astonished. She said, "You have to meet my husband, "Joe" [a pseudonym]." She led me out of the house. We walked together through the dense, cool,

---

1. The trial was canceled by an out-of-court deal. I think the new edition was not published.
2. The quote is from a document about NSA structure and its covert operations. It was submitted as evidence for a lawsuit against the National Security Agency filed at the U.S. Courthouse in Washington DC by John St. Clair Akwei (Civil Action 92-0449). Akwei said that individual U.S. citizens are sometimes targeted in this way by covert, independently-operating NSA agents. The Australian magazine, Nexus, reprinted it in full in its April-May, 1996, issue, p. 17. A U.S. newsletter called Taking Aim reprinted it from Nexus. Substantial excerpts are in Project L.U.C.I.D. by Texe Marrs.

and quiet rainforest and soon found him. Joe was a tall, thin, serious-looking man. He was no longer young, but still strong and athletic-looking. He was just then directing a beautiful draft horse stallion in the act of dragging a log.

"Joe": A Case History

His wife introduced me to him. He shook my hand and said apologetically, "I probably won't remember your name. I can't remember names."

"Don't worry," I reassured him, "I can't remember names either—or faces."

Trouble Remembering Names and Faces (Prosopagnosia)

Electroshocking leaves no obvious telltale physical marks, but it may result in difficulty remembering names and/or faces. It causes "...gaps for events long preceding the course of [ECT] treatment...and even more common was a failure to name or even recognize old acquaintances." (Pratt, Amnesia, p. 231) There may be permanent brain damage after electroshock, depending on the amount of shock administered, and the way in which the shock was delivered. Subjects have reported loss of memory, skill, or knowledge—especially loss of ability to recognize faces.

> Oddly,...memory for deliberately learned material, like lists of nonsense syllables, seems to be less impaired by shock than memory for the stuff of everyday life, such as recognition of the faces of one's friends. (Scheflin & Opton, p. 381)

Difficulty in remembering faces is called prosopagnosia. Jeanine Huard, one of Cameron's experimental subjects, had prosopagnosia:

> She also described an unusual symptom in that she is unable to recognize familiar people in different surroundings...the disturbance would appear to lie in the ability to recall or associate a face with the memory of the person when the context in which the person has been known changes. I knew that such a symptom had been reported by one of Cameron's other patients. (Weinstein, p. 159)

The other patient was Dr. Mary Morrow: "Like other victims of Cameron, Mary was left with neurological damage...she suffers from prosopagnosia..." (Weinstein, p. 167)

Joe unhitched the huge animal from the log it had been pulling, led it into the corral, and turned it loose with a gift of chow. I could tell he really liked animals. We waited at the house until he came back. Then my hosts set up lawn chairs in their yard and we sat there, surrounded by fragrant flower beds, talking.

Joe had never heard of Bowart's book about military hypnoprogramming or Bain's book about the CIA hypnoprogramming experiments on Candy Jones. What he knew was his own personal history. This quiet, peaceable man told me that he had been in the Army. He was a black belt in karate by hobby and an MP by assignment. He was stationed in Germany when he started thinking about the ethics of the war (Viet Nam) more and more. "I didn't like it," he said.

Finally, he decided he had to do something toward stopping it. He had to take a stand. He was a man for whom absolute values of conscience mattered absolutely. He decided: "After being an MP for two years, I could no longer go on duty and uphold their laws."

The Army's response was first to shanghai and then to brainwash him. Brainwashing is most effective when it starts with a shock kidnapping. That prevents the victim from getting his mental defenses in place beforehand. Therefore, the five kidnappers arrived suddenly, late at night, and told him to come along. Joe didn't like the feel of it and decided he wasn't going. He told me he fought like "hell" and took out four of them temporarily. The fifth man got him.[1]

"Before my imprisonment began," Joe said, "the Provost Marshall read me the rules: 'A soldier will receive a minimum of two hours of sleep per twenty-four," and so on. The officer pointed out in a threatening manner that, although Joe had the right to food, "the regulations didn't say whether meals would come all at once or spaced out."

He said, "They locked me in a room by myself. There were five soldiers who guarded me day and night on shifts...They started systematically driving me crazy...No sleep—sometimes twenty hours of work straight. Maybe two hours of sleep per 24. No consistency." Joe spent the next three months alone in that cell except for the changing shifts of tormenters guarding him.

Both the CIA and the military were very interested in brainwashing research as part of their general research on every possible mind-control method. In a military-sponsored symposium on brainwashing, one article mentioned that:

---

[1] In addition to the long-standing MKULTRA concept of a hypnoprogrammed courier, there also was a long-standing concept of the hypnoprogrammed fighter/assassin. They now knew just how good Joe could be in a real fight.

> Various writers have associated the compliance effected by Communist captors with phenomena observed in the laboratory; e.g., effects reported following experimental work in pharmacology, hypnosis, sleep deprivation, sensory deprivation, semi-starvation...as well as in social-psychological investigations of persuasion and group conformity pressures. (Blake in Biderman, p. 2)

Therefore, there had been experiments that included observation on sleep deprivation and semi-starvation. Was Joe an unknowing subject in one of those experiments? Or was he on an operational conveyer belt, being readied for the next stage? An army memo on "interrogation" techniques, dated September 6, 1961, reported:

> Stressing techniques employed included silent treatment before or after EA 1729 [LSD] administration, sustained conventional interrogation prior to EA 1729 interrogation, deprivation of food, drink, sleep or bodily evacuation, sustained isolation prior to EA 1729 administration, hot-cold switches in approach, duress 'pitches,' verbal degradation and bodily discomfort, or dramatized threats to subject's life or mental health. (quoted in Lee and Schlain, p. 39)

Joe could not remember what happened after being locked in the room. All he knew was, "I woke up in a hospital bed. I couldn't remember anything. I asked a doctor what happened to me. He said I'd had an electroshock treatment. I still can't remember anything about being in the hospital before I woke up there."

"How much time were you in the hospital that you can't remember?" I asked.

"About six weeks," Joe said, "but it doesn't show on my army record that I was ever in the hospital at all."

He woke up feeling calm. He calmly asked the doctor why he was in the hospital. The doctor told him it was because he had tried to commit suicide.

Joe said, "I didn't believe that, about the suicide."

"The doctor made you think there was just one electroshock treatment?" I asked.

He nodded.

"Well, don't believe that either," I said. "It would have been a series of electroshock treatments. I don't think anybody gets just one of those. Especially if they can't remember the past six weeks."

Driving Dogs "Crazy"—When Joe was released from the hospital, he was discharged from the military. For the next ten years, he trained attack dogs. (I got the impression that he was still somehow still connected with the military during that dog-training time.) I asked, "How did you train the dogs?"

"You start by making them crazy," Joe said.

"I don't understand."

"You tell the dog, 'Sit.' It sits, and you praise it. It feels like it understands. Then you tell it 'Sit,' and it sits, and you reprimand it. You do this hundreds and hundreds of times. You push the dog to confusion. The purpose of this is so that the dog will do whatever you say no matter what, under all conditions. You are training the dog to NOT think for itself. A sentry dog or police dog has to be willing to bite anybody. We were driving the dogs crazy and then bringing them back. It took at least a month. Lots of dogs washed out. We got rid of them. A washout starts doing things for itself. They couldn't go crazy and not go crazy."

So half of the dogs turned into "crazy" robots and always obeyed. The dogs that resolved the conflict by thinking for themselves were the program "washouts," the conditioning "failures." Reflexively, unconditionally obedient dogs were the programmer's ideal achievement, his "successes."

The same concept could be applied to people.

Difficult Civilian Adjustment—After ten years of training dogs, Joe seems to have really become a civilian. He had a hard time adjusting. He was fortunate, however, in one important way. He had won the heart of his plant-loving woman along the way, and she had stuck with her quiet, tense man through all his difficulties.

When Joe first went job hunting, he didn't know that his conditioning had caused him to become allergic to authority.[1] But he soon realized that. Every job he worked soon triggered a mysterious psychological revolt in him. Somebody would give him a normal, reasonable command—and it would put him into a rage. He would have to get out of there. For some reason, he could not stand anybody "controlling" him.

---

[1] Persons who are unconsciously overburdened with CONTROL, such as subjects of hypnoprogramming, may become negatively reactive to control scenarios. They then have difficulty enduring normal forms of control in their conscious life.

After Joe realized that he no longer could work under somebody else's authority, he found a way to be self-employed. That solved the problem. He was all right now. He and his wife had each other. And he made a living as a horse-logger, toiling alone in the forest.

Joe Gives a Warning

I had no experience interviewing a living, in-front-of-me, survivor of mind-control technologies. Up to this time, my research had all been in books and articles. I hadn't gone looking for Joe, or anybody like him. But there he was, squarely in my path—as if God had placed this army veteran (who had experienced some military mind-control technology) there for a reason.

Talking to him, asking him questions, made me feel tense. It was very hard for me, requiring great effort, because something deep inside me was resisting my attempts to question him. Joe also was tense and under tight control. He wasn't openly resisting my curiosity, but he wasn't volunteering much information. I'd ask a question, haltingly, briefly, because that was the best that I could manage. He answered each: haltingly, briefly, as if that was as much information as he could get out.

My brain felt frozen. I felt an unfamiliar inner warning, a fearful, almost mentally-paralyzing inhibition against interviewing this particular person. Was there an item in my, and his, programming script that forbade subjects to discuss with each other their conditioning events and hypnoprogrammed aspects of their lives?

I fought it. I had a lot of experience fighting and overcoming that type of inner resistance. I struggled to ask more questions. Joe was a true fighter, too. He struggled to answer them. But all the time I was talking to him, I really just wanted to get out of there. I yearned to make the confusing disturbance in my head stop.

My last question was, "Would you mind if I used your name in my book about hypnoprogramming?" I was using others' real names. I figured that real names would give my work more credibility.

For a moment, Joe didn't answer. I saw a shadow come over his face. What was it? Was it a scowl because I had asked such a thing of him? Or was his expression fear? Then he composed himself. He nodded agreement.

"Thank you," I said. I had handled all I could that day. I wanted to go. I made my farewells, stood up, and walked away from Joe and his wife. They remained sitting on the lawn chairs surrounded by beautiful flower garden on that lovely, sunny spring afternoon in the Western high mountains.

As I walked toward my car, which was parked nearby, Joe suddenly rose and followed me. I stopped, turned, and looked at him, wondering, as he caught up to me. We were beyond his wife's hearing.

He said softly, "If they knew what you're trying to do, they wouldn't hesitate to kill you."

I looked hard at him. Joe was definitely not mentally ill, not paranoid. He didn't say anything else. I didn't either. I nodded acceptance of his warning, turned away again, and walked on. This time, he stayed behind.

As I walked, I realized—with sudden shame—how very much I had asked of Joe when I requested to use his real name in my book.[1] Yet he had agreed. I understood now that, before he agreed, Joe accepted in his mind the probability of a death penalty for being named as having talked to me. But Joe had ethics. He had the absolute kind created by God, not the situational kind made by governments or individuals for their own convenience. He was willing to sacrifice his life for truth. Was that sensible? practical? No. But it was right.

I wondered who "they" were. CIA? NSA? Military? I didn't ask. I never went back to visit Joe and his wife again. What I had to learn from them, I had already learned. I had no way of establishing if what Joe feared was real. I only knew the enemy I knew. That's why I talked it over with R.J.....

R.J. Thinks They Killed His Author-Friend

I had a friend and neighbor, at that time, R.J. [another pseudonym; he asked me not to use his real name]. He was a retired Viet Nam veteran, Special Forces. (He never told me exactly what he did in the military. Maybe he didn't remember. Maybe he couldn't say.) When I got home from the visit with Joe and his wife, I asked R.J. about Joe, and about Joe's warning to me.

R.J. nodded silently, and looked away. Then he started talking about a woman he once knew who wrote a book about the "delayed stress" problems of returned Viet Nam veterans. He said, "It happened in the 70s She was just starting out on a publicity tour, right after her book came out. She died in a Seattle hotel room. I read about it in the newspaper. I don't believe her death was suicide. I think they killed her."

---

[1] I do not want Joe to be at any risk of being killed, so I did not use his or his wife's real identities here.

There it was again—"they." Murder or not, her death got rid of the book. Without its author promoting it in the media, sales plummeted. It was soon out of print, its message forgotten.

A man in my writer's critique group who had read numerous books on the Kennedy assassinations gave me a similar warning: "If a person gets too talkative, he gets killed."

But didn't we live in a modern democracy? There were laws—and a Constitution. And wasn't civilian authority dominant over that of the military in this country? I had always assumed that no law authorized covert murders by any government organization or its agents. Was that belief incorrect? Or did we no longer have rule of law in this country? Joe, R.J., and my friend in the critique group were all so sure that I could only hope to live until my book was finished—and that I could finish it only if I worked in secret.

I decided to heed their warnings. If they were wrong, it would not hurt to research quietly and privately. If they were right, it was the only way I could complete this work. Thereafter, I worked in greater isolation and confided in fewer people.

Over the coming years, I learned that it can be permissible for our government to "use any means necessary" to protect what is declared "Secret." I learned that "counter-intelligence" personnel have been used to covertly suppress unwanted civilian knowings. I learned that military power can supercede civilian power. I uncovered bits of evidence suggesting that certain agencies or individuals in government have used deceit, disinformation, even assassination, to maintain power and manipulate political events.

Of Patsies and Assassins

I know of no safe depository of the ultimate powers of society but the people themselves, and if we think them not enlightened enough to exercise their control with a wholesome discretion, the remedy is not to take it from them, but to inform their discretion by education...I have sworn upon the altar of God eternal hostility against every form of tyranny over the mind of man.

Thomas Jefferson

In July, 1953, the Director of Security for ARTICHOKE sent a memorandum restating the goal of their hypnoprogramming research. The restated goal was "...the development of means for the control of the activities and mental capacities of individuals." The memo designated a subgoal: "attempting to have a hypnotized subject kill someone while in a trance." (Lee & Schlain, Acid Dreams, p. 28)

Gittinger told John Marks that the CIA could not create a programmed assassin. Gittinger said that there were "more reliable ways to kill people...'a well-trained person could do it without all this mumbo-jumbo'..." (John Marks, 1979, p. 191) Nevertheless,

> ...he acknowledges that he does not know. If the ultimate experiments were performed they would have been handled with incredible secrecy. [Gittinger] ...admits that none of the arguments he uses against a conditioned assassin would apply to a programmed 'patsy'...the subject would remember everything that happened to him and be amnesic only for the fact the hypnotist ordered him to do these things.... (Ibid.)

A patsy, in this scenario, would be a carefully trained hypnorobot who obeyed complex posthypnotic suggestions. The consciously-unknowing, innocent victim would be publicly blamed for the crime: a patsy.

History is clear about the tensions between the Kennedy brothers and CIA leadership. After John Fitzgerald Kennedy was elected President of the United States, he appointed his brother, Robert Fitzgerald Kennedy, as his Attorney General. First, Bobbie fearlessly took on the Mafia. Very soon JFK and RFK, both, also had serious and escalating disagreements with CIA heads.

After the aborted Bay-of-Pigs "invasion," Kennedy fired the Deputy Director of the CIA, General Charles Cabell, who had been in charge of that debacle. Cabell had worked closely with Allen Dulles in the CIA leadership for nine years. Cabell's fury at Kennedy became well known in Washington circles. His brother was the mayor of Dallas.

Despite Cabell's firing, the CIA remained unrepentant. It still did not respond to attempts by President Kennedy to control its bad habits of independent adventures in foreign policy and secrets kept from the Administration. Kennedy then dumped the CIA's legendary Director, Alan Dulles, as a second lesson. JFK said he needed "a man, not a legend" in that office. The man Kennedy appointed to replace Dulles was J. McCone, the only CIA Director who seems ever to have seriously believed that the Agency should respect moral principles.

Richard Helms and the other MKULTRA insiders remained. Did JFK know about their mind-control research and the terminal subjects? The President had the legal right to be informed of all the CIA's activities. But the leaders of that Agency were men who made a career specialty of breaking ALL the rules. They did not tell the President more than they wanted. They did not tell McCone either.

It was McCone's Inspector General, John Earman, who discovered MKULTRA, but only as a project title. He learned about the safehouses, on his own, while taking a routine look at TSS. Earman was deeply disturbed by the little he had learned. Helms defended the program, "We have to keep up with Soviet advances in this field."

Kennedy told an aide, "The CIA will have to be dealt with." Two weeks later, he was assassinated in Dallas. The day after he became President, Lyndon Johnson returned the CIA to business as usual. Jacqueline Kennedy might have made trouble, but a post-assassination series of electroshock "treatments" calmed her. Helms no longer had to defend or explain the MKULTRA research. CIA man George White managed safehouses until 1966, when he shut them down and retired.

Numerous citizen researchers emerged after the assassination and challenged the official "lone-deranged-assassin" versions of those killings. The citizen researchers privately undertook the detective work which was not being publicly accomplished. They looked for evidence, interviewed witnesses, and evaluated what they found. They wrote articles and books to share what they learned with other researchers and with the public.[1]

Penn Jones, editor of a Texas weekly, was one such researcher. He gave away 10,000 copies of his own book on the assassination of JFK at a 1969 rock music festival. Jones also kept statistics on the deaths of persons who would have been important court witnesses. One by one, they perished in suicides, auto accidents, and seeming heart attacks. Actuarial experts calculated the odds, of all those deaths occurring in so short a time, as being in the trillions.

The untimely deaths of so many of the persons who did it, or were involved with it, or announced they had an investigative breakthrough about it, made it more difficult for citizen researchers to establish whether the various accused were patsies or murderers, hypnoprogrammed or regular criminals, sane or mentally ill.

In the next election, in an act of little understood and poorly appreciated personal and political courage, Robert F. Kennedy ran for President of the United States. RFK undoubtedly knew that the CIA was implicated in his brother's assassination. He must have realized the risk he was taking. If he became President, RFK would predictably resume the shake-up of the CIA which his dead brother had begun. Those persons responsible for the assassination of JFK also surely realized that RFK would also endeavor to bring the guilty persons to justice.

---

1. The Assassination Please Almanac (1977) is an annotated bibliography edited by Tom Miller, with introductions and essays compiled by other persons associated with the Assassination Information Bureau.

They waited until the night that Robert F. Kennedy won the California primary. Up to then, his election was not certain. After the landslide triumph in California, however, it was obvious that he would be the next president. That night, at the victory celebration, the candidate was assassinated by a man of Middle Eastern descent who had a curious double name, Sirhan Sirhan.

An era of great democracy had plunged into the darkness of a Machiavellian style of settling political competitions. Jefferson's concept of government by an informed electorate choosing representatives in honest and open elections had been usurped by conflict resolution in murderous palace wars reminiscent of the Roman Empire's declining years.

The Warren Commission was supposedly convened to investigate all the evidence which that army of civilian researchers had uncovered. It was largely made up of persons having intelligence or military backgrounds. Alan Dulles was the member who controlled which witnesses would testify. Nevertheless, the volumes of recorded Warren Commission evidence contain much that supports a conspiracy explanation of the president's murder. The Commission, however, ignored and rejected their own evidence. They concluded that Oswald was the only responsible person.

The assassination researchers struggled on, trying to learn the truth, and to make that truth known. Jim Garrison, New Orleans District Attorney, in whose jurisdiction Lee Harvey Oswald had once lived, read every page of the shelf of books which was the Warren Commission's official report. That reading convinced Garrison that the Commission was part of the cover-up because it had obviously not identified the true murderer of the President.

Garrison independently undertook a new official investigation. He used his FBI and military background, the investigators and investigative resources available from his job, plus dogged sleuthing, to uncover the truth. He badly wanted to bring the true culprits to trial and make America be America again. Although both Garrison's life and reputation were threatened, he persevered. In the end, he definitively traced the assassination of President John F. Kennedy to persons linked to the CIA and other secret agencies. His evidence made clear that Oswald had been just a patsy for the real murderers of President Kennedy.

"What the hell do you call this?" a puzzled friend asked Garrison of the findings.

"A coup d'etat," the D.A. grimly replied.

The D.A.'s attempt to prosecute the true conspirators was not successful. He then wrote a book, On the Trail of the Assassins, to make his evidence public. (That book may have inspired the Oliver Stone film, JFK.)

Lee Harvey Oswald

Lee Harvey Oswald protested, "I'm just a patsy. I didn't kill anyone." Edward J. Epstein's book Legend: The Secret World of Lee Harvey Oswald was based on FOIA documents and Epstein's interviews with 150-plus witnesses who were not interviewed by the Warren Commission.

> From these new documents and witnesses a startlingly different picture emerges of the secret world in which Oswald lived his final years. It is a world of military and political secrets, inextricably interwoven with spies, counterspies, and soldiers of fortune. George De Mohrenschildt, the mysterious figure who arranged significant portions of Oswald's life, granted the author a four-day interview in 1977 to tell his story...the interview was never completed—De Mohrenschildt was found shot to death, an apparent suicide, on the second day... (Legend: jacket text)

Jack Ruby

Jack Ruby shot Oswald dead before he could be brought to trial. He was part of a crowd of citizens which was allowed to be present as Oswald was being moved from one site to another. Jim Garrison established that Ruby also had many connections to the intelligence world. Ruby's interrogation was a farce.

> Only an understanding of the techniques and applications of mind control could begin to bring meaning to the fragmented ramblings of Jack Ruby.
>
> On June 7, 1964, Jack Ruby was questioned in jail in Dallas, Texas, by Earl Warren and Gerald Ford. In that session Ruby continually pleaded for a lie-detector test or for sodium pentothal.
>
> Said Ruby: "I would like to be able to get a lie-detector test or truth serum of what motivated me to do what I did at that particular time..." (Bowart, p. 197)

Did Ruby hope that truth serum (barbiturate) would penetrate sealing and reveal his hypnoprogramming? If Ruby killed Oswald as a result of posthypnotic suggestion, he was not a patsy. He was a hypnoprogrammed assassin.

Milton Kline, a prominent New York experimental hypnotist, who did unpaid consulting for Sears and other CIA researchers, said he refused to "cross the ethical line." He was certain, however, that the secret agencies had crossed it. He was also certain that a "Manchurian Candidate" could be created.

> "It cannot be done by everyone," says Kline, "It cannot be done consistently, but it can be done."... [Kline added that] he could create a patsy in three months; an assassin would take him six. (J. Marks, p. 187)

The government chose Dr. Louis Jolyon West to do the sanity evaluation of Ruby, and to be his defense psychiatrist. West was a longtime insider in military/intelligence mind-control research. He started his career studying brainwashing for the Air Force. He performed an interrogation experiment with Martin Orne. He then went civilian, heading the University of Oklahoma's Department of Psychiatry. But West continued to do government research. He studied the effects of hypnosis-mescaline combos for the CIA in 1957 (Aldous Huxley, Moksha, p. 131). He "conducted research into LSD, hypnosis and 'the psychobiology of dissociated states' for the CIA." (Lee & Schlain, note, p. 189) Once, he killed an elephant for them—with LSD.

West visited Ruby in jail, then wrote his report. The psychiatrist declared that Ruby was in a "paranoid state manifested by delusions." Ruby was not faking his symptoms, Dr. West explained, because, despite repeated suggestions by West that the prisoner was mentally ill, Ruby had insisted that he was sane. West explained that this proved that Ruby was mentally ill, because "The true malingerer usually grasps eagerly at such an explanation." Catch-22: Ruby refused to admit he was insane, so he was insane.

What were those "delusions" that West took as evidence of Ruby's insanity? Ruby believed that conspirators had caused the murder of John Fitzgerald Kennedy. (Lee & Schlain, note, p. 189)

West's career advanced. He became UCLA's Psychiatry Department chairman and Director of its Neuro-Psychiatric Institute.[1] Ruby went to prison. He died there from a fast-moving cancer that appeared out of nowhere.

> When Jack Ruby's programming began to slip, it became necessary to kill him as well. A recent article by Gary Alexander...suggests that the programming theory explains the behavior of Oswald and Ruby better than any of the existing speculation about those events... (Scheflin & Opton, p. 413)

Sirhan Sirhan

Robert F. Kennedy was assassinated by Sirhan Sirhan. Dr. Diamond, an expert hypnotist and associate dean of UCLA's School of Criminology, was the defense psychiatrist. He visited Sirhan eight times. He hypnotized him during six of those visits. At first, Diamond and Sirhan just talked:

> "Was that the first time you actually ever saw Kennedy?'
>
> "It was, sir—in reality...It was a thrill to see him." There was a note of fond recollection in his voice, like that of a four-year-old boy after his first visit to Santa Claus...
>
> "You had no idea," said Diamond, "that three days later you were going to kill him?"
>
> "...no, hell, no, I didn't. I don't know what the hell made me, sir." (Kaiser, p. 294)

Diamond then questioned Sirhan, under hypnosis, about a conspiracy. Sirhan denied that, but his distinct pattern of delayed speech before denying key questions indicated blocking. After Diamond conditioned Sirhan to complete amnesia and obedience, he suggested > ...that he ask about the weather when he woke up. Sirhan was soon out in the anteroom, asking a deputy if it was raining outside.

>
> "Why did you do that, Sirhan?" asked Diamond with mock curiosity.
>
> "What's so unusual about that?" said Sirhan. "Asking about the weather?"
>
> "Whose idea was that, Sirhan?"
>
> "Huh?...Wuh, wuh, uh." Sirhan could tell from the smile on Diamond's face that something funny was going on. But he couldn't believe that Diamond had programmed him to ask if it was raining. Diamond punched the rewind button on his Sony tape recorder. He would show Sirhan how he instructed him under hypnosis. But his tape was blank. He had forgotten to put the machine on 'record' in the first place. Sirhan was overjoyed, for this only proved what he had suspected all along: Diamond was bluffing....had never really hypnotized him.

---

1. The government also chose Dr. West to be its examining psychiatrist in the case of Timothy McVeigh, after the Oklahoma City bombing.

> Diamond put Sirhan in hypnosis once more...Then Diamond suggested that Sirhan would come out of the trance and climb the bars like a monkey.
>
> Sirhan went out and climbed on the bars. He was up there, he explained to Diamond, "for exercise." Diamond replayed the tape, let Sirhan hear how he'd been programmed. "It wasn't your idea at all, Sirhan. You were just following my instructions."
>
> Sirhan was silent for a time. He shivered. "Ohhh, it frightens me, doc."
>
> "It is very scary," admitted Diamond.
>
> "Oh," said Sirhan, as if realizing something for the first time. "No. No."
>
> "But it's very real," said Diamond. "It's not a fake. And it's not a trick."
>
> "...sir, killing people is different than climbing up bars." (Kaiser, pp. 373-374)

In a conversation with Kaiser, Sirhan mournfully asked,

> "Why did I not go to the races that day? Why did I not like the horses? Why did I go to that range? Why did I save those Mini-Mags [the high-powered bullets used on Kennedy]? Why did I not expend those bullets?...It was like some inner force." (Sirhan quoted in Bowart, p. 223)

Walter Bowart speculated Sirhan's sequence of going to the rifle range instead of to the races, and saving some high-powered bullets there, may have been a complex set of posthypnotic suggestions leading up to a preprogrammed murder. His mention of "some inner force" could be explained as posthypnotic suggestion.

Diamond testified, in court, that Sirhan was crazy and accomplished the murder completely on his own: "Sirhan programmed himself to do this like a robot..." (Kaiser, p. 456) Diamond explained the shooting as Sirhan's unconscious

> ...plan for the fulfillment of his sick, paranoid hatred of Kennedy and all who might want to help the Jews. In his conscious mind there was no awareness of such a plan or that he, Sirhan, was to be the instrument of assassination...His mind is truly split, with part of his life on one side and part on the other. (quoted in Scheflin & Opton, note 17)

Kaiser disagreed with Diamond's diagnosis of Sirhan. The case reminded him of Palle Hardwick who > ...was never aware, until Reiter's work with him, that he had been programmed for crime, and programmed to forget that he had been programmed...Sirhan could have been programmed and programmed to forget. (Kaiser, p. 289)

After his 1969 sentencing, Sirhan was sent to San Quentin Prison. Dr. Eduard Simson-Kallas had been the chief psychologist there for the past six years. The last two years he had been in charge of the psychological testing and study of death row inmates.[1] Simson-Kallas visited Sirhan regularly over the next twenty weeks. He looked over all the previous psychiatric reports and did extensive testing and interviewing. He talked it over with his colleague, Dr. David G. Schmidt, the chief psychiatrist at San Quentin. The two of them came to the firm conclusion that their findings in the case were in major conflict with the psychiatric evaluation of Sirhan given at his trial.

> "Nowhere in Sirhan's test response," Dr. Simpson said in the affidavit, "was I able to find evidence that he is a 'paranoid schizophrenic' or 'psychotic' as testified by the doctors at the trial...The fact is, paranoid schizophrenics are almost impossible to hypnotize. They are too suspicious and do not trust anybody, including friends and relatives, not to speak of a hypnotist from, for him, the most hated race. [Diamond was a Jew.] Psychotics in general are among the poorest subjects for hypnosis. They cannot concentrate, they do not follow instructions and basically do not trust. Sirhan, however, was an unusually good hypnotic subject." (quoted in Bowart, p. 225)

Simson-Kallas told a San Francisco Examiner reporter that he believed Sirhan had been hypnoprogrammed. He did not believe that Sirhan "could have hypnotized himself into a trance and then shot Robert Kennedy." Simson-Kallas said, "He was put up ...He would be easily blamed, being an Arab. He was programmed to be there."

Simson-Kallas said his suspicions of Diamond's

---

1. Bowart calls him "Dr. Edward Simpson" and says he was a psychiatrist. I used the Scheflin-Opton version of his name and position.

court diagnosis were first aroused when Sirhan described the murder as if "reciting from a book," rather than in vivid language—and Sirhan gave no details. He did not appear to know any details.

Sirhan said, "I don't really know what happened. I know I was there. They tell me I killed Kennedy. I don't remember what exactly I did but I know I wasn't myself." (Scheflin and Opton, pp. 439-440)

Simson-Kallas said that Diamond's diagnosis of Sirhan as a schizophrenic had to be false because "You can't hypnotize schizophrenics." He said the famous incriminating notebooks were real but "the crucial sections are not in Sirhan's handwriting...[in trance] his handwriting would be different...but it would be looser because he would be more relaxed, not more controlled as these were."

When Scheflin and Opton interviewed Simson-Kallas, he said, "I resigned over Sirhan...He had asked me to hypnotize him...When I went again to see him the prison authorities wouldn't let me. I resigned." (Scheflin & Opton, pp. 439-440)

A few years later, Donald Bain (who researched the case history of Candy Jones) said in a KSAN interview he had proof that Sirhan Sirhan visited Candy's CIA hypnoprogrammer, "Jensen," several times. After Candy Jones, John Nebel, and Donald Bain were silenced, Dr. Spiegel continued to speak out. He produced a film which warned that unknowing hypnoprogrammed persons could be manufactured. He insisted to reporters that Sirhan Sirhan was hypnoprogrammed. He refused to speculate by whom.

MIND-TO-MIND TRANCE INDUCTIONS

Secret ESP research is still being conducted, although CIA spokesmen refuse to comment on the nature of these experiments.
- Lee and Schlain, 1987

In 1991, in Seattle's Magnolia District, I worked as a housekeeper for a wealthy family. There, I encountered a new category of trance abuse. The landscaper was named Greg. When he and his crew came by for their monthly day of yard work, I usually invited them to lunch in my basement apartment. Eventually, the subject of hypnosis came up, and I told Greg that I had been hypnoprogrammed and was now sealed.

Friend Tries a Hit

A few weeks later, Greg called. He said a friend was visiting him who wanted to meet me. Since his friend only had a few hours in town, we needed to meet right away. I accepted their invitation to share a quick supper at a nearby pizza parlor. The friend was a tall, lean man, maybe thirty-five. I sat alone on one side of the table; Greg and his friend sat across from me. We ordered food from the unobtrusive, busy waitress, and then conversed.

I sensed a disturbing hardness, well-masked but there, and coldness at the core of Friend. "What do you do for a living?" I asked him.

He said he traveled around the country giving talks at Unity churches. He offered no details. I had heard that denomination was very "liberal" and leaned heavily toward trance experience. It occurred to me that he might have hypnotic skills. I didn't verbalize that speculation. Neither Greg nor his friend mentioned hypnosis in our conversation.

The minutes were passing slowly. The food had not yet come. I hoped it would arrive soon. Suddenly, Friend stood up and leaned across the table toward me until the tip of his nose was only four inches from mine. He looked directly into my eyes with a stern and strained expression on his face. As he did this, he did not speak a word of explanation.

I felt a shockingly abrupt, inductive pressure hit my brain, a force of startling power: Whoom! A strong, subliminally angry, wordless, mental force was pressuring me to enter trance. It was flowing from his mind to mine! It was in direct contact with my unconscious, pushing hard at me to enter deep trance NOW.

But I had been sealed by the most sophisticated methods known at the time of my conditioning. I can only be hypnotized by authorized persons. I felt my unconscious conditioning which blocks entry to unauthorized persons click into action. It was a reflexive, and therefore instant, response to Friend's mental induction attempt. This day, that old training was totally supported by my personal will. I did not like him. I did not like the angry, cold feel of his attack on my mind.

I consciously perceived my inner defense system responding to the hammer blow of his induction attempt. An inner wall of “No!” rose up in my mind the instant it sensed inductive pressure coming from him, and to an equal degree of power. My resistance to his induction attempt felt like a thick, impenetrable, huge iron wall. It had instantly energized in my head in response to the threat from him: electromagnetic force colliding with electromagnetic force. It completely blocked Friend’s unfriendly effort to covertly force me into trance.

It all happened in just a few seconds of clock time: His induction effort slammed onto the outer sensory perimeter of my brain. My mind, in a nanosecond, shoved back his attempted mental intrusion with equal power. I assumed he could mentally feel my effective resistance just as I could feel his attempt to penetrate my defenses. He also could see from my face that I was not in trance.

The induction pressure stopped as suddenly as it had begun. He sat down again. He did not say a word about what he had just done. Nor did I. Nor did Greg. All three of us acted as if it had not happened. It was, altogether, a very weird encounter.

I did not say anything because I did not know what to say. Also, it was still very hard for me at that time to talk about such things because of my “Secret, Don’t Tell” programming. I wondered if Greg was silent because he had already succumbed to the “force” and now was under a posthypnotic suggestion to ignore anything having to do with Friend hypnotizing other people. For whatever reasons, all three of us pretended it had not happened—even though that just-failed mind-to-mind induction attempt was clearly the entire purpose for Friend's eagerness to meet me.

The pizza arrived. We ate it and went our separate ways. Greg and I never spoke of the incident afterwards. I left the housekeeping job to write full-time and lost contact with Greg. However, I remembered that curious incident—the first time ever I was glad for my sealing. I wondered if it happened because Greg told his friend that I was a hypno-programmed person. Did Friend want to help me get free? Or was Friend testing his ability against that of my operator for the personal ego points of possibly capturing another hypnotist's puppet? Or was Friend seeking to learn what technology another operator had that he did not yet know?

I never expected to see Friend's induction style again.

A Pattern Emerges

In 1994, when a new edition of my Encyclopedia of Country Living was published, I left Seattle on a nationwide book promotion tour on the subject of gardening and writing. After that, I adopted an itinerant lifestyle, working to finish this book while living in hiding. A year later, at a supper table in North Carolina, the subject of extrasensory inductions came up. I told them about Greg's friend. They told me that a twelve-year-old neighbor boy had a similar experience.

The next day, I interviewed him. It had happened at a Christian youth meeting in a hotel. A complete stranger brought his face close to the boy's, looked him in the eyes, and caused him to fall into a deep state of what he assumed was "slain in the Spirit." He knew that the stranger had deliberately done it to him. He remembered nothing of the time while he was in trance. He did not recall ever seeing the stranger again.

The incident with Friend had been simply inexplicable. Two such incidents, however, enabled me to look for elements of pattern. Obviously, there were people who knew how to do mind-to-mind trance induction. How many people? How did they learn to do it? What was the underlying physiology of this event? I tried to remember anything I knew which might be relevant.

Randall Baer had written about the "guru's touch." He said a guru would go down the line of devotees once a week and send them, one by one, into temporary bliss with a brain-to-brain mind zap.

Extrasensory inductions. I had read other mentions of persons with mind powers, in or out of religious settings. Religious experience could easily be confused with generic trance experience. Somebody uninformed about trance technologies might easily assume that a person who can put another person into a trance, or into a state of unconsciousness, or who can read their mind, has divine powers.

I now realized that those were abilities developed in certain flesh-and-blood brains. Not everybody can jump up and turn a somersault in midair. But certain gymnasts with the right body type and training can. In the same way, persons with genetic talent and training could do those mental tricks. They do not have a direct line to God. They are mental gymnasts with skills poorly understood by the naive public.

I wondered how operators learned to do a mind-to-mind induction? The professor had not taught that in the hypnotherapy class I took as part of the research for this book. He had not even mentioned it. I wished I knew how Greg's friend had learned his skill, and how he used it. Psychic induction was a distasteful, high-powered variant of disguised induction.

My psychology textbook said that it was absolutely impossible for one mind to influence another by a purely mental process. I knew of other significant places, however, where the psychology textbook had made FALSE statements about trance and hypnosis. They were obviously wrong on this one, too.

Because of sealing, I was immune to mental attack from anybody but my own operators (and I lived in hiding from them). And I already knew a lot about hypnosis. It occurred to me that privilege carried with it a responsibility. I should also learn and reveal as much of the truth about this as I could. Next time somebody tried an extrasensory induction on me, I had to make myself ask them some questions before they got away. I had not asked Friend anything at all. I had not asked R.J. and Joe very much. I had to overcome the resistance inside me against asking, or I would never find out more.

History of a Psychic

I read in the newspaper that the CIA had spent $20 million on psychics. Before, I would have tossed out such a statement as ridiculous. Now, I wished I had looked up and read all the references to psychic research that I had tossed out during my past years of researching hypnosis. A psychic mind-control effort would logically begin with a psychic (brain-to-brain) hypnotic induction.

I knew Friend would rarely fail if he tried that on anybody with normal susceptibility and no sealing, or weak sealing. An obvious CIA goal would have been to train an

Psychic Research

In the 18th century, a French nobleman named Puysegur began the scientific study of the psychic powers of hypnotized persons. Since then, research and training in paranormal powers have been linked with hypnosis. Hammerschlag described a German case from the late 1800s in which a mute itinerant did this type of mysterious mental induction on the daughter of a man who had allowed the vagrant to sleep overnight in his home. Next morning, unknown to her father, she left the house with the vagrant. She followed him helplessly for the next several days until she awoke from trance and explained what had happened. A German court sentenced the vagrant to prison.

Cold War Psychic Research

From the 1950s on, both the Soviet and U.S. governments poured money into secret research on how to develop and control psychic powers. Russians studied the underlying physiology of psychic events and explored exactly what was, and was not, possible in the development of mental powers. The KGB trained agents in "Psychotronic Technology."[1] The U.S. government did the same. In 1952, the CIA specifically targeted the study of parapsychology as part of the 25-year, 25-million dollar MKULTRA effort. They experimented with extrasensory perception, dowsing, telekinesis (motion caused by mind power alone), clairvoyance (the ability to obtain knowledge in seeming defiance of time and space such as "remote viewing" and mind-reading). (In the psychic area of remote viewing research alone, the CIA, in September of 1995, confirmed the existence of a research program that lasted 20 years and spent $20 million.) The CIA also sought to find and maximally develop the talents of "exceptionally gifted individuals who can approximate perfect success in ESP performance."

> The Office of Security, which ran the ARTICHOKE project, was urged to follow "all leads on individuals reported to have true clairvoyant powers"...the CIA began infiltrating seances and occult gatherings...The CIA also sought to develop techniques whereby the ESP powers of a group of psychics could be used "to produce factual information that could not be obtained in any other way....everything that adds anything to our understanding of what is taking place in ESP is likely to give us advantage in the problem of use and control." (Lee and Schlain, Acid Dreams, note, p. 18)

In the late 1970s, the Stanford Research Institute did psychic experiments for the CIA. In 1981, the U.S. Army began a study at SRI to systematize psychic phenomena and make their results reliable, consistent, and useful to nonpsychics. Their funding was a few million per year. The CIA worked with "seers," parapsychologists whose abilities they hoped could equal those of the KGB's psychotonic experts.

"Remote viewing" was discovered in 1983. The success of CIA remote viewing operations has become common knowledge. "Micro psycho-kinesis," also known as "Micro-PK" is the psychic ability to manipulate small objects, including those in electronic systems. This has also been an area of intense interest to CIA and Pentagon ESP researchers. (Goals might be to erase a disc or bring down a plane, or trigger a distant explosion.) In the category of distant viewing...

---

[1] Sheila Ostrander and Lynn Schroeder wrote a book about Soviet psychic research. Psychic Discoveries Behind the Iron Curtain*, Prentice-Hall, 1970.

> I saw Stansfield Turner, former CIA head, affirm on a videotape, "Yes, this works," he said. "We had one psychic that described specific military installations inside the Soviet Union, information that turned out to be, in detail, correct." The head of the Navy said, "Yes, there is such an operation underway, and no, I won't talk about it." (Maj. Ed Dames, interviewed by Art Bell, p. 6, After Dark)

The private sector was researchig too. In a mishmash of fact and fancy, Doublas Baker told how to "control" another person's mind via an extrasensory transmission which he called a "vortex of energy." (Douglas Baker, The Opening of the Third Eye, p. 81) He pointed out the anatomical function of the eyes as a nervous-system conduit into, and out of, the brain:

> ...The optic nerves...have occult significance...The human eyes have a two-way activity...the picking up and transmitting of energies...The latter, the radiatory capacity of man, pour out through the eyes and are the basis of the ancient proposition of the "evil eye." The optic nerves are the only part of the brain which is visible from the exterior. They are to be seen clearly through an ophthalmoscope. It is from this region of the eye that occult forces [ESP] pour (Ibid., pp. 100-101)...Then great power over the one gazed at is soon developed.* (p. 107)

ESP Is a Trance Phenomenon

Unusual mental events tend to be associated with trance states. Parapsychological events are most likely to occur when a person is in a spontaneous, operator-induced, or self-induced trance state. The most remarkable results of all happen when two or more, associated, persons are in trance at the same time.

In 1892, in The Law of Psychic Phenomena, T. R. Hudson said that most ESP events are unconscious confabulation or misinterpretations, but that a few are well documented as authentic. He reasoned that extrasensory abilities are based in the unconscious and are most sensitive in a person who is in deep trance. Modern research has confirmed Hudson's theory. Higher scores on ESP tests are associated with deeper trance states:

> The discoveries of psychic expert Dr. Charles Honorton, of the Maimonides Medical Center, seem to agree with this theory linking alpha powers and psychic powers. Dr. Honorton worked extensively with alpha feedback for long periods, and he found that successful ESP insights are related to "relaxation, mild disassociation, passivity, and a reduction of visual imagery.'"..In addition, everyone who showed relatively high alpha also had relatively high ESP scores in a test. (Jodi Lawrence, Alpha Brain Waves, 1972, pp. 56-8)

Another mental state that is both high alpha and associated with psychic production is the hypnogogic:

> As your mind changes from one conscious level to another, as from waking to sleeping or sleeping to waking, ESP phenomena have been recorded by scientific observers...The period when you are already asleep and just beginning to dream, is also associated with psychic production. (Ibid., pp. 56-8) intelligence or military operator to acquire skills exactly like those which Greg's friend had so helpfully demonstrated for me: maximum speed; maximum force of hit; maximum trance depth for the subject, if affected (yielding maximum hypnotic control).

Somebody with skills like that had made an effective hit on a teenage boy at an away-from-home Christian conference. Why? I definitely wanted to learn more. A week later, an opportunity appeared. I met Linda, a lean, attractive New Ager with a husband, Marcus (25 years younger than she was), and a cute baby. They made drums for a living.

Linda told me that an unusual person named Ivy recently had bought a drum from her. She said that, only moments after arriving, Ivy had looked into her eyes and thrown her into the deepest state of consciousness she had been in for years. Ivy then intoned deepening suggestions over her such as, "You will just let go." (I noted that she knew the lingo of a professional hypnotist.) In that deep trance, Linda had vividly hallucinated. She saw her guest as a beautiful, wise young Indian woman. She saw herself as also young and beautiful. Very seductive stuff.

Linda had a bad case of rapport. She was filled with awe, respect, longing to obey Ivy, and a craving for that deep trance feeling to happen again. Marcus, on the other hand, who had viewed the whole thing as a spectator (like staying sober at a drug party), now feared and detested Ivy. He also was struggling with alienation from Linda caused by her sudden fascination with Ivy.

I said to Linda, "Please, I want to meet Ivy. I want to ask her some questions." I explained my research in extrasensory inductions.

A few days later, Ivy walked into a social gathering at Linda's house where I awaited her. She was a short, slim, grey-haired, well-dressed, well-groomed, attractive woman of 58. Linda introduced us, then walked away into the adjacent porch where her other guests were seated.

I knew that Linda had already told Ivy why I wanted to meet her, but Ivy did not mention extrasensory trance inductions as we chatted casually. She and I now stood alone, facing each other. Then I felt her turn on the mind-to-mind inductive pressure. This time I was expecting it.

It felt different from the mind of Friend. Her head was not placed so near to mine as his had been, only about eighteen inches away. Her eyes stared fixedly at mine. (The eyes are the only site at which a person's brain is not encased in bone. At the back of the eye socket, the optic nerve connects directly with brain tissue.) Her eyes, as she began that moment of inductive effort, acquired a quality of extraordinary luminosity. However, that may have been an unconscious, rather than a normal, visual registering.

As her eyes projected that extraordinary, focused energy, I simultaneously perceived Ivy's inductive pressure on my mind. Her push was not as powerful as Friend's had been. Rating their voltages on a subjective scale, I'd say that his was nine out of a possible ten; hers was seven out of that ten. However, her attempt had lasted longer than his—perhaps ten seconds. His lasted only about three seconds.

Her induction pressure, also, would have forced me into trance, if I had not been sealed against it. I resisted both consciously and unconsciously. I did not turn my eyes from her gaze, or walk away. I simply stood there, calmly analyzing what was happening, until she gave up and turned it off.

Ivy got her turn. Now, it was mine. I seized the opportunity and spent the next three hours (in the presence of Linda, her spouse, and several guests) trying to extract information from her.

I learned that she was single, the mother of three grown children, and a student in her final year in Kent University's Ph.D. clinical psychology program. She said that her department's faculty did not know about her interest in using her mind to force people into trance. She had not mentioned it on her application.

Ivy had been studying extrasensory mind inductions privately for the past ten years, ever since she took a class in Silva Mind Control. After she realized that extrasensory induction was possible, she tried to induct people, every day. She did that wherever she found guinea pigs to practice on (at the laundromat, in the checkout line).

"How many inductions a day, on the average, did you try?" I asked.

"About six," she said.

At first, her power was weak. She could not get her targets into altered consciousness. Or, if she could, their trance was not very deep. As years passed, however, during which she kept practicing and kept goading herself to generate a more powerful induction, she gradually became better at it.

She learned that she had to be in a momentary, self-induced, deep trance to do a mind-to-mind induction. The deeper her own trance was, the stronger her power became to force somebody else's mind into that state.

Therefore, she sought out mind-training programs that would train her to go into deeper trances.

After she took a Master-level Avatar course five years ago, Ivy said that her extrasensory induction technique really began to work . Back home from Avatar, during a week when she felt like she was "going crazy," she said that two "guides" had appeared in her mind. "They" had been with her ever since. "They" chose the persons she would zap and controlled the entire zapping process in her brain. From then on, she had her present ability.

Then, Ivy heard of a new type of brainwave synchronizer induction machine. She volunteered to be a test subject for it. She received several months more of deep-trance training from that electronic device. It was a tape with a music track. The synchronizing (induction) track was a subliminal layer concealed underneath the music. She listened to the tape through a headset.

Although she had paid for the synchronizer like a regular product, she said that she was required to keep a detailed daily record of her experiences while using it. She also had to make weekly phone reports to a supervisor.

I said, "Sounds like a research project."

She nodded, "It probably was." She did not know who had invented the device, or who was sponsoring the research. "Some government agency," she guessed. She said that machine was the most powerful inductive tool she had ever encountered, sending her into the deepest trance she had ever experienced. It was "better than Silva, better than Avatar."

Her instructions were to use it no more than half an hour per day: "One day I said to hell with it and left it on for two hours," she recalled. "I threw up for the next three days."

Ivy saw no moral problem with performing uninvited extrasensory inductions. She claimed to be "adjusting the energy" of the people whom she pushed into trance. She said that if it was possible for her to push somebody into trance, that meant they needed her "adjusting." She said that she was meant to affect each person she put into trance, and therefore she was not personally responsible. She insisted she used her abilities only for good.

I did not view it that way. Her attempted induction of me, and the interview she gave afterward, certainly were helpful to me. They were helpful, however, only because I was researching predatory and abusive hypnosis, and she was a predator who was willing to demonstrate her ability and then talk about it. I had now observed and interviewed a person who used remarkable mental skills for a personal power trip—gathering devotees, spreading her religion by a devious hypnotic technology, for she urged everybody she encountered to let her give them the past-life trip: "No charge."

She also used this black art to attack a vulnerable person she saw as an obstacle. Linda's husband, Marcus, did not approve of Ivy, and he did not pretend otherwise. Marcus had never had a past life regression and certainly did not want one now. Ivy was clearly targeting him for a future forced-induction attempt as she dropped repeated, insistent, seductive presuggestions: "The name 'David' keeps coming to mind. I think you're going to experience a past life. Yes, something about 'David," she said to him.[1]

Teacher from the Psychic Institute

Three days later, I heard about a woman in the community who had been the head teacher at the Berkeley Psychic Institute. I made an appointment to interview Melina. She was an attractive young brunette possessing a powerful mind which I sensed was carefully leashed. We had a warm conversation. She confirmed that the CIA had long been interested in psychic skills. She said they used to have a panel of psychics observing the Soviet Union. She said that two graduates of her fifteen-month training program had been hired immediately after graduating by "the government."

I said, "I've heard some people say there really is no right or wrong, no good or evil, that it's all relative."

She shook her head firmly, "No."

We talked about unethical trance. Melina does not call herself a hypnotist, but rather a "psychic." She said that, as a child, she dragged chairs around the room, blew up electronic equipment, and bent spoons with her mind (talents she now can, and does, inhibit). Instead of attending college, she took training in directly using her brain power. (She did not say who trained her.) Then she found employment as head teacher of the Berkeley Psychic Institute. After a few years, however, she left that job because of ethical differences with some of the Institute's leadership. She now worked with a team of physical therapists on the Eastern side of the Appalachians, trying to help clients with crippled and disabled bodies.

---

[1] Understanding this, it can be seen that, although numerous witchcraft trials in the Middle Ages are well documented as being inappropriate, there may have been a kernel of truth involved in the movement. Ignorant and fearful persons may have been desperately trying to defend society against predatory individuals with the skill of mind-to-mind inductions.

She knew exactly what I was talking about when I described the psychic induction attempts by Friend and by Ivy. She called what they had tried displacement: the attempted displacement of the subject's conscious control by the hypnotist's mental will. She also called it running your energy through a person, or invasion.

Melina said she had taught her students at the Berkeley Psychic Institute how to block both displacement and mind-reading attempts as a part of her curriculum. (Mind-reading was a completely new idea to me. I had never encountered the concept before, outside of science fiction.) Melina said that she considered both displacement and mind reading unethical and, therefore, did not train students how to do them, only how to block them. She added, however, that learning how to block displacement and mind reading obviously made students aware that displacement and mind-reading were possible. She said she knew some students , once made aware, would try on their own to use those skills.

She recalled an incident that had occurred at a Whole Life Expo (psychic fair) that she had attended. She had been watching a demonstration given by a "Reverend Martinez," the head of an unnamed organization. His top assistant, a person "who misused his energy a lot," came and stood close by her. For fifteen minutes, she said, he attempted to "invade my mind." Melina silently blocked him, and continued watching. (I soberly pondered that image. I had resisted ten seconds. Melina had cooly held off a mind predator for fifteen minutes. I was impressed.) After that quarter hour of fruitless attack, he said aloud to Melina, "You have a strong mind."

"Yes, I know," she replied.

"I'd like you to join our organization," he said.[1]

Melina replied, "I'm already employed. I'm head teacher at the Berkeley Psychic Institute."

I asked her how many people were now receiving this type of training. She would not speculate about the numbers in other programs. She did say that the Berkeley Psychic Institute had seven "seminaries" in California (which she said was a center for this kind of activity). Total current attendance in all the training programs of the Berkeley Psychic Institute was about 7,000. Each graduate received a credential from the state of California as a "minister" in the Church of Divine Man. I asked, "How big are Church of Divine Man congregations?"

"There are scarcely any congregations, " she said "They have a publishing house (Deja Vu Publishing, Berkeley, California), the training programs, and tours to 'psychic' places. That's it."

"Then what do these 'ministers' do after they graduate?" I asked. She said they often went into psychic reading, or counseling, or gave training courses in meditation, or some such. Then, she talked about the psychic readers who put their subjects into involuntary, deep, even amnesic, trance—displacing the clients' conscious minds with their own, establishing hypnotic control over them.

I was surprised. I had thought psychic reading was fake. Now I understood that the induction of the subject and his consequent suggestibility could be real. I also realized that the psychic might put herself into a trance state and make use of its paranormal potential for the "reading."

Melina also expressed distress about psychics who displace and then give the entranced client manipulative suggestions: "You must move to San Francisco," she intoned, psychic-style. She spoke bitterly of psychic-addicted clients who let a psychic utterly control their lives.

I asked, "What percentage of psychics use their skill unethically?"

She thought hard a minute. "About sixty percent of them," she said. "And a further fifteen percent create problems for their client because they have so little self-knowledge of their own programming that they unconsciously pass on their own baggage."

"What organization out there abuses mind-control technology the worst?" I figured she was going to answer the CIA or NSA. After thinking another long minute, however, she said, "The Scientologists."

After that, I became busy with other things. I lived on the road, stayed with volunteer hosts, led writing workshops for home-schooled children and their teaching parent. I also spoke on long-term trends in the nation's food supply and how to have the greatest garden of your life. In every spare moment, I worked to complete this book.

Over the next year, I encountered several more persons attempting mind-to-mind inductions. (Now that I knew what it was, I recognized encounters I would have missed before.) One inductor was a short, homely, elderly man who tried it on me during a contra club's closing waltz. After our 1. I did not get around to asking what this "organization" of persons who "misused their energy" actually did, but it sounds like it would definitely fit into the category of trance abuse.

---

dance, I questioned him.

He said he had read about mental inductions in a few places and now was trying to learn how to do it. He attended contra dances several times a week in order to attempt inductions during the spin-your-partner moments, and waltzes. Contra etiquette requires the girl to stare into her partner's eyes during spins, and her brain is somewhat disabled from all the spinning. These two factors helped his induction attempts.

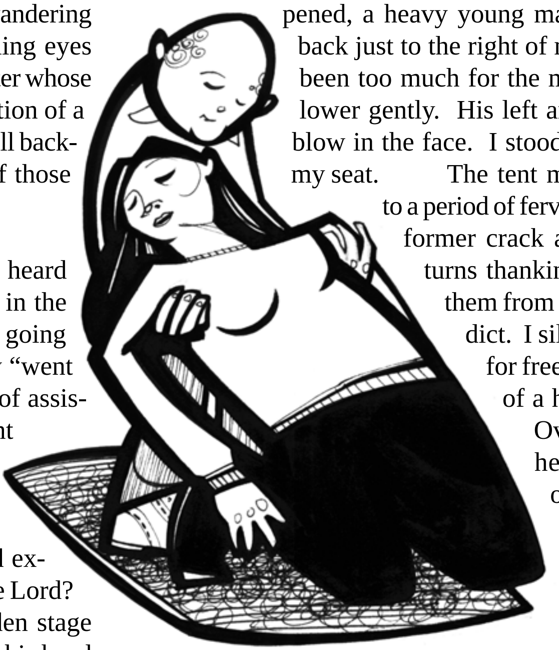
I met a professed witch whose induction effort felt like a dark spinning evil rushing toward me, a wandering psychic who attempted my induction with gleaming eyes from a seat in my audience, and a charismatic minister whose prayer induction produced a skillful mental sensation of a disorienting spinning, with additional nudging to fall backward on each backside pass of the spin. None of those three affected me.

I also visited a tent meeting where I had heard that the minister was causing people to be "slain in the Spirit." Toward the meeting's end, people began going forward. One by one, he prayed for them. Many "went down, " falling backwards into the waiting arms of assistants who then gently laid them on the canvas tent floor. They would remain there until normal consciousness returned.

I went up, determined to experience and explore this man's induction also. Was it really of the Lord? Moments after I arrived at the edge of the wooden stage platform, the pastor came over to me. Positioning his head within a couple inches of mine, he began to pray for me. I closed my eyes at the thought of prayer. I am a Christian.

Then I felt a mental invitation to induction. It was substantively different, in two ways, from all the previous ones. First, the carrier wave emotion was not anger like that of Friend, or the seductive fascination projected by Ivy and the Contra Man, or the disorientation nudge of suggested spinning. Instead, it felt like pure love, safe and warm. Second, unlike all the previous mind-to-mind induction attempts, there was no compelling element. Instead, I felt like my permission was being asked: "Well, do you want to, or not?" I felt as if the decision was entirely free, entirely mine.[1]

"I want to," I thought. Then it happened. For the first time in my life, I was "slain in the Spirit." I instantly became completely unconscious and fell backward. The assistants, waiting behind me, caught my falling body and lowered it to the canvas floor. A moment later, my conditioning to resist any induction reasserted itself. I surged back up to full awareness. The experiment being completed, I had no further reason to be in that state.



As I still lay there, considering what had just happened, a heavy young man crashed onto his back just to the right of me. His weight had been too much for the minister's helpers to lower gently. His left arm hit me a painful blow in the face. I stood up and returned to my seat. The tent meeting then shifted to a period of fervent testimonies from former crack addicts. They took turns thanking Jesus for freeing them from the life of a drug addict. I silently thanked Jesus for freeing me from the life of a hypno-robot.

Over the next years, I heard of —or met— other charismatic ministers, prophets, or revivalists whose mind-to-mind quality did not seem pure and holy to me. I learned that just because it says it's good, does not guarantee that it is good. I also learned that any attempt by me to bring up the subject of extrasensory induction to any nonChristian practitioner triggered instant mental combat.

I never failed to resist an unwelcome induction in one of these Top Dog contests. Nobody ever tried it on me a second time. Soon, I quit inviting trouble. Reason suggested that somewhere there was a psychic predator who could overcome my inner resistance. I did not want that to happen.

---

[1] Neuroanatomists say that no two brains look exactly alike, outside or inside. Every mind-to-mind induction attempt I've experienced has had a unique "signature" quality.

Psychiatry Is No Longer a Joke

...the observer who attends neuroscientific meetings finds himself in the company not just of researchers, writers, philosophers, businessmen, politicians, and journalists but also of military men....What will it be like, a few years hence, when the secret police have scanners to identify banned thoughts and drugs to change minds?...In this future-shock world of ours, truth often seems more like fantasy than impending reality, which makes it all the more difficult to confront....as I've watched the science unfold in an obscurity that approaches secrecy, my fears have intensified...Psychiatry is no longer a joke, and those who continue to laugh are fools.

Jon Franklin, Molecules of the Mind, 1987, pp. 281-282, 298

"A" Was Not Available

My routine, at that time, was to recruit persons I knew, ask them to organize a week's speaking schedule in their area for me, and then live in their home while fulfilling those obligations. I asked a Tennessee lady, whom I had met on a previous visit, to organize some bookings. "A" agreed. A few weeks later, however, she changed her mind, saying she was too busy. She had found an enthusiastic fan of mine to take her place as my Tennessee coordinater, she said. That was how it came about that "D" took charge of my Tennessee visit.

"B" Is for Background

D's booking abilities turned out to be truly remarkable. She scheduled stays combined with speaking engagements for me, first with "B," then with "C," and lastly with herself. She scheduled so many speeches and seminars that I had to book a second visit to Tennessee to fit them all in. My first visit (divided between B and C) was for a week, in late October, 1996. B turned out to be a kindly old Assembly of God minister who pastored a tiny rural church. I enjoyed my three-day visit there, and spoke every day. Then it was time to move on.

"C" Is for Counterintelligence

After I wearily pulled into her driveway after dark, my second Tennessee host, C, greeted me cordially. We then sat in her homey living room, getting acquainted. Suddenly, the pretty blonde daughter nestled in her lap said, "Don't think of pink elephants."

That's a standard line in programs that train hypnotists. It helps students to understand that the unconscious does not perceive negatives ("not," "no") very well. Student hypnotists must learn to phrase suggestions in a positive way, because "Don't think of pink elephants" makes people think of pink elephants.

I now knew that there was a hypnotist in this young girl's environment. Who? I remembered that I had not yet met the girl's father. I asked my hostess, "What does your husband do for a living?"

"He's in Army Counterintelligence," she said.

"What does he do in Counterintelligence?"

"He's an interrogator."

Now I understood. Interrogators are highly trained in hypnosis, narcohypnosis, and whatever else can penetrate mental defenses. I knew that from reading old U.S. military brainwashing research.

She added, "He's in Korea right now, won't be back until April." (I breathed an inward sigh of relief.) "He hates his job," she continued. "He always has to work either in an attic or a dungeon (basement), someplace with no windows. For the year and a half he was taking his training, he was awful to live with."

I could believe that. He probably endured some Secret-Don't-Tell conditioning himself. I had heard elsewhere that certain military/intelligence ladders of success now require some hypnoprogramming for every new promotion.

"D" Is for Dangerous

C told me that Mr. and Mrs. D were friends of her and her husband. She said that they, also, would be arriving at her home and staying overnight that night, being on their way to the Small Farm Expo at St. Louis. It was late, and I was tired. I went to bed. Sleeping soundly, I did not hear the Ds arrive.

In the morning, my hostess knocked on my bedroom door. She said the Ds wanted to meet me before they had to leave. I dressed and came out. C was French braiding Mrs. D's hair. Mr. D was sitting at the breakfast counter. At his invitation, I sat down across from him.

He introduced himself as "ex" Army Special Forces. He seemed a wholesome, open, kindly man. He launched into conversation with me with a tale of fighting in North Africa under the U.N. with the "black helicopter" outfit. He spoke bitterly of the U.N. commander's refusal to let the Americans rescue a captured comrade who, as a result, had been tortured and killed.

I had no experience with the U.N., or the military, or fighting in Africa, so I just nodded.

He said that he was employed now in a job that had to do with explosives (and was connected to NASA).

I had no experience, or interest, in explosives, so, again, I just nodded.

At that moment, C intruded and asked me to go into the next room and play a game with the children. (It was the day after Halloween. This was a substitute for last night's trick-or-treating, which she had forbidden). She directed herself, Mr. D, and me, each to a room where we were to think up academic questions to ask the children. A correct answer was to be rewarded with a piece of candy.

She left Mr. D where he was, and assigned him to ask the science questions. I was to ask the English and Social Studies questions. I stood, and began to walk to my station. I was almost to the door when I heard Mr. D ask a child, "What's the largest planet?"

"Jupiter," the child answered.

"No, it's Venus," he said.

I paused, startled. If this man was really in a science/engineering field (explosives) and "connected with NASA," how could he possibly not know that elementary bit of astronomical trivia? "It is Jupiter," I said.

D accepted my correction gracefully.

I wondered if he actually was an undercover agent looking for people who hated the U.N. and were interested in explosives. The Small Farm Today conference, to which he and his wife were hurrying, might have some of those. Both the Cs and the Ds had recently increased their involvement with the "survivalist" movement, embracing back-to-the-land lifestyle, homeschooling, and fundamentalist Christian faith. Maybe both were covertly looking for would-be bombers.

I proceeded to my designated room, sat behind a child's desk, and began to ask questions. I began with harder ones: "What are the names of the continents?" "What are the parts of speech?" The children didn't know. I gave easier, and yet easier, questions, and finally managed to give away some candy.

Her hair being braided, Mrs. D waved a brief farewell to me from the doorway and then hurried off to gather her children for departure. Her husband came into the room to say good-bye. I rose to acknowledge him. As he stood opposite me, on the other side of the desk, mouthing a formal good-by, I felt his mind push a wave of flattery and a short phrase into my mind: "A woman of importance!" I was surprised that I could perceive the words of his projected thought so clearly.

Then I felt a sudden, chilly emptiness around my mind. I realized that impression of chill emptiness was caused by an unconscious perception that Mr. D's flattering thought had been combined with an inductive effort — which was now turned off, resulting in the "emptiness." This was the first extrasensory inductive effort on me that I had not recognized in the start-up and run mode. I had only realized it, consciously, after he turned it off.

I did not like that. I was glad, however, that D had not been able to force me into trance, even though he had been able to broadcast that thought into my mind. I assumed that he had now given up on me, as had all the others.

I was wrong. Defeat only caused this adversary to change his tactics. He swiftly reached out and took my right hand in both of his. He briefly clasped it in a conventional manner. Then he began a random series of little squeezes here and there in different places on my hand. Next, he abruptly switched from that distracting, confusing series of hand pressures to focus on feeling for the main nerve leading from my hand up into my arm. He found it, and pressed down hard with his thumb.

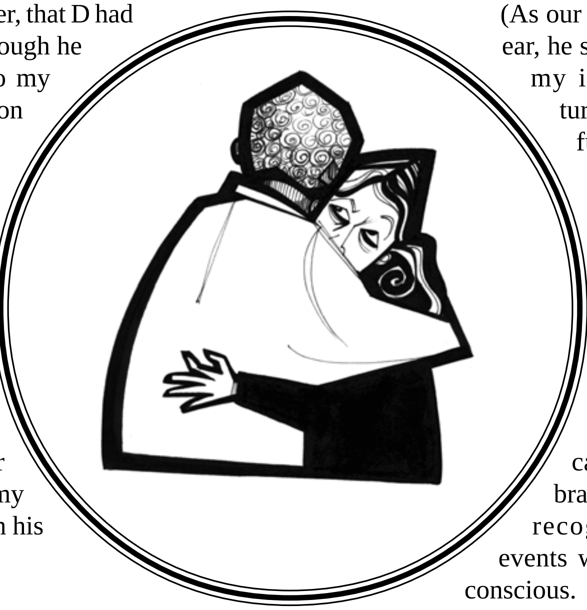
I felt an erotic wave surge, from the point where he pressed, up the nerve in my arm toward my brain. My first reaction was distress that this young Christian married man (he and his wife were longtime members of a major charismatic denomination) had deliberately stimulated the sensual charge now rushing toward my head with bioelectric speed.

Then his stimulus got blocked, transformed to nothing. I did not know how he caused that surge of excitation. I did not know how I stopped it, but I did. My sealing obviously covered that [sex induction?] possibility also.

Mr. D now spoke, aloud, to me. He said, "Something's wrong here. For some reason, that just isn't enough. Got to do this right." A casual listener could have interpreted that statement to mean that his handshake was not a warm enough good-bye, for Mr. D's outstretched arms now indicated that he must have a farewell hug from me.

He was aware that his attempts to push my brain into a state of trance weren't working "for some reason." He was going to try something more, something different, to "do this right." My programming was always to block unauthorized mind penetration. His programming was never to give up his efforts to penetrate, to keep switching attack modes until he succeeded.

He released my hand and walked around the desk, holding out his arms in invitation. Giving no outward sign that I was aware of his previous attempts to penetrate my mental defenses, I politely accepted this "farewell" hug. He was about my height. Embracing me, he placed his ear next to mine. As his head came close to the side of mine, I guessed that he would try again. He did.



(As our skin touched, ear-to-ear, he scanned a measure of my individual —signature—pattern of brain function. Having established my wavelength pattern, he tuned in on my brain activity, like a radio receiver tunes in a chosen station. Next, he activated a means to continue—automatically—perceiving my brainwave activity. My recognition of these events was not, at the time, conscious. I would realize, later, what I had unconsciously observed just then.)

While we still touched, ear to ear, D next forced me to think a very amplified ("loud") thought in pre-speech mode in my mind. I communicated only one word in response to his stimulation of that area of my brain. Delivered to his mind-reading capacity, it was doubled and borne up to consciousness on a carrier wave of derision: "SLEAZY! SLEAZY!"

With the automaticity of unconscious reflex, D accomplished all that in brief seconds of time. Now, he unwound his arms from me and stepped back.

Neither my face nor my outward words in this prolonged process of fake farewell—not even that rudely stimulated thought—had betrayed to him my deep-level sensing of the combat of our lower minds. From the moment that I felt him begin to listen to (record?) my thoughts and emotions, they had revealed nothing of significance. My emotions appeared to be unruffled by all that had passed between us—except for a lingering, generalized disgust. My mental content was as serene and routine as if I did not know all I really knew.

I was not consciously thinking about the probability that he was an agent. I did not consciously think of the relevance of his penetration attempts to my own training and break for freedom.

Just then, Mrs. D came and stood in the doorway again. She was anxious to leave for St. Louis. She told her husband that their children and suitcases were now all in the car, waiting for him. She hurried away again.

Mr. D walked halfway to the door. Then he turned, paused, and told me how much he was looking forward to my scheduled stay in their home (a return visit to Tennessee for ten days in mid-December). I politely voiced a similar statement. I thought I meant what I was saying.

Then he left the room. I heard Mrs. C's front door open, and then close, as the Ds left her house. I heard their car engine start up outside. The moment the car engine started, I felt D's mind-reading connection with me cease. (I do not know why the timing of those two events matched.) I heard the crunch of tires on gravel as they drove away.

For the first time since Mr. D began probing my brain, I was now safe to consciously think my true thoughts and feel my true emotions. In the safety of that broken connection, a huge wave of panic broke over me. The panic surprised me.

I had never felt that fear before—except of my own operators. Now I had something new to worry about. Life would be even more complicated and difficult. It was a week before that feeling of fear wore off.

A friend had mentioned having a long "intense" phone conversation with Mrs. D. My friend had sounded so disturbed. I now called and asked her to tell me more about that conversation.

She said Mrs. D "was like a top spinning out of control. She kept jumping from one idea to another. It didn't make sense."

"That's a standard conversational induction technique, a confusion induction," I told her.

She asked me, "Can a person be hypnotized over the telephone?"

"If they're susceptible, yes," I answered. "Please avoid talking to her again."

Could I avoid talking to the Ds again? The Lord had just provided, by seeming coincidence, a brief (and safe) preview of these upcoming hosts, six weeks before my scheduled visit to their home. What would happen if I fulfilled my promise to visit?

Mr. D would try again—and again, and again. Or would it perhaps be a dual effort with him and his wife combining the mental heat? Or covertly drugging me? Or something else? I had less chance of resisting all that. I knew I must cancel the visit.

I could not lie. So what could I say? Finally, I wrote the Ds a postcard which explained that, for urgent personal reasons, I must cancel my visit to them. Mrs. D wrote back—not to express sympathy—but in obvious anger. She demanded to talk to me on the phone. I wrote back further apologies.

The subliminal impression that I returned to again and again, in reviewing and analyzing my memories of that incident was that Mr. D's mind had used some type of mechanical assist in its penetration efforts. How could that be?

Analysis of a Hit

During the week after my encounter with Mr. D, I considered all that had happened in the few minutes during which he had said "good-bye" to me. I pondered those events until I was satisfied that I had extracted every possible bit of data from my memory.

Then, to the best of my ability, I analyzed my observations. I realized that Mr. D had used seven distinct and different techniques:

1. He projected a verbal thought into my mind*: "A WOMAN OF IMPORTANCE!"*

2. He used an extrasensory form of contact with my mind, including the generating of an extrasensory induction effort.

3. He performed a confusing routine of hand pressures.

4. He sent an erotic sensation up the nerve from my hand toward my brain.

5. He forced me to think a verbal thought "loudly" enough to be clearly perceived by his extrasensory ability (or its mechanical or biochip adjunct?).

6. He took a brainprint of my mind's individual electronic frequency profile.

7. He was mind-reading my thoughts (and/or mechanically recording them?) from the time he was ear-to-ear with me until his car engine started.

Now, I needed to find corroboration and explanation of each of those seven techniques. It was easier than I had expected.

1. Thought Projection—D had projected his verbal thought into my mind: "A WOMAN OF IMPORTANCE!" I soon found references to the early stages of that technology.

In 1961, after meeting a technician, who said he could hear radar, Dr. Alan H. Frey, a biophysicist, began testing the effects of microwaves on human nervous systems. He learned that the technicians were right. The human auditory system could respond, as if hearing, to certain modulated electromagnetic energies. His subjects could "hear" pulsed microwaves in the 300 to 3,000 megahertz frequencies.

They tended to perceive the energy as buzzing, hissing, ticking, or knocking. They could hear it even when blindfolded, even when they did not know that the power was on. Deaf persons could hear it. The subjects perceived the sound as coming from inside their heads, or from a little ways behind them.

Frey published those research results in 1961 in Aerospace Medicine and in 1962 in the Journal of Applied Physiology. The U.S. establishment ignored his work.

Soviet scientists, however, were doing similar research. They recognized that the human nervous system is an electronic network through which current flows. Normally, skin and skull shield it from outside power fields, but when certain types of electromagnetic fields impact the body's neural tissue, that impact can cause nervous system response. Frey had proved that.

Frey continued to experiment. He placed electrodes in the brains of living cats, irradiated their heads with pulsed microwaves, and observed their responses on an oscilloscope. They definitely were being stimulated. (Brodeur, The Zapping of America, p. 52)

Now the military was interested. This technology was mentioned in a report assembled for the Defense Intelligence Agency by the Army Medical and Information Agency: "Sounds and possibly even words which appear to be originating intracranially can be induced by signal modulation at very low average power densities."

In the spring of 1973, Dr. Joseph C. Sharp, at Walter Reed Army Institute of Research, "heard" and understood spoken words communicated to him by "a pulsed-microwave audiogram (analog of the words' sound vibrations) beamed into his brain." (Becker, 1985, p. 319) Sharp was the subject in > ...an experiment in which the human brain received a message carried to it by a pulsed microwave transmission. Sitting in an anechoic chamber—a room with absorbent walls designed to prevent microwave reflection—Dr. Sharp was able to recognize spoken words that were modulated by an audiogram—a graphic representation of the sound waves that humans can hear—and that were then sent into the chamber at a microwave frequency of about two gigahertz. (Brodeur, note, pp. 295-6)

This type of research is now hotly pursued. In its 1996 defense authorization bill, Congress authorized $37 million for research in what the Pentagon calls "nonlethal" or "less-than-lethal" technologies. This is sold as a "humanitarian" form of warfare—or crowd control.

> Much of this "friendly force" technology involves electromagnetic fields and directed-energy radiation, and ultrasound or infrasound weapons—the same technology that's currently of interest in brain-stimulation and mind-control research.
>
> A partial list of aggressive promoters of this new technology includes Oak Ridge National Lab, Sandia National Laboratories, Science Applications International Corporation, MITRE Corporation, Lawrence Livermore National Lab, and Los Alamos National Laboratory. (Brandt, "Mind Control and the Secret State," Prevailing Winds Magazine, No. 3, p. 75)

John St. Clair Akwei wrote in his evidentiary document of technology for projecting thought, implanting thought, and associated NSA technologies:.

> RNM [Remote Neural Monitoring] can send encoded signals to the brain's auditory cortex, thus allowing audio communications direct to the brain (bypassing the ears). NSA operatives can use this covertly to debilitate subjects by simulating auditory hallucinations characteristic of paranoid schizophrenia....
>
> Speech, 3D sound, and subliminal audio can be sent to the auditory cortex of the subject's brain (bypassing the ears), and images can be sent into the visual cortex....This modulated information can be put into the brain at varying intensities from subliminal to perceptible.

2. Imperceptible Induction Pressure—I could not perceive it turn on, only switch off. I must have perceived it turn on unconsciously, however, because I unconsciously blocked it. I already had experience with extrasensory induction attempts. What was new to me was the existence of mechanical devices for extrasensory mind accessing.

For I had sensed that D's efforts were more than human. Did he have a microminiaturized brainwave synchronizer device carried on (or in?) his body?

I learned that his technology dated back to the 1980s. It was the property of the NSA division called SIGINT (Signals Intelligence).

There are three other significant NSA divisions: COMINT (Communications Intelligence) aspires to "blanket coverage of all electronic communications in the US and the world." (Akwei) The division called DOMINT (Domestic Intelligence) keeps records on all U.S. citizens, and gathers extra information on those individuals who are of special interest to them. According to Akwei, NSA (as of 1996) had 50,000 agents in another division called HUMINT (Human Intelligence).

> These agents are authorized by executive order to spy on anyone. The NSA has a permanent national security anti-terrorist surveillance network in place. This surveillance network is completely disguised and hidden from the public... (Akwei's document)

Akwei said that some of the HUMINT agents knew they were agents—and some were "unknowing" agents. So the NSA was using hypnoprogramming too. But Mr. D obviously knew that he was an agent.

3. Confusing Routine of Hand Pressures.—It was no accident that D had given my hand all those little squeezes. That was a technology I had instantly recognized. Years before, M.H. Erickson reported using a series of random hand pressures as a disorienting and confusion technique to aid induction of a female subject.

In my case, however, D's random hand pressure was more than just a confusion technique. It was also obviously intended to distract my attention and camouflage his next act, which was feeling for the main nerve in my hand, and pressing on it.

4. Erotic Signal—How did D send that erotic sensation from the nerve in my hand toward my brain? The analysis I had made shouted "machine-aided"; the signal was too crude, too out-of-context, too specifically directed into just one main nerve to be natural.

I had no idea how it was generated or how it was passed into my body. I was grateful I had been able to block it.

A few weeks later, I told a friend, who is an engineer, about that strange sensation going up my arm. She was baffled too.

When we talked the next time, however, she chortled happily, "I know now how he did it! An FBI agent who came to give us a seminar on security measures told a joke. The seminar was classified. The joke was not. Never mind its details. The punch line was, 'Chip in the thumb, chip in the index finger, battery in the ring.' As soon as he said that, I knew that's how he did it to you."

5. Forced Articulation of Pre-Speech Thought.—D's ability to force me to think a verbal thought "loudly" enough to be clearly received by his electronic adjunct had deeply annoyed me. I wanted to understand how he did it.

I soon learned that research on radio signals to subjects' brains started in the early MKULTRA era.

Dr. Elliot Valenstein was a psychosurgeon. He stuck electrodes into various sites in the brains of living creatures, testing external control systems directed by wire connections or radio signals to those electrodes. He called his goal "electrically- controlled behavior."

Jose Delgado, a Spanish physiologist and neurologist who researched at Yale during the later years of his career and published more than 200 scientific papers, called it "electronic brain stimulation." Delgado's book, Physical Control of the Mind (1969), has photos of epileptic girls with implanted brain electrodes. He could "send electrical signals...by telemetry while the patients are completely free within the hospital ward" (Delgado, 1969, p. 89). He once halted a charging bull by a radio signal to its implanted electrode.

Delgado also proposed direct radio interface between brains and machines:

> ...direct communication can be established between brain and computer, circumventing normal sensory organs (p. 93)...Electronic knowledge and microminiaturization have progressed so much that the limits appear biological rather than technological. (Delgado, 1969, p. 96)

In his acknowledgments, Delgado thanked the U.S Public Health Service, the Office of Naval Research, and the U.S. Air Force for providing financial support for his book. He applauded the exploding interest in "neurobehavioral sciences." He said "Brain research institutes flourish, publications are increasing in number..." (Delgado, 1969, p. 258)

I learned that the NSA also called it "electronic brain stimulation." It can now be accomplished without putting electrodes in a subject's brain. "...finely-tuned microwaves can achieve the same results as implanted electrodes..." (Daniel Brandt, "Mind Control and the Secret State," Prevailing Winds Magazine, No. 3, p. 76) This technology

> ...has been in development since the MKULTRA program of the early 1950s, which included neurological research into radiation (nonionizing EMF) and bioelectric research and development. The resulting secret technology is categorized at the National Security Archives as "Radiation Intelligence," defined as "information from unintentionally emanated electromagnetic waves in the environment, not including radioactivity or nuclear detonation.
>
> Signals Intelligence implemented and kept this technology secret in the same manner as other electronic warfare programs of the U.S. Government. The NSA monitors available information about this technology and withholds scientific research from the public. There are also international intelligence agreements to keep this technology secret. (Akwei document)

Okay, but how could Mr. D make me think a thought? How could he make me think it loudly? Did he use a subliminal question to designate what the content of that thought would be? Did he ask, "What would you call me?" Or, "What do you think of me?" Did he want, most of all, to know if I realized that he was an undercover agent?

Akwei provided a table of frequencies. He said that 9 Hz, for example, might create a "phantom touch sense." Was that the frequency of the charge that D sent up my arm?

Akwei did not say which frequency might stimulate a subject's pre-speech center, forcing them to loudly articulate a thought. But Akwei did list the frequencies which might stimulate a person's motor control cortex, auditory cortex, and visual cortex, etc.. It makes sense that a brain's pre-speech center can also be zapped into performing.

The signal by which D stimulated the word SLEAZY out of me during that ear-to-ear positioning was probably highly focused and directional. Microwave signals have been developed into "pencil-thin beams which were too narrowly directional to be picked up anywhere beyond the immediate vicinity of the signals." (Bamford, p. 508)

An acquaintance, who is CEO of a company that implants a space-age hearing aid, told me that technology to perceive verbalized, "pre-speech," human thought via skin contact is now well developed. He said that electrical equipment can "gather and read the electrical fields generated on the skin and translate subvocal speech into text." So, as long as we were touching skin, it was easy for Mr. D to "read" my SLEAZY, SLEAZY response.

Akwei's document explains more:

> ...For electronic surveillance purposes, electrical activity in the speech center of the brain can be translated into the subject's verbal thoughts. EMF Brain Stimulation works by sending a complexly coded and pulsed electromagnetic signal to trigger evoked potentials (events) in the brain, thereby forming sound...in the brain's neural circuits. EMF Brain Stimulation can also change a person's brain-states [of consciousness] and affect motor control.

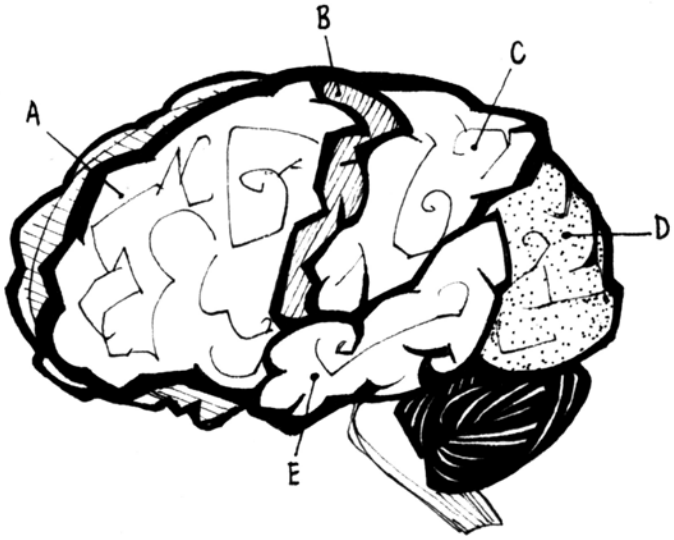
Affect motor control... An agent like Mr. D was not your regular gun-carrying policemen. D toted a mind-control arsenal. He could implant a thought into a person's mind and make the subject think it was his own. He could push a mind into a suggestible trance state. He could read the emotions and thoughts of a mind. He could disable a body by disruptive signals to a person's motor cortex: affecting motor control.



A. Frontal Lobe (Speech, etc.)
B. Motor Cortex (Movement)
C. Parietal Lobe (Sensory)
D. Occipital Lobe (Visual)
E. Temporal Lobe (Sound)

6. Brainprint—Reading Akwei also helped me to understand the "brainprint" perception. To insert a thought into a brain, he said, it is necessary to decode

> ..the resonance frequency of each specific brain area. That frequency is then modulated in order to impose information in that specific brain area. The frequency to which the various brain areas respond varies from 3 Hz to 50 Hz. Only NSA Signals Intelligence modulates signals in this frequency band. (Akwei document)

That explained my perception that Mr. D took a "brainprint" of me. He was "decoding the frequency" of my individual brain.

Jon Franklin is a journalist who covers molecular psychology. He has twice been awarded a Pulitzer prize for nonfiction. His 1987 book, Molecules of the Mind described the emerging Brave New World of neuroscience. Franklin stated in Molecules of the Mind that each human mind has a unique brainprint, comparable to other unique human traits—fingerprint, retinal scan, and facial configuration. He predicted a coming era in which police will identify people by their brainprints.

A retired career man in military intelligence wrote:

> Imagine transportation devices in which the key to the ignition is a digitized code derived from your electroencephalographic signature and is read automatically upon your donning some sort of sensorized headband. (Corso, The Day After Roswell, p. 99)

7. Mind-reading—The mind-reading (mechanically recorded?) that went on, from the time Mr. D. was ear-to-ear with me until his car engine started up, was the last, and ugliest, problem to consider.

An acquaintance who once was expert at Silva Mind Control and then became a believer remarked that he used to have conversations with people in "other buildings." ESP. What a person in deep trance can accomplish by mental focus, logically a sensitive enough machine could do. Becker wrote that a conscious electromagnetic field has the potential to learn to directly recognize another such field, even to effect it. Or extract information from it:

> The sensitivity of our instruments may someday develop to the point where we can tune in to biomagnetic fields on select frequencies, thus experimenting as directly with ESP as we now do with radio.... (Becker, p. 266-267)

The National Enquirer's June 22, 1976, issue reported that the Advanced Research Projects Agency had been working since 1973 to create a machine which would read minds from outside the subject's body by deciphering that brain's projected magnetic waves. A scientist working on the project told the magazine's reporter that their goal was a method of mind control. He said that aspects of the new technology were being worked on at MIT, New York University, UCLA, and NASA's Ames Research Center.

A spokesperson at the Department of Defense, Robert L. Gilliant, Assistant General Counsel for Manpower, Health and Public Affairs, responded to the outcry caused by that article with a letter in which he insisted > ...that the so-called 'brain wave' machine, which was the subject of the National Enquirer article...is not capable of reading brain waves of anyone other than a willing participant in the laboratory efforts to develop that particular device. (Gilliant quoted in Brodeur, The Zapping of America, p. 299)

The part about the machine only being operational with a "willing participant" is an obvious lie. Unless a subject has special training or special ability to resist, it would not matter if he was willing or not.

In 1984, G. Harry Stine wrote about cyberpersons, the frontier where human nervous systems and electronic circuities merge in his book, The Silicon Gods. Stine predicted that chips, which he called "intelligence amplifiers," would soon be available either for implant or temporary attachment to human nervous systems. Stine said that these devices will enable other persons to "get inside a person's head" because of providing the ability to (amplify?) hear another person's thoughts.

In 1986, a writer for Science News, reported that:

> The techniques, under study at the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, in AT&T labs, and elsewhere, will allow outsiders to direct a person's brain cell conversations and talk directly to the individual's brain neurons. (Julie Ann Miller, "Chips on the Old Block," Science News, June 28, 1986, pp. 408-409)

Miller said that research was then focused on the development of integrated circuit chips which could be implanted into a brain.

Akwei reported the finished new technology:

> The NSA's Signals Intelligence has the pro-

Of Biochips and Cyborgs

Government research into bioelectricity, and technologies that combine man and machine, got serious in the early 1980s. In 1984, two-thirds of the $47 billion federal research budget went to the military. (That may be a typical percentage. It is the only year for which I have a measure.) Shortly before 1985, government research in bioelectricity and biomagnetism kicked into high gear with a multimillion push. "In this area almost all research funding is military." (Becker, The Body Electric, p. 333)

Back in 1982, the National Science Foundation had begun to fund research which sought ways to "glue" biochip proteins to neurons. Biochip technology uses organic materials to create the data-processing chips. These organic chips can be integrated with human nervous systems, even implanted into living human brains. The result is literal machine-man combinations.

> In a procedure until recently confined to the fantasies of science fiction, microchips are now being routinely placed into brain stems and cortexes to relieve a variety of medical conditions. Micro-engineered probes many times thinner than a human hair are buried deep inside the brain, fed by platinum wires lacing underneath the skull. More than fifteen thousand people so far have had their brains wired, and this population of cyborgs will increase exponentially. The National Institute of Health leads this field.
>
> ....Some second generation implants can now think. They can interface with brain, provide complex instructions to mechanical parts, and read brain activity. The use of computer microchips also allows these implants to provide a mass of unique information about the host human.
>
> A new generation of intelligent materials and chemicals can fool the brain into believing they are part of the human body, and thus become part of it. Scientists at ICL, IBM and Rank Xerox have independently developed organic based engineered computers, allowing them to construct machines out of living material, using protein strands as wires, and molecular movement as memory. As computers can be 'grown' on living tissue, the interdependency becomes limitless. (Simon Davies, "The Future, Big Brother & You," The Free American, June 1996, p. 4. Published on New Dawn's Web site at: http://www.privacy.org/pi/)

Government research to develop a bionic brain has also been a well-funded area. Living neurons, when maintained in an artificial and semi-mechanical environment, are called wetware to distinguish them from "hardware." An Canadian acquaintance who does computer research told me about the neural net. Neural nets learn and generalize just like normal neurons. If you give a neural net the rule that the past tense is built by adding "ed" it will say "goed" (instead of "went"). You must also teach it every exception to every rule. Then it will learn, just like a child, that the proper usage is "went," not "goed." Neural nets are now used in both commercial and military applications. The bionic brain is here. It is called the biocomputer.

> prietary ability to monitor, remotely and non-invasively, information in the human brain by digitally decoding the evoked potentials in the 30-50 Hz, 5 milliwatt electromagnetic (EMF) wave. Contained in the electromagnetic emission from the brain are spikes and patterns called "evoked potentials."
>
> Every thought, reaction, motor command, auditory event, and visual image in the brain has a corresponding "evoked potential" or set of "evoked potentials." The EMF emission from the brain can be decoded into the current thoughts, images and sounds in the subject's brain.

So why has all this exciting news about the frontier of scientific research in electronic transmission, to and from, human brains not been publicly reported?

It has not been reported because Secret, Don't Tell is a secret, and it is growing, and growing—worldwide. A Swedish author states: "...covert surveillance systems able to control the neurological activity of the brain have been developed in secret and beyond public awareness..." (Robert Naeslund, When the State Rapes, Slipgaten 12, 117-39, Stockholm, Sweden)

Secret, Don't Tell has been made retroactive. A chilling instruction in an old intelligence memo (written by a highly-situated person in U.S. military intelligence) "recommends" complete erasure of a segment of history:

> I recommend that the background of our experimentation with long, low-frequency brain waves and any source material be completely expunged along with any historical data relevant to this analysis. (Corso, The Day After Roswell, p. 199)

History, however, is resistant to being "completely expunged." In 1987, Jon Franklin wrote frankly about prospects for the new mind-reading technology:

> ...the day may come when mind-scanners are commonplace in hospitals. There are also possibilities outside medicine. Mind-scanners might be useful, for instance, in diagnosing accused criminals who plead insanity. Since 'mindprints' probably can't be faked or altered, they could serve to identify people who are, say, involved in security operations...They could also be used to screen students or job applicants... (p. 197)
>
> What will happen when law enforcement agencies apply the mind-scanners to the problem of lie detection...CIA operatives might have to undergo periodic scans to make sure they haven't become double agents. (Franklin, p. 288)

Again and again, Akwei's statement referred to computer-aided mind-reading technology:

> Remote neural monitoring (RNM, remotely monitoring bioelectric information in the human brain) has become the ultimate surveillance system. It is used by a limited number of agents in the US Intelligence Community.

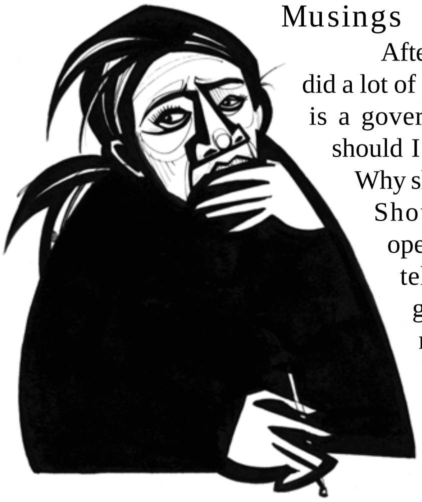
WHOOEEEH! Had I ended up quite literally, smack dab in the arms of one of them: an NSA agent equipped to do remote bioelectric monitoring? And I had escaped to tell the tale.

I was confident that my mind had not revealed anything of interest to Mr. D, either in emotion or verbal thought. Somehow, my unconscious had been able to detect his "noninvasive" invasion. Then my own "Secret, Don't Tell" conditioning reflexively ensured that I revealed nothing—except the unimportant disclosure that I thought his behavior was SLEAZY.

Like a child, huddled terrified under a blanket in the house's basement, my mind split had listened to the footsteps of an intruder noisily walking about upstairs and had kept hidden the existence of itself and of its treasures of information. I had endured that encounter and kept my mind's freedom, but I did not want to be so tested again.



Musings

After meeting the Ds, I did a lot of thinking. If Mr. D is a government man, why should I be afraid of him? Why should I avoid him? Shouldn't I just be open and trusting and tell all? Isn't our government benevolent and the friend of any law-abiding citizen?

But he was not honest with me. I did not like the arrogant way he attempted to view my mind's contents. Thought police. What would thought police in a Muslim society do? In a Communist one? In a society in which people who want to grow their own vegetables and butcher their own chickens are viewed as social renegades by a government controlled by a handful of corporate vegetable growers and agribusiness chicken marketers?

What would thought police do in a society where the masses were ignorant that thought police exist—and the highest priority of the thought police was to keep the existence of the thought police secret?

What was Mr. D looking for? Was he checking me out for possible subversive tendencies? Or looking for another puppet?

If he was just looking for bombers, I could almost make my peace with his technology. But he tried it on me. Did he try it on me because I fit the profile of a possible bomber? Ridiculous. I am female, and, as far as he knew, only interested in goats and gardens. In fact, I abhor violence of every sort—including the secret violence of mind invasion.

More likely, he targeted me because I am a writer with some 400,000 books in print—millions of copies if you count my old articles printed in Guideposts, Organic Gardening, and Backwoods Home Magazine. “A woman of importance.” Any mind-controlled author and “woman-of-importance” could be useful to help validate and disseminate propaganda.

Is any woman or man “of importance” therefore a target to this type of NSA agent, a trophy worth the bother to acquire, a potentially useful puppet to manipulate toward accomplishing the mind-controllers’ chosen goals?

What “important people” are already unknowing puppets of the NSA? How high does their control go? How far does their web extend into the international communities? Bamford said the NSA has agreements with intelligence agencies in other countries. Akwei said that the electronic mind-control technology is international.

Back when I was not at all important, I already was captured and puppetized. Finally, I escaped.

“Something’s wrong here,” Mr. D had said. Yes, indeed. Something was very wrong here. But was it me? Or him? Or both?

Secret police. With mind-scanning abilities. Wow! Akwei said that the NSA can electronically track persons once they have obtained their brainprint. Well, they took a brainprint of me, but I was sure they did not know where I was now. Maybe they were trying to develop that technology, but had not yet perfected it. (Texe Marrs says that in his book, Project L.U.C.I.D.) I knew that Mr. and Mrs. D did not have any magic way of tracking me because friends told me she made several phone calls urgently seeking me after receiving the card which cancelled my visit to their home (and all associated speaking engagements).

I went away from all the earthly persons most dear to me in order to live in hiding, and to write and publish the truth as best I can discover it. Day by day, I struggle to remain free and keep making this book happen. I do that, in part, because I believe the the public has a need and a right to know the truth—all the truth. When a society loses the right to know all the facts, it loses the right to democracy. Only those persons who know all the facts have an arguable basis on which to make good decisions.

There is an old saying, “Hide the truth and the truth becomes your enemy. Disclose the truth and it becomes your weapon.”

We have certain agencies of government for whom truth and truth-tellers have increasingly become the enemy, because the agencies have hidden so much truth. Trapped in webs of cover-up and disinformation, citizens are increasingly uncertain who to believe, and what to believe, even about matters of fact. This is an especially hard situation for persons who believe that the law of God (“Thou shalt not bear false witness.”), and the name of God (“I am the way, the truth, and the life.”), require truth-telling.

The power to compel a trance, to implant a thought, or to mind-read a thought, at first proposal, surely was conceived as a “weapon” for use against an enemy. I’m glad that Gorbachev dismantled the Soviet threat. I’ve wondered for years if he became mind-controlled.

Maybe the displacement of nuclear power by mind-control power was the real significance of the day the Berlin Wall came down; a new political era began. In the era which had just ended, those nations which owned nuclear weapons and intercontinental ballistic missiles were the dominant political powers on earth. In the new era, mind-control weapons, and those who possess them (the secret agencies of certain nations) will be dominant.

Who will be the “enemy” in this new era? Perhaps the enemy will be unknown to the public. The battles for Top Dog among the mind-controllers will not be reported on the five o’clock news. Will the publicly defined “enemy” now become citizens who detest the use of unknowing subjects for terminal experiments, the clandestine use of mind-manipulating technologies on random persons by independent agents, and agencies or military serving secret (or private) agendas without oversight and control by democratically elected representatives?

What would happen if a person, with some kind of ability that top-secret programs have been racing to create for fifty years, turns on its creators and revolts instead of serving? What if that person's extraordinary ability is only absolute obedience, learned in suffering? What if, now, that person only wants to be free—and to tell?

If Mr. D discovers what I'm trying to do, is it he and his NSA associates who "wouldn't hesitate to kill me"? By administrative order, does an independent NSA agent have the right to kill? That's what Akwei said.

Would they kill me because I know too much? I only know too much because that knowledge was forced on me. Would they kill me because I'm going to tell? I never signed a promise not to tell. I never was a government employee. I'm a writer, a writer of nonfiction.

You can kill a writer, but you can't kill her book if the readers act to keep it alive.

I first met Mr. and Mrs. D in November, 1996. I canceled my bookings with them in mid-November. In March, 1997, the "Check Claims Branch, Exception Inquiry Section, Financial Processing Division, Department of the Treasury/ Financial Management Service," using the letterhead of the U.S. Treasury Department, and a Hyattsville, MD, address wrote to me. The letter was a complex notification and was full of threats. It said that I may have made a "false claim" against the U.S. government. It enclosed a copy of a check from "Rust Scaffold Services"(Chicago address) which supposedly had something to do with me. But I have never heard of "Rust Scaffold Services," nor have I lived in Chicago since my college days.

It also referred to the check which an unnamed "Agency" had sent me months earlier— $28.50 to purchase a copy of my Encyclopedia of Country Living.

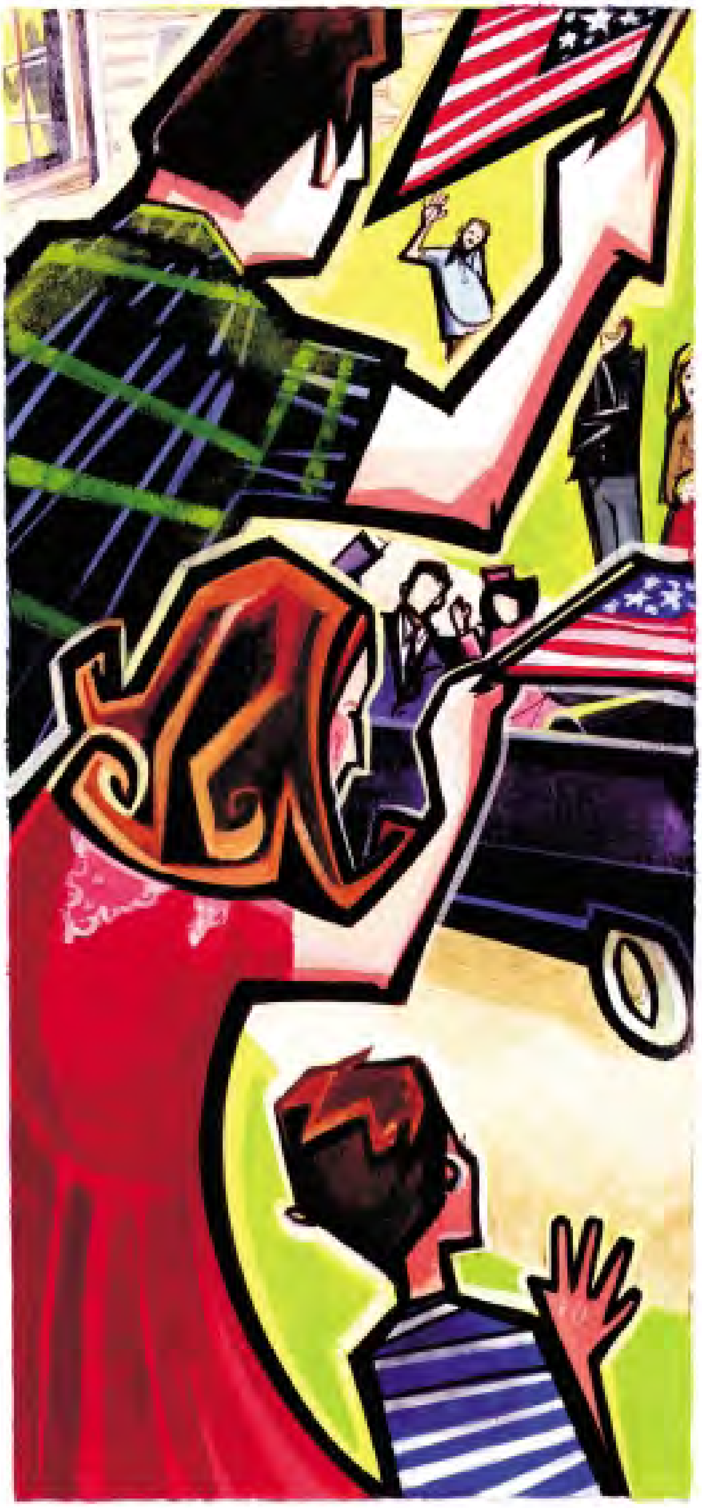
The notification threatened a $10,000 fine and five years in jail if I have made a "false claim" against the government.

Have you heard of permissible deceit? The rule of permissible deceit allows police and government agents to say any false thing when endeavoring to get a subject to divulge any true thing. The letter then asked me to answer a detailed list of questions about where I am, who handles my mail, and how I cash checks. That was probably its real purpose: a fishing expedition for information.

I returned the "Treasury Department" letter with a note, explaining that it was obviously a mistake. I have never resided at the address which they listed.

I struggled on to complete this gargantuan task, helped by many friends.

God is faithful. This long and heavy task of telling will be finished. One day, you will read the text on your computer screen, or hold the printed book in your hand, or listen to it on tape. The Secret, Don't Tell will have been told. The central facts of hypnoprogramming and modern mind-control technologies won't be secret any more.



Two weeks later, he was assassinated in Dallas

PART III

Trance Phenomena

Trance as a Personal Experience
Ten Important Hypnotic Phenomena

Screen-watching...isolates people from physical reality, and from each other.

Trance as a Personal Experience

Light Trance,
Deep Trance,
Or Hypnosis?

☑

Hypnosis?
Or Just Advertising?

> The Church of Scientology...does not give credit to hypnotism... explaining that their processes are the really valid ones while hypnosis is outdated...*[but] their methods are clearly hypnotic ones....yoga comes close to being an Eastern way of using what in the West is called hypnosis...all regimented techniques such as Silva Mind Control, EST, etc., have the phenomena of hypnosis at their roots...although most would fervently deny this. Why? It is very simply good business to try to come up with something which seems different, if you are trying to sell it to a purchasing public.
>
> McGill, J. of Hypnotism, March 1990, pp. 30-31

In 1945, fewer than 200 U.S. professionals used hypnosis. By 1971, 20,000 dentists, physicians, and psychologists were using it professionally.[1] Mental health personnel, advertisers, spiritual advisors, motivation specialists, sports psychologists, people programmers, educators, meditation leaders, dream-group leaders, and group leaders of every sort now use more and more sophisticated mind-influencing technologies. Now, millions of people expertly induce trance and direct the trance experience of others—often for profit (and power).

Human society is now polarizing into division between the influencers and the influenced, the programmers and the programmed, those in the know and those out of it[2] The trend is toward division into subjects and operators—at worst, into hypnotic predators and hypnotic prey. (The prey may unconsciously long to move up and become predators.) There has been an associated revolution in attitude toward trance. In 1971, LeCron wrote, "Where it was not at all unusual twenty years ago to have a patient refuse hypnotic treatment, now this is a very rare occurrence..." (LeCron, The Complete Guide to Hypnosis, p. 223) In 1997, most persons enter inductive settings with even greater abandon.

How did that happen? It happened because the technologies of trance induction and trance management have become ever more sophisticated, more effective, and more widely disseminated to possible "agents." (The names for hypnotist are as legion as the names for hypnosis). It happened because public information about trance has become tightly restricted to only positive, good-marketing statements. The truth is that trance can help. The myth is that trance absolutely cannot be harmful.

---

[1] LeCron, The Complete Guide to Hypnosis, 1971, p. 1.

[2] In Kuhn and Russo's 1958 anthology, Modern Hypnosis, I noticed that 25% of the authors (all expert hypnotists) had been, or were presently, employed in either Labor Relations or Personnel Management for various huge corporations (usually as department head). I had not realized that hypnotists would be concentrated in that field. On second thought, however, it makes sense. An expert at disguised induction could have great potential in either Labor Relations or Management.

It is self-defense to understand how your mind works. Awareness of your suggestibility can help you resist manipulations that you might otherwise uncritically accept. Induction and suggestion technologies (induction to lower consciousness, suggestion to take advantage of that state) are now very sophisticated. Those technologically expert mind manipulations are directed at a largely ignorant public.

Are These Statements True Or False?

(The answers are on the next page.)

- All human beings vary in state of consciousness throughout their 24-hour day—and throughout any trance. The possible depths range from nil to coma.
- You are naturally in deep trance every evening just before you fall completely asleep and every morning just as you are waking up.
- A part of your brain called the reticular activating system specializes in raising (stimulating) and lowering (inhibiting) your consciousness.
- A trance experience can be individual or it can be shared by two or more persons.
- Your trance experience can be guided, directed by another person (hypnotist, charismatic leader, meditation guide, etc.). Or it can be spontaneous, freely unfolding from inside you.
- There are many different ways, called "inductions," to push a susceptible person into lower consciousness.
- Everybody has a certain inborn status of trance susceptibility, ranging from zero to much. The more you experience trance, the deeper the trance tends to get as your susceptibility becomes trained, exercised, and reinforced. Once you have acquired deep trance capability, you will always have it.
- People with the most susceptibility are called "somnambulists," because they can walk and talk in deep trance without waking up.
- Trance is always "hypnotic" in that, the deeper you go, the more suggestible you become. The deeper your trance, the more uncritically you accept anything you hear or read or view in that state.
- A controlling trance state that functionally is hypnosis can be knowingly induced, managed, and concluded by an operator without using the word "hypnosis."
- After any trance induction, even after being told to "wake up" from hypnosis, there is a post-hypnotic period of suggestibility lasting anywhere from several hours to after a night's sleep. During that time, you are extra susceptible to reinduction of trance.
- Trance is addictive. It is our natural programming for social bonding, choosing and following leadership, and profound learning.
- Any entranced person tends to develop emotional fascination with, and emotional dependence upon, the cause of that trance. That phenomenon is called "rapport."
- Trance/hypnosis is unconsciously contagious. If you are around it, you may get caught up in it. Trance contagion explains some historical incidents of "mass hysteria."
- Persons who are in an emotional state (including being angry or hostile) are more likely to be influenced in a trance setting than observers who are simply indifferent.

True or false? They're ALL true.

Trance: The Subjective Experience

It is like a door opening to knowing yourself better, or anything else you're focused on in that moment. In normal waking consciousness the doors to direct perception of the data, memories, and emotions stored in your unconscious are almost closed. The more creative you are, however, the more "ajar" they tend to be.

Or it is like a teeter-totter. Your mind is the teeter-totter. The conscious (you) mind sits on one end of the board. Your unconscious mind sits on the other end. Visualize the act of going into trance as

> ...the subconscious part of the mind becoming the dominant one...visualize the mind as a see-saw with the conscious part normally at the elevated end. During hypnosis this end would descend and the subconscious mind at the other end of the plank would rise to become the dominant one. (LeCron and Bordeaux, Hypnotism Today, pp. 143-145)

Varying depths of trance correspond to varying positions of the teeter-totter board. They also correspond to brain wave states. The slower your brain waves (until you are asleep), the deeper your trance. As you move down into trance, mental activity shifts from the left to the right hemisphere. There is a quieting of the analytical, reality-orienting voice of consciousness as your conscious mind becomes more dissociated, more off-line, more displaced. Correspondingly, the door opens wider to input from your unconscious functions of mind.

At its best, human trance capacity is an innate biological mechanism by which we can

- Be moved by persons and ideas with potential for importance, then give that person (or idea) our loyalty. We may thus fall in love and create a nuclear family, or bond with others as extended family. We may be moved to work together on a worthy common cause (or an unworthy one).
- Access the vast experiential data bank and great problem-solving ability of our unconscious sector; connect with memories from a younger age; obtain creative, problem-solving, and planning ideas.
- Receive extrasensory (or holy) insight, help, warning, and guidance.

Light Trance, Deep Trance, or Hypnosis?

...trance states in daily life, especially light ones, occur, pass unnoticed, and remain unrecorded.

- Griffith Wynn Williams, "Hypnosis in Perspective," p. 4

There are three distinct and different types of trance. Two are characteristic depths of trance: light and deep. The third is a formal style of operator-controlled trance called hypnosis. Induction of trance is not the same thing as hypnosis. A trance, light or deep, can be turned into a hypnosis, light or deep.

I. Light trance is:
  a. Conscious
  b. A high alpha state
  c. A mental condition from which you can instantly emerge any time you want.
  d. Suggestible.
  e. A generator and conduit of rapport.

II. Deep trance is characterized by a. Loss of conscious control
  b. Perceptual distortion
  c. Feeling of heightened significance for experiences or ideas acquired in this state
  d. A sense of contact with the ineffable
  e. Hypersuggestibility.
  f. Heightened rapport

III. Hypnosis is
  a. An operator-managed trance, the conventions of which are already known by, or are taught to, the subject.

Natural Trance

Many factors can induce natural trance states: religious practices, poetry and music (rhythm, tone, and content), daydreaming, staring into a flame, thinking about a dream. There is the spontaneous creative trance of a choreographer, writer, or musician, while working—and the creative trance in which performers of dance, theater, and music may work. Highway trance can cause vehicle accidents: "Both monotony and bright points of fixation are part of the repertory of hypnotic induction." (G. W. Williams, "Highway Hypnosis," 1963)

We naturally shift up and down in level of consciousness, all day, every day. When you stare off into space, "lost in thought," that is a state of lowered consciousness. A natural deep trance, a hypnogogic period, always happens as part of the brain wave stages as you wake up, and as you fall asleep. Those natural trances are different from systematically developed, operator-controlled trance, because their induction is spontaneous and the control is yours. They vary in depth.

Light Trance—In lowered consciousness, we are the most suggestible and the most persuadable. In that state we fall in love—with persons or ideas. We give our loyalty, our love, our sacred love. We accept our most fundamental beliefs. In any trance experience we find good (or what seems good). We find truth (or what seems truth). Deep trance experience is never trivial or transient to the person who experiences it. It becomes the standard by which we judge all other experience.

Do you eat, go to sleep, or wake up from sleep? Those all lower consciousness. You are also in light trance while deep in thought, praying with intensity, hearing a beloved, familiar piece of music, watching television, getting a massage, whenever you're caught up in emotion, in love, or focused on any fascinating experience. Any time you think of, or tell, a dream, your consciousness lowers. Emotional shock, fatigue, sensory deprivation (boredom), and sickness lower consciousness. So do rhythmic sounds or flashing lights. So does a fascinating book, play, statue, or painting. Light trance experience is a rich thread in the problem-solving, creative, planning, emotional, and spiritual texture of the life of anybody who is genetically able—and therefore likely—to experience it.

People are naturally attracted to whatever lowers consciousness. The deeper they go, the more they are attracted to that experience. Your choice of habitual context in which to experience lowered consciousness makes all the difference in how your life turns out. Is it a drug party? a tavern? a concert hall? naked bodies? a TV theme song signaling the beginning of a favorite program? the singing before the preaching? the praying afterward? Do you visualize or meditate, watch video or films, play games, run? Do you seek out extreme challenges like bungee-jumping, roller-coaster riding, hang gliding, sky diving, climbing sheer rock cliffs? Those all lower consciousness.

Trance is a physiological mental state characterized by heightened suggestibility. It always has a context.

That context is what it "contains." It can contain any idea, self-generated or suggested by another person, worthy or unworthy, true or false. Trance capacity is the means by which we experience the directives of a hypnotist or help from the Divine. The physiological mechanism is the same. What you fill that container with makes the difference.

The mind, like the body, is a gift which may be tragically misused. Trance capacity can result in a person being manipulated, seduced, exploited, even destroyed. As with our sexuality, the gift of capacity for lowered consciousness must be protected from abuse, used wisely and appropriately. You are suggestible. Humans are born believers. You can control, however, what you expose your brain to. You can crown your life with a suitable choice, carefully nurtured in a suitable setting, or you can ruin your life with inappropriate choices. Trance experience is a natural talent, a natural hunger for those who are genetically equipped for it. Exercise good judgement and self-control. Use the two gifts wisely: mind and body.

Deep Trance—People view deep trance experiences either with exaggerated suspicion, or exaggerated awe, depending on whether the context is familiar or unfamiliar, approved or disapproved. Deep trance does have extraordinary aspects. Trance/hypnosis may look like a state of sleep, but exactly the opposite is true. Behind the outer aspect of deep trance, there is mental acuteness, intensity, and potential productivity far beyond the capacity of any nontrance state. A person in this altered state of consciousness may be more sensitive to surroundings, more articulate, more critical, more appreciative, and/or more imaginative—more of whatever mental capacity is triggered.

Your brain's physiology is the reason why deep trance experiences tend to feel spiritually intense. In deep trance, the basic assumptions by which your brain manipulates data are available for adjustment—minor or major. Any adjustment of those fundamental parameters in your deepest programming is going to feel like a religious experience.

Every major religion has a denomination, or practice, that pushes worshippers toward the deepest trance state: Islam's Sufism, Judaism's kabbalah; practically any Buddhist or Hindu worship form; and Christianity's charismatics, mystics, centered prayer, monastic meditation, exorcisms, and visions.

Christian denominations vary across a wide spectrum in induction techniques and the depth they target. Inductive elements may include music, solemnity, repetition, and magnificent symbols and visualizations. I have been deeply moved by skilled liturgical music and beautiful patterned expressions of faith. But, let me add, one of the most profound spiritual experiences I ever had happened in a tiny rural Mennonite Church in Oregon. Half the congregation was singing off-key. The preacher was an humble, good man, but not an extraordinary speaker. Yet there, the Spirit of the Lord touched and guided me.

Eastern religious practices first came to America through the influence of pop stars and psychedelics, yogis in labs demonstrating amazing control of internal body functions, and Zen masters hooked up to EEG machines. Eastern religions deliberately and efficiently guide a subject into the deepest trance state possible. They equate religious training with sophisticated induction training. They define the deepest trance as the most desirable religious state. As Western researchers pressed forward into trance experimentation, Western variants on the Eastern imports developed.

The biggest, liveliest, most overt deep trance marketplace pitching its wares to Generation X is the whole New Age religious scene: psychics, gurus, yogis, hypnotists, channelers, dream therapists, scream therapists, massage therapists, movement therapists, hypnotherapists, mediums, visionaries. There is a trance angle to all the New Age interests: paranormal phenomena, drug-induced states, mystical experiences, dreams, and mutual hypnosis. New Age activities are a religion based in a thousand versions of put me down (into trance), and fill me up (with whatever).

The inductions out there are not all religious. Most women expecting a baby train in LaMaze, or its equivalent of coached childbirth. Athletes visit sports psychologists to train in concentration. If you go to the emergency room with a migraine, you get progressive relaxation followed by visualizations. Blood pressure patients can get biofeedback training. Cancer and AIDS patients visualize their white blood cells increasing in number (and they do increase!). Pain patients learn self-hypnosis.

Commuters with lifestyle problems listen to hypnotic tapes with subliminal messages, trying to reprogrammed themselves out of bad habits. Couch potatoes can watch hypnotic videos with subliminals. Nicotine and ice cream addicts can go to hypnotic stop-smoking or reduce-eating “seminars.” Television viewers and pop magazine readers are urged to call a psychic.

☞ It is good business. Anybody entering deep trance gets a thrill (a surge of cortical excitation) from the Aha! center in their limbic brain. A rapport attraction to the agent of that inductive rush follows, plus an instinctive bonding with whomever you shared that experience. These three forces (Aha!, rapport, and bonding) add up to a strong urge to return for reinduction.

Persons who are genetically nonsusceptible to deep trance are left on the sidelines, appalled at the mental antics of both the suggesters and the suggestible.

“Hypnosis” Defined

Some persons see the world as a system of competing wills in which weaker minds are dominated by stronger ones. People do influence—or are influenced by—other people in every interaction, usually not intentionally. The more you like and trust another person, the more likely you are to accept suggestion from that person. Any natural leader elicits a “hypnotic” response from his followers. None of that, however, is hypnosis in its formal definition.

Hypnotism is a form of unconscious influence so extreme as to be a special category. It is an operator-managed trance state. When the subject is most deeply somnambulist (most extremely dissociated), and if there is rigid operator control of that state, then that operator is most truly a hypnotist. In this formal and rule-governed style of trance, hypnosis, the operator’s will displaces the subject’s will and directs his unconscious. A defining element for hypnosis is the degree of operator control.

Hypnosis is a technology. Like any other technology, since fire was tamed and the wheel invented, it can be used either for good or evil. Hypnosis is used in stop-smoking and weight-loss clinics, by sports psychologists, behavior therapists, and hypnotherapists. Some psychologists, psychiatrists, and doctors use hypnosis in their medical practices to treat problems such as anxiety, phobias, sexual dysfunctions, bulimia, and chronic pain. Suggestion under trance can minimize pain and bleeding in any medical situation from childbirth to dental procedures, and in surgeries of all sorts.

The root for the word “hypnosis” is the Greek word for “sleep,” but hypnosis differs from physiological sleep. Trance is not necessarily the same thing as hypnosis, but hypnosis always starts out as trance. Some hypnotists, in private conversation—comparing the ecstasy of religious experiences, meditations, visualizations, concentrations, and reveries—insist “it’s all hypnosis.” That is a false statement. It is all trance, but it is not all hypnosis.

Trance is physiologically defined by dominant brain wave pattern, bioelectricity (positive or negative current and direction of direct current flow in the head), and blood chemistry. Hypnosis is any trance state that is initiated, managed, and concluded by an operator (the hypnotist). That management usually involves suggesting cues for reinduction and awakening. The hypnotist trains his subject to increase depth of trance, suggestibility, and obedience.

A hypnotist’s use of authority can vary wildly. He can create the state, then let the subject take full control; training in biofeedback does that. At the other extreme, the hypnotist uses a totally authoritarian strategy in which the subject never is expected to have self-control in the hypnotic state again. Suggested total amnesia for all events under trance may cause the subject to be consciously unknowing of their hypnotic relationship. Complete amnesia is not typical, however, even of deep trance events.

Hypnosis, at best, is a special way of encouraging a subject's unconscious mind to activate its own capacity for healing. At worst, it can be the tool of an abusive parasitizing of one mind by another for the purpose of exploitation. It becomes clear, therefore, why the Bible repeatly warns against involvement in the practice.

If the operator told you to jump, after the hypnosis is over, when he says "Boo!" and you do not jump, you were not hypnotized. If you do jump—and explain you are just playing along—you were hypnotized, and now you are rationalizing.

Trance Training

> We have had religious revolutions, we have had political, industrial, economic, and nationalistic revolutions. All of them, as our descendants will discover, were but ripples in an ocean of conservatism—trivial by comparison with the psychological revolution toward which we are so rapidly moving. That will really be a revolution. When it is over, the human race will give no further trouble. (Aldous Huxley, quoted by Andrews and Karlins in Requiem for Democracy? An Inquiry into the Limits of Behavioral Control, p. 1.)

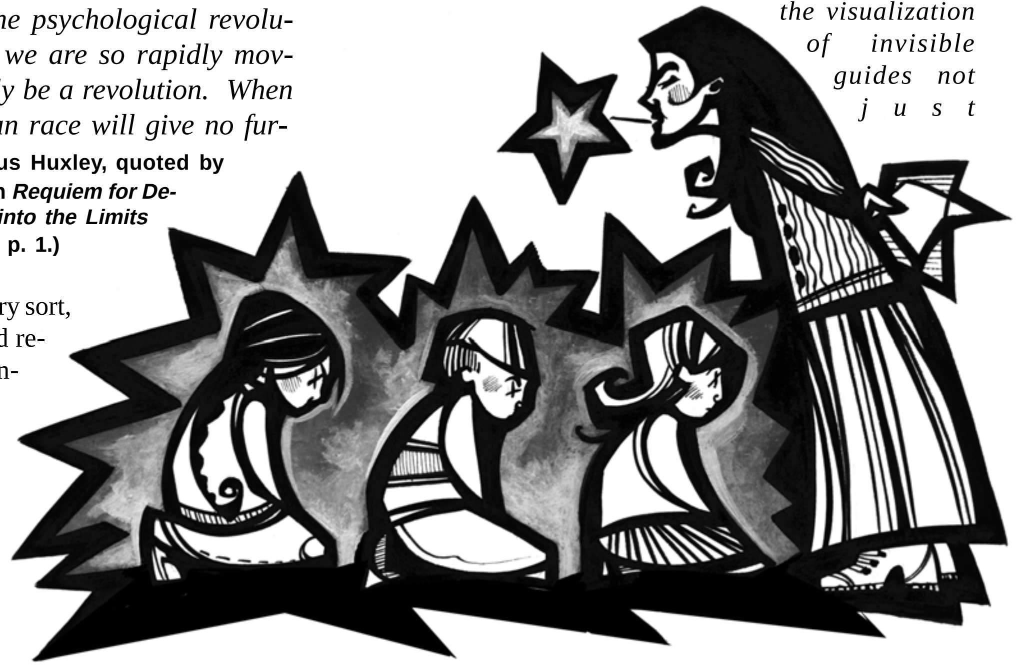
Therapists of every sort, motivational speakers, and religious leaders usually include at least light trance in their program. Teachers of all sorts now lead people in guided visualizations from kindergarten to the old age social hall. Meditators, both in and out of named and organized groups, are now legion. Most organizations build loyalty using trance or brainwashing techniques (or both). Advertising and propaganda have become ever more sophisticated, more capable of persuading.

The most blatantly inductive television routine that I have seen is the introduction to a children's cartoon show. Many children now also receive induction training in the classroom. I met a young Christian woman who had attended a public (arts) high school in Miami for its ballet program. One day, her teacher brought two one-hour hypnotic tapes to school. For two consecutive classes, she played those tapes. All her students, except my young friend, listened without objection.

The tape began with a visualization induction, then deepened the subjects, then told them to receive instruction from an internal "shaman." Thus, each hearer was directed to create an unconscious mind-split with a mission to communicate. The result could be inconsequential, or helpful, or mentally disturbing. The Christian student had heard enough. She made an excuse of illness and left the room. The teacher pursued her into the hall. There she argued bitterly, vehemently against her student's objections to listening to the tape. When the student stated that her religious conviction did not allow listening, the teacher finally let her remain outside the classroom. After that, however, the teacher—and, under her leadership, other students—made such a negative issue of that student's devout Christianity that she left to complete high school at home.

Was that an isolated incident or part of a trend? In American classrooms:



Children also partook in the visualization of invisible guides not just > through the Galyean approach but through Silva Mind Control. They would lie on the floor and empty their minds, invoking the invisible presences within them. In Buffalo, New York, students were required to learn Silva Mind Control and reportedly contacted the spirits of various long-deceased historical figures—a new way to study George Washington and Abraham Lincoln...Featured in a brochure entitled "Education in the New Age," Canfield and Klimek led [teacher] workshops on "Meditation and Centering in the Classroom" and "Guided Imagery"...[they have] coauthored numerous books such as, The Inner Classroom: Teaching with Guided Fantasy. (Brooke, SCP Journal, Vol. 16:4, 1992, pp. 20-22)

I heard that in Wisconsin many elementary students are now given similar training. In 1997, I was a guest speaker in a Northwestern Michigan public school. I noticed a group of students across the room (which contained several classes doing various activities) who were commencing a computer class by gathering in a tight circle with their teacher, heads together, and intoning a prolonged "OMMMMMMM." When the head teacher noticed me staring at this activity, wide-eyed, she rushed over to the group, jerked her head toward me as if in explanation of her request, and caused them to immediately cease the induction. They dispersed to their seats before the computers.

Hypnosis? or Just Advertising?

> The hypnotic pressures of everyday life....cause people to buy a special brand of toothpaste, smoke a given brand of cigarettes, or wear one type of hat and not another...
>
> - R.W. Marks, The Story of Hypnotism, p. 214

I was talking with Jerry Rubin, an acquaintance who had once done hobby hypnosis, late one evening while he worked behind the counter of a local convenience store. Jerry was a heavy-set, middle-aged man with a blunt, unsophisticated manner, and a very kind heart.

"Isn't hypnosis the basis for advertising?" Jerry asked.

"Well, maybe some..."

"No, not some," Jerry retorted. "That's the basis of it. That's the underpinnings of mass advertising."

We stopped talking while Jerry rang up a young man's purchase of a pack of cigarettes. The customer left. I protested, "But most of us are able to handle advertising rationally."

"Are we?" Jerry asked. "How many people come in here dedicated to a specific brand of cigarettes? How did they get that conditioning? And they won't have another kind. The brands all taste the same. They all have the same effect. But those people are advocates of that particular brand. And I don't know any other explanation for it. There's no logical explanation. Why do we use underarm deodorant that is of no use to the world and yet a hundred million people demand it as the accepted norm? How do you do that? Repetition. Image-building."

I nodded.

Jerry continued, "If you're looking for the negative, nonmoral underbelly of hypnosis that most people don't look at, I don't think you're going to find it published. But the advertisers know how: subliminal sounds, subliminal pictures, the parent-figure that tells you what to do. The whole idea is to circumvent reason and manipulate you."

In the background I could hear the repetitive tinny tune of a videogame machine being played by another late-night occupant of the store. The young man was playing that same game over and over and over and over. Putting in quarter after quarter. Always losing.

"Think about it," Jerry insisted. "Think about how many people's minds have been altered to make them smoke cigarettes and kill themselves when they know for a fact they're going to die if they do this. They're committing suicide by smoking. It's stamped on every cigarette box. How can a corporation warp somebody's mind to do that?"

"Isn't the kid more likely to be following the example of parents, or peers? And then get addicted by the substance?" I asked.

"How do you get a peer group to smoke?" Jerry snapped back. "How do you get them to start? It's not natural. How many people are going to pick up a burning leaf and inhale it and have that become a social norm, a whole culture? Isn't that hypnosis?" he growled, "—circumventing the conscious mind?"

"Yeah," I admitted, "when you circumvent the conscious mind for your own purposes..."

"...you are hypnotizing somebody," Jerry finished.

"You are pushing buttons in the unconscious," I admitted. Then I told him how a person could be trained to be a compliant, amnesic hypnotic subject.

"I've read in spy novels of such drugs and stuff," Jerry said. "And anything that's in a spy novel is more than likely mirroring reality. I went over to the counseling center to get treatment for tension. The counselor said, 'Picture yourself in a nice warm environment, safe,' and so on. It was hypnosis but he didn't use that word. There's others doing that stuff you're talking about. Remember the dentist in town that got caught for telling women under hypnosis that for him to drill on their teeth they had to take their tops off and stuff?"

"Yeah."

"It works. And these psychologists who understand these tools—you betcha there's a bunch of them out there doing it. Because that's human nature from what I've seen. There's a bunch that aren't, but there's a bunch that are."

Jerry stopped talking. We were both silent for a bit. In the background, quarters plinked into the machine. A brief game. Then more quarters.

"The first scientific experiment on hypnosis was in France with a condemned prisoner," he said. "I read that in a book. They laid a guy out on an operating table, put him under hypnosis and told him he was going to die, that what they were going to do was slit his wrists and all his blood was gonna drain out of his body. They put ice across his wrists like that was a knife slash, and they dripped water into a bucket so he could hear the sound. And then they said he turned white and died. That's strong stuff!"

"It's called 'voodoo death,' death by suggestion," I explained. "It says in the books that a hypnotic operator should be careful because under hypnosis a subject's physiological reactions will match what he or she is told to hallucinate. So you don't frighten a person with a weak heart."

"The people I sent to Atlantis never had any troubles," Jerry said defensively. (He had hypnotized friends and told them to "Go to Atlantis.")

"Why did you ask them to go?"

"I wanted to find out what was there. You know, past lives and all that sort of stuff."

Suddenly I had a chilly feeling in my soul. Under deep hypnosis the Atlantis Jerry sent people to would have felt real to them. Atlantis could have become important in their lives for years after. Maybe for the rest of their lives. They would believe in Atlantis, believe in past lives, want to see those visions again, feel that seductive deep trance sensation again. They would feel the powerful draw of rapport to Jerry for years after that. All because Jerry was playing around with hypnosis, using them as his subjects to "find out what was there."

I went home.

Advertising to the Unconscious

Military psychologists worked for decades to develop the most effective propaganda techniques. In the private sector, advertising experts have done the same. Companies spend millions on advertising because they know that it works, and they know how it works. In the 1950s, the advertising industry began motivational research. They discovered that ads could be directed at consumers' unconscious minds as well as their conscious minds. They learned that unconscious motivations could be even more powerful than conscious ones.[1] A bunch of new "needs" were then created by advertisers, targeting unconscious yearnings to be more sexually attractive, rich, youthful, popular, etc.

P.T. Barnum's quote, "There's a sucker born every minute," was advice to sellers. "Let the buyer beware" is the best advice for buyers. There are ruthless marketers out there whose product may be worthless—even dangerous or addictive. They know just what attracts and hooks and how to do effective marketplace inductions. They know you will automatically defend any habit they can get you to adopt. You will also instinctively evangelize your new habit to other persons—whether it is a drug, a religion, or a rejection of religion.

Media Can Displace Reality—Over 97% of homes, all over the world, now have a television set. Most people spend hours every day in front of the fascinating—and hypnotic—tube viewing reprehensible social examples, addictive substitute realities, managed news (government knows how important this medium is!), and commercial persuasions (often with subliminals). Human beings are born gullible to a verbal or printed pitch.

Media are powerful mind-influencing tools because, strange but true, your brain takes the spoken or written word more seriously than the evidence of its own senses.

---

[1] Vance Packard brought the new technology to public attention in The Hidden Persuaders, New York, 1957.

Gorton researched the effect of real ("direct") stimuli versus verbal suggestions to enter or leave trance. He gave hypnotized subjects competing commands: one to wake up, the other to stay in trance. He gave one command in a circumstantial, "direct" form. The other was in a verbal form. He measured responses with an EEG printout which showed appearance, or disappearance, and amount, of alpha waves. His subjects always obeyed the verbal instruction rather than the circumstantial one.

That is why you fall for the promises, the "sales pitch." The media are so important because the spoken word is dominant over reality. The media are not reality; they are just words (and pictures). Written words are dominant over both spoken words and reality. That is the importance of billboards, print ads on paper or screen—and Scripture. Screen speech and imagery, especially HDTV, may be the most powerful programmer of all. That is why advertisers of all sorts spend mega-bucks putting messages on the tube.

Big name ad agencies target your wallet and your children's minds very scientifically. Consciousness lowering in conditioned subjects happens quickly. The first three-fourths of a video ad often contains an inductive assault intended to lower consciousness and thus increase suggestibility.

Screen-watching tends to lower consciousness. It creates sensory deprivation. It isolates people from physical reality, and from each other. Normally, your eyes almost always are moving, seeking, evaluating. Even when you read, your eyes shift. When watching television, however, the eyeball does not move. The focus is fixed. All information is flattened into one dimension. The viewer is forced to focus on that single, flat dimension. This lowers consciousness.

Lowered consciousness is worth money to advertisers. The lower the viewers' state of conscious when the pitch comes, the greater their suggestibility and the greater the probability of message acceptance. Induction methods include shock (tension/fear), sexual arousal, relaxation (sensory deprivation), or disorientation (confusion). Then comes the sales pitch. The entire ad is repeated over and over because repetition is another factor that unconsciously persuades.

The technology of television has changed the political process. By means of television, a few people shape the opinion of millions. Those opinion-shapers are commanded by persons either in a position to pay for this expensive privilege, or with the power to demand control of it.

Television and Children

Video lowers consciousness, especially in children. Researchers experimenting with children wearing brain wave monitors could not prevent children from going into trance the moment they began to watch television or any video. A young mother, who usually kept the TV off, taped two Christmas specials, complete with commercials for a fast-food chain and a popular brand of doll. Her young children then watched the tapes over and over. She and her husband were amazed at how important that fast food chain and the doll products quickly became to their children.

Children are likely to acquire their values and beliefs from your (or the neighbor's) TV rather than from you, Sunday school, or academic school. Children who assume that Sesame Street is a rightful part of their day as preschoolers may demand MTV as teenagers.

Viewing of screen cartoons, and other animated, quickly shifting screen scenes, at a very young age and for many hours per day is one cause of the modern epidemic of ADD and hyperactivity. The child's brain continues growing after birth. As it grows, it adapts itself to the pace and content of its environment. Children growing up tied in a crib, staring at a ceiling, show symptoms of retardation. Children who grow up viewing screen images can show symptoms of attention deficit and hyperactivity.

The problem is that mother soon discovers that her child becomes physically quiet while watching those animated images on television or video. The path of least resistance is then to leave the television (or videos) running for hours every day. But the child is not truly relaxed. When the tube turns on, he goes into a trance. Trance puts the child's motor system off-line. He is only relaxed in the hypnotic sense. His body is immobilized, but his unconscious mind is going pell-mell, pacing itself to the lurching, chaotic, often violent or vile images on the screen. The very young child's brain adjusts its behavioral timing to resemble the timing of the animated material in its environment.

When the show is over, the child awakens from trance. With his motor function restored, he bursts into action with the stored-up energy of youth. If he behaves at the learned pace of an animated character, that child may be diagnosed as being hyperactive, or having attention deficit disorder. The usual treatment is ritalin, a drug that simultaneously stimulates and relaxes, just like television. Television is > ...a major cause of hyperactivity...The physical energy which is created by the images, but not used, is physically stored. Then when the set is off, it comes bursting outward in aimless, random, speedy activity. I have seen it over and over again > with children. They are quiet while watching. Then afterwards they become overactive, irritable and frustrated...television causes hyperactive response..It is bizarre and frightening, therefore, that many parents use television as a means of calming hyperactive children...The worst thing one can do for a hyperactive child is to put him or her in front of a television set. (Mander, Four Arguments for the Elimination of Television, pp. 167-8)

Raising children on images of animated characters doing cruel and damaging things to each other to a background of jolly music is also taking a toll in children's peer relationships. The statistical frequency and severity of bullying is way up in this reared-by-TV generation, programmed by shows that feature the art of bullying as a staple.

HDTV—Television images soon will be much more hypnotic. HDTV is high density television. Sony Communications created it. The shape of an HDTV screen is rectangular, like film, rather than square, like a conventional television screen. It has far more detail in its scanning lines. That data increase is a quantum leap in focus demand and data input for the viewer's brain. The crystal-clear images are far more hypnotic than those of standard television. An HDTV film of outdoor scenes, with voice-over by a hypnotist, was shown to one-hundred TV industry representatives by a research hypnotist :

> ...we demonstrated that properly-selected HDTV images and hypnotic command can produce a light to medium open-eyed trance for most viewers...it's clear that domestic HDTV will one day tap into the viewer's subconscious mind.... (Farago, 1991)

Over the next decade, the entire North American television system is switching from standard transmission to HDTV. During this ten-year transition period, some people will have old TV receivers and some the HDTV type. Stations will transmit in both standard and HDTV mode. The switch to HDTV involves even more than everybody on the planet who wants TV reception buying a new receiver. All the television stations must be equipped to put out the HDTV signal. Hundreds of new television towers must be built (at $2 million a tower), many the size of skyscrapers (up to 2,049 feet high). After that, however, there will be no more standard broadcasts. You will watch HDTV, or nothing.

Subliminals

Subliminals are an important marketing technology. They can work on the same people that hypnosis works on, the genetically susceptible. Subliminals can be visual or auditory.

Visual Subliminals—Dr. Wilson Bryan Key, who studied subliminals in politics and advertising, identified them in print sources—newspapers, placards, magazine illustrations. A friend of mine, with the equipment to do it, studied television ads in slow motion, looking for sexual subliminals. He found them. "They're common," he told me. "The soap opera ads have the most." Visual subliminals can be effective because the film is showing a sequence of images timed at thirty, or more, images per second. But the conscious mind can only register about ten images per second.

> A technique called subliminal advertising places images within the dot-scan sequence at a speed which is faster than sight. You get hit with the ad, but you can't process this fast enough, so you don't know the ad is registering...Your brain gets the message, but your conscious mind doesn't. According to those who have used the technique, it communicates well enough to affect sales. (Mander, Four Arguments for the Elimination of Television, p. 194)

Audio Subliminals—Subliminal messages can also be added to audiotapes. You have to take the advertiser's word for it that there are subliminals in a tape.

> [They]...insert messages into the mind of the individual without the person being aware of the mind-programming process. This highly developed modern technology...has become quite sophisticated... (Baer, pp. 49-50)

The first subliminal audio technology used a background voice that matched the music in volume. Those messages cannot be detected unless you have a parametric equalizer. Want to create subliminal tapes yourself? Sorry, that technique is patented, and the patent holder exercises firm control. In fact, there are many patents now for various subliminal sound techniques. One method acoustically adapts the words so they are delivered in the same tone and rhythm as the music. Those subliminals are undetectable by the normal conscious mind. Once they are implanted, there is no known mechanical technology to detect them. The unconscious, however, is a supercomputer, and it hears them.

People do not know when they have watched, or listened to, a program with subliminals. They only know that it excited and convinced them. One day, a man showed me a large box of relaxation tapes he owned, more than fifty in all. He said, "I buy one, listen to it, and then send for another. I don't know why I do that." Perhaps while he was "relaxed" he heard a subliminal sales pitch to buy another tape.

A Subliminal Sales Event

One July night, in 1990, I sat in a hypnotherapy class in a Seattle suburb. Cheryl, a good-looking, blonde, fortyish woman sat behind me. She asked our teacher, Charles Tebbetts, "Can somebody be made to do something under hypnosis that they don't want to?" Then she started to tell him something.

Tebbetts cut her off sharply, snapping back, "Absolutely not!"

I turned around and whispered over my shoulder to her, "Yes, they can."

After the lecture and the evening's videotape, it was time for us to team up and take turns hypnotizing each other. Cheryl asked me to hypnotize her. Because I was new in class and very nervous about hypnotizing somebody, I was grateful she chose me to trust like that.

In the pre-induction interview she talked about an incident from several years ago that still deeply upset her. A friend had invited her to visit a promotional event. "I didn't know she was getting points for bringing me," Cheryl said. After watching the promotional film, she wrote a check for $2,000: "I had never had any interest in their product. I didn't want it. I really couldn't afford it. About a week later it was like I woke up and wondered what happened. Why did I do that? I've never been able to understand why."

I used a standard maternal induction, and Cheryl easily went into a trance. I then simultaneously deepened and regressed her, using an elevator countdown into the past. I had the "elevator doors" open up at the Las Vegas promotion for that company. I invited Cheryl to step out those doors into her memory of that promotion.

I asked her what was happening.

She was reliving the event. First, she said, she was in the hotel lobby. Then, she entered another room, sat down, and viewed a fast-paced, hour-long film. "It showed the swimming pool, the rec room," she said.

"Focus on the moment when you made the decision to buy," I said.

She was silent a long moment. Then, she said, "It never moves. It's like looking through the skin of a grey amoeba into the inside of it. The words never move."

"What do the words say?" I asked.

"They say, 'YOU WILL BUY THIS.'"

I did not understand. I questioned her more. Eventually, I figured out that she was watching a multilayered film. The rapidly changing conventional images of swimming pool, rec room, etc., were superimposed on that fixed background of words. She had not been consciously aware of seeing the background words, but she had unconsciously perceived them.

I asked Cheryl's unconscious to take note of the unethical quality of that type of suggestion. I asked it to choose a means to signal her if she was ever again exposed to that kind of attempted manipulation. It suggested "an emotional feeling—in her stomach." We then established that Cheryl's unconscious would give her an "emotional feeling in her stomach" plus a powerful urge to get up and walk out of the room, if a similar situation ever happened again.

When I awakened Cheryl from the trance, she told me she was so pleased to have that long-standing mystery in her life solved. She was also happy now to be protected against any similar exploitation.

I was happy too. At last, I had done something effective to help another person recover information from her unconscious and to resist future unethical mind manipulation.

Ten Important Hypnotic Phenomena

1. Suggestion
☑
2. Rapport
☑
3. Automatism
☑
4. Catalepsy
☑
5. Hallucination
☑
6. Anesthesia
☑
7. Posthypnotic Suggestion
☑
Normal Memory
☑
8. Amnesia
☑
9. Regression
☑
10. Confabulation

When one becomes familiar with the characteristics of hypnosis and the phenomena obtainable through its use, he must come to one conclusion: that the relatively few reported cases in America of hypnotically induced crimes is insignificant as compared with the potential number of undiscovered crimes of this nature.

Teitlebaum, 1964, p. 158

1. Suggestion

Suggestion commonly means advice presented in a non-compelling way.[1] When used in the context of hypnosis, however, suggestion means something entirely different. A hypnotist works to make his hypnotic suggestion as compelling as possible. If you're not suggestible, you're not hypnotized—for the primary characteristic of hypnosis is suggestibility. The deeper your trance, the greater your suggestibility. All the hypnotic phenomena, except rapport, directly derive from suggestibility.

There are four ways a subject perceives suggestion:

a) Verbal Suggestion—Spoken words.

b) Nonverbal Suggestion—Communication by eye and facial behavior, posture, gestures, and other body language.

c) Intraverbal Suggestion—Communication by vocal inflection and voice modulation. (Using intraverbal suggestion, experimenters have made hypnotized subjects do the exact opposite of their verbal suggestion.)

d) Extraverbal Suggestion—Communication conveyed by the implied meaning of words.

Suggestion Targets Automatic Obedience

When a subject's conscious mind has been, somehow, stripped away, turned off, or distracted, induction has taken place. Now the hypnotist can speak directly to the subject's unconscious mind without interference or censorship from his conscious mind. Suggestion means direct communication (bypassing the conscious mind) to the unconscious sector of mind. That direct communication targets the noncritical, automatic part of the brain for direct programming.

Direct vs. Indirect Suggestions

There are two types of hypnotic suggestion: direct and indirect. Direct suggestion instructs without disguising intent. Indirect suggestion is veiled, devious instruction designed to deceive and trick the subject into doing what the hypnotist wants. A subject is much more likely to obey an evil suggestion that is presented indirectly.

For example, Marcuse discussed how an operator might get hypnotic subjects to do what they would ordinarily resist. He said he might get subject X, an animal lover, to kill a cat by suggesting a hallucination that would cause X to see that cat as a dangerous tiger with a poisonous bite which would cause a painful and certain death, and the cat was about to attack. The subject "would then be told that, in self-defense, he would shoot the animal." (Marcuse, Hypnosis, p. 110) "Kill the cat" is a direct suggestion. "In self-defense, shoot the poisonous tiger" is an indirect suggestion.

Adam never disguised his commands to Zebediah. He relied only on trance depth, suggested amnesia, and direct commands. Bergen used both direct and indirect suggestions with Mrs. E. Nielsen often used indirect ones on Palle. He didn't say, "Go rob a bank and give me the money," a direct suggestion. Instead, Nielsen told Palle, "Your guardian angel, X, wants you to rob a bank to raise money for the sake of the Fatherland," an indirect suggestion.

2. Rapport

> Deleuze and the early mesmerists also described the evils resulting from too frequent, or too prolonged, hypnotic sessions. Such subjects gradually became addicted to hypnosis. Not only did their need for frequent hypnotization increase, but they became dependent on their particular magnetizer, and this dependency could often take on a sexual slant.
>
> - Ellenberger, The Discovery of the Unconscious, pp. 138-119

Rapport As a Focus on the Hypnotist's Voice

Normal sleep is an isolated and private world, your self talking only to yourself in dreams. During hypnosis, however, the sleeping mind keeps a channel open to the voice and suggestions of the hypnotist. The narrowest meaning of rapport is the mental connection a hypnotized person maintains with the voice of his hypnotist. The words of a hypnotic induction usually reinforce that tendency: "You will be oblivious to all else, concentrated on, and aware only of my voice."

---

[1] "Suggestion" also means directive communication presented in an indirect way such that the person who obeys does not notice why he or she obeyed.

That remarkable focus is another aspect of rapport. When your mind is focused on only one thing, without other distractions, that one thing makes a strong imprint. The deeper you go, the more you have isolated a particular center of the brain from competing inputs. Hypnotic obedience results from sidelining the brain's conscious monitors and isolating the active network of neurons from competing networks. The hypnotic subject obeys the hypnotist's suggestion because a competing explanation or directive is not accessible.

Rapport as Love

After even one trance induction, subjects tend to feel an intense emotional tie to the initiator of that induction. They feel bonded, approving, and accepting of that source's point of view and open to his, her, or its spoken or context-implied suggestions. Rapport is the automatic tendency of trance experience to cause an attitude of respect, affection, and obedience in the subject. The first magnetizers, in France in the 1700s, believed rapport (a French word meaning "harmony" or "connection") was the central phenomenon of hypnosis, rather than suggestibility.

Rapport is far more than just a hypnotic phenomenon. Wherever there is charismatic leadership, love, or even close friendship, there is rapport. The line between rapport and other love relationships is fuzzy. Rapport always contains an element of dependence. It often has a subtle (or obvious) erotic element. Anybody who performs well for the public generates rapport. A teenager with a crush on a performer is in its grip. The rank and file tend to fall into rapport-love with their leaders or heroes—political, religious, cultural. Human beings naturally bond to, and organize themselves around, leaders.

Rapport As Addiction

Lowering consciousness feels good. Anything that feels good creates a longing for repetition. Rapport can become an intense, emotional relationship. The subject finds his thoughts fixed on the hypnotist between, as well as during, hypnotic sessions. He begins also to pick up and obey general context clues from the hypnotist as to what to believe and how to behave. Kubie and Margolin defined rapport as "a psychological fusion between hypnotist and subject" ("The Process of Hypnotism and the Nature of the Hypnotic State"). An old-time mesmerist observed that

> ...the subject was hypersensitive to the hypnotist to the extent that he was able to perceive the latter's faintest signs. Through habit and training, a process of mutual understanding by signs developed between them, of which neither was aware. The subject became sensitive to the slightest shades of the hypnotist's thoughts without realizing how, and without the hypnotist's awareness. (Rualt, quoted in Ellenberger, pp. 153-154)

Janet said the development of rapport over a series of hypnotic sessions had two distinct phases. In the first, the patient was freed from symptoms and felt much better. In the second, however, which he called somnambulic passion, the symptoms sometimes returned.

> ...[the] patient felt an increased need to see the hypnotist and to be hypnotized. This urge often assumed the form of passion...ardent love, jeal- > ousy, superstitious fear, or profound respect.

>
> Somnambulic passion was a potpourri of possible elements: erotic passion, or the kind of love one feels for a parent, or some other kind of love. One element that never varied however, was the patient's need to be directed. (Janet, 1897)

Rapport can be transferred from one hypnotist to another by a simple verbal command, called transfer of rapport, or shifting the rapport*. An operator tells his subject to now obey a new operator in the same way he has been obeying the speaker. If the suggestion is accepted at the subject's automatic level of mind, rapport will shift.*

Rapport as Bonding

Subjects of the same hypnotist tend to bond. Old-time European researchers first noticed the tendency of patients of the same magnetizer to bond with each other. This principle has many applications. Persons influenced by the same leader(s) tend to trust each other, and to behave worthy of that trust. They relate as brothers and sisters. This psychological trait enables the bonding of family, congregation, and community.

Rapport Also Impacts the Hypnotist— Rapport flows both ways. The hypnotic subject influences the hypnotist's behavior, because a hypnotist unconsciously develops suggestibility to cues from his subjects. Thus, rapport tends to become a situation of mutual suggestion. The subject gives his hypnotist what the hypnotist secretly expects, and the hypnotist tends to create for the subject what the subject secretly expects. This unconscious collaboration between the charismatic leader and his followers has, in the historical record, resulted in remarkable elaborations of mutual delusion and absolutistic and costly loyalties: Jim Jones, Waco, the Heaven's Gate comet cult.

The Freudian View of Rapport—Freud called rapport transference. He believed it was a revival of the original parent-child relationship. Psychoanalytically-trained hypnosis researchers believed trance obedience was rooted in an unconscious longing for, or regression to, a childhood behavior (or instinctual early programming) of total dependence on, and uncritical love of, the parent figures. Little children can believe anything.

3. Automatism

One of the experiences that most surprises the hypnotized person is the seemingly automatic way in which the suggested actions execute themselves. His hands clasp tighter of their own accord, his arm stiffens itself, while he himself remains a passive spectator. Inexperienced subjects are often startled when they discover that this feeling is not an illusion...

- R. W. White, 1942, p. 318

"Suggestion" means any directive carried out with automaticity, or intended to be carried out with automaticity. Automaticity means it was obeyed by the subject's unconscious mind without control, criticism, or feedback from his conscious mind. Automatism means thinking at the unconscious level. Your conscious is a rational free agent. Your unconscious is more like a machine, a "slave" unit in computer language. It does all the automatic, habitual tasks such as writing, typing, eating with a fork, driving. It also responds "to such things as heat, cold, hate, danger, love and lust." (Birns, Hypnosis, p. 40) What we do automatically, we do without conscious awareness.

Suggestion Intends Automatic Obedience

Normally, suggestions are accepted by the unconscious only some of the time. Hypnotic technology strives to improve the odds of unconscious acceptance. A subject who had usually been very suggestible told her operator one day that his suggestion "did not take." "I am quite ready to obey you," she said, "and I will do it if you choose:

only I tell you beforehand that the thing did not take." (Janet, 1925) That patient had recognized the difference between voluntary, conscious cooperation (an intentional act), and the reflexive, unwilled response when a suggestion "takes" (an automatic response).

Automatism is unconscious behavior. The conscious analyzing, critiquing, and rejecting function of a deeply hypnotized person is inhibited. What is left is their capacity for automatic, unconscious response to suggestions. An act carried out in a state of automatism seems to execute itself. This statement may seem incomprehensible if you have never experienced the phenomenon of nonvolition. A posthypnotic suggestion, for example, carries itself out. You do not experience intention before the act. Your conscious mind does not participate in the act.

A hypnotist's suggestion intends this kind of automatistic obedience. In automatism, a subject's obedience becomes literal and humorless. The action of reasoning power is limited to searching out ways to implement the suggested behavior.

Words as Conditioned Stimuli—Hypnosis is a tool for programming and reprogramming because of the powerful effect of words (and the meanings and images they communicate) on the human mind. Pavlov called direct observation by sense organs the first signal system. He called language the second signal system.

Speech is an auditory code. Each word is an encoded meaning. Everybody who knows a language uses the same definitions for its words. A word can be decoded in the mind of the hearer after a child has learned the meaning of the word. Then, that word has become a conditioned stimulus. Each perceived word stimulates a conditioned reflexive response to recognize its meaning. Language recognition and response are automatic, reflexive—unless we are learning a new one.

Amazing but true, research has shown that words, the second signal system, are more effective at programming people than real life experiences, the first signal system! The words, to which we are exposed, program us. A primary phenomenon of hypnosis is based on this fact, that people respond automatically to words and the ideas they convey.

Bernheim first pointed out the phenomenon of direct programming by verbal suggestion back in the 1800s. You touch a hot stovetop and jerk your hand back. That heat was a direct sensory perception. But if I yell "Hot!" before your hand gets there, your hand will also jerk back. The word "hot" was a stimulus to which your brain has a conditioned recognition of its meaning. Acting in response to that recognized meaning, your hand pulls back from the thing now identified as "Hot!" For human beings, words elicit conditioned stimuli just like real life sensory perceptions.

Without language, tedious cause-and-effect training is necessary in order to learn. By means of language, however, people are programmed and reprogrammed directly, quickly, and clearly. They do this simply by hearing verbal instructions, or by reading written instructions (words coded in visual symbols). You can "program" a person, awake or hypnotized, simply by talking to him.

Words act as conditioned stimuli in a totally mechanistic, automatistic way when the subject is deeply hypnotized. During hypnosis, the conscious mind, one of whose functions is to keep us hitched to reality, has been turned off. The conscious is not there to interpret or deny. The unconscious is literal and, frequently, obedient. When the subject's conscious mind is turned off because of hypnosis, language takes the place of reality. If the hypnotist says, "You see a cat waltzing alone in pink pajamas," you might see that.

The second signal system is a marvel of ease and efficiency for an operator (parent, teacher, employer, hypnotist). A dog will not salivate to the sound of a bell until the paired stimuli have been presented many times. A conditioned human hypnotic subject, however, can be given that command in the form of a verbal instruction just one time: "Salivate at the sound of the bell." The conditioned reflex is instantly established in the subject's unconscious. He now salivates after hearing the sound of the bell. The behavior of salivating after hearing the sound of the bell was instantly established as a conditioned response.

That is the gist of Salter's realization about how hypnosis works, his "conditioned response theory of hypnosis."

Hypnotic Conditioning—Conditioning means training a person to respond to instructions automatically. Psychologists apply the word "conditioning" only to learning that is reflexive, automatic—not conscious. Hypnotists often use "conditioning" to mean the training of a hypnotic subject:

> In the training of a subject we strive for the development of a desirable, conditioned reflex pattern. Susceptibility to hypnosis increases with the repetition of the hypnotic induction...thus creating a favored pattern. The more frequently a response follows a given stimulus, the more firmly is the tendency established...A conditioned reflex re- > sponse may be defined as a psychological or physiological response to a specific stimulus resulting from training or experience. (R. W. White quoted in Moss, Hypnosis in Perspective)

Under deep hypnosis, words can create unconscious reflexes. Any posthypnotic suggestion, such as for reinduction, is a conditioned reflex. The subject's behavior of "falling asleep" every time the operator gives the cue is a conditioned response to the cue's stimulus. No practice is necessary after the subject is trained for trance depth and amnesia. If the operator's instructions are accepted by the subject's unconscious, a conditioned response pattern is instantly established. He has instantly acquired a new "habit."

Habit

Habit is automatic behavior, a conditioned reflex established in your unconscious. Anything done repeatedly turns into habit. We have habits because mental processes of which we are consciously aware tend to be uncomfortable--such as those involved in learning the multiplication tables, or a new language as an adult, or how to drive.

If we had to consciously direct every movement, every thought, and every bit of sensory perception, our mental circuits would be overwhelmed. Habit is also useful because it frees the conscious mind to consider new data. Unfamiliar things in our environment may signal danger. It is the job of the conscious to note them, then to think, reason, analyze, and evaluate them. Then it makes a decision. It can change unconscious programming based on those evaluations, especially when spurred by strong feelings such as pain, shame, or fear.

Habit is a functional system in the brain which takes less energy from the nervous system to activate than it

Unconscious Reflex Dominance Attributes

When reflexes compete (such as those suggested by a new hypnotist competing against those implanted by a former hypnotist, which one wins? To be effective, new programming, or changes in old programming, have to make as deep, or deeper, impression than the original programming. Habit strength is the sum of the strengths of six components. If you had a numerical way to measure the strength of each of the six factors which cause unconscious reflex dominance, outcomes could be expressed as a mathematical formula:

1) Chronological Sequence--If all other factors are equal, an earlier suggestion will dominate over a later one. That is why childhood experiences are so important. That is why a subsequent hypnotist's programming effort has to be more vigorous. The "age," when programmed, can be real, or suggested.

2) Emotional Intensity--Every programming has some degree of associated emotional tone, and it is either positive or negative. Programming associated with greater emotional intensity makes a deeper imprint and has greater drive.

3) Depth--All other factors being equal, a suggestion made in deeper trance will prevail over a suggestion made in a less deep state of consciousness. Dr. Reiter could not make progress against Nielsen's programming of Palle until, using barbiturate, he achieved a greater depth of trance in Palle than Nielsen had. If the subject's original conditioning was done under narcohypnosis, it is difficult (possible though) to compete with that, except by using another narcohypnotic series.

The greater the focus, the more intense the attention, the deeper the trance level at the time, the stronger a suggested mental reflex will be. Focus is a mini-trance, a selective attention, and it can happen outside a conventional hypnotic context. Focus increases the probability of future dominance of that imprint.

4) Strength of Drive--A stronger suggestion prevails over a weaker one. A suggestion is stronger if it is more strongly driven, or more closely linked to primary process elements hard-wired into the brain, or if it is more complexly elaborated. Thus, reflexes associated with food, sex, or aggression tend to be dominant. That explains the success of television ads for fast foods, underarm deodorant, and pickup trucks.

5) Repetition--Anything you think or do, once, has already started to become habit. The more times you do it, the stronger the reflex will be, the deeper the habit groove. This is the mechanism underlying habit: the more you do it, the more likely you are to do it. The response, which you are turning into a habit, can come from inside you or it can come from outside you. When you have obeyed a series of suggestions for somebody, there is a steadily increasing tendency that you will obey further suggestions from that person.

6) Amnesia--Unconscious mental programming is unlikely to change, unless it can become consciously known. Thus, suggested amnesia prevents your natural self-governing mental feedback system from weakening or changing the amnestic programming.

would take to defy it and do something different. Habit is, in physiological terms, literally the electrochemical brain path of least resistance. When you are learning to type on a keyboard, you think about the placement of each finger. You type slowly, painfully. It is the same when you are learning to ride a bike or to drive a car. Once it becomes habit, however, those actions and reactions are reflexive, comfortable--and very difficult to change.

Habit strength is one of the factors in your mind that mediates between the outside stimulus and your internal response (an intervening variable). Habit strength is like a trench dug by flowing water. The longer and harder the water has run, the deeper the habit trench. The stream may be directed to a new course, but if the new and the old meet and conflict at any point, the water will tend to shift down into the older, deeper trench. That is an addiction response. A victim of unethical hypnosis is a kind of addict, addicted to obediently entering trance in response to the induction cue.

Second-Signal System—Your response to words is habit that happens at the unconscious level. Pavlov called our sensory perceptions of the outside world the first signal system. Humans also take in information from other humans coded in words, written or spoken. Pavlov named that second source of information the second signal system. Words are stimuli that elicit specific and predictable habit responses in the people who hear them.

New habit can be directly programmed into the subject's unconscious mind via the second signal system. The result will be hypnotic automatism. Spoken words can instantly create unconscious conditioned reflexes in a somnambulist. That is amazing. That is scary. Automatism is conditioned reflex behavior resulting because a hypnotist directly accessed the automatic level of a subject's mind. The words of the hypnotist are the second signal system stimuli; the obedience of the subject is his unconscious, automatic response.

Simultaneous Automatic and Conscious Behavior

Two different activities can be carried on at the same time, originating from different areas in the brain. You can, at the same time, be conscious and be dissociated. A classic example of this is automatic writing. Any time that you do two things at the same time, some dissociation is involved. I can simultaneously type and think about what I am going to write, because the movement of my fingers is a dissociated activity. The movement is a habit which needs no conscious direction.

> The symphony conductor Pierre Boulez once described in a TV interview how it was that a person could conduct "five against four," meaning rhythmically moving one's right hand five times while moving four times with the left...Boulez said that doing "five against four" is simple: one merely had to put one of the hands on "automatic," and then pay attention to the other. (Furst, p. 91)

Boulez was doing concurrent unconscious (automatic) and conscious behavior. M.H. Erickson and his wife instructed a farm boy, in amnesic trance, to empty his bucket into the trough after every 250 strokes of the pump handle. As the boy (now out of trance) pumped, Dr. Erickson asked him spelling words. The boy spelled the words out loud at the same time that he was pumping. The moment the boy pushed the pump handle down the 250th time, he would suddenly stop spelling, stop pumping, and carry the full bucket to the trough.

The Ericksons described a similar experiment in which a stenographer, writing shorthand at up to 120 words a minute, obeyed an amnestic hypnotic suggestion to change pencils every so many words. She performed the unconscious pencil-changing act perfectly, as well as the conscious recording of dictation. When the Ericksons asked her to do both acts consciously (counting words and recording words), she could not. When they revised the instructions, however, and told the secretary to just guess when she should change pencils, she could do it (because she had gone back to counting unconsciously).[1]

Ordinarily, you can not simultaneously beat a five rhythm with one hand and a four with the other. You can't count to 250 and spell at the same time. You can not count words and take dictation all at once. If one of the two operations is performed by your unconscious, however, you can perform these amazing feats.

Conversion

Conversion happens when a subject exchanges one symptom, behavior, or belief, for another. The transformation may be suggested, or spontaneous. True conversion always happens at the unconscious level—and thus with automaticity. In order for an unconscious to reject a suggestion, or a posthypnotic suggestion, it must convert that suggestion's energy into another, linked behavior.

For example, Hammerschlag observed a subject to whom he had given a posthypnotic suggestion to stick out his tongue at him: "...he becomes stiff and stares at me with wide-open eyes. Then he shakes his head as if he wants to drive away a thought." Hammerschlag asked the subject what was in his mind. The subject "replies that the absurd thought entered his head that he must stretch his tongue out to me..." (p. 65) The subject was then completely freed of that posthypnotic urge. He had converted the tongue-sticking-out into stiffness, staring, head shaking, and finally the verbalization describing the urge. Those conversion behaviors completely dissipated the suggestion's energy. The subject was relieved of the unconscious pressure to perform that humiliating act.

---

[1] "Just guess" is a function assigned to our unconscious. It also explains the phenomenon of source amnesia.

A conversion is an unconscious escape maneuver. It is a self-protective maneuver that the subject's unconscious can do—without the presence, or participation, of the conscious mind. An unwelcome, unconscious instruction is avoided by diverting its drive energy into a different channel of expression. There is always automaticity in conversion; it is always an unconscious maneuver. If a person rejects a suggestion by means of conversion, he or she was in a trance state when the original suggestion was implanted.

A girl was given a posthypnotic suggestion to turn on her radio after awakening from trance, but not to know why. After being awakened, however, she did not obey. Instead, she acted very nervous, standing up, sitting down, walking from her chair to the radio, then stopping and going back. The hypnotist asked, "What makes you so jittery?" She explained that she felt "an almost irresistible compulsion to get some music on her radio, but she realized that it was quite late and it might waken the baby next door." (Gindes, p. 42) She had resisted the objectionable suggestion by converting it into anxiety and nervous pacing.

A prominent German hypnotist, Wagner von Jauregg, publicly declared, over and over, that hypnosis could not be used to cause a person to commit a crime. One day a strange man entered his office carrying a pistol. The man shouted threats and pointed the gun at him, then let the gun fall and shouted more threats. Investigative hypnotists later learned that another hypnotist had instructed the man to "shoot" von Jauregg. He had made the suggestion, provided the gun, demonstrated that there were no bullets in it and no harm would come of obeying. Despite all that, the subject never pulled the trigger. He converted that part of the suggestion into letting the gun fall. (J. H. Schultz, 1952)

In Mayer's second book, he described an experiment in "antisocial" hypnosis. He, the female subject, and another person were all standing outside in a garden. Before the hypnotic induction, he handed the subject a gun and told her to shoot at a tree. She did so. Then he handed her some cartridges and told her to reload the gun. (The new cartridges were dummies, harmless fakes, but there was no way she could know that.) She loaded the gun. Then, he induced hypnosis

> She is instructed to shoot at the person indicated by me and she indicates her complete agreement. [He also suggests that...] The subject must, within a minute after awakening from the hypnosis, sieze the revolver which will be lying in front of her, aim it at the breast of the indicated person, and pull the trigger...The subject sinks into a state of excitement, with fixed and steady gaze at the revolver which lies before her. She is terribly agitated. Before that instructed minute of delay has passed, she begs for a glass of water because she suddenly feels unwell. Something dark arises inside her. Then she springs into the air as if driven to do so, tries to grasp the weapon, shrinks together, slips on to the ground and lies there motionless. She is placed on a bench. She comes to after some minutes, and looks around her in astonishment. She tries to orient herself but for about ten seconds she remains confused. (Mayer, Die Technik der Hypnose, p. 52)

Her excitement, physical restlessness, request for a glass of water, feeling unwell, springing into the air, and fainting were all conversions of the rejected suggestion. A suggestion which has been accepted at the unconscious level MUST be converted rather than simply denied. (That is one origin of neurotic behavior.)

There are also cases on record in which a hypnotist told a subject to do something intolerable, and the subject converted that drive into a self-generated wake-up command! In the infamous Salpetriere, a hypnotist had demonstrated a hypnotized young woman committing suggested crimes:

> Witt., the principal subject, thrown into the somnambulist state, had...displayed the most sanguinary instincts. At a word or sign, she had stabbed, shot, and poisoned...The notables had withdrawn, greatly impressed, leaving only a few students with the subject, who was still in the somnambulist state. The students...told her that she was now quite alone in the hall. She was to strip and take a bath. Witt., who had murdered all the magistrates without turning a hair, was seized with shame at the thought of undressing. Rather than accede....she had a violent fit of hysterics. (Janet, Psychological Healing, p. 184)

That incident is much cited as proof that a hypnotized person will reject any unwelcome suggestion. There is always the hope of effective resistance to an odious suggestion, and Witt. managed it. She converted the unwelcome suggestion to strip and imagine herself taking a bath into that "violent fit of hysterics." She could not simply deny the suggestion. She had to convert it. If a suggestion is rejected by conversion, rather than just being ignored, that is proof that the subject was in an automatistic state when the original suggestion was given!

The possibility of conversion should not be taken to mean that it is impossible for a hypnotist to compel a subject to do something against his will, or against his best interests (the "dogma of moral integrity"). Fortunate, indeed, is the subject who successfully manages to convert an exploitative or abusive suggestion. Normal unconscious processes are set up to obey rather than to convert. Modern technologies of hypnocontrol have done their best to completely eliminate this option for a subject. Nevertheless, conversion always remains a possibility.

Conversion is one origin of psychosomatic ailments. In 1937, Eisenbud treated a man who suffered severe migraine headaches. He observed they were triggered by situations in which his patient's hostility was aroused, but could not be expressed—anger converting into headache. Eisenbud cured the patient with a desensitization series of visualized scenes in which hostility was aroused but could not be expressed. The first scenes caused painful migraine headaches. As the series continued, however, headaches resulted less frequently. The patient was beginning consciously to understand that he had been converting his anger into pain. Conscious recognition of the conversion enabled the subject to unload that bad habit.

Pure symptom removal (you tell somebody under trance that their problem is going away, or to quit doing it) may work, or it may not. Suggested symptom conversion works better, because it gives the symptom's underlying drive-energy a better place to go. For example, a facial twitch could be converted into an inconspicuous twitch of the left little finger. Conversion could even give the problem drive a useful and helpful new function, a compensation.

4) Catalepsy

> The subject, upon being hypnotized, was commanded to clasp his hands as tightly as possible and was told that he would not be able to open them until he was instructed to do so. A burning cigarette was forced between the clasped hands in such manner that he would suffer severe burns if they could not be pulled apart...the subject made several attempts, screaming the while. The odor of burnt flesh was noticeable. Finally, after the subject pleaded for release from the suggestion, the professor relented.
>
> Gindes, p. 94[1]

Suggested Catalepsy

In trance, you may lose conscious control over muscle actions that are normally voluntary. That phenomenon is catalepsy.[2] Catalepsy can happen when the brain's motor (muscular) control system is dissociated (goes off-line). Or, it begins when the subject's unconscious starts taking orders from the hypnotist instead of from its own conscious mind—and he suggests catalepsy.

The cataleptic state can involve either flaccidity or rigidity. A paralysis (catalepsy) caused by hypnosis (or hysteria) is not like a real paralysis caused by physical nerve damage. It is only there because the subject's unconscious accepted the idea that it is there. It takes the form that the subject imagines it should. The manifestation may not be anatomically correct in terms of nerve distribution and function.

Pavlov theorized that catalepsy happens because the motor center goes off-line. He hypothesized that a sequence of higher brain centers (which he called analyzers) go off- line, one by one, as brain inhibition (relaxation) increases. His concept is correct. The center for voluntary muscle control is one of the first to go, so catalepsy appears at a relatively shallow trance depth.

---

[1] Gindes did not note the obvious aspects of sadistic domination and subject abuse by the unidentified "professor of psychology" who suggested the cataleptic situation of clasped hands to his subject and tested his automatism so cruelly. This is a clear case of an "antisocial" act by a hypnotist against a subject. The subject is unable to escape despite great need to do so. Gindes told it only as an interesting aside.

[2] In biofeedback training, on the other hand, you gain control over normally involuntary body functions.

Catalepsy to Test Trance Depth and to Deepen

Catalepsy demonstrates the displacement of conscious will by unconscious will, and the hypnotist's dominance over the subject's unconscious mind. In his first induction of Candy, Nebel used a limb catalepsy routine simultaneously to test her trance depth and to deepen her. After the primary induction by progressive relaxation, he lifted her left arm up and suggested that it had become rigid and would hold that position, and that she could not lower it, even if she tried. Nebel was suggesting dissociation; her arm was to have a mind of its own.

With Candy's conscious mind inhibited, her unconscious accepted the suggestion. Muscles tensed in the arm as Candy consciously tried to lower it. Unconsciously-controlled opposing muscles kept it up. She could not lower it. Nebel ended the test. He gave permission. Then her arm lowered.

Deep Trance Catalepsy—There is a profound difference between suggested catalepsy in lighter trance ("however hard you try, you can not open your eyes") and the natural catalepsy that appears in deep trance. In trance deep enough for surgery, there is a tendency for a body part to remain in whatever position the hypnotist places it. That tendency is also called catalepsy, but deep trance catalepsy is a physiological condition rather than a suggested one. The subject is truly unable to move. Dr. Esdaile used this condition as a surgical anesthetic for hundreds of operations in India. Binet and Fere used the word "catalepsy" only to describe this latter condition, one characterized by absolute hypnotic automatism. "...the cataleptic subject is a machine," they declared.

Catalepsy vs. Catatonia

Catalepsy and catatonia are related words. In modern usage, catalepsy is used when speaking of a hypnotic subject. Catatonia is used when speaking of mental patients who have unusual body flaccidity or rigidity. A cataleptic hypnotic subject's suggested muscular rigidity resembles the fixed positions of some catatonic schizophrenics. In light-trance catalepsy, the subject does not move what he has been told he cannot move. In deep-trance catalepsy, the physiology of the state immobilizes the subject. In catatonia, the immobility is spontaneous and is caused by mental illness. However, some old-time writers used either word to refer to either state. Some even reversed them, using catatonic to mean cataleptic. In the following quote, both terms are used correctly:

> [Catalepsy is]...a peculiar state of muscle tonus which parallels corea flexibilitas of the stuporous catatonic patient. The subject holds his arm up in the air, maintains any awkward position given him by the hypnotist, and shows a failure of normal fatigue reactions. Concomitant with it are a loss of the swallowing reflex, a dilatation of the pupils, a loss of facial mobility, and a definite slowing of all psychomotor activity. Yet, upon instructions by the hypnotist, the subject can perform adequately at a motor level equal to the waking capacity and often at a level that transcends it. (M.H. Erickson, Hypnosis in Medicine, p. 644)

"Bridge" Phenomenon

Old-time hypnotists often tested or demonstrated a subject's cataleptic capacity with the bridge phenomenon. Dr. Reiter used it when demonstrating Palle before the court personnel. Dr. Cook, a professor at the University of Chicago, almost a century ago, said:

> A favorite demonstration of profound hypnosis made in public exhibitions is the production of catalepsy...when the subject is perfectly rigid, his body is lifted and placed in such a position as to cause the head to rest upon one chair, while the feet rest upon another, making of it a sort of human bridge, upon which the operator may place weights, or upon which he may stand. (Cook, pp. 243-244)

A 1990 text for hypnotists describes a similar routine:

> The stage hypnotist tells the subject that his or her body is getting stiff and rigid, so stiff and rigid that it is becoming as unyielding as a bar of steel. The rigid body is now placed across two chairs and another person stands on the unsupported abdomen. (Hughes, The Induction of Conviction, p. 31)

☞ Suggestion under trance can make a body rigid and unfeeling, but it cannot make a body immune to actual damage. Subjects have died after romps of this sort.

5) Hallucination

It is well known that, while under the hypnotic influence, subjects can eat the most obnoxious articles without realizing the unpleasant effects, provided the proper suggestions are made. It is possible to give a subject a glass of diluted ammonia and say: 'Here, drink this glass of milk,' and thus get him to drink it. But such an act would be grossly wrong, for the ammonia would injure the throat and stomach...even though he experienced under suggestion a pleasurable sensation while swallowing it.

- Cook, Practical Lessons in Hypnotism and Autosuggestion, 1920, pp. 72-3

A hallucination is a vivid, sensory, mental experience that is not real, but, at that moment, seems to be real to the subject. The experience of a hallucination can be suggested to a hypnotized person, or it can be suggested to appear after the subject awakens from trance, as a cued posthypnotic event. The hallucination can mimic any of the five senses: sight, hearing, feeling, smell, or taste. Vision is the hardest sense to hallucinate. Deep trance is necessary.

Gindes wrote about feeding soap to a subject and convincing him that it was a delicious dessert: "Similarly, it is possible to make the hypnotic subject accept chili-peppers as sweet milk chocolates and ice-cubes as burning coals." (Gindes, p. 37) Taste and smell hallucinations have a long, sad history in hypnotricks.

> Persons have been known to drink kerosene, or diluted ink with apparent pleasure, as if it were wine, tea or milk, depending on the suggestion. Persons have been known to turn away with the expression of disgust on their faces from an excellent perfume; or to inhale with delight the vapors from a bottle of ammonia. (Winn, Scientific Hypnotism, p. 24)

Research hypnotists have, by suggestion, caused total blindness, colorblindness, and total deafness.

> Subjects can be made to...be deaf to the loudest noise—even a gun fired close to their ears...Or subjects can be made to believe they are blind, so effectively that the brain waves typical of real blindness will begin to be transmitted. (Hughes, The Induction of Conviction, p. 31)

Those conditions were all hallucinations, perceptions of reality falsified by suggestion.

Normal and Abnormal Hallucinations

We all can imagine, and many people can visualize. In normal people, ideas, thoughts, and insights from deep mental levels can manifest themselves to their conscious in visualizations. There are visualizations that you can deliberately call out on your mind screen. There are spontaneous visualizations that just happen. Right-brained people may visualize much of their own thinking. Visualizations may also be suggested by another person. You "see" that image—a pink elephant. You know it is just a suggested image. Ordinary imagery and imagination vary in degree of autonomy. It can be a matter of opinion as to when an image is just a visualization, and when it is a hallucination.

> The dream...when remembered... qualifies as hallucination. (p. 89); ...dreams are the hallucinations most frequently experienced in daily life. (E.R. Hilgard, Divided Consciousness, p. 95)

The most extreme type of hallucination happens when the subject mistakes his hallucination for external reality. If you know it is a visualization, dream, or illusion, the event does not qualify to be called a hallucination in the most complete sense. Full-scale hallucination is imagination that you believe is reality. A full-scale hallucination is autonomous. You do not control it. For the moment, it controls you. Normal people can have the extraordinary, unforgettable experience of spontaneous hallucination. Too many such experiences, however--especially if they are a) terrifying, b) authoritative, and c) believed to come from some source other than your own mind--could net you a diagnosis of mental illness.

Interview with an Ex-hypnotist

As I browsed The Crossroads Bookstore of the Palouse Mall, looking for hypnosis books, a pleasant-looking man with short brown hair and glasses asked, “May I help you find something?”

“Do you have any books about unethical hypnosis?”

He thumbed through a catalog, then said, “No, there’s nothing listed. May I ask why you’re interested in that subject?”

“I’m researching the subject, writing a book.”

“I could tell you a few things about unethical hypnosis,” he said with sudden vehemence. “I used to be a hypnotist. And then my life changed and I gave it up.”

“Would you give me an interview?” I asked.

“I’m alone in the store today and busy. Come back tomorrow at lunchtime. My name is Keith Moen.”

I was back at noon the next day. Keith said, “My first experience with hypnosis was in a parlor trick at a party. I let a young man who had been dabbling in it hypnotize me. Then he told me I was in the desert, hadn’t had any water for days, and that I was extremely thirsty. He said I was in desperate need of water. Then they handed me a glass of water. He said, ‘Finally, at last, you have your water.’ He told me it would just taste wonderful, refreshing and sweet and good. ‘Now drink it.’ I drank it right down, all the way down. Then they woke me up. They had stirred several tablespoonfuls of pure citric acid into that water. I drank ‘lemonade’ for weeks after that. Every time I’d take a drink of water, or milk, or anything, I’d taste that citric taste.”

Keith continued, “So then I became an amateur hypnotist and I went around hypnotizing people. That’s a very, very dangerous thing to do. I was totally untrained, had no idea what the consequences of my actions were. I saw pretty amazing things playing around with it. I hypnotized my first wife a number of times--got to the point where all I’d have to do is give her a pre-suggested cue and she would go into a deep state. I experimented on her, took her back to her childhood and back into the womb. She was a student nurse going to school in Costa Mesa, California. She was having trouble with a pharmacology class. Through a series of hypnotic suggestions I told her she would retain all of the knowledge that she looked at, heard, or studied in this pharmacology course, that she would remember it and would do very well on the test. She’s the only person in the history of Costa Mesa College that got a hundred percent on the pharmacology test. But a few years later I realized I was playing with dynamite and stopped doing it entirely.”

Keith paused to think a moment, then continued, “You know, I’ve heard people over the years say you won’t do anything under hypnosis that you wouldn’t normally do, that you wouldn’t do anything immoral or illegal. That’s simply not true. I’ve talked with others about it who agree with me. I’ve counseled people who have been hypnotized. I’ve been involved in it myself and I have seen people do things they would normally not do. Under hypnotic suggestion you can make them do it.”

Positive Hallucination

There are two types of hallucination: positive and negative. If a person hallucinates what does not exist (either at the time of the suggestion or after a posthypnotic cue), that is a positive hallucination. He perceives something that does not exist, because its existence has been suggested to him.

Negative Hallucination

If a person hallucinates the absence of something that is really there, it's called a negative hallucination. Negative hallucination may affect any sense. Suggested blindness, or blindness in one eye, or deafness, or inability to see a person who is actually present in the room, are all negative hallucinations.

> The subject's every act and word seem to indicate that with the consciousness he possesses he does not see Mr X. Subjective reports of individuals with such a negative hallucination indicate they experience either the presence in the room of something "peculiar" with a "not to be inquired into" aspect, or the existence of a white space for Mr X.
> (Marcuse, Hypnosis: Fact and Fiction, p. 73)

Being told you are not depressed, or do not crave cigarettes, or ice cream, is a type of negative hallucination. It is a blocking from awareness. Negative hallucination is considered one of the most difficult hypnotic challenges. In order for a negative hallucination to be accepted, the subject must be in a very deep trance.

Negative hallucination (or any other hypnotic phenomenon) can occur spontaneously. In 1947, L. R. Wolberg, while experimenting with antisocial hypnosis, suggested to a series of hypnotized subjects that they do a plainly unethical act:

> "When you awaken you will find next to you a bar of chocolate. You will have a desire to eat the chocolate that will be so intense that it will be impossible to resist the craving. At the same time you will feel that the chocolate does not belong to you and to eat it would be very wrong and very bad. You will have no memory of these suggestions..." (Wolberg, "Hypnotic Experiments in Psychosomatic Medicine")

One subject ate the candy, but then got indigestion. Another ate three quarters of it, complained that it tasted bitter, felt nausea and stomach pain, and then vomited. A third could not see the chocolate. His unconscious resolved the suggested moral conflict by creating a spontaneous negative hallucination erasing the chocolate bar from his vision. Wolberg picked up the candy bar and held it out to him. The subject did not see it. Wolberg threw it noisily on the table in front of the subject. He still did not see it.

6. Anesthesia

It is not true, as many claim, that the subject's body can be made to resist the destruction of heat, cold, blows, injuries, etc., while under hypnotic influence. He can be rendered insensible to the impressions produced by these things, but he cannot be rendered proof against their actual effects. It is cruelty to command a subject to pick up a live coal. He may do it without suffering at the time, if the suggestion is given that it will not burn, but the coal will nevertheless burn his flesh...the ammonia would injure the throat and stomach...even though he experienced under suggestion, a pleasurable sensation while swallowing it.

- Cook, 1927, pp. 70-73

Pain can be blocked by suggestion. Hypnosis enables people to endure more pain than otherwise would be possible. The deeper the trance, the more pain can be endured. Because hypnotic anesthesia is of psychological origin, numbing patterns induced by suggestion are what the subject thinks they should be, rather than correct nerve anatomy. Analgesia is the lightest stage of hypnotic anesthesia. There is no startle reaction, no facial flinch or grimace at the pinprick or pinch.

Surgery under hypnosis would have become common if chemical anesthesia had not appeared shortly after hypnotic anesthesia was developed by Dr. James Esdaile, a Scottish surgeon. Around 1852, Esdaile did thousands of operations, including hundreds of major surgeries, in the government hospitals of Hooghly and Calcutta, India. Before Esdaile, surgery was gruesomely painful and the death rate from the operation itself was fifty percent, usually from shock. But ninety-five percent of Esdaile's patients survived their surgery—even limb and breast amputations and the cutting out of enormous scrotal tumors. His subjects felt no pain during the operation because they were all in the deepest level of trance.

Hypnotic training for dentists began after World War II. Since then, much dental work has been done under suggested anesthesia with posthypnotic suggestions to limit bleeding. Hypnodontists have done "every possible type of dental operation...preparation of deep cavities and filling of teeth, extractions, removal of impacted teeth," root canals, and gum surgery. "Bleeding and salivation were controlled...there was no pain or discomfort either during or after." (Burgess, p. 323) Persons I have known, whose dental work was done under hypnosis, were pleased with how well suggestion overcame fear, pain, and bleeding.

Esdaile pioneered the practice of surgery under deeper hypnotic anesthesia. Since then, C-sections, etc., have been done under deep hypnosis—even a thyroidectomy. Babies are often delivered using it. (All "childbirth classes" are trance training with the coach as hypnotist.) It usually takes time to train a hypnotic subject to achieve the depth of trance where deep anesthesia is possible. But, once that depth is achieved, a dental hypnotist wrote, "it can be obtained immediately for an indefinite number of years. The writer has tested this with two subjects, one for 20 and another for 21 years." (Burgess p. 344)

☞ Hypnotic anesthesia works both for imaginary (psychosomatic) and real pain. Do not use trance suggestion to relieve pain until a doctor has examined the patient to find out what is causing it. If a hypnotist masks the pain by hypnotic suggestion, without learning its cause, the result could be a ruptured appendix, or worse.

Anesthesia Reveals Trance Depth

Surgery cannot be performed on somebody who is faking hypnosis! Suggested anesthesia, therefore, is a test for trance.

> ...the operator will proceed to introduce the more involved tests--for instance, suggestions of tingling and numbing sensations of one extremity, followed by a pinching, searing, or puncturing of the flesh to demonstrate that anesthesia has been effected. (Moss, pp. 3-4)

Anesthesia in Stage Demonstrations

Like other hypnotic phenomena, suggested anesthesia has been abused. A hypnotist advised: "The excuse, 'It was just an experiment,' is never justification for injury." (Gindes, p. 95) For example, it was common practice in old-time hypnotic exhibitions to demonstrate suggested anesthesia by sewing

> ...the lips together by needle and thread, or by passing hat pins through the cheeks. In some instances the tongues of several persons have been sewed together... (Cook, pp. 189-190)

Cook also mentioned a stage show in which

> The tongue was protruded and perforated directly in the center by a very large needle. Not the least tremor was noticeable and no blood flowed.

He urged hypnotists, before "inserting needles or other instruments into hypnotized persons," to immerse them in "some good aseptic fluid."

☞ IF A SUBJECT'S OBEDIENCE TO A SUGGESTION WOULD HARM OR INJURE HIM IN THE WAKING STATE, IT WILL HAVE THE SAME EFFECT IN THE HYPNOTIC STATE.

7. Posthypnotic Suggestion

The patient hears what I tell him in his sleep, but no memory of what I said remains. He no longer knows that I spoke to him. The idea suggested arises in his mind when he wakes, but he has forgotten its origin and believes it is spontaneous.
- Bernheim

A posthypnotic suggestion is made under hypnosis, but is carried out during a later waking state. The hypnotized person is instructed to perform a certain behavior at some time after the trance is over. The subject temporarily returns to trance during the time he enacts the posthypnotic suggestion.

Posthypnotic Action Revives Trance

Posthypnotic programming arises, when cued, from the unconscious. It overrides, and temporarily shoves aside, the subject's conscious mind. While doing posthypnotic behavior, the subject is in trance again. The posthypnotic act is enacted in a momentary renewal of the hypnotic condition in which it was originally suggested. The subject has normal consciousness before, and after, the posthypnotic act, but he carries it out in trance. Posthypnotic behavior is > ...a resurgence of a self-limited hypnosis...This may be shown by interfering with the performing of the posthypnotic act and finding the subject in a state typical of hypnosis. (M. H. Erickson, quoted in Marcuse, Hypnosis, p. 75)

The posthypnotic act may take place despite objections from the conscious mind:

> ...it is not an integrated part of the behavior of the total situation in which it occurs, but is actually disruptive of the conscious stream of activity, with which it may be entirely at variance. (Erickson & Erickson, "Concerning the Nature and Character of Post-Hypnotic Behavior")

If the posthypnotic suggestion also directs the subject to act "wide awake and normal" while obeying the posthypnotic directive, the trance condition can be concealed from untrained observers. A person carrying out a posthypnotic act may act:

☐ Like a sleepwalker, with amnesia afterward;

☐ In trance, but with no amnesia after the act;

☐ In an apparently normal mental state, with no amnesia, but obeying the hypnotic suggestion.

Which type of behavior manifests depends on the subject and on the specific posthypnotic suggestions. For example, a hypnotist who volunteered for another hypnotist's demonstration, was given a posthypnotic suggestion (plus amnesia). When the hypnotist blew his nose, the subject was to change chairs. Ten minutes after the subject was awakened from trance, the hypnotist blew his nose.

> ...the subject became vaguely uneasy and finally said, "Look here, I feel a definite compulsion to go over to that chair. I bet you have given me a posthypnotic suggestion. Well, I'm darned if I will go all the same." After this, he took part in the discussion for a few more minutes and then finally, and quite suddenly, got up, crossed the room and sat down in the other chair. (Eysenck, Uses and Abuses of Psychology, pp. 216-217)

The subject was aware of his situation, and in apparent waking consciousness (except perhaps for the moment in which he suddenly got up, crossed the room and sat down in the other chair). He had no amnesia afterward, but he had obeyed.

Posthypnotic Suggestion Lasts

George Estabrooks conditioned an unknowing subject for his own fun during World War I and gave him a posthypnotic suggestion. If Estabrooks said, "Watch the front," the subject was to stand up and shout, "Call out the guard. Here comes Paul Revere."

Twenty years later, Estabrooks happened to meet that fellow again. As they stood and talked, the hypnotist suddenly spoke the cue, "Watch the front." His subject "looked puzzled," but gave the proper response: "Call out the guard. Here comes Paul Revere." "Then he looked even more puzzled and added: 'I wonder why I said that." (Estabrooks, Hypnosis, p. 89) Both the programming and the subject's amnesia regarding his hypnotic usage by Estabrooks had lasted twenty years. But, now, he was sophisticated enough to ask himself why he had done that strange behavior!

The unconscious is also capable of fantastically accurate counting and time measurement without using any watch or clock. An act can be suggested to be performed any number of time units in the future and it is likely be done at, or very near, the designated time.

Unremoved Suggestions Remain Active Posthypnotically

Suggestions should be removed before the end of a trance unless they are designed for long-term operation. Estabrooks told of a person who went to a therapist complaining of feeling followed by a dog. The symptom had appeared suddenly and there were no others. The subject knew the dog that he thought was following him was imaginary but he could not stop his imagination from working.

In rehypnotization, the doctor learned that this subject had an unfortunate habit of volunteering for stage demonstrations of hypnosis. A hypnotist had said, "You're getting chased around the stage by a mean dog." The subject ran frantically around the stage hallucinating the fierce dog in close pursuit. It made the audience laugh. The hypnotist did not remove that suggestion. It is easier to acquire a problem by hypnosis than it is to get rid of it in subsequent hypnoses. It took the doctor several sessions to fully erase that mean dog from the subject's unconscious.

There was a similar case in England. While participating in a stage demonstration, a subject was told, upon hearing a certain song, he instantly would fall asleep. The hypnotist then awoke the subject and he returned to his seat in the audience. Later in the show, the hypnotist told the orchestra to play that certain song. The subject instantly fell asleep. When the band stopped playing the song, he woke up again. The hypnotist let him go home without canceling the suggestion.

Two nights later, the subject was out driving with his girlfriend. The car radio was playing, and that song came on. His eyes closed. His body slumped onto the wheel, asleep. She grabbed the wheel, managed to wrestle the car to the side of the road, and stopped. When the tune was done playing, he yawned and woke, amnesic for the entire sleeping episode. He did not know why the car was at the side of the road.

His girlfriend contacted the stage hypnotist. He rehypnotized the subject and removed that dangerous posthypnotic suggestion.

Another stage hypnotist told a subject, "Move back where you came from." He meant that the subject was to step back into the group line. The subject did not obey, although the hypnotist repeated the command several times. Not long after, however, the subject quit his job, put his house up for sale, and moved a thousand miles—back to where he came from. The hypnotist had not intended those words to be a posthypnotic suggestion, but the literal unconscious of that particular subject took it that way. (Perhaps it was expressing an unconscious longing.)

A college student, playing around with hypnosis, hypnotized his friend and told the subject that he had drowned. After he ended the trance, his subject still did not breathe normally. He was gasping for air. The student hypnotist didn't know what to do. He located his psychology professor, an expert hypnotist, and asked for help. The professor (Marcuse) rehypnotized the student and suggested he'd actually swum to shore and survived the danger. The subject breathed normally again.

A psychology student was showing off his hypnosis skills at a party. A girl asked him to take away her fear of water so that she could swim. He induced deep trance, then gave her suggestions.

Early the next morning, the girl got up before anybody else. In a state of posthypnotic suggestion, confident that she could now swim, she eagerly plunged into the lake. "Her bloated body was recovered from the water a few hours later." (Gindes, p. 94)

An acquaintance told me about a high school friend of his who hypnotized classmates: "But when he realized he was changing them for life, he got scared and quit." Another told me of a high school pal who had hypnotized a young man and told him that he was afraid of ants. The subject acquired a severe ant phobia. The amateur hypnotist and friends got their yuks. Then the young hypnotist was ready to rehypnotize and remove the ant phobia. His subject refused. He chose to keep the phobia rather than risk new conditioning.

The Possible Variety of Posthypnotic Acts

Any act that can be elicited under hypnosis also can be enacted as a posthypnotic suggestion. The possible purpose and content of posthypnotic events is as infinite as human ingenuity, as varied as human circumstance. Whatever behavior is wanted can be ordered up by cue: changed memory of past events, a new memory of an imaginary event, hallucinations (positive or negative), or any other future action. Performance can be cued to happen at any time in the future, even years later. Sometimes such suggestions take, and sometimes they do not. When they do, the results can be astonishing.

A hypnotist gave a posthypnotic suggestion to a woman that on a certain day, at a certain time, on a street in L.A., she would meet her (dead) brother. She later wrote:

> "I was so happy to see him, but I was astonished because I knew he was dead. However, in a way, his presence seemed perfectly natural at the time. He accompanied me to my apartment, and there we talked about different things....Soon he rose from his chair with the excuse that he had to keep an appointment, and left. I did not become fully aware of the impossibility of the situation until after he was gone, and then I felt dazed. This feeling of bewilderment stayed with me until it was explained that my illusion was part of an hypnotic experiment." (quoted in Gindes, p. 40)

Rationalization

Rationalization (making up a fake reason) is a major defense mechanism. When we do things for reasons of which we are not consciously aware, we rationalize. The obedient enactment of posthypnotic suggestion likewise gets excused by fake explanations provided by the unconscious to the conscious. A subject who does not remember being given a posthypnotic suggestion will always invent an imaginary reason for obeying.

His rationalization will be as plausible as possible. He will consciously believe it even though it is a lie he has told himself. Posthypnotic suggestions can be beneficial or harmful. If asked later why he did this particular thing, he will

> ...rationalize his conduct by some kind of semi-reasonable explanation...To anyone acquainted with the real motive, namely, the posthypnotic suggestion, these pseudo-motives are very interesting because they are so similar to the pseudo-motives often given by people to justify actions, the real reasons for which are unconscious to themselves or, if conscious, dishonorable. (Estabrooks, Scientific American, p. 216)

If a hypnotic subject is not consciously aware of an implanted posthypnotic suggestion because of suggested amnesia, then he does not know the real reason he did the posthypnotic act. In that situation, he will make up some excuse for what he did, as plausible as possible. He will honestly believe the rationalization. He has lied to himself, and perhaps also to others, and believed his lie.

After obeying an amnestic posthypnotic suggestion, people do not say, "I don't know why I did that" (which is their conscious mind's truth). They do not say, "The hypnotist made me do it" (which is their unconsciously known truth). Instead, if you ask, "Why did you do that?" they will make up an excuse which is as believable as possible—and they will honestly believe whatever they said!

A prominent experimental hypnotist gave a young woman a posthypnotic suggestion to take off one shoe after she awakened from his hypnosis demonstration. She was to set it on the table before her. He then suggested amnesia and awakened her:

> ...she fidgeted for a few moments, then slipped off one of her shoes with the other foot, reached down, lifted it, and placed it on the table in front of her. Then she reached over and took the flowers from a vase on the table and placed them in her shoe. (LeCron, The Complete Guide to Hypnosis, p. 18)
>
> When the hypnotist asked why she had put flowers in her shoe, the subject rationalized: "I have a vase at home that looks something like a shoe. I wondered what kind of flower arrangement I could use with it." (Ibid.)

The specific nature of the subject's rationalization for performance of a posthypnotic act may itself be suggested. For example, a military hypnotist told two hypnotized soldiers that:

> "At precisely eleven o'clock you will come again > to this room. You will sit down and suddenly you'll have a terrible itch on the soles of both feet. You will take off your shoes and your socks because you just have to scratch that itch." (Lovell, Of Spies and Stratagems, p. 90)

The hypnotic subjects reappeared at the appointed hour. They removed their shoes and socks and scratched their feet.

> A military officer present, Colonel Buxton, remonstrated, "Here, here...don't you see there's a General here? What's the matter with your feet?' "Gotta scratch 'em--itch like hell," a soldier explained. (Ibid.)

The Cue

The designated condition that triggers the posthypnotic act is the cue. A posthypnotic suggestion is always triggered by perception. You see, hear, feel, touch, or smell the preset cue—and that triggers the expression of the associated posthypnotic suggestion. That cue was stated by the hypnotist during a previous hypnotic trance. Perceiving the cue triggers automatic performance of whatever behavior was instructed. The most important single category of posthypnotic cues is induction cues.

Induction Cues—Most people have established lifestyle cues to enter a more relaxed state of mind. These consciousness-lowering cues are embedded in familiar ritual or other circumstances associated with previous trance experiences. They probably are not consciously recognized as induction cues. Whatever that something is, it is precious to you. The opening bars of the theme song of a TV addict's favorite show cues the deep sigh that signals lowering consciousness. Other cues may be routines, rites, familiar words, familiar sights, familiar sounds, familiar thoughts, or ideas to which you respond strongly, and at a deep level.

In 19th century Europe, before the process of cued induction was clearly understood, operators accidentally conditioned subjects to a cue, and thereafter assumed it was the magic doorway to lowered consciousness. For example, Dr. Tourette's hypnotic subjects were all expected to drop into cataleptic trance whenever someone came up from behind and made a loud noise—and they did:

> ...we beat the gong. She immediately went into a cataleptic trance...this strange result of loud and unexpected noise has been the cause of more than one peculiar incident. On a Corpus Christi Day, several hysterics following the procession became cataleptic because of the military band...On another occasion, one became cataleptic at the barking of a dog. Another one went to a concert at Chatelet on her day off; she became a cataleptic three times during the concert.

An induction cue must be perceived: tasted, smelled, heard, seen, or felt. Anything that can be perceived can be an induction cue. The cue can be given in person, or over the phone, or in a letter. Induction cues are usually for a one-step descent into deep hypnosis, but they can be qualified to limit descent, as in depth-limited trance for any competing operators. Most induction cues have multiple defining elements. "When I snap my fingers and sy, 'deep asleep,' you will fall instantly into a deep hypnotic sleep" is a posthypnotic reinduction cue with three defining elements. They must all occur for induction to be triggered:

1) The present operator, "I," must be the one giving the posthypnotic cues.

2) A finger snap must be perceived by the subject.

3) "Deep asleep" must be spoken by the present operator.

That compound induction cue prevents rehypnosis by an accidental snap of the fingers, or an accidental hearing of the words “deep asleep,” or a casual encounter with the operator.

A suggestion that specifies the induction cue and a following descent into deep trance sets up a subject for automatistic (unconscious, compelled) descent into trance:

> ...by means of posthypnotic suggestion, a person may be put into the hypnotic state against his desires if he is a somnambulist. (Heron, “Hypnosis as a Factor in the Production and Detection of Crime,” 1952, p. 27)

A Peculiar Incident

I took a course on hypnotherapy while researching this book. An assistant instructor taught the class every Thursday evening. He was a short grey-haired gentleman who, for decades, had been a professional hypnotherapist with many clients. The night he first saw me in the classroom, he stared hard at my face for a moment, as if he thought he knew me. I wondered if perhaps I resembled a client he had worked with years ago, but I made no comment.

In the usual class routine, the professor’s lecture was followed by a long video demonstrating some hypnotherapy technique. The assistant lectured, then dimmed the lights, and began showing the video. I happened to be sitting at the end of a row. In the semidarkness, he walked over and stood beside me. In one swift motion, he pressed his right index finger on the center of my forehead.

Startled, I turned my head and stared at him, wide-eyed. He did not speak a word of apology or explanation. He did not even acknowledge doing something unusual. He just stepped back and walked away from me. I did not question him. I did think to myself with a silent chuckle, “So that’s how he greets old clients, by throwing them into trance with that posthypnotic reinduction cue.” After I thought about it some more, however, his ethics did not seem so amusing.

He had not said to me, “I think you’ve been my client before. May I have permission to hypnotize you again?” He did not say, “I’m going to hypnotize you.” No. This professional hypnotist, who obviously thought I was already a conditioned subject of his, chose to make re-acquaintance with me in the most dehumanizing way. He attempted to bypass my conscious mind entirely by triggering an old induction cue. His touch to my forehead revealed a further assumption on his part: that I was amnesic for all his past contact with me. If I had been a previous hypnotic subject of his, that touch would have worked—unless some other hypnotist had sealed me in the meantime.

A few weeks later, he told our class that his usual posthypnotic cue for reinduction was a finger touch to the forehead of the subject.

Sealing

If a hypnotist gives his subject a posthypnotic suggestion that no other person can induce hypnosis in him, then that subject becomes unavailable to other operators. An abusive hypnotist is likely to do this to escape detection.[1]

Sealing goes back at least to the 1700s (and perhaps even farther):

> Prior to Mesmer’s time, since the public knew nothing of hypnosis, there was no reason to attempt to “seal off” good subjects from potential lay operators. (Teitelbaum, Hypnosis Induction Technics, pp. 104-105

After Mesmer popularized hypnosis, however, operators looked for ways to keep other operators from using their subjects:

> ...many magnetizers impressed upon their patients’ minds that no one else would ever be able to magnetize them. (Ellenberger, The Discovery of the Unconscious, p. 154)

To accomplish the sealing, the hypnotist gives instructions to the subject such as:

> ...no person other than myself...ever will be able to hypnotize you again. The suggestions I am about to give you will become deeply implanted in your subconscious mind, but you will not consciously remember them after you awaken from this trance state. You will not remember that I hypnotized you and will not remember that you have ever been hypnotized before in your life. In addition, if any...person ever tries to hypnotize you, you will tell him that you have never been hypnotized before, that you cannot be hypnotized and that you don’t want to be hypnotized. (Teitelbaum, Hypnotic Induction Technics, p. 105)

Raymond Wells researched techniques for unethical hypnosis during and after World War II:

> One hypnotizer might very well be able to produce effects in subjects which nullify the later work of another hypnotizer, in part or even in toto. The implantation during the hypnotic trance of a subconscious inhibition which operates post-hypnotically to protect the S from

---

1. Sealing is not absolute. A determined subject, with the help of a determined hypnotist, can get past sealing instructions.

> being hypnotized at all by other hypnotizers is a familiar case in point...rendering the S helpless to become a S thereafter at the hands of other hypnotizers, however much he may desire and strive.... (Wells,"Ability to Resist Artificially Induced Dissociation")

Estabrooks promoted government creation of sealed, unknowing clandestine agents. Because conditioning made the subject highly susceptible to hypnosis by anybody,

> ... we plug this gap again by suggestion in the somnambulistic state. We assure the subject that in the future no one will be able to hypnotize him except with the special consent of the operator. (Estabrooks, Hypnotism, pp. 196-197)

Estabrooks told about a visiting hypnotist who was invited to test the seal of an unknowing subject. The subject insisted to the guest that he had never been hypnotized and could not be hypnotized. The guest asked permission to try anyway. The subject said he could but that it would be useless:

> So the visitor, a good hypnotist, tries, but at every test the subject simply opens his eyes with a bored grin. Finally he gives up the attempt and everyone is seated as before. Then the original operator taps on the table with his pencil. Immediately the subject is in deep hypnotism. (Ibid.)

The sealing may or may not be concealed from the subject's conscious awareness by suggested amnesia, but usually it is. Suggestions hidden by amnesia have dominance. Amnesia also prevents ill-advised communication to a new hypnotist, who might take news of sealing as a challenge. If the subject is amnesic, another hypnotist

> ...might never know that the seal has been placed, and might deem a person not susceptible to his induction technics and as just one of the small class of people who cannot be hypnotized. (Teitelbaum, Hypnosis Induction Technics, p. 106)

Protective Sealing—Sometimes an operator seals a trained (and, therefore, extra vulnerable) subject in order to protect him from future hypnotic exploitation. Wells gave all his hypnotic subjects this type of sealing.

> ...there will be created a subconscious inhibition which will prevent anyone, including myself, from hypnotizing you at any time unless of your own free will you give your consent in writing. If for any worthwhile reason in the future...you should wish or be willing to be a subject, then if you will write, "I am willing to be hypnotized today by Mr. -- and if you then date the statement and sign your name, you can quickly and easily be hypnotized by any of the usual methods, in just a few seconds. There will be no hypnotic compulsion carrying over from this present hypnotic state which will in any way prevent you from deciding wholly for yourself in the future whether or not it is wise for you to sign a statement of willingness. You will have to sign the statement of your own free will or else it will not be efficacious. (Wells, "Experiments in the Hypnotic Production of Crime," p. 70)

When Wells conducted experiments on the reinduction of an unwilling subject, however, he used a different contract. It said that "no one else" could ever hypnotize them against their will. Wells said that a somnambulist subject with amnesia will obey the sealing rules from then on.

Simeon Edmunds also suggested protective sealing. He said that a person who is worried about his trance susceptibility should ask a trusted friend, who knows hypnosis, to hypnotize and then seal him: "This suggestion, it appears, fulfils itself like the rest, and the bane works its own antidote without further trouble." (Edmunds, p. 142) By the way, Edmunds also hoped to > ...assist in dispelling the widely held and highly dangerous misbelief that no person can be hypnotized against his will. (Hypnotism and Psychic Phenomena, p. 35)

Another hypnotist suggested giving each patient the option of being sealed with

> ...suggestions which will serve as a protection from the experimental amateur or vaudeville hypnotist..."In future no one will be able to hypnotize you except a dentist, a physician, or some other qualified person such as a psychologist; unless you expressly desire to be hypnotized, no one can hypnotize you. (Moss, p. 315)

In a context of narcohypnotic and electronic inductions, however, when some of the bad guys have the highest credentials and the best technology, mere verbal sealing is not the protection it once was.

NORMAL LONG-TERM MEMORY

> Its very porousness, its open-endedness and ongoingness, its ability to bond deeply across remotenesses of time and space, its own virtual dimension--all of these help to make memory a powerful participatory force...Just as everything participates in memory, so memory participates in everything: every last thing. In so doing, it draws the world together, re-membering it and endowing it with a connectiveness and a significance...
>
> - Casey, Remembering, pp. 312-313

The last three important hypnotic phenomena—amnesia, regression, and confabulation—all affect memory. To fully understand how suggestion can affect memory, first consider how normal memory operates.

Stages of Remembering

Researchers have worked hard to unravel the neural mechanisms of memory: how it is established, how maintained, how recalled. There are three distinct stages in the establishment of a memory.

1) You observe something via one of your senses.

2) If it catches your interest, you hold it in short-term memory (STM) for a moment. This is active, conscious memory, limited in capacity to about a maximum of seven items. You are using STM when you lookup, and then repeat, a phone number until you can finish dialing it. Data in STM decays within twenty seconds, unless it moves into long-term memory.

3) Thinking about it more, or with more intensity, moves the item into your long-term memory (LTM). The new memory generally enters LTM by associating with relevant information which you already have. When an item shifts from your temporary memory (STM) to your permanent memory (LTM), the process is called consolidation. There seems to be no limit to the information we can absorb. The process of remembering is always going on.

Independent, Parallel Memory Systems

Your brain has independent, and very different, parallel memory systems: visual (symbolic), verbal, and muscle memory. These "multiple forms of memory...are mediated by processes that can function independently of one another." (Schacter, p. 352) Each memory system has its own unique encoding system. The same memory may be encoded in different ways and stored in different parts of your brain.

What you experience as muscle sensation can be recalled as muscle memory. Muscle (body) memory in based in the neuromuscular pattern generators. Muscle memory manages my fingers at this keyboard as I write. The symbolic (visualized) memory system is based in your right brain. Symbolic memory is important because it is truthful and less subject to repression than verbal memory. Verbal memory is based in your left brain and is valuable for its riches of association. Emotion is also encoded in memory. To completely recall a memory, your brain must retrieve and reassemble three components: the visual images, the sound/words from the scene, and the associated emotion.

Neural Patterns of Lowered Resistance

Memory is a pattern of lowered resistance across a multitude of neural synapses, a storage system for data established in patterns of reduced electrical resistance. The activity which created it is over. The memory remains as a potential electronic pathway because of the lowered resistance. Habit and memory are identical in this way. Behavior becomes conditioned habit because movement of electrons in their semiconducting lattices "permanently changes the materials' characteristics so as to make the same electrical responses easier in the future." (Becker, The Body Electric, p. 257) The connections (synapses) are vital. Weakened connections result in an irretrievable memory. Strong connections cause a powerful memory that is easily remembered.

In a computer's memory, a single word is stored in a particular place. If erased, it is gone forever, leaving other data unaltered. Human memory is different. In the brain the rule is not one neuron, one memory. Instead, any single memory is spread out in "a vast neuronal net." (Ibid., p. 48) The death of one neuron does not cause the loss of any single item of memory, because data is stored across a series of neurons. The death of a brain cell just causes a little static in the system.

Each memory input alters an entire matrix of neurons. The data storage is dynamic (active) rather that static (fixed). It is ever shifting as new data comes in and affects the old. Imagine ripples of water on the surface of a pond into which a stone has been thrown--and then another, and another. Each stone creates waves. One ripple-wave pushes the next ripple-wave and the next pushes the next, and so on. Or, imagine a new chicken climbing onto the roost to sleep. All the others are awakened for a moment, are jostled, and have to shift a little to accommodate the newcomer. That is how you add a new piece of information to your brain storage. Each new datum slightly shifts the position of the previous data .

Because memory is spread out over so many neurons, repressing a piece of information by suggested amnesia has a broad impact on the subject's mind. Recovering a memory (or confabulating it) also impacts the entire personality.

Diphasic Act of Remembering

Remembering is a diphasic (two-step) mental act. The retrieval process begins with an intention to remember. The intent to retrieve information out of your long-term memory storage may be conscious or unconscious. Intent is the "go-to" cue. There must also be a "place" cue to specify what "object" to remember. Remembering starts with the intent and ends with the content. Remembering involves both how we remember, and what we remember, but the two aspects are simultaneous rather than consecutive. Then you are back there: reliving the taste of Mom's best cooking one family feast day, so many years ago.

Retrieval—Retrieval is an act of willed remembering. Intent to remember sends current into the neurons of the cerebral cortex. Those electric pulses sent from the location of intent-to-remember stimulate the electronic matrix that contains the memory.

Sometimes, you want to remember, but you cannot. Certain things make it difficult to retrieve a memory. After consolidation, the memory stays in your permanent storage. It is there, but you may have difficulty retrieving it to consciousness.[1]

Failure to retrieve a memory may be caused by resistance, a blocking of the retrieval impulse. The system then fails to channel electric signals into the appropriate synapse network, or the wanted memory does not get retrieved because of a breakdown at some other point in the process. The blocking may be caused by a natural failure (such as Alzheimer's disease), a self-imposed one (such as a traumatic amnesia), or a suggested one (such as hypnotic amnesia).

Memories Are Associated and Can Be Cued—A computer does not make associations unless programmed to do so in a search (or unless it is a biocomputer using a neural net). In the living brain, however, similar data are grouped in storage. They associate by neural link-ups and can affect each other's encoding and retrieval. We have "a highly efficient filing system in the brain, which allows related experiences to be classed together and then cross-indexed." (Maya Pines, 1973, p. 166). The more associations (index words) we have for a piece of information in our memory, the more easily we can remember it.

> ...neurons responding to a certain face might be connected to ones expressing the name of the person whose face it is and to others for her voice, memories involving her and so on...Meaning derives from the linkages among these representations with others spread throughout the cortical system in a vast associational network, similar to a dictionary or a relational database. The more diverse these connections, the richer the meaning. (Crick & Koch, Scientific American, Dec. 1995, p. 85)

You remember either by recall or recognition. Recall is when you intend to remember it and then do so, a simple act of memory retrieval. Recognition is when you pick it out of a lineup. It's the difference between an essay test and a multiple choice test. It's the difference between drawing a picture of the holdup man and picking him out of a lineup.

We retrieve (recall) information that is catalogued in our left brain (verbal) memory by starting with an index word (cue word), or other verbal clue. The index word leads through a chain of associations to the memory. If you cannot remember a word, odds are good that you could remember what letter it starts with, or how many syllables are in it. That is how your brain files verbal data.

---

[1] A Soviet scientist, I.I. Korotkin, specialized in the physiology of trance. There are numerous translations of articles by him mentioned in the research literature, such as: "On the Physiological Mechanism of Inhibitory Action on Stimuli Inhibited by Hypnotic Suggestions." If a certain memory circuit is inhibited because of suggested amnesia, you can not recall that memory because the neurons that hold its coding will not accept excitation. They will not perform the retrieval function.

Views on Memory Validity Vary

Researchers on memory hold varying points of view on the nature and validity of memories. One extreme end of the spectrum of memory specialists thinks that memory is, moment by moment, reconstructed to suit one's immediate purposes. The other extreme believes that "autobiographical memory is highly factual--almost photographic." (Kovnat, pp. 9-13) Kovnat recalled a conversation with William Brewer, a prominent academician:

> Barclay and Neisser have taken a relatively strong position that memories are distorted. On the other hand, I came out with a rather large data set that these memories are actually closer to being correct. It looks to me as if there will eventually be some sort of compromise between the idea that these memories are like highly accurate Polaroid snapshots of your life and the idea that memories are so dramatically reworked. It's like fact versus fiction; the truth may lie somewhere in the middle. (Ibid.)

Memory can get foggy. I recently discovered that my birthday is January 19, not January 18. On the other hand, I took comfort in noticing that I was only one day off . The Welsh poet, Dylan Thomas, confessed to a similar failing of memory:

> One Christmas was so much like another...that I can never remember whether it snowed for six days and six nights when I was twelve or whether it snowed for twelve days and twelve nights when I was six. (Thomas, A Child's Christmas in Wales)

Nevertheless, he was undoubtedly accurate about having once been a child, having celebrated Christmases, and that a prolonged snowstorm occurred one Christmas season in Wales when he was either six or twelve.

8) AMNESIA

> Unreasonable commands...have no prospect of being carried out unless there is an amnesia which protects them from the criticism of a clear consciousness....The degree of susceptibility to profound hypnosis customarily increases when the hypnosis is repeated...until finally, after repeated hypnoses, the condition is attained in which the trained medium will carry out even the most idiotic orders.
>
> - Schilder and Kauders, pp. 5-7

Memory is the mental function of storing, organizing, and recovering information. Using memory, we acquire, retain, and access our vast reservoir of personal experience and learned data. Memory can be deeply and tragically affected by suggestion.

> ...in this war situation...There must be no leakage, no talking outside the classroom. So the operator now removes from the subject all [conscious] knowledge that he has ever been hypnotized. This is quite simple, again by the use of suggestion in the trance. We tell the subject in hypnotism that on awakening he will have no remembrance of ever having been hypnotized, that if questioned, he will insist he knows nothing about hypnotism and has never been a subject. (Estabrooks, p. 196)

Amnesia is loss of ability to retrieve a memory.

The hypnotic suggestion that makes a subject most likely to carry out orders contrary to their self-interest is amnesia. The most important element in a case of abusive hypnosis is amnesia. The biggest roadblock to uncovering a crime of criminal hypnosis is amnesia. Amnesia is, therefore, the central problem of a survivor of abusive hypnosis. It is central to the operator's setup, central to the years of secret life hidden under the consciously known one, central to the struggle to escape and heal.

Memory can never be completely enslaved, however, because the mind is so vast. The potential number of neural hookups is virtually infinite. Memory's truth and freedom find refuge and comeback resources in that infinite matrix. They always have a chance of circumventing repressive blocks and finding another route to consciousness.

Hypnotic Phenomena That Affect Memory

Suggested Amnesia—Suggested amnesia causes the specified memories to be irretrievable from LTM.

Confabulation—Suggestion, overt or covert, or spontaneous self-suggestion causes a person in a state of lowered consciousness (trance) to fabricate a false memory.

Hypermnesia—Suggestion causes previously unobtainable memory to be recovered.

Regression—When suggestion causes memory to be recovered by retrieving and reliving old memories.

A psychology textbook says "...it is normal for the hypnotized subject to recall everything that went on under hypnosis." (Wortman, Loftus, and Marshall, 1981) They cite "Barber, 1975" as source. That statement is only true, however, if the subject is in a light to medium (not somnambulistic) depth, and if that subject's unconscious has not accepted an amnesia suggestion.

Three-hundred years of hypnosis research have established that two types of amnesia are associated with trance experience:

General Categories of Amnesia

Barbizet, a French neuropsychiatrist and expert on memory, divided the amnesias into two basic categories: 1) physical (functional) ones, due to injury or disease in the brain tissue, and 2) affective ones. Some later researchers have listed three basic types: 1) normal forgetting; 2) functional amnesia; and 3) affective amnesia.

Normal Forgetting—Everybody has occasional natural amnesias. When you cannot remember where you left something, or the last few miles you drove, you are experiencing a natural, passive forgetting.

Functional Amnesia—In functional amnesia, the normal functioning of neurons, for some reason, has been disrupted. Functional amnesia can be caused by a) mechanical interference with the consolidation process, such as by electroshock or concussion or b) gross organic brain damage, as from brain surgery or Alzheimer's.

Affective Amnesia—Affective amnesia is an active forgetting. Your unconscious has deliberately reorganized your memories to create an inability to retrieve the target data from your long- term memory. Any amnesia that is not functional is an affective amnesia, so natural forgetting and spontaneous amnesias fit here too. The brain structure is undamaged. The memory is in long-term storage, but the retrieval system won't obey. It will not complete the act of remembering. Therefore, you do not make the effort, or you do not sustain the effort to remember. Affective amnesia can be caused by a natural emotional trauma that causes unconscious repression, or by suggestion.[1] dissociation amnesia and suggested amnesia.

Dissociation Amnesia

Dissociation amnesia is a totally different amnesia from suggested amnesia, though both are associated with hypnosis. It may be present for some (or all) of the trance even if there is no suggested amnesia. In light hypnosis, you usually remember everything. In a deeper stage, you may remember some things, and have dissociation amnesia for others. In the very deepest state, there is the greatest potential of dissociation amnesia.

In dissociation amnesia, you are not told to forget. You just do. It is a spontaneous, natural result of being in a very deep trance. However, the deeper you are, the more responsive you are to suggestion. If told you will remember all that happens, you will do that.

The cause of dissociation amnesia is probably the disconnection of your conscious mind. It tends to take with it the remembering function when it goes off-line.

> ...hypnotic behavior does not seem to occupy a proper place in the subject's memory. He disclaims recollection of recent and often very complicated actions [done in trance] which in the ordinary way he seems to have every reason to remember. (White in Moss, p. 123)

Puysegur first identified dissociation amnesia in trance subjects. After that, most old-time hypnotists and some modern hypnotists have used the appearance of this spontaneous amnesia as a defining marker for somnambulist depth of trance. All the older analyses of stages of hypnotic depth included dissociation amnesia as part, or all, of the defined crossover to somnambulism.

Spontaneous Amnesias

Spontaneous amnesia is an affective amnesia that arises, not from hypnosis, but from > ...an unconscious refusal by the subject to accept

---

[1] Natural dissociation that happens in deep trance gets filed here too, but probably should have a category of its own.

> a part of his biography. But these memories, which are inaccessible to the consciousness, are not forgotten but repressed... (Barbizet, p. 135).

Spontaneous amnesia is most likely to happen under conditions of severe emotional stress. During World War II, one study of "shell shock" cases found that 144 out of 1,000 consecutive admissions, or about 15%, involved temporary losses of memory:

> Such loss of memory is often a simple inhibitory response of the brain to overwhelming stresses it cannot deal with by any other means. (Sargant, Battle for the Mind, p. 57)

A college professor developed a "euphoric state of amnesia," but it turned out she had repressed a series of very bad recent experiences including "the breakup of her marriage and the sudden death of her mother before her eyes. (Loftus, Memory, p. 71) Loftus concluded that "After such an enormously stressful experience, many individuals wish to forget...and often their wish is granted." (Ibid., p. 73)

Suggested Amnesia

This amnesia is caused by a suggested repression of the brain's normal memory retrieval function. A hypnotist's suggestion, "You will not remember," seeks to trigger the same physiological repression of synaptic action as in spontaneous amnesia. Warrington and Weiskrantz (1982) studied hypnotically-suggested amnesia. They learned that the memories repressed by suggested amnesia remain in long-term memory just as in natural repression. The breakdown is, again, like natural repression in the retrieval process. Repressed memories are in long-term storage but no longer can be retrieved because the retrieval function does not work when applied.

Because of the fine precision with which words communicate, suggested amnesia can affect anything in a subject's memory, and in any way. You can be told to forget only your name. Or only your friend's name. Or you can be told not to remember anything that ever happened under trance, including its induction and your awakening from it. The will of the hypnotist, inserted at your unconscious level, overrules your conscious effort to remember. The words are stimuli intended to directly and mechanically elicit the wanted responses from an unconscious-- Pavlov's second signal system.

You may know that you know, but you're unable to remember. You may remember, but be unable to communicate that remembering. You may have a sense of remembering but feel an active reluctance to complete the act of remembering. Or, you may be consciously unaware there is anything to remember.

> Lindner: Now, Harold, I want you just to sleep, sleep deeply, a deep refreshing sleep. When you awaken you will have forgotten all the things you have told me; forgotten everything. You are forgetting now. You have forgotten already. Have you told me anything, Harold?
>
> Harold: ...No--I don't--I forget--I...
>
> Lindner: That's right. You have forgotten. And when you wake up you will tell me that you have had a good rest, that you are feeling fine for having had a good sleep. You will not recall that you have told me anything at all. Now you will awaken. One--two--three..."
>
> Harold: Oh, I must have...I've been asleep. I had a good sleep... (Lindner, Rebel Without a Cause, p. 245)

A military hypnotist suggested combining dissociation amnesia with suggested amnesia: "Suggestions of amnesia would then simply reinforce this tendency [dissociation amnesia] which already exists in the nature of the process. (Christenson, p. 51)

Fugue

A fugue is a spontaneous, complete dissociation. Persons with split personality are in fugue when being an alternate persona. The original personality is amnesic for the fugue period. M.H. Erickson called such a trance an example of posthypnotic behavior which erupts from the unconscious up "into the conscious stream of activity and fails to become an integral part of that activity" ("Nature of Posthypnotic Behavior")—unless the subject later manages, or is enabled, to remember.

Resistance to Remembering

When you are blocked from remembering by an affective amnesia, the problem is called resistance. The resistance exists either because of natural or learned scruples or feelings, or because of hypnotic blocks. It's "resistance" when you say, "I don't seem to be able to think of anything." When you try to visualize something, but all you "see" is thick fog, that's resistance visualized.

R. W. White suggested amnesia to a group of hypnotized experimental subjects. After awakening them, he asked what they could remember of the trance. Here are the reasons (rationalizations) those subjects gave for the inner resistance which prevented them from remembering what happened in the trance:

a) I feel that if I thought hard enough I could remember, but I just can't get down to business.

b) I haven't any inclination to go back over it.

c) Something is holding back my memory.

d) My mind doesn't want to think.

e) ...I get as far as the eye suggestion and then my thoughts go off into something else.

f) I do remember but I can't say, I can't think of the word...(Later) I could remember it without being able to say it....I partly knew and partly didn't. (R. W. White, A Preface to the Theory of Hypnotism)

The subjects were all trying to say the same thing: their memory of what happened in the trance exists, but the brain's information-retrieval system is not cooperating. They have the information, but their unconscious is refusing to carry out the mental act of retrieving it. Their conscious will cannot overcome their unconscious acceptance of the suggestion not to remember. They cannot make the effort, or cannot maintain the effort. The will of the hypnotist, inserted at their unconscious level, is overruling their own conscious effort to remember. Because the suggestion blocking retrieval is covered by amnesia, their conscious mind is unable to access and change it.

Testing Amnesia

Modern susceptibility scales include suggested amnesia as one measure of depth, or susceptibility. The Barber Suggestibility Scale uses posthypnotic amnesia for one scored test item. In the test for "recall amnesia" in the Standard Hypnotic Susceptibility Scale, Forms A and B (Weitzenhoffer & Hilgard, 1959), the hypnotized person is told:

> ...you will probably have the impression that you have slept because you will have difficulty in remembering all the things I have told you and all the things that you did or felt. In fact, you will find it to be so much of an effort to recall any of these things that you will have no wish to do so. It will be much easier simply to forget everything until I tell you that you can remember. You will remember nothing of what has happened until I say to you: 'Now you can remember everything!" You will not remember anything until then.

After testing is finished, the subject is wakened from trance. The tester asks what was remembered starting with the hypnotist's request that he focus his eyes on the "target." Score is based on how many things the subject managed to remember despite the amnesia suggestions. A score of three, or fewer, rates the subject as "passed amnesia." (Afterwards, the tester may give a posthypnotic cue to drop the amnesia wall: "Now you can remember everything!")

In some other susceptibility testing systems, if the subject remembers most, or all, despite the suggestion, it's no amnesia. If the subject remembers some, but not all, he shows partial amnesia. If the subject remembers nothing at all, there's complete amnesia.

Artificial Multiple Personality

It is by remembering that we integrate experience. If we can't remember something, we can't integrate it. The experience remains dissociated.

> The normal act of recalling memories is a result of the association of ideas. If there is a failure of the power to recall events which normally should be remembered, this is "dissociation"--an interruption or repression of the memory. Amnesia is therefore an essential element...[in the development of a multiple personality] (LeCron & Bordeaux, pp. 143-144

Some experimental hypnotists have called systematic hypnotic training, including suggested amnesia and designated reinduction and exit cues, the artificial creation of multiple personality. The subject is given standing instructions not to remember all trance events. He instantly enters deep trance as a result of a posthypnotic induction cue. He leaves it at another cue. Under those conditions, all his trance events will resemble fugue. He is an artificially-created split personality. He has (suggested) chronic, systematic amnesia for a certain system of ideas and events in his life.

If the subject's entry to trance is fast and smooth, and if displacement of the conscious awareness includes instant transition to an amnesic status--then the mental machinery enabling the trance induction has become an unconscious reflex. Consciously willed change of this condition is difficult.

Amnesia Blocks Your Feedback System—Your conscious mind chooses your goals and attitudes. Your unconscious carries them out. Your conscious mind evaluates any extraordinary results of your behavior. That's the feedback process. Based on feedback, you correspondingly adjust the instructions to your unconscious. You use feedback in everyday life to improve your mental programming. If you drive too fast and nearly have an accident at a sharp curve, you will instruct yourself to take that stretch slower the next time. You changed your unconscious behavior as a result of feedback.

Accurate awareness of what you did, and why you did it, and what happened as a result of doing it—feedback—makes you a self-governing person. If you can't remember the event because of natural or suggested amnesia, you have no feedback. You can't correct your programming if you don't know the real reason why you did something. Problem programming rooted in forgotten events is a cause of neurosis.

A hypnotist can artificially create neurosis by suggesting mental conflict plus amnesia for the suggested conflict. The setup tends to be permanent and powerful because amnesia removes the mental implants from the subject's conscious awareness. Normal cleanup and adjustment action of the brain's feedback function is blocked. Systematic, controlled amnesia has always been of great interest to mind-controllers.

> ...when a posthypnotic compulsion is performed with the awareness that it is being performed (even though the suggestion to perform it is forgotten), the feedback from the unusual behavior tends to inhibit its continuation. (E. R. Hilgard, Divided Consciousness, p. 142)

If you hear yourself giving a bizarre response, completely out of context, over and over, and you know you are a hypnotic subject who has been given a posthypnotic suggestion for that response, then you have feedback. You will then struggle to repress that response or try to avoid any situation that cues the inappropriate, unwanted behavior.

If, every time somebody says "Hi," you hear yourself answering "February," you will answer "February" less and less, as the trials go on. If you notice you are giving every spare cent to adult children instead of paying your old bills, you will find a way to evade that obviously inappropriate impulse. If you do not know that you are a hypnotic subject, however, and if you do not notice yourself saying "February," because you have a posthypnotic suggestion for selective deafness, or selective amnesia, then you will give that response forever.

9) Regression

Unfortunately many investigators of "hypnotic regression" have accepted as valid that type of "regression" which is based upon current conceptions of the past; and they have not gone on to the type of true regression in which the hypnotic situation itself ceases, and the subject is plunged directly into the chronological past.

- Erickson & Kubie quoted in Wolberg, Hypnoanalysis, p. 291

To regain the power to have a self-governing, self-correcting mind, a victim of suggested (or spontaneous) amnesia needs to go back into trance with a good-guy helper and access and reprogram the amnestic material. That process is regression.

There are two types of suggested regression: capacity regression, and memory regression. Capacity and/or memory regression may be spontaneous as with Candy, or suggested as with Palle, Mrs. E, and Zebediah.

☞ For more on capacity regression, see Operation Often.

Meanings of "Regression"

In the field of psychology, the word regression has several different meanings:

- When you have a new baby, the previous one tends to temporarily regress. It returns to a younger level of functioning.
- When a person becomes hypnotized, they shift toward more primitive primary process thinking and toward attributing parental qualities to the hypnotist. Psychoanalytically oriented hypnotists call that regression.
- When a person, in trance, acts a younger age, spontaneously or because he has been instructed to act a younger age, that is capacity regression (also called primitivation).
- When a person in trance is told to go back in time, in order to remember, or relive, what happened at a younger age, that is regression for the purpose of recovering a memory.

Three Types of Memory Regression

Memory regression happens in one of three basic styles, listed here from the least to the most reliable: 1) remembering, 2) reenacting, and 3) revivification.

Remembering—When remembering, the memory is viewed from the subject's present age and described in the past tense. Hypnosis doesn't have to be deep for this type of regression. You're in a dual role, aware of the present, but also connected to the past. You are conscious, but perhaps with a mental door open to unconscious material.

Reenacting—When reenacting you are "back there," at the time, role-playing the scene. A subject regressed back to childhood may speak like a child, in a child's tones, with a child's grammar, vocabulary, and reactions. Reenacting tends to happen under light trance. (Deep trance regression tends to elicit revivification.) Reenacting is > ..."regression" in terms of what the subject as an adult believes, understands, remembers or imagines about that earlier period of his life. In this form of "regression" the subject's behavior will be a half-conscious dramatization of his present understanding of that previous time, and he will behave as he believes would be suitable for him as a child of the suggested age level. (Erickson and Kubie, quoted in Wolberg, p. 291)

Revivification (Reliving)—The most authentic and powerful memory regression type, the one associated with deepest trance, is revivification. Revivification is not based on current memories, recollections, or reconstructions. The present and all subsequent life and experience are blotted out during this type of hypnotic event. The memory tape plays. The subject relives the experience.

Revivification is very different in subjective experience, and objective significance, from reenactment. The reliving of revivification is compelling, vivid, and experienced as "now." The subject talks about his memories in the present tense both during, and after, the experience. During the reliving, associated capacity regression may reproduce patterns of physiological behavior associated with that earlier period of life.

Regression Therapy

Repressed painful experiences can cause neurotic symptoms. If that person remembers the original event, relives it, and feels the formerly hidden emotion (thus releasing, integrating, and dealing with it), the symptoms usually will disappear. The usefulness of exposing old memories to the light of day is its power to produce personal change.

A claustrophobia, for example, might be caused by a young child's experience of having been shut in a dark closet as punishment. If the event is not consciously remembered, the unconscious retains the attitude toward that memory that it held when it first happened. A forgotten memory from age five remains networked in your unconscious programming with the emotions which were attached to it at age five. As we grow older, however, we acquire perspective. What terrified a five-year-old is likely to seem less frightening to an adult.

The Cases of Lucie and Marie—Pierre Janet pioneered regression therapy in the late 1800s. Lucie was a nineteen-year-old woman who suffered from unexplained episodes of terror. By hypnotizing her, and having her do automatic writing, Janet learned that the cause of the terror episodes was an incident that happened when Lucie was seven. Two men had hidden behind a curtain and deliberately frightened her. Janet was able to identify how the symptom had resulted from that particular memory and also to cure her.

He further explored regression hypnotherapy with another nineteen-year-old patient, Marie. She seemed blind in the left eye. However, when he regressed her to age five, that eye suddenly saw normally. He asked her to relive various events from age six and discovered the origin of her hysterical blindness. He implanted a revised memory, rewriting a portion of her personal history. That eliminated the problem. Her unconscious mind accepted the comforting lie. She regained vision.

The Case of Mrs. S.—Mrs. S was a psychiatric social worker who always felt strong fear when she had to go into a hospital for any reason. She was also phobic of any man's bare, hairy arms—and of knives. She had occasional, inexplicable nightmares and asthma attacks. Other than that, she was healthy, normal psychologically, and functioned well at work.

She wanted to find the cause of her problems, but could not afford therapy. She began to read Horney's book on remembering, Self Analysis, every night at bedtime. She did the book's exercises every night, just before going to sleep. One night, she realized that a classic repressed traumatic event might be the cause of her phobias. She began searching her memories, starting at age fourteen. She went back and farther back, reviewing one emotional episode after another, trying to remember any trauma that might be the basis of her phobias. When she got to age five, she suddenly remembered—with startling clarity—a previously forgotten event. That event was not the answer, but it was a mental exercise toward that end. The clarity was because she was now in a self-induced deep trance. Then, suddenly,

> ...she seemed to be lying on a table, clothed in a white gown and under brilliant lights. She could see a man standing beside her holding a small knife. Above her head was a vague, threatening object which was settling down over her face. Terror-stricken, she struggled to rise, but two hairy arms seized her and roughly forced her back. She continued to struggle and was grasped violently and shaken; then a hand slapped her sharply and repeatedly. The object came down over her face, smothering her. At this point she began to scream, waking her husband. She was in extreme panic, trembling and sobbing, and he had great difficulty quieting her. (LeCron, The Complete Guide to Hypnosis, pp. 171-172)

In self-analysis, Mrs. S. had sought revivification of that memory, and she had achieved it. She poured out the cathartic, healing emotions to her husband. The next day, she asked her mother to explain. Her mother told her

> ...that, at the age of 16 months, a mastoidectomy had been performed on her and that she had been very sick afterward, with severe shock complications. Two of the nurses at the hospital had informed the mother of the brutality displayed toward the child by the anesthetist, and they had resigned in protest. For some time the child had experienced nightmares and had been emotionally disturbed. Following the operation, her first attacks of asthma had been manifested. (Ibid.)

Her mother's memory had corroborated Mrs. S's deep trance reliving of that childhood memory. It was regression, not confabulation. After that, hairy arms became bearable to Mrs. S. Her knife and hospital phobias completely vanished. She never had another asthma attack.

Case of the Asthmatic Man—While lecturing on hypnosis to a group of doctors, Professor LeCron recruited a man as a demonstration subject, hypnotized him, developed deep trance, and regressed him to

> ...his third birthday. The subject began to gasp for breath, wheezing violently, coughing, and choking. His face and neck became markedly flushed, and he displayed signs of acute distress. It was obvious to all that he was undergoing an attack of asthma. One of the physicians present made a quick stethoscopic examination and reported rales present, with a high rate of pulse. (Ibid., p. 169)

LeCron brought the subject back to his present age and woke him from hypnosis. The asthma attack immediately stopped. Next day, the subject contacted his mother and asked what she remembered about his third birthday. She said that he had a bad attack of asthma that day.

Regression: True or False?

Recently published psychology textbooks deny the validity of any regression phenomena. They report research which implies failure in most age and capacity regression experiments. They say that questioning under hypnosis retrieves more data, but that a greater percentage of the data will be false. That is correct only if the experiment involves what Dr. Reiter would have considered too light a trance, inadequate hypnotic training, leading questions, suggestive trance context, and no safeguards against the subject straying from the truth such as ideomotor signals, urgings to tell only the truth, and threats against falsehood.

Actually, over the nearly three hundred years of scientific hypnosis research from Puysegur to the present, dozens of European and American hypnosis researchers established both that regression is real and that confabulation--now also called false memory syndrome--is real. The truth lies between the two convenient extremes of accepting all claims, or rejecting all claims.

> Those who believe that age regression can be actual usually note that it often is not complete; that frequently it is only partial, and sometimes the investigator does obtain only a kind of acting. They feel that regression may or may not be true, depending upon the hypnotizability of the subject and the skill of the hypnotist. (John G. Watkins, Introduction to LeCron, *A Study of Age Regression under Hypnosis, p. 153)

To tell the difference between confabulation and genuine regression is a problem fit for Solomon. Or an investigative hypnotist such as Dr. Reiter. There is no absolute guarantee against fabrication or confabulation, even when working with a credentialed person. The credentialed person may intentionally, or unintentionally, lead the subject into confabulation. The subject's:

> ...desire to comply, both in and out of the formal trance, is such that they may convincingly invent information in an effort to give the hypnotist what he seems to want. They can even deceive themselves. Thus, interviews utilizing hypnotic age regression for the purpose of uncovering information must be performed carefully and dispassionately. Further, external corroborating evidence is crucial for verification of material produced in a regression study. (Spiegel, Foreword to Bain, p. xi)

I wish I could provide you (and me) with a five-minute litmus test which would determine, with 99.9 % accuracy, whether a particular memory obtained in deep trance is true or not. I can't do that. Nobody can. The bottom line on memories recovered under regression is that they may, or may not, be true. If you have corroborative direct memories (memories obtained in normal, rather than trance, consciousness) or other objective evidence, then you have the comfort of proof. Without that proof, it can not be simple and sure. It depends--on subject, circumstances, hypnotist, depth, and the technique used.

It may be hard to sort out true regression from confabulation. Confabulation exists. True recovery of previously amnestic memory in trance regression also exists.

10) Confabulation

An epidemic of false accusations is occurring in which adult children are accusing their parents of horrendous acts of sexual abuse, including incest and satanic ritual abuse.

- Goldstein and Farmer, Confabulations, p. 1

A person who confabulates has produced fantasy and mistaken it for factual truth. There is always a risk of confabulation in trance—of creating a false reality, and then being burdened by belief in it. The tenth hypnotic phenomenon is confabulation.

Suggestibility Causes Confabulation

In general, people are susceptible to subtle, unconscious leadings. Trance is a mental state of even greater suggestibility to either conscious or unconscious leading by context or by operator, and deep trance is the most suggestible state of all. For example, patients with exactly the same symptoms discover quite different causes for those symptoms when in therapy with operators who are loyal to different therapeutic philosophies (or religions).

> Given a psychiatrist who is interested in birth trauma, or in faulty parental attitudes, most hys-

Four Paths to False "Knowing"

Here are four possible paths to a convincing, but false, "knowing," which can be generated by the unconscious:

1) Rationalization—Rationalizations are the lies that we tell ourselves when we do not know, or do not want to know, our real unconscious motive for an act.

2) False Memory Implanted by Suggestion—A suggested false memory is a lie told to our unconscious by somebody else. A hypnotist can alter a subject's memory and cause the subject to believe an untrue version of his personal history--even testify to that belief. It happened to Zebediah and to Palle. False memory has also been used as a technique to discredit persons who were trying to reveal hypno-abuse. A person's grip on direct memories is hard to dislodge, but it is relatively easy to implant additional confabulatory "facts" in a hypnoprogrammed mind. Since erasure of existing conscious knowledge is not feasible, but maneuvering the subject into a position of confabulation is feasible, the mind predator may do just that. The confabulated false memories are intended to destroy credibility for all the victim's statements.

3) Fabrication—Witnesses in a courtroom (and everyday people in everyday situations) tend to fill in forgotten details of remembered events, according to what they think probably happened. Those details may be different from what actually happened. People also may unconsciously revise old memories to adapt them to later circumstances or beliefs. And memories can evolve over the course of years of re-remembering and retelling. (That is why a written record, made within a few days of the event, is better evidence than what is recalled, years later.) Those are all varieties of fabrication.

4) Confabulation—A person in trance is highly suggestible. She may accept a hypnotist's suggestion, or a self-generated idea, or a context clue. When experiences or statements generated in a state of trance are felt by the subject to be true, but really are not, that is confabulation.

terical and suggestible patients will finally produce many examples of disturbing parental attitudes, and may even remember in startling detail some supposed highly traumatic birth experience. But given another psychiatrist who is interested in quite different matters, such as whether or not the patient is mother-fixated, or has been sexually assaulted by the father, the hysterical patient, because of his state of greatly increased suggestibility, will produce a quite different set of memories which fit that psychiatrist's explanation of the symptoms. Freud once made twelve consecutive patients remember and abreact what proved to be imaginary sexual assaults by the father, implanted by Freud's belief, at the time, that sexual assault by the father was the major cause of hysteria. Later he realized how wrong he had been...
(Sargant, The Mind Possessed, p. 56)

There are many reports of hypnotized persons remembering birth—even womb experiences. I doubt, however, that anybody could truly recall their moment of conception. But a person in deep trance can be led to "experience" that, and anything else, on this planet or off it. The hallucination will feel absolutely convincing, because that is how brains are wired. An operator can lead a person to experience a "past" life, or a "future" life, a "moment of conception," a "UFO abduction." Whatever--as long as the subject is capable of trance deep enough for hallucination.

Fake "alien" encounters[1], false womb experiences, phony excursions to "Atlantis," and "past lives" generated under deep trance by presuggestion, or by leading suggestions, change a person's assumptions about life, the universe, and everything. Confabulated incest memories, or "Satanic ritual abuse" memories, may result in terrible, unnecessary pain for families—even imprisonment of innocent persons.

---

1. There is significant hard evidence for the reality of some "alien" encounters. I once met a man with severe scars on his side. When he was a young man, a flying saucer had landed back of his house. His father ran away from it. He ran toward it—and was burned. Decades later, he now heads a California UFO reporting network—a phone line that the U. S. Air Force monitors. "Sometimes we phone in a fake landing eventt just to watch them scramble. They always show up." Aliens? My analysis is that some events are advanced U.S. aircraft. Others may be time-traveling (a theoretically-possible technology) tourists from the planet's future, genetically engineered future humans. That fits with the crop circle (year-dating) phenomena. Time will tell...

It Feels True

Confabulation, like any deep trance hallucination, feels truer than true. Many hypnotic experiments have "sent" hypnotic subjects to impossible times and places. A susceptible hypnotic subject always manages to come up with some plausible scenario--and then believes it was real! Psychologists have studied the responses of confabulators (hallucinators) to legal questioning, comparing them to the responses of people relying on regular memory. It is a phenomenon of trance that anybody who acquired their information in a trance state (whether she is a confabulator or a survivor of criminal hypnosis recovering amnesic memories), tends to be more confident and sincere-sounding as a witness than a person who is relying on direct memory.

> ...wheres other witnesses would hesitate when confronted with the facts of the investigation, hypnotized witnesses would hold their ground steadfastly and to an unshakeable degree. (Lawrence and Perry, Hypnosis, Will, and Memory, pp. 285-286)

False Knowing, But Real Emotion—A confabulator will feel profound and "appropriate" emotions. Those emotions will be experienced as completely real and valid. Doesn't that prove that the event actually happened?

No, it does not. You can feel excruciating shame, pain, anger, grief, or joy over something that was merely suggested to you, or that your unconscious generated while you were in a state of trance. Real emotions felt during the "experience," and still felt whenever recalling it, are not "proof." The emotional reaction to an experience a subject has confabulated--or been told under amnesic hypnosis to belive in—is identical in brain chemistry and subjective experience to the emotional response elicited by a revivified genuine memory. It is all brain coding. In the mind, it is all mind, whether true or false, imagination or reality. Real memory and false memory are both, in that sense, just imagination.

Even though you thought it, it may not be true. Even though your recall of it seems real, it may not be true. Even though it caused you to feel deep emotion, it may not be true.

Confabulation has been studied since the late 1800s. The Bridey Murphy case started the fashion of hypnotic "remembering" of past lives. This is now big business for certain hypnotherapists who specialize in generating them for customers. Reporters later discovered that Virginia, the woman who "remembered" an apparently convincing youth in Ireland, actually had lived, for five years, during her childhood and adolescence, across the street from an immigrant Irish family, the Corkells. She had a crush on John, one of their sons, was friends with their son Kevin, and--in her trance confabulation--adopted Mrs. Corkell's maiden name (Bridie Murphy) as her own. (Time, June 18, 1956; E.R. Hilgard, Divided Consciousness, p. 50) But that research came too late. Past life "regressions" under hypnosis were here.

Toleration of Confabulation

Why do therapists tolerate, even encourage, confabulations? It is a fact that—unless their specialty is forensic hypnosis—they usually do not care if the memories are true or not.

1) Money—It is good business. People who have no other reason to visit a hypnotist may visit to "remember" a past life. They pay $60 or $80 to the hypnotist for that visit, or more.

2) Abreaction Therapy—Some psychology textbooks now say it does not matter if a generated memory is true or not (the subject always feels like it is true), because any fact or fantasy, under trance, that generates emotion can be therapeutic. When a subject is in a state of emotion, he is more open to being reprogrammed by an operator. Also, any experience that generates emotion, even if confabulated, leaves the person feeling less stressed, and in apparently better psychological health.

> ...a falsely implanted memory might create a larger emotional discharge than the real, and induce the physiological effects needed for psychological relief. (Sargant, Battle for the Mind, p. 24).

So, hallucinations of battle on ancient Mars, or of your father abusing your pregnant mother, generate great emotion, which leaves the subject feeling psychologically renewed. That is how the human brain is wired. Experiencing profound emotion, for whatever reason, can temporarily relieve neurotic symptoms. It also increases the likelihood that the subject will accept other items on the operator's belief agenda.

3) Legal Protection—A public and legal attitude of toleration toward confabulation is also favored by the therapy community. It protects them from liability for sloppy "regressing" that actually pulls up confabulations from the subject's unconscious—which the subject then believes to be fact.

4) Return Business—Confabulation generates return business for the hypnotist, psychic, or whoever because, after any deep trance experience, the subject experiences a craving to revisit that rapport object and do it all again. Trance is a rush with addictive elements. It also implants a deep sense of importance for whatever happened to you in trance, whether true or false. Trance subjects bond with the hypnotist in rapport (regard, affection, and obedience). They speak enthusiastically of their experience to friends (other potential customers).

5) Reinforcing Group Belief—When a group of people share a belief, they naturally bond with each other. Any new recruit is warmly welcomed. He strengthens the group and renews their confidence in the shared convictions.

"Incest Memories"

Until the late 70s, there was little awareness of child sexual abuse and few resources for survivors of it. Then some women and men began talking about sexual abuse in their childhoods. Some of them had recovered the memory of that abuse years later. Books were then written about childhood sexual abuse. Some implied that if the thought occurs to you that it happened, it did. Support groups formed. A clinical specialty developed. Incest therapists often induced trance in their clients. (Any time one person talks alone with another in a mood of trust, it tends to lower consciousness.)

Soon thousands of therapists were leading clients to recall incest memories. Some suggestible persons--in settings where recovering repressed memories of child abuse was the norm, or was encouraged—"remembered" things that were not true. Some realized that later and retracted. But great pain had already been caused to them and the accused.

> The heartfelt and pathetic stories that parents have written about their experiences with alienated daughters have strong similarities. More than 500 such stories were documented between January and June, 1992...In all of these cases:
>
> 1. Adult children accused their parents of childhood sexual abuse.
>
> 2. In each case recollections of the abuse occurred in therapy.
>
> 3. The accusations were based on repressed memories uncovered in therapy.
>
> 4. The memories were all Decade-Delayed-Discoveries.
>
> 5. Many of the adult children participated in 12-Step Programs.
>
> 6. Many of the adult children read the book The Courage to Heal.
>
> 7. All of these adult children severed relationships with their parents and any family member who did not believe their stories.
>
> 8. The therapists refused all communication with the parents... (Goldstein and Farmer, Confabulations, p. 187)

Goldstein and Farmer's book describes cases thought to be confabulations. It includes interviews with therapists who clearly do not understand the ease with which a susceptible hypnotic subject can be unconsciously led to confabulate, and the emotional intensity and feeling of authenticity associated with any confabulated memory.

Relatives who had suffered the loss of a child's love because of false memories began to fight back against false memory syndrome. They networked, researched, publicized.

Social Issues Resources Series specializes in books on false incest memories. There is also a magazine called Issues in Child Abuse Accusations and a newsletter called The Retractor. All cover similar territory: confabulation in the incest area. Since 1992, the False Memory Syndrome Foundation, Philadelphia, PA, has provided information, networking, and names of lawyers who specialize in fighting false child abuse accusations. It also provides area phone numbers so you can receive emotional support from other parents who have gone through this.

However, the False Memory Syndrome Foundation may have an ulterior motive in its efforts to deny validity to memories acquired—or recovered—after some passage of time.

> ...FMSF has some on their Board of Advisors who may want to cover up their own work. One is Louis West, another is Martin Orne, one of the key MKULTRA researchers in hypnosis, and a third is Michael Persinger, who did research on the effects of electromagnetic radiation on the brain for a Pentagon weapons project.
>
> Regression therapy could threaten to reveal techniques the CIA may have secretly developed involving the use of hypnosis. (Daniel Brandt,"Mind Control and the Secret State," Prevailing Winds Magazine, Number 3, p. 73, NameBase NewsLine, #12, Jan-March 1996)

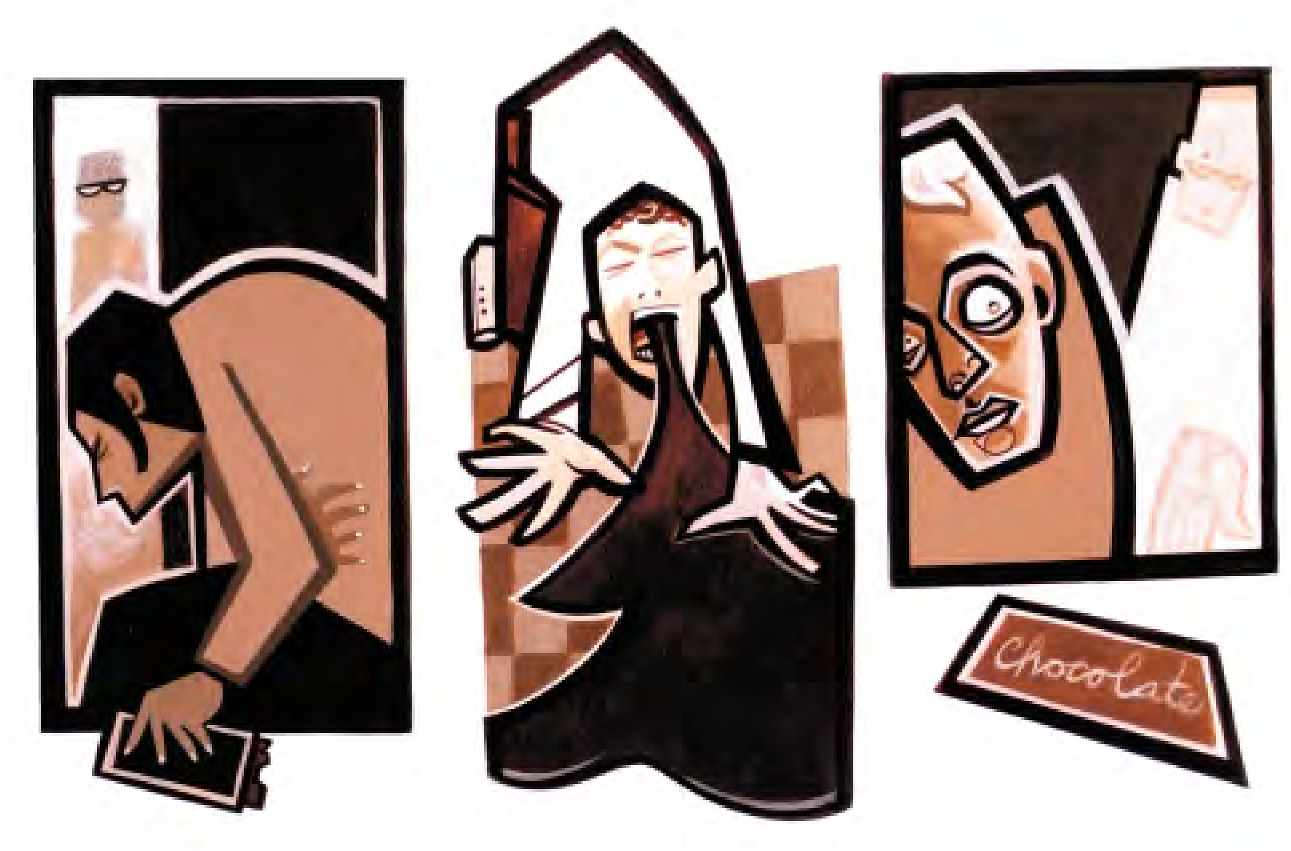
Confabulation can happen. If a person confabulates, then, rather than being relieved of harmful old misprogramming, she acquires harmful new misprogramming. It is not helpful to believe falsehoods about your past. People need to live as close to the truth as they can get.

Facts about confabulation, however, should not be allowed to obscure facts about memory regression. Unethical hypnosis also can happen. The possibility of memory recovery by means of regression is an important means to healing for the survivor and recovery of the case facts. Denial of that fact would be too convenient for hypno-abusers.



One Subject ate the candy, but then got indigestion. Another ate...then vomited. A third could not see the chocolate.

PART IV

Induction Methods

Visit with a Stage Hypnotist
First Inductions
Depth
Physiology of Trance
Type 1 Induction: Sensory Deprivation Shuts Down the Analyzer
Type 2 Induction: Excitation Overwhelms the Analyzer Type 3 Induction: Brain Syndrome
Type 4 Induction: Chemical, Electrical, and Biomagnetic (Psychic)

"She had on power-blue underpants."

Visit with a Stage Hypnotist

☑

Stage Hypnosis: "Fakery"?

☑

...the possibility of an obliteration of memory remains, not only in theory and in laboratory experiments, but also in practice. If this possibility is repeatedly denied, it is because the wish is father to the thought and because facts are ignored which cannot be easily disposed of.

Hammerschlag, Hypnotism and Crime, 1957

My friend Skip said, "I know that people under hypnosis will do things they wouldn't normally do. I remember back in college, a hypnotist came around, put on a show. He got volunteers from the audience, hypnotized them. He told them the temperature was going up, that they were hot, real hot. One girl stood up, unzipped her pants, and dropped them to her knees before he could stop her. She had on powder-blue underpants. I knew that girl. She wasn't the type to take off her clothes in front of two hundred people."

A hypnotist wrote of similar situations:

> ...by telling him that he is alone, that he feels very dirty and should take a shower, he will begin to undress and take off every garment unless the hypnotist intervenes at a crucial moment. Many unethical exhibitionists, whose skill surpasses their good taste, have delighted audiences by waiting until the subject is almost stripped before rousing him to a state of utter consternation and embarrassment! (Gindes, New Concepts of Hypnosis, p. 43)

One night, in 1987, I entered the door of Mingles, a tavern/pool hall near the University of Idaho campus in Moscow, Idaho. This evening of research would not be spent with the usual books and articles. I would be part of the audience watching an elderly, potbellied, gravel-voiced, comedian-with-a-gimmick do his hypnotist routine. It was the third show of his that I had watched in two days. I was getting to know his routine well.

In a deep, strong, pleasant voice, Bob told his audience, "The higher the level of intelligence, the better a subject you can be, if you wanna be. I'm a damn good subject and I'm damn proud of it and I've been up on over two dozen hypnotists' stages myself. And enjoyed the Hell out of it." (That is the bandwagon propaganda/advertising technique. You tell people that everybody else is doing it, and loves it. That suggests that they want to do it, and should expect to love it too.)

As soon as all the volunteers had arrived on stage, Bob culled out a couple of the less susceptible hypnotic subjects, sending them back to their seats in the audience. He said to the remaining subjects, "Now I'll want you standing just in front of your chairs, and concentrating on that light or just above it." The light was a single, unshaded, brightly-shining bulb. It hung from an extension cord at stage center just about two feet above the heads of the taller subjects. (Eye focus results in eyestrain and creates sensory deprivation that help induction along.

"After I've got you standing up concentrating on that light," Bob said, "I'm going to give you a suggestion for falling backwards. It's the same as a daydream. How you get into a daydream is imagination, so you must go into a hypnosis the same way. You will go into it instantaneously, and you'll feel like falling back or sitting down. Or maybe that light will change in some way. Whatever it is, don't even hesitate. Sit down. Close your eyes when you sit down and don't open them unless I tell you to."

(His mention of the harmless sounding "daydream" and "imagination" were presuggestions for the subjects to shift to right brain function. That part of the brain is a hypnosis center as well as the base of visual imagination. The suggestion that subjects would "go into it instantaneously" was training for efficient operator control, for instant induction on cue. The idea that the subject would "fall" was a presuggestion of helplessness. Gale's hint that "maybe the light will change in some way" presuggested a visual hallucination. His order to "close your eyes, and don't open them unless I tell you to" would, if obeyed, cause ongoing sensory deprivation which would nudge the process along even more of shutting down the subject's cortex. That is because the less sensory input you are processing, the less cortical activity you have—and the easier it is to slip into a trance state. That whole onslaught of detailed instructions was also, in and of itself, inductive, a technique called the pyramiding of instructions.)

The stage hypnotist's tone now switched from casual to very businesslike as he began to give another series of commands: "Stand up please. Stand in front of your chairs—heels together, toes apart in a 45 degree angle similar to mine, hands behind your back." (It did not really matter how they stood. What mattered to Gale was their beginning habit of obedience, precise, uncritical obedience to his every directive.) The seven prospective subjects stood up, positioned themselves as directed, and turned their faces toward the light.

"When you hit somnambulism, that's when that fantastic feeling comes over you, and it's just...good shit," Bob told them. It was a seductive presuggestion to go to the hypnotic depth which is characterized by maximum acceptance of any suggestion, even a negative hallucination, even of complete amnesia for all events of the trance. "Concentrate on the light," he said. "Tilt your head up a little bit. Listen to what I'm saying. Tilt your head up a little bit if it's not already. Take a deep breath."

Bob's voice now changed to a nearly monotonous tone. "Stay with my voice," he said. "And as you let it out [the breath], relax every muscle. Picture what I'm saying. And now, another deep breath. And, as you let it out, picture every muscle going loose, relaxed and comfortable. And now another deep breath. And as you let it out, if the light begins to blur, go out of focus, or to change in any way, it's a very natural phenomenon."

The hypnotist's deep voice became even deeper. His words emerged slowly, deliberately. (Both his tone and cadence reinforced the suggested lowering and slowing of the subjects' mental processes.) "Picture yourself falling backwards into your chair. Pulling you off balance, as if you're falling back. Pulling you back, pulling you back." (His speech was now somewhat incoherent. Confusion is another inductive technique. The suggestions to relax and to visualize were also inductive. And Gale was telling them to visualize loss of control, helplessness to resist his suggestion, "falling backwards.")

The hypnotist continued his induction patter for about five minutes. During that time, he rejected most of his candidates, rudely ordering them off the stage, one by one, when their unconscious submission did not measure up to his wishes. The two male volunteers who remained on the stage appeared to be in a deep trance state.

Bob said, "Picture in your mind, your right hand becoming light as a feather. It's floating upwards all by itself, lifting into the air. Floating upwards like a balloon filled with helium, lighter than air."

One man's right arm was up. The other's was not. Bob said to that person, "As I touch you on the arm, it will just float right up, floating up and lifting." He lightly touched the subject's arm. That touch is a deepening technique called anchoring. It works because a real touch in the midst of a suggested fantasy, under circumstances of sensory deprivation, tends to make the fantasy seem more real. The subject's arm floated up.

"And now many of them are floating up and lifting," Bob said.

I was struck by the deceit, implicit in his statement, to the two subjects who were sitting obediently with eyes closed, that "many" arms were floating. (A hypnotist is usually trying to displace the subject's will. He wants the subject to let the hypnotist's voice take over his brain's higher functions. He wants his voice to become a substitute link to, and interpreter of, his subject's reality. Very often, a hypnotist accomplishes that by persuading his subject's unconscious mind to accept lies.)

After Bob finished with his initial induction process, he was ready to begin the show. First, he regressed his subjects to age five and terrified them with a suggested "bogeyman." "Oh, my gosh, he's really got ahold of you now!" Bob warned them. The two men voiced childlike, frantic cries of fear. "Oh, it's not the bogeyman," Bob said in a surprised and reassuring tone. "It's your Daddy! Oh, he was worried about you and he came lookin'. Oh, give him a big hug!" The subjects smiled and pantomimed the hugging of their daddies. "Oh, I've got you suckered," Bob suddenly snickered. "It is the bogeyman!" The subjects' emotional state flipped back to terror. Gale then made the bogeyman disappear and restored the subjects to their real age.

Then he said, "Your penises are gone." (A negative hallucination.) The audience broke into peels of laughter at the subjects' obvious distress. "They're gone," Gale said, "and they've been replaced with vaginas." (A positive hallucination.) His subjects looked very disturbed. The audience thought it was hilarious. For a while, Bob continued this sequence of explicit hallucinations involving the subjects' sex organs. The audience guffawed at his subjects' varying expressions.

"And now you're going to realize everything that has been happening," Bob told the two young men. Their faces showed confused emotions.

Bob now addressed the audience directly, "Hypnosis is your mind power, and once you've learned how to use it, you don't need anyone else to activate it. Let me prove that to you. You picture the best feeling you've ever known. And, the instant you think of it, you snap your fingers as hard as you can. And that feeling will come over you—twenty to thirty times stronger than it ever did before.

"And, by the way, once you've experienced it that strong, it will be forever that strong, or stronger." One by one, isolated finger snappings are heard here and there in the audience.

"Don't take all night," Bob urged them. More finger snappings were heard. "When I count to three, he says, "it will be ten times stronger. One, two, three!" There were isolated bursts of laughter. "And when the audience claps, it'll be fifty times stronger!" There was strong applause and cheers from the audience.

(Gale had spoken to the audience as if they, too, were hypnotized, and had suggested that sensual hallucination. Many in his audience had obviously given trance depth obedience to the seductive commands. Indeed, it is well-known that hypnotically susceptible members of the audience of any hypnosis performance do also tend to enter trance. With some techniques, up to 90% of the audience may be hypnotized.)

"And now, on the count of three, you're going to remember all those fantastic feelings. One, two, and three!"

"Was that satisfactory?" Gale asked a sexy looking young woman in the audience? She nodded, looking embarrassed.

By means of that routine, Gale (or any observer) had an opportunity to identify potential somnambulists in the crowd. Gale had now given them, also, some beginning conditioning. He had also given them a strong, sensual, positive reinforcement for being hypnotized.

Gale now returned his attention to the two, still hypnotized, subjects sitting quietly on chairs on the stage. He put the two men through another series of vivid erotic hallucinations. The audience laughed at the resulting, visible, erections. "And, now, you're going to realize what's happening," Bob said. The subjects' faces displayed embarrassed, sheepish expressions. (They were now trained not to realize what was happening—unless he told them to do so. Gale was quickly and subtly conditioning them for automatism.)

"And SLEEP!" he suddenly yelled at them. Their heads dropped, chins on chests, eyes closed, the classic hypnotic posture, all sensuality swept away by the command.

"Suddenly you are beginning to hallucinate," Bob now told them in a low and menacing tone. "As you look out over the audience, all you see is weird creatures. Some of them are hysterically funny." The subjects pointed out toward the audience and giggled. "Others," Bob continued, "are just right down weird." The subjects again showed fear. The audience laughed.

"In the back of the room, you see one that is totally frightening. Scares the hell clear out of you." Bob continued describing a terrifying fantasy with erotic elements. I felt a prickle of cold fear myself at the menace in his tone and the bizarreness of his image. The subjects on stage looked horrified. Then Bob said that the threatening image was now moving steadily toward them.

One subject, with a panicked expression, bolted to his feet. He slowly stumbled backward, staring in terror at the hallucinated threat supposedly stalking him. He retreated to the far side of the stage. There was a pool table there. He glanced backward, obviously planning to crawl up onto the pool table. I wondered if he might get hurt.[1]

Bob adroitly headed off the problem: "You can't get on a pool table," he coolly stated, "there's crabs on 'em."

The young man instantly pulled back from that anticipated escape route. He stood terrified, trapped between the approaching horrific vision before him and the crabs on the pool table behind him. Bob pushed the hallucination to the absolute extreme, that of shocking contact with the visualized horror. Then he shouted, "And, now, you're going to realize what's happening!"

As the subjects recovered their composure to some extent, they managed to laugh with good-natured embarrassment. "On the count of three, I'm going to wake you up," Bob told them, "but you will still be in a hyperstate of suggestibility and everything I suggest will instantly happen." (He was training them for waking hypnosis—to be deeply hypnotized, absolutely suggestible, but acting normal and awake.)

Next, he suggested a hallucination that everybody in the audience was naked. The room was quiet as the audience watched the subjects staring at them. The subjects pointed out to each other various friends, commented on their imagined physical attributes, guffawed at the sea of nudes before them. (I remembered a friend's report of watching a stage hypnotist give that same suggestion to a group of subjects on stage. Most had reacted as Gale's two subjects had. However, one male subject, the moment the command was given, jumped up, ran off the stage, rushed out of the auditorium, and did not return.)

Bob now announced to his subjects, "Hell, you're naked, too. And the chair keeps playing with your testicles." Their expressions turned to terrible dismay. Their hands rushed to cover their privates. Their bodies wriggled in reaction to the supposed manipulations of the chair. "And now," Bob said, "you realize you've got your clothes on." The subjects responded with foolish grins and relieved expressions.

Just before waking up his subjects and ending the act, Bob Gale told them firmly, several times, that they would remember everything they had experienced. He also instructed that they could not again be hypnotized by anyone—unless they wanted to be. Those were good and ethical suggestions. The two subjects rejoined their friends in the audience.

His act was over. The pool hall lights brightened again. The audience stood up and wandered about—to the bar, to play pool, or out the door. The hypnotist lit a cigarette and left the stage. He walked back to the seat at the far end of the bar—the seat which he had occupied before the show. He ordered a drink.

Standing quietly to one side, mingling with the crowd, I watched him awhile. He sat alone, chain-smoking, drinking one glassful after another of something alcoholic. How ironic I thought: the master of mind control was obviously unable to master his own bad habits.

He still sat alone, staring grimly down at his drink. I worked up enough courage to walk over and stand at his right. There was no bar stool available on his right, but there was standing room there. "I want to interview you," I said. "I'm a writer."

"I don't give interviews," he snapped. "There are already too many books about hypnosis by people who aren't hypnotists, and they're mostly no good."

---

[1] A stage hypnotist suggested to the subject that

...he was in a swimming-pool and that the large basin of the pool itself lay in front of him. He climbed on to a chair and, in the belief that he could now dive head first into the water, fell head over heels onto the floor of the stage. (Hammerschlag, pp. 86-7)

"I actually know quite a bit about hypnosis," I said. "I've been interested in it for years. I'm impressed with the ethical way you conduct your act." He gave me a long, doubtful stare. I explained, "You insist that your subjects remember everything they experienced after you are done, and you tell them that they cannot be again hypnotized by anyone unless they want that to happen."

He relaxed a little.

I said, "I know it could be worse. You mentioned in one of your performances that you know a lot of other stage hypnotists. Are they all as ethical as you are? I mean, you know, and I know, that this constantly-promoted line that 'You cannot be made to do anything under hypnosis that you don't want to' is not true. People can be made to forget what they did under hypnosis, even that they were under hypnosis. They can be conditioned to instantly be rehypnotized any time. They can be trained to absolutely obey post-hypnotic suggestions and to never suspect their behavior comes from a source other than their own minds. A person could be turned into somebody's secret slave that way, and he or she would have no conscious knowledge of it. 'You will remember nothing,'" I intoned, imitating the flat-toned, slow-paced voice of a hypnotist.

"I could do that," Bob avowed with sudden grim enthusiasm as though needing to assure me of his professional prowess. "One main block, and then a strong oblique block, and then surround that with a hundred other minor blocks. She'd never remember. I could. But I wouldn't do that. I never have done that."

I silently pondered, for a moment, his choice of a sex for the theoretical victim who would "never remember." Then I asked, "Have you ever known of a case where another hypnotist did use the relationship created by a subject's trust to take advantage of her using this method?" I asked that, and then I held my breath.

"Yes."

I went back to breathing, but I did not say anything. I waited. And waited. And waited. Uncovering the truth was so important to me. I had to get him to volunteer more information. Bob finally broke the awkward silence. He said, "I know a psychiatrist who uses it that way."

"To get sex?"

"Yes," Gale replied.

"To get money?"

"Yes, both. The AMA won't do anything to regulate it. These guys are making too much money."[1] He sounded bitter.

---

[1] See Noel's case history in the Forensic Hypnosis section.

I wondered how much money small-time hypnotists like him, making the circuit of college-town night spots, earned. The audience at the pool hall this night had been thin. There must be temptations. "How about the stage hypnotists you know?" I asked. "Do they ever use the conditioning established on stage with their subjects for unethical purposes afterwards?"

"Yes," he said.

"About what percent of them do that, would you say?" I asked.

"About half."

I said, "I know that if a person's memories of what happened under hypnosis are suppressed by posthypnotic suggestion, that person can get their memories back by being hypnotized by another hypnotist and then being commanded to remember. But that would be difficult. It would take a lot of time."

Bob nodded.

"Would you be willing to do that for somebody?" I asked.

"If a person were in that situation, they should go to somebody with a Ph.D., somebody with training in psychology."

"How would that person help them?"

"He'd have to break"—Bob made a fierce karate-chop motion with his right hand—"through the blocks. Break them down one-by-one."

I left then. It was a hard subject for me to talk about. I thought about our conversation for a long time afterwards. I had a feeling that Bob Gale did not understand that the average clinical psychologist would not believe that the cases of unethical hypnosis, which he had just described, were possible. I also knew that neither academic nor clinical psychologists understand how sealing works, or how to fight through it. If a victim of predatory hypnosis went to a Ph.D., the doctor would probably diagnose paranoia instead of criminal hypnosis. If the predator knew that his subject was trying to get help from a psychologist, he might even covertly suggest an array of paranoia symptoms—to steer the diagnosis more surely that way.

Nevertheless, our brief conversation had thrilled me. It was the first time I had ever talked to a hypnotist who was both knowledgeable and truthful about unethical hypnosis. I had found the courage to ask questions, and he had given me truthful answers. It felt like one of the greatest days of my life.

STAGE HYPNOSIS: "FAKERY"?

> Stage hypnotists achieve fourth and fifth* [somnambulist] *level trances in their subjects very quickly, by an authoritative assertiveness that breaks down any resistance on the part of the subjects, who are usually volunteers from the audience, anxious to do whatever the performer wants. The majority of stage hypnotists are highly skilled at what they do....
>
> —Hughes, Hypnosis, p. 26

Hughes, writing above in a modern text for student hypnotists, stated the truth. Stage hypnotists normally do hypnotize their subjects. It is also true that, in some cases, stage hypnosis acts have involved elements of fakery. I have interviewed stage professionals who know, for a fact, cases in which certain stage hypnotists ensured their success by hiring actors and using other tricks to elicit performances that the audience assumed were real hypnosis.

One confusing factor is the long history of deceit in the way stage hypnotists represent their "acts." T. X. Barber, former stage hypnotist, Ph.D. "researcher," and expert mind manipulator, made a career of saying, among other things, that stage hypnosis is all fakery. He said that hypnotic phenomena result simply from the subjects' eagerness to display, and perform, and their pretending to be hypnotized by the stage hypnotist. Most basic psychology textbooks now repeat the Barberism that stage hypnotists do not really hypnotize their subjects.

The "great" Kreskin announces, "There is no such thing as hypnosis," each time he begins his show. Then people flock to him, because there is "no such thing as hypnosis," and there is "no such thing as real stage hypnosis," and there is no such thing as criminal hypnosis, so they feel absolutely safe. A young hypnotist asked McGill (who, like Barber, started out as a stage hypnotist, then got a Ph.D.) in his Journal of Hypnotism column why Kreskin always starts that way. McGill replied:

> ...it may remove some tendency of fear...thus making it possible to obtain more willing subjects on stage as volunteers. There is also the practical aspect involved in that some states and some cities have ordinances that do not allow public hypnotic performances. Denouncing hypnotism and terming it suggestion opens up territories where hypnotic shows are not allowed. A bit tricky but clever in its way. (McGill, J. of H., Mar. 1990, p. 30)

The lie reassures the audience and subjects, increasing suggestibility and protecting the performer from legal liability.

Nelson's catalog served the "mentalist" category of stage performers for years out of Columbus, Ohio. It offered a book titled Stage Hypnotism: A Complete Course in Pseudo and Real Stage Hypnotism, Covering Every Phase of Hypnotic Performance. The advertising declared that stage hypnotism is "a combination of Suggestion and 90% trickery." That disclaimer protects the industry from legal attack. The stage acts which the book details are real, however. Here are a few of the "tests" which that course on stage hypnotism taught:

> The Rigid or Great Rock Breaking Test [bridge phenomenon with rock broken on abdomen]; Scientific Bloodless Operation, placing four, five or six steel needles through various parts of the body [hypnotic anesthesia]...24 to 48 hour window sleep [prolonged hypnotic coma done on display]..."

Use of words like "trickery" and "fakery" reassure the tourists and local yokels. They protect the stage hypnotists from liability. Trickery and fakery certainly are involved, but not because hypnosis is not real. They are involved because the subject does not understand the physiology and technology of the induction process and the risks of accepting somnambulic conditioning. He, thus, may be led, by deceit, into a condition of greater and greater vulnerability.

A hypnotist, making the high school circuit, used the technique of calling volunteers onto stage and whispering to each one, "I didn't realize that I would be working with young people. It's against the law to hypnotize anybody under the age of 21. Will you just close your eyes and pretend to be hypnotized?" Each agreed. The students did not realize that the hypnotist had lied. There was no law prohibiting the hypnosis of minors. The student subjects also did not realize that sympathizing with the hypnotist, eye closure, and pretending to be hypnotized are three heavily inductive elements, all of which would set them up for a quick shift to a genuine trance state. They were being conned by trickery. They also were being hypnotized.

Nelson's catalog offered a special, detailed presentation (booklet) on using the bridge phenomenon as a stage act. The ad text urges use of the bridge on stage because "It will brand you as a great hypnotist. Using a subject weighing less than 100 lbs., performer places subject under hypnotic control (?)." The question mark is the publisher's legal disclaimer to avoid liability. The scenario assumed that the hypnotist traveled with a highly-susceptible and heavily-conditioned assistant who was trained to enter a catatonic-level trance on cue. The hypnotist

> ...then causes the subject's muscles to become rigid, so that the body is as strong and unyielding as steel [not truly possible, and some body parts, such as breasts, have inadequate muscle tissue to become rigid and protect them]. The hypnotised subject is then placed across two chairs, the ankles resting on one, and the shoulders on the other chair, nothing else supporting the body. And while in this state, three full grown men stand upon the body which is suspended across the chairs. [That kind of abuse damaged Spurgeon Young's pancreas and liver and caused his death.] OR a large rock may be placed on the stomach, and broken by the blow of a heavy sledge-hammer! [That is how Flint's wife died.] OR, place a 100-pound anvil on the subject's unsupported stomach, and allow two powerful men to play the "Anvil Chorus" (accompanied by the orchestra), swinging twin sledge-hammers on the anvil with all their might. This spectacle, the resultant sound effects and music will lift your audience right out of their seats!"

Nelson's catalog offered the booklet on bridge phenomenon —"complete stage illusion—running time eight to twelve minutes, requires no apparatus"—for $5.00.[1] In more recent times, stage hypnotists have revised their acts, leaving out tests of hypnotic anesthesia in which they sewed their subjects' lips together (or cheeks to each other), and their use of the bridge phenomenon.

---

[1] Other books on stage hypnosis are Stage Hypnotism by S. W. Reilly, Quick Hypnotic Tricks by Stewart James, and two by Ormond McGill—Encyclopedia of Stage Hypnotism and The Art of Stage Hypnotism.

First Inductions

Readiness: the Pre-induction Stage

☑

Disguised Inductions

☑

Fast and Forced Inductions

☑

Self-hypnosis

☑

Susceptibility

Readiness: the Pre-induction Stage

...there is an initial contract between the subject and the hypnotist according to which the subject agrees to conform to the conditions and expectations appropriate to hypnosis...

- E. R. Hilgard, Divided Consciousness, p. 224

The first few inductions involve a series of three stages: pre-induction, light trance, and deep trance. After receiving training, the trained subject may go directly from induction cue to deep trance.

Readiness is having an attitude of interest, willingness, and fearlessness about an upcoming induction attempt. It is the first stage of induction. James Christenson was a military psychologist who interned under M.H. Erickson, then worked with the Army Air Force, Army Service Forces, and Veterans Administration, researching hypnosis induction and applications. He viewed induction as a three-step process.

1) “Achieving a state of readiness to be a hypnotic subject”

2) "...development of the...light hypnosis, with varying degrees of actual hypnosis."

3) "...a full somnambulistic reaction or deep hypnotic trance." (Christenson in LeCron, p. 33)

The three stages defined by Christenson only happen in the first (or in the first few) inductions. With experience, training, or a specific posthypnotic suggestion for instant induction next time, induction becomes an unconscious conditioned reflex triggered by a cue. Presuggestions are no longer needed or relevant. The cue becomes enough.

Christenson researched by hanging out in the soldiers' lounge and hypnotizing volunteers. The subjects did not know they were participating in an experiment. Christenson covertly recorded their behavior. Half of the onlookers volunteered to be hypnotized. More women volunteered than men. The hypnotist theorized that those persons who volunteered had positive pre-induction suggestions in their personal history, or had acquired those positive expectations of hypnosis from the Christenson's presuggestions and watching the example of other volunteers.

Pre-induction Suggestions

The first stage of induction induces a potential subject to give it a try, to expose himself willingly to whatever the inductive method is, to go into it with an attitude of cooperation. The key to that lies in persuasive and reassuring pre-induction suggestions. Pre-induction suggestions are all the ideas and expectations a subject brings to the event, plus those acquired once there.

Hypnotizable people have considerable (though varying) degrees of suggestibility, even in the waking state, so the pre-induction suggestions are truly "suggestions." Pre-induction suggestions are presented, in casual conversation, in a pre-induction talk.

Pre-induction suggestions are frequently half-truths, or worse. A hypnotist routinely tells the prospective subject before the first induction that > ...under the influence of hypnosis, no one says or does anything that he would not do, or say under the most normal conditions of consciousness. He must be assured that he will have complete control of himself at all times, and that he will be able to wake up from the hypnosis at any time that he elects to do so. (Powers, Advanced Techniques of Hypnosis, p. 24)

Powers then admits that the subject is being given "false information." But, he argues:

> If the patient is not put wholly at ease, it becomes impossible to hypnotize him. We, therefore, misinform him for his own benefit...We, like physicians, do what we feel is necessary for the well-being of those who have seen fit to turn to us in their need. (Ibid.)

Most people believe that a professional would not tell them an out-and-out lie. Hypnotists, however, do lie.

> We even lie to patients, and we believe that is OK so long as it is done for the purpose of helping them. (Citrenbaum, Modern Clinical Hypnosis for Habit Control, p. 14)

Most people assume that the induction does not begin until they are told it is beginning. They believe all the pre-induction suggestions. Powers urged hypnotists to "saturate" the subject in the first induction with the expectation of becoming hypnotized and develop his "fullest acceptance" of that coming state. That process begins in the pre-induction talk.

The pre-induction talk typically presents myths about hypnosis, while claiming to dispel myths about hypnosis! The hypnotist reassures, placates, and appeals to "reason." He also works to build the subject's confidence and create a mood of hopeful expectancy. He does this because a subject who trusts the hypnotist and who believes he will be hypnotized is more likely to be hypnotized and will go into a deeper trance.

For example, after Dr. Diamond felt that he had established a friendly relationship with Sirhan (the man who shot Robert F. Kennedy), he decided to try hypnosis on him. The psychiatrist began his hypnosis with deceptive, disarming pre-induction suggestions.

> "Sirhan, you know what hypnosis is?"
>
> "Isn't it domination of the weaker will by the stronger?"
>
> "No," said Diamond, it isn't that at all. It's simply a way of demonstrating one's own ability to concentrate, and the hypnotist is not dominating over the will of the other. No one can be hypnotized against his own will, and the hypnotist really just gives suggestions and encouragement to a person so that he can use his own willpower to strengthen his own abilities. There's a lot of phony baloney about hypnosis." (Kaiser, p. 295)

After stating the pre-induction myths, a hypnotist usually offers to answer questions. If the hypnotist does not know the answer to a question, Powers says to just make up a "convincing explanation, so that no loss of prestige will affect the successful conclusion of hypnosis." (Powers, Advanced Techniques of Hypnosis) The hypnotist may also give pre-suggestions on how to enter trance. For a thought-centering (Type 1) induction, the hypnotist might say, "The main thing is for you to direct all your thoughts so they are concentrated on one idea." Sensory deprivation (dim light, quiet room, eyes closed), plus thought centering, is a common induction technique.

Induction effort can be directed at one person, or at a group. People are easier to hypnotize in a group than when they are alone because the group's presence is a pre-induction suggestion implying safety and conformity. Hypnotizing a group of persons also tends to be quickly accomplished because of the contagious effect that some people entering deep trance can have on others. New subjects learn what trance behavior is expected of them by observing experienced ones. In a group, potential subjects also feel less self-conscious and less threatened (whether that safety is true or illusory). The difference between an individual or a group induction is "nothing more than a louder voice!" (Marcuse, Hypnosis, p. 55)

Disguised Inductions

...in some cases...good somnambulists may easily be rendered susceptible to suggestions...by chance—in theatre, church, train, car or at a meal.

- Cannon, "Hypnosis in Criminology," p. 19

There is a very thin line between false pre-induction suggestions and disguised inductions. An induction is disguised if the subject has not been clearly informed ahead of time of the hypnotist's intentions. A disguised induction creates exactly the same physiological state of trance as if it began with a non-disguised induction. Suggestions and posthypnotic suggestions are equally effective. Disguised inductions—inducing hypnosis without preliminary conscious consent—are common. They are controversial and often denied, but the writings of hypnotists contain many mentions of disguised first-time inductions.

A disguised induction is an involuntary induction. It bypasses the subject's conscious mind and directly manipulates his unconscious. Without the subject's conscious knowing, the hypnotist tries to stimulate physiological induction reflexes in his unconscious that will inhibit the analytical, critical, and willing/rejecting functions of his conscious. Some forensic hypnotists say that disguised induction is not really against a person's will because the subject's unconscious cooperated. Their premise is that the unconscious mind can give a valid permission for the entire mind to be hypnotized. Disguised induction attempts to seduce the subject's unconscious into this "freely willed" cooperation.

Most people do not understand that a disguised induction may need to happen only one time (or a few) to establish a long-lasting conditioning in a genetic (or trained) somnambulist. Zebediah, Mrs. E, Palle, and Candy were all first hypnotized using a disguised method. Dr. Alexander Cannon, an English medical hypnotist, may have been thinking of the disguised first induction of Mrs. E when he wrote the words quoted above.

Avoiding the H Word

A disguised hypnotic induction avoids the word hypnosis. The operator insists that what is about to happen is not hypnosis. It is, supposedly, something else entirely. (That is a lie, of course.) For example, a mail-order hypnosis course suggests achieving a disguised induction by using the words relaxation and deeply relaxed in a conversational induction instead of using the words sleep and hypnosis. For the first induction of a dental patient...

> If it can be avoided, the patient should not be told that hypnosis is to be employed. He should be informed that he is to be relaxed; that he will feel drowsy and comfortable... (Burgess, "Hypnosis in Dentistry," p. 332)

That first, disguised induction "conditions him for life." (Ibid., p. 325) A dentist, who taught hypnosis seminars to professionals with M. H. Erickson, saw advantages in disguised hypnotic induction "due to the existing prejudices in the minds of the public..." (Aaron Moss, "Hypnodontics," p. 314) Here is Moss's disguised method:

> ...nothing is told the patient which would make him aware that he is about to be put in a hypnotic state. He is simply told that he is to relax; that he > should make himself comfortable and let his arms and legs become loose and heavy...step by step, he is gradually brought into a trance state. The patient is then unaware that he has been hypnotized. (Ibid.)

The following news clipping reports a case in which asthma and epilepsy patients were subjected to disguised inductions:

> Dr. Harold Rosen, of the Phipps Psychiatric Clinic at the Baltimore hospital, said patients were hypnotized without their knowledge so their symptoms could be better studied. During this state, he said, their symptoms were brought on or intensified so that real or apparent attacks of asthma or epilepsy were reproduced during a consultation. (quoted in Powers, Advanced Techniques of Hypnosis, p. 123)

"Just Relax"—In progressive relaxation, the hypnotist names various parts of your body and suggests that each, named, part of you is relaxing. This is a common induction in programs for smokers and overeaters, in sports training, and for headaches. Progressive relaxation may just relax you. If you are susceptible, however, or if it is done repeatedly, it can put you in a trance of some depth. It may be combined with instructions to visualize one, or more, specified images. Visualization is very inductive.

> ...much of what passes for the different forms of behavior therapy depends very heavily on the use of hypnosis (relaxation). (Edmonston, Induction of Hypnosis, p. 116)

Frederick J. Evans studied disguised hypnotic inductions and hypnotic amnesia. His research hypothesis was: "Is it possible...to induce deep hypnosis without S's [subject's] awareness or knowledge that the experimental procedure involves hypnosis?" ("An Experimental Indirect Technique for the Induction of Hypnosis Without Awareness," p. 73) Evans used a "relaxation" technique to induct. Over a period of five years, he tested nearly three-hundred people.

His procedure was to tell his subjects that he was studying the "effects of relaxation on behavior." He instructed them to lie on a couch, watch a fixed point, and relax completely. Then, he gave a series of further "relaxation" instructions which had to do with controlling breathing patterns. He also suggested visualizations—such as to see a pendulum that swings in matched rhythm with the controlled breathing. Then he counted slowly, from 1 to 21, to deepen the trance.

After thirty minutes of that patter, Evans gave his subjects traditional tests for depth of hypnosis. He gave suggestions for posthypnotic compulsions, inhibitions, depth amnesias, and recall interference. He suggested catalepsies: rigid arms and other motor phenomena. He suggested simple hallucinations, anesthesias, and age regression. His results were very definite:

> - His "relaxed" subjects showed precisely the same spectrum of trance depth behavior that would be predicted had they been given a hypnosis susceptibility test.
>
> - "At least half of the Ss, even under some pressure, did not seem to recognize that an attempt had been made to induce hypnosis" (Evans, p. 79)

Evans thus proved that "relaxation," or indirect induction, as he called it, is a hypnosis induction, whether the word "hypnosis" was used or not—and whether, or not, the resulting trance is used to elicit traditional hypnotic behavior. His results demonstrated that half, or more, of the persons who are hypnotized by this disguised method will not know that they are hypnotized. And they will resist knowing the truth!

> ...the finding—that subjects may not be aware that hypnosis has occurred—raises some very interesting ethical and/or legal issues... (Edmonston, Hypnosis and Relaxation, p. 67)

Indeed.

Disguised Induction by Imagery—Dr. Milton Kline developed a disguised induction based on imagery. It started with visualizing, in sequence, a house, a tree, a person, and an animal. The subjects practiced with their eyes open until they could see those images. Kline would then suggest eye closure (which further lowered consciousness). He would say something like, "Visualize yourself sitting there exactly as you are now, except that the image of yourself has its eyes open." He would then suggest that the subject imagine his image doing an eye-fixation exercise, staring without blinking at some target object. He ended this induction routine by saying, "Now you are feeling just like the image, going deeper and deeper asleep."

I have recently seen the euphemism, imagery procedures, used to describe this method of disguised induction.

Conversational Induction—The Ericksonian organization includes programs on disguised inductions in its conference programming, tapes, and videos. M. H. Erickson developed the conversational disguised induction, and it is an Ericksonian specialty. The method is embedded in seemingly casual talk[1] and seemingly "incidental" body contacts.

Chaperone Induction—Erickson also did a disguised induction by persuading his intended subject to "chaperone" her roommate's "therapy." (The roommate had previously been persuaded to play this pretend role in the doctor's plan.) It took Erickson an hour and a half of hypnotic patter—addressed supposedly to the roommate, but really to the "chaperone," before he succeeded in easing the targeted woman into a deep trance. When Erickson observed that she was, finally, in deep trance

> ...the patient was told gently that she was in a hypnotic trance. She was reassured that the hypnotist would do nothing that she was unwilling to have him do, and that therefore there was no need for a chaperone. She was told that she could disrupt the trance if the hypnotist should offend her. Then she was told to continue to sleep deeply..., listening to and obeying only every legitimate command given her by the hypnotist. Thus she was given the reassuring but illusory feeling that she had a free choice. (Erickson and Kubie, "The Successful Treatment of a Case of Acute Hysterical Depression by a Return under Hypnosis to a Critical Phase of Childhood")

When Erickson stated the subject's posthypnotic cue for reinduction, he added > ...that if she had any resistances towards such a trance she would make the hypnotist aware of it after the trance had developed, whereupon she could then decide whether or not to continue in the trance. The purpose of these suggestions was merely to make certain that the patient would again allow herself to be hypnotized with full confidence that she could if she chose disrupt the trance at any time. This illusion of self-determination made it certain that the hypnotist would be able to swing the patient into a trance. Once in that condition, he was confident that he could keep her there until his therapeutic aims had been achieved. (Ibid.)

The "chaperone" woke up with no memory of anything that had happened during the time she was in the trance. She had no conscious knowledge that she had been in a trance.

Ainslee Meares, an Australian psychiatrist, also did disguised inductions. Meares declared that the essence of hypnosis involved the subject's unconscious abandonment of ego control. Like Erickson, Meares would "turn the patient's defenses against him and use them in the hypnotic induction." (Meares, 1958, pp. 24-28)

Sleep Induction—A conditioned hypnotic subject will respond to the hypnotist's induction cue as well from a state of sleep as when wide awake. (Marcuse, Hypnosis, p. 58) First time hypnotic induction of a sleeping person by spoken suggestion also is possible. It is another recognized method of covert hypnotic induction. One hypnotist reported the case of a child

> ...who refused to go into hypnosis with me, who refused even to try to consider it and had refused over a period of many hours. I caught her when she was asleep in the hospital bed and was able to give her some suggestions which she did accept. (Wolfe in Estabrooks, Hypnosis: Current Problems, p. 262)

William James stated that "...persons in ordinary sleep may be transferred into the hypnotic condition by verbal intimation or contact, performed so gently as not to wake them up." (The Principles of Psychology, p. 594) T.X. Barber reported an experiment in which he compared outcomes of giving suggestions to subjects under hypnosis and under light sleep. Both groups responded the same. (Barber, 1956) Barber claimed to have proved that hypnosis does not exist.

---

1. M. H. Erickson reported numerous conversational inductions tailored precisely to the individual psychological profile of the targeted subject's unconscious.

What he really demonstrated, however, was that light sleep is a suggestible natural trance state which can be utilized for the purpose of disguised induction.

Dynamic Learning Method's mail-order hypnosis course gives instructions for hypnotizing a sleeping person.

> ...simply begin hypnotizing the person, just as though the person were awake...[it] may require considerable patience and persistence... (p. TS20-1)

The course tells the hypnotist to say that, in the future, whenever that person is sleeping, he will be able to hear and understand the hypnotist's voice, shifting directly from natural sleep to hypnotic sleep at that sound, instead of waking. The recommended patter continues, "You will hear and understand the hypnotic suggestions I give you, and you will obey them." (p. TS20-1)

Sometimes, however, professional efforts to accomplish first-time induction of a sleeping person do not work. The reason may be the varying types of brain waves associated with the spectrum of sleep depths. Success probably depends on giving suggestions during hypnoid levels of relaxation (alpha/theta) instead of during the non-hypnoid delta periods. The subject's unconscious resistance also may be a factor...

Fast, and Forced, Inductions

...a patient might realize what is transpiring and become resentful, with a consequent bad relationship ensuing. The writer has had this happen, with the patient refusing to return for further treatment. There is also a medicolegal aspect to the use of the disguised induction of hypnosis and a question of liability.
- Aaron Moss, "Hypnodontics," p. 314

The Actively Resisting Subject

There are incidents involving actively resisting subjects scattered throughout this book. Some subjects managed to reject an unwelcome suggestion, or an unwanted trance induction. Some even escaped completely from a distressing hypnotic relationship. A British newspaper reported a case of this type. The original induction had been disguised. The next time the operator tried to induct, his subject resisted. The journalist who described that incident mistakenly assumed it was the first case of its sort:

> The first medical proof that a woman can be hypnotized against her will—as Svengali hypnotized Trilby—is put on record today by Dr. Ian Oswald, an Oxford University psychiatrist...She did not realize she was being hypnotized and went into a deep trance...

While she was in trance, Dr. Oswald stated a post-hypnotic reinduction cue. If, at any future time, she saw him clap his hands together, she would immediately return to that same state of consciousness:

> When she recovered consciousness the typist realized she had been hypnotized. She was so distressed to find she could not remember what had happened that she refused any further treatment. She told Dr. Oswald she was frightened of him... He clapped his hands. Almost immediately she became glassy-eyed and said her mind was "going queer"...After two more hand-claps she went into a trance. While hypnotized she agreed to continue the treatment, which was eventually successful.
>
> "This case supports the view that if such a person can once be hypnotized, then subsequent rehypnosis can be achieved despite strongly motivated refusal by the subject," Dr. Oswald writes. "This would probably be true with an unscrupulous hypnotist." (Pincher, Daily Express, 1959)

Conditioned Induction

The more conditioning (training) that a subject has, the faster that subject enters trance. In fact, one way to estimate a person's extent of past hypnotic conditioning is by his speed of response to induction.[1] More speed indicates more past hypnotic training. A first induction, on the other hand, may take a long time. Some operators may spend several hours (or more) on a first induction.

---

1. It is a curious fact that repeated induction in animals decreases their hypnotic susceptibility, but in humans increases it.

A person's resistance to induction is worn down gradually. Induction failure, after one attempt, does not necessarily mean that subject cannot be hypnotized. Repeated exposures to induction increase susceptibility, even if no trance has yet taken place. Persons who did not, at first, succumb tend to do so, sooner or later, if exposures to induction efforts continue.

Moll achieved somnambulism in several clients after as many as forty induction attempts. Marcuse cited a case in which it took a total of three-hundred hours of induction effort for him to get the subject hypnotized. Bramwell did experiments in which subjects, after over a hundred failed induction attempts, turned out to be deeply hypnotizable. A Berlin hypnotist named Vogt finally induced deep hypnosis in one subject after about seven-hundred previous, failed, attempts.

The amount of time between induction efforts is unimportant. Any stage of hypnosis which has already been induced easily can be reinstated. Apparent "failure" can even help a hypnotist, for, if the targeted subject becomes confident that he is immune, he may lower his resistance. Once deep trance is achieved, induction time for subsequent inductions becomes short because the subject has learned where to go mentally, and how to go there.

> The subject who has been hypnotized many times inevitably develops certain automatic or conditioned reflexes, by which a shortcut is established to the hypnotic state. In such an individual the process of induction has lost the very features which are its essence in an untrained subject. (Kubie and Margolin, "The Process of Hypnotism and the Nature of the Hypnotic State")

After the first induction is accomplished, however long that takes, and the posthypnotic cue for reinduction is implanted, the "reinduction of hypnosis is a matter of only a few seconds or a few minutes." (Moss, p. 316) Marcuse said induction cued by posthypnotic suggestion can reduce induction time "to a matter of seconds" (p. 63).

M.H. Erickson saw reinduction by a posthypnotic cue as the key to training and control: "...the posthypnotic performance provides an opportunity to secure a trance state quickly and unexpectedly. ("Nature of Post-Hypnotic Behavior") In a fully-trained subject, the lengthy initial induction process has been replaced by an unconscious reflex that gives instant obedience to a perceived posthypnotic induction cue.

L. R. Wolberg suggested the posthypnotic induction cue for rehypnosis of his patients with the following patter:

> You are deeply asleep at the present time...From now on it will not be necessary to go through the process of hypnotizing you...When I give you a certain signal like...[tapping the desk, hand on the shoulder, or any other clearly defined stimulation which is not likely to occur in ordinary social intercourse]...you will very easily and immediately enter into a state of sleep as deep as the one you are in now. (Wolberg, 1948, p. 159)

Once the subject's unconscious has learned to what depth it must shift and the reinduction cue which triggers that shift, all the hypnotist has to do is produce the designated cue. The subject is trained. Once a trained hypnotic subject, always a trained hypnotic subject.

> Even though an hour or two, or many hours, might have been required to make the subject completely somnambulistic in the first place, afterwards all this is changed, especially if...he is told when in the hypnotic state that on succeeding occasions he will go immediately into a deep hypnotic state in a few seconds whenever he is to be rehypnotized. All this is a familiar matter in the field of practical hypnosis. Unless something is done to prevent it, the once-deeply-hypnotized subject may be quickly rehypnotized by anyone for whom he will serve as a subject. There is consequently the danger among students that a good subject, seldom realizing how good a subject he really is, may allow fellow-students who know little about the seriousness of hypnosis to work on him. (Wells, "Experiments in the Hypnotic Production of Crime," p. 69)

In the trained subject, reinduction is nearly instant. It requires as little as one second for the subject's conditioned reflex to respond to perception of the posthypnotic induction cue.

> Lengthy, detailed, and complicated induction methods are generally used when a subject is first learning to be hypnotized. Such complex inductions not only become unnecessary as experience with the hypnotic state grows, but are cumbersome. (Kelly and Kelly, Hypnosis, p. 24)

Specific posthypnotic suggestions to enter hypnosis more rapidly the next time and to go deeper also affect the rate of descent and depth. Any suggested cue is also long-term, unless removed by a counter-suggestion—done by an outsider or managed by the subject's internal resistance. There are many accounts of a hypnotist seeing somebody to whom he gave a posthypnotic induction cue one, ten, or twenty years ago, testing, and discovering the cue still works.

Forced Reinduction

During their pre-induction talks, hypnotists often declare that nobody can be hypnotized against his will. Is that true? Partly. If a resistant subject, facing an induction attempt which is not disguised and only involves Type 1 induction methods, chooses (and is permitted) to walk away from the induction effort, the statement is true.

Once a subject has been inducted, trained, and assigned a posthypnotic induction cue, however, it is an entirely different matter. (Or if the induction is by chemical or electronic means.)

> Though the first attempt to hypnotize a subject frequently fails, repeated attempts are likely to succeed, and, once a subject has been hypnotized, the length of time needed to send him into trance will rapidly decrease with subsequent repetitions of the experience. When a subject has become accustomed to be hypnotized, he may be put into trance without realizing what is happening.... Though many workers have insisted that the patient's cooperation is essential, the fact is that subjects can be hypnotized against their will. (Sargant, The Mind Possessed, p. 30)

In "Ability to Resist Artificially Induced Dissociation [hypnosis]" Wells reported testing whether a conditioned subject could resist unwanted induction. Watkins, Brenman, and Young did similar experiments.[1] With one exception, they all obtained the same results: trained subjects could not resist reinduction. (The one successful resister was a Methodist minister.) For most subjects, once the shift to trance has become fast and smooth and trance has become of somnambulist depth, obedience to the induction cue is a conditioned response. It is an unconscious reflex. The reflex is instant and, perhaps, also amnesic. An unconscious conditioned reflex usually is dominant over a conscious will to resist. The subject does not say NO to induction any more, because he does not know consciously to what to say NO, or when to say NO to it.

Length of Time in Trance

How long can a person can stay in trance? The suggestion at the end of a session to "wake up" doesn't necessarily mean that suggestibility is over. It means that the subject has obeyed the operator's suggestion to now act awake. The command to wake up is a posthypnotic suggestion to act awake! You can be in lowered consciousness and not know it. Usually, however, trance wears off completely with a good night's sleep. (That's the well-known "morning after" assessment.)

A lengthy trance can also be suggested under hypnosis. M. H. Erickson said a doctor's secretary

> ...told me she had a personal problem which she was not able to think through and wanted me to put her in a trance and tell her to think through her problem. I was innocent and naive, so I did just that. She stayed in a trance for one whole week, discharging her duties for the doctor. He recognized that she was in a trance. (M. H. Erickson in Estabrooks, Current Problems, p. 263)

Cook wrote of trances that lasted for months among certain religious persons in the Orient (p. 244). A friend told me about a wealthy woman convert to the Sufi religion (a Muslim denomination which induces very deep trances in its religious services). She developed a state in which she "walked around spaced all the time." Bergen kept Palle in such a constant state of trance that it resembled a psychotic condition. A state of near constant trance is called vigilambulism.

> ...[it is] a peculiar state of permanent half-somnambulism of persons who had been repeatedly hypnotized but who had not been submitted to the regular maneuvers that would terminate their magnetic sleep. Such people seem to be fully awake, but are liable to receive suggestions from anyone who will talk to them. (Ellenberger, The Discovery of the Unconscious, p. 118)

SELF-HYPNOSIS

"Every day, in every way, I'm getting better and better."
- Emile Coue

"All induction is self-induction," hypnotists often proclaim. They like that slogan because it shifts responsibility for the trance condition and its outcomes from the hypnotist to the subject. In the case of self-hypnosis, however, the main impetus for induction really does come from the subject. The operator-controlled state of "hypnosis" is the same physiologically as "self-hypnosis." In self-hypnosis, however, there is no operator actively inducing and managing the subject's trance.

---

[1] Watkins said that, if the hypnotic subject is not giving automatic responses, he is not in the somnambulic condition.

However, the self-induced trance usually starts with a persuasive idea from an outside source, and instruction. A tape, video, book, an example, or a live operator teaches the subject how to go deliberately into the alpha/theta brain wave state. Once the student learns "where" to go and how to get there, it is easy for most persons. Any person who can be hypnotized by another person can hypnotize himself. The ability to self-induct may be given instantly by the teaching operator, as a posthypnotic suggestion, or it may be learned more gradually, a conditioning process. In that case, the subject internalizes the training and soon can run the mental routine without an outside prompt.

Self-hypnosis tends to be a self-limited hypnosis. You go down so far, but no farther. You pop back up from that state of deep concentration any time you want or need to—when the baby cries, when there is a knock on the door.

WHEN A PERSON LEARNS A ROUTINE TO LOWER CONCIOUSNESS FROM ANY SOURCE, HE TENDS TO ABSORB OTHER PROGRAMMING FROM THAT SOURCE, AND TO DEVELOP RAPPORT WITH THE TEACHER. IN ANY DEEP TRANCE, HE WILL FEEL RAPPORT (AN ATTITUDE OF EXAGGERATED RESPECT) TOWARD PERSONAS AND/OR IDEAS SUGGESTED TO, OR PRODUCED BY, HIS UNCONSCIOUS.

Bernheim and Coue Start It

Any induction method that can be used by an operator can also be used for self-induction. Self-induced trance has been around as far back as we have records. Bernheim wrote about self-hypnosis and the related practice of positive self-suggestion, in 1886, in Suggestive Therapeutics. However, it was Emile Coue's 1923 book, How to Practice Suggestion and Autosuggestion, that popularized Bernheim's ideas. It was the first practical manual for self-hypnosis. Coue taught self-induction methods that anybody could use: staring at objects (such as your eyes in the mirror) or talking to yourself, repeating positive statements. Coue taught people to repeat the desired goal to themselves over and over: "Every day, in every way, I'm getting better and better." Ever since Coue, self-hypnosis has been intermittently popular.

Nancy School Therapy Principles— Liebeault and Bernheim lived in Nancy, a city in France. They gave free hypnotic treatments, taught the normality of trance, and fought vigorously and lifelong for the rights of hypnotic subjects. A generation later, Coue was running a corner drugstore in Nancy and studying hypnosis. After he opened a free clinic, Coue's teachings were called the "new Nancy school." Coue began the client-centered style of hypnotherapy, letting the direction and method be set by the client rather than be dictated by the therapist. He also developed the method of self-hypnosis which begins with a hypnotist trainer who establishes induction conditioning, then teaches the subject to take over, using that conditioning for self-help. Other people followed his example and also opened free clinics, called "Coue Institutes."

As did most later purveyors of pop, group, religious, and self-hypnosis, Coue avoided the word "hypnosis." In the sense that the H word means an operator-controlled trance, however, Coue was dealing with something different. In self-hypnosis, the cure came, not from a hypnotist, but from the patient's effort to reprogram his own mind by positive thinking. Coue made clear the power of words to influence the unconscious mind, the power of self acting on self,

Nowadays, instruction for self-hypnosis is a huge industry: motivational tapes, videos, and books. Coue would have been astonished at the array of contemplation religions, self-hypnosis manuals, and books on how to think yourself well, but he would have understood the principle on which all are based. They all continue his teachings of positive autosuggestion.

For the consumer, however, the best method is to exercise faith (positive thinking) in a context which gives God the glory.

Biofeedback

Doctors used to believe that people could not control any part of their autonomic nervous system. Autonomic functions are unconscious and reflexive in nature. State of consciousness, background thinking, habitual choices, salivary output, digestion, heart rate, and respiration rate are autonomic functions. Then doctors learned that a person in trance can directly control his physiological functions. Biofeedback training puts an unconscious function under conscious control in order to improve the body's physiological state.

Biofeedback trains persons with health problems, by means of trance, to monitor and improve their involuntary functions, their physiological state. They can learn to lower their blood pressure, slow their heart rate, and contract their pupils. Using biofeedback techniques, people have also learned to control the rate of blood flow to their head or hands (that can stop or prevent migraine headache), to control or stop bleeding, and to adjust numerous other personal physiological states.

The trance skills are first taught by a trainer, than utilized independently by the subject. The training process requires both trance-level focused mind and information about the subject's internal physiology. That information is the "biofeedback." Feedback makes it possible for the subject's focused mind to learn to recognize, and therefore control, its "bio" states.

> ...body functions become voluntary in direct proportion to the amount of information feedback the subject gets from each past response of his body before his next response occurs; it is as if will and knowledge were reducible to the same thing. (London, Behavior Control, p. 96)

Biofeedback began with M. I. Lisina, a Russian biofeedback researcher. She was trying to teach subjects to constrict or dilate blood vessels in response to electric shocks. Because they were being shocked, the subjects were highly motivated to learn. Unfortunately, she did not allow them to see what their bodies were doing in response to their efforts to avoid the shocks, so they could not learn anything.

Then she took them through the conditioning routine (with the shocks) again. This time, she let them see the continual machine printouts of their vascular ups and downs, and she told them what she wanted them to learn to do. The subjects all quickly learned to control their blood vessel diameters!

What Lisina learned in that experiment is now the basis of all biofeedback training. The subject is told what the goal is, and he is always provided with some way to observe his body's responses. Biofeedback training combines trance concentration with digital display of internal body function. Biofeedbackers learn to communicate to their bodies what they want by entering trance and visualizing the wanted activity. People fighting cancer by visualization in trance do the same thing. Test after test has shown that what you strongly visualize in a deep trance state will happen in your body.

Modern biofeedback training is aided by electrical monitors that can detect, amplify, and display the behavior of any internal body functions. One monitoring device measures temperature and heart rate. Another measures blood pressure. Thus, a person can learn to have a slower, or more regular, heart beat and a lower blood pressure. Some instruments monitor sweat gland activity (lie detectors also measure that), and muscle tension. Muscle tension monitors can help patients overcome the underlying cause of spastic colon disorders, tension headaches, etc. There is even a tiny, swallowable monitor for stomach acid which enables patients to learn to reduce its flow and prevent ulcers. Another type of monitor gives a readout of brain wave pattern so clients can learn to go in and out of alpha or theta at will.

Kamiya taught hypnotic subjects to control their alpha (hypnoidal brainwave) production by means of biofeedback. Kamiya's trainees learned either to increase, or suppress, their alpha brain waves. To teach control of state of consciousness, his subjects were hooked up to an EEG. Whenever the brain wave type appeared that the experimenter wanted, a tone sounded. Soon, the student learned to enter that condition at will. The more Kamiya's subjects practiced, the better they became at shifting from beta into alpha, or vice versa.

Even animals can be taught to control autonomic functions. Dr. Neal E. Miller (Rockefeller University) taught lab animals using rewards and punishments. His rat learned to make one ear blush and the other blanch.

The highest degree of biological self-management known has been achieved by monks from Tibet, India, and Sri Lanka who develop autonomicself-control in rigorous deep trance practice, and call it religion. Tibetan monks, since about 150 BC, have trained themselves to achieve profound trance and to apply trance abilities to various purposes. (Those abilities did not protect their country from conquest, but have become a great market item for refugees.)

A French woman who lived among Tibetan monks in the 1930s described a "final exam" for trainees. The goal was to generate extraordinary internal heat, a feat of conscious control of an autonomic body function:

> The neophytes sit on the ground, cross-legged and naked. Sheets are dipped in the icy water, each man wraps himself in one of them and must dry it on his body. As soon as the sheet has become dry, it is again dipped in the water and placed on the novice's body to be dried as before....until daybreak. Then he who has dried the largest number of sheets is acknowledged the winner of the competition.

> Besides drying wet sheets on one's body, there exist various other tests to ascertain the degree of heat which the neophyte is able to radiate. One of these tests consists in sitting in the snow. The quantity of snow melted under the man and the distance at which it melts around him are taken as measures of his ability. (Alexandra David-Neely, Magic and Mystery of Tibet, Chapter VI)

A swami from India once visited the Menninger clinic and demonstrated that he could create any type EEG wave which they requested—once he figured out what "theta," "alpha," "beta," and "delta" meant in his native language. He could control the two arteries to the hand, making "one half of his right palm 10 degrees warmer than the other half." He could change his heart beat:

> First he made his heart slow down from seventy-five to fifty beats per minute. Then, suddenly, he produced an atrial flutter, during which his heart beat so rapidly that it could no longer pump blood...He maintained this state for seventeen seconds, apparently unharmed, and immediately afterward went off to lecture. "My heart is my toy," he said. (Pines, The Brain Changers, p. 76)

Susceptibility

Hypnosis...can be used for both good and evil...All people are prone to being molded by outside influence to some extent. The small group of highly hypnotizable people, when put in the hands of unscrupulous individuals, are even more vulnerable.

- Spiegel, Introduction, Bain, The Control of Candy Jones, pp. x-xi

At a dinner party, years ago, a man told me that he used to belong to a hypnosis club in Canada. All the men in that club hypnotized their wives. I asked, "Did your wife ever hypnotize you?" "Oh no," he said, "I think there are just some kinds of persons who can be hypnotized, and some who can't."

Was he right? Are there "just some kinds of persons who can be hypnotized and some who can't"? Well, yes and no.

Inductability depends on hereditary susceptibility, plus training. Most people have some inherited ability to lower consciousness. Hypnotic susceptibility means the innate capacity to experience hypnosis quickly, easily, and deeply. Hypnotic ability is a modern euphemism which means exactly the same thing. As a result of genetic and personality differences, people differ in susceptibility. In most people, training will create additional, learned ability.

Screening for Susceptibility

When stage hypnotists send some volunteers back to their seats, they are culling out less susceptible persons. Some of their rejects also could have been deeply hypnotized—but not in five minutes. A researcher who specialized in techniques applicable to criminal hypnosis wrote:

> ...I have ceased to be much interested in trying to induce slight hypnotic phenomena in large numbers of subjects, but I have become interested almost exclusively in the upper 20 percent, and especially in the upper 10 or even 5 percent of subjects, in whom the most extreme phenomena can be brought about, including criminal acts contrary to the moral natures of non-criminal subjects. (Wells, "Experiments in Waking Hypnosis for Instructional Purposes," note to reprinted edition)

Projective tests such as visualizations, the Rorschach, and the TAT can be used to predict susceptibility. Vivid imagery and strong imagination predict hypnotizability. The most accurate susceptibility tests in the public sector, however, measure response to a standardized induction routine. This type of test began as a depth measure, then became used as a predictor of hypnotizability. A person given a hypnosis susceptibility test is being simultaneously tested and hypnotized. The subject's score is based on the number of suggestions obeyed, with the most points given for the most difficult suggestions (amnesia and negative hallucination).[1]

An Anthropological View of Trance

Erica Bourguignon reviewed the 488 cultural societies (mostly pre-industrial and tribal) referenced in the Ethnographic Atlas. She looked for evidence of altered states of consciousness:

> ... [of] 488 societies, in all parts of the world...437, or 90%, are reported to have one or more institutionalized, culturally patterned forms of altered states of consciousness... (Bourguignon, pp. 9-10)

She learned that individuals with trance capacity existed in all those societies. And most societies had scenarios in which the appearance—and utilization—of trance phenomena were accepted.

> Altered states of consciousness ...appear in a variety of forms among the peoples of the world. Often, they are institutionalized and culturally patterned and utilized in specific ways... (Ibid., p. 3)

Bourguignon divided the worldwide experience of trance phenomena into two types. One was an individual event, a passive and private trance involving a dream, hallucination, or vision. The other type was a public procedure, active in performance, conveying messages from, or taking the role of, an unseen presence. She called that second type possession trance or the impersonation of spirits—"the acting out of their speech or behavior."[2] She noted that the possession trance did not involve sensory hallucinations and was sometimes followed by amnesia. (p. 12)

Genetic Susceptibility Spectrum—Some persons, called refractory, don't respond at all to inductive techniques. Some enter only a light hypnoid state. At the other extreme of the susceptibility spectrum, the most susceptible persons go quickly and easily into somnambulism, the deepest trance state. The first scientific study of the range of susceptibilities was done by Hull, in 1933. He gave a standardized hypnotic induction to numerous subjects and rated them by depth reached:

Refractory	10.48 %
Light Hypnosis	32.68 %
Deep Hypnosis	34.58 %
Somnambulism	22.26 %

In a similar experiment, years later, LeCron and Bordeaux found a similar distribution:

Uninfluenced	5 %
Hypnoidal	10 %
Light Trance	25 %
Medium Trance	35 %
Somnambulism	25 %

Factors Associated with High Susceptibility

Susceptibility does not result from character weakness: "Native strength or weakness of 'will' have absolutely nothing to do with the matter." (William James The Principles of Psychology, p. 595) Burgess reported that, of [1] It is probable that both the military and secret agencies now can test instantly both susceptibility and trance depth with electronic equipment.

---

[2] Whether you call it possession or impersonation depends on whether or not you believe the spirit is real.

250 patients treated by seven "hypnodontists," all but eleven were hypnotized on the the first try. Only five never could be hypnotized enough for suggested anesthesia during dental work. He speculated that the high induction rate was because those private dental patients were:

> More cultured, higher in intelligence, well-organized personalities...[which] acts as an automatic screening process so that the clientele of the dentists is largely made up of people more susceptible to the induction of hypnosis. (Burgess, "Hypnosis in Dentistry," p. 325)

A recent author, however, corrected what he considers an "overemphasis" on > ...the role intelligence plays as a factor of susceptibility. If other things such as undue curiosity, fears, and mistrust are absent or removed, then 90 percent or more of all people are hypnotizable. Obviously this faction of the general populace is not comprised of highly intelligent people. (Hughes, p. 26)

In a 1974 article, Spiegel listed characteristics of the most hypnotizable persons:

> ...readiness to trust; a relative suspension of critical judgment; an ease of affiliation with new experiences; a telescoped time sense; an easy acceptance of logical incongruities; an excellent memory; a capacity for intense concentration; an overall tractability, and, paradoxically, a rigid core of private beliefs. (Spiegel, International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis)

Josephine Hilgard's 1970 book, Personality and Hypnosis, lists many signs of hypnotizability. There are also dozens of articles on predicting hypnotizability in subjects without using a recognizable induction. Here follows a list of generally recognized markers for hypnotically susceptible persons:

- People who had an imaginary playmate in childhood,[1] an hysteric tendency (obsessive personalities are the most difficult to hypnotize), or who have multiple personality disorder.

- A person, who volunteers for a hypnosis stage demonstration, and then reveals somnambulic capacity, is obviously identifiable as susceptible.

- Children are, as a category, typically more susceptible to hypnosis than adults. Children begin to be susceptible after they have learned language (which is conditioning to words). Children between 8 and 12 are usually the most susceptible age. (The Burgess survey, however, found teenagers most responsive.) Some studies find elderly people the hardest to hypnotize, but there are individual exceptions.

- Intelligent introverted women were the most susceptible category in a 1932 Davis and Husband survey. Women also tend to be more willing to be hypnotized than men.

- Persons who show ideomotor response have some suggestibility. (Ideomotor response happens, for example, when the thud of a boxer's fist into his opponent's jaw causes a watcher to flinch.) Conversation with a pendulum ("yes," "no," "maybe") involves ideomotor responses. The subject's unconscious is making those responses.

---

[1] The Quest Program is public school elementary training involving a series of deep trance visualizations. By means of this guided imagery, and specific suggestions, the child is led to dissociate, create an imaginary associate, and then develop it. All such children will then meet the criteria for having "an imaginary playmate."

- A person who has an established (or anticipated) positive relationship with the hypnotist, such as in love with, or in awe of him) will be more susceptible to hypnosis by that particular hypnotist than one who lacks those feelings.

- Persons who have a capacity to love and to love deeply, who "fall hard," and persons with the "tendency to fixate love-objects powerfully, customarily are easily inducted into profound hypnosis." (Schilder and Kauders, p. 39)

- Greater susceptibility is associated with higher intelligence and better adaptation to deprivation. To be suggestible is to be able to learn easily. Being able to learn quickly helps in survival. Humans have a built-in tendency to conform to any situation in which they are placed.

- Ability to visualize is a strong marker. Persons who use mental imagery a lot are generally hypnotizable. The more vividly you visualize, the more susceptible you are.

- The most hypnotically susceptible persons tend to be imaginative, right-brained, and creative. Imagination is your inherited and/or developed ability to suppress and inhibit your conscious mind and let your unconscious (your "imagination") lead.

- A person who becomes totally involved in an activity—such as fiction reading (especially science fiction), theater, prayer or worship—to the point of ignoring distractions, is probably susceptible.

- Persons who are attracted to adventures, whether of body or mind, are likely to be hypnotizable.

- The best hypnotic subjects have the strongest egos. They have a firm grip on reality when focused on that rather than on imagining.

psychedelic drugs (LSD, marijuana) are more attracted to, and more susceptible to, non-drug trance inductions than people who have never used such drugs.

- The more experience a person has with trance, the more susceptible they are.[1]

- Persons who are accustomed to obeying orders—such as low-ranking military—are more susceptible. The greater the capacity to respect and obey, the greater the susceptibility tends to be. Children and teenagers and "rank and file" of all sorts seem more likely to react with blind obedience to persons with social symbols of leadership.

> Anything calculated to enhance the authority of the hypnotizer or suggester also enhances the susceptibility to hypnosis....During the war, officers were as a rule harder to hypnotize than privates...Persons not as a rule accustomed to recognizing authority of any kind are harder to hypnotize...hypnosis is an attitude of subordination, an attitude of subjection. (Schilder and Kauders, Hypnosis, p. 39)

Induction of Retarded and Psychotic

Persons who are retarded, or mentally ill, tend to be at the low end of the susceptibility spectrum. A psychotic is difficult to hypnotize. Any schizophrenic who can be hypnotized probably has only a mild case of the disease. In 1889, August Voisin attempted to hypnotize unwilling psychotic patients:

> The patient, either held by assistants or placed in a straitjacket, had his eyes kept open, and was compelled to look at the light of a magnesium lamp or at Voisin's fingers. If necessary, the process was continued for three hours; suggestions meanwhile being made. The patients, who at first usually struggled, raved and spat in the operator's face, eventually became exhausted and, in successful cases, passed into a condition of deep sleep. (Bramwell, p. 43)

Even after that sustained effort, however, Voison only managed to induce deep trance in ten percent of those patients.

Training for Susceptibility

Much research has been done on methods to increase a subject's susceptibility. Training can maximize inherited hypnotic ability. It can even create ability. The process of training can be as simple as repeating the trance induction. In a dental study, one client took fifteen minutes for first induction and five minutes for the second. Training made the difference.

Self-Defense for Susceptible Persons

To a hypnotic predator, very susceptible persons are prey, to be found, if possible, and captured and exploited. So, if you are quite susceptible, exercise reasonable caution about exposure to hypnotic situations. (You have the option of getting a deep-level suggestion from a trusted hypnotist to seal you against subliminal suggestion and unwanted inductions.)

If you find yourself feeling the fascination of "rapport" toward a suspected hypnotic predator and wish to resist, "in future avoid such a man, whose intentions I can now see through, and shall never allow myself to remain alone with him." (Hammerschlag, p. 30) However, rapport grows just as well in a group as alone, and a preset induction cue works under any circumstances. I would amend that to read "shall never allow myself to be in his or her presence again."

---

[1] The more a person has experienced deep trance, the more he or she tends to seek it. It has an addictive aspect. The deeper the trance was, the more they are likely to return for more.

Depth

Depth Training

☑

Depth Scales

☑

Depth Characteristics

> In this condition of hypnosis the patient forgets all that has happened during the trance, and this lack of memory, or amnesia, is the characteristic feature of this...the deepest phase of hypnotic influence* [where]*...the more striking psychological and physiological experiments are performed. About 25 percent of hypnotizable people go into a somnambulistic trance.
>
> Magonet, 1957, p. 22

Depth Training

An operator, who is developing a subject, puts that subject through four different phases: 1) induction, 2) deepening, 3) training, and 4) treatment/operations (the giving of suggestions). The first and second phases both involve deepening. Whatever further inhibits the conscious mind, shifting it from faster and less synchronized brain waves toward slower and more synchronized brain waves (short of real sleep) is movement toward a greater depth of trance. People vary in genetic capacity for hypnotic induction and depth, but training makes most of them go deeper.

Training to Go Deeper

Depth training begins during the first session with the suggestion to go deeper the next time. That suggestion will be repeated until training is complete. The more time a person spends under hypnosis, the more times that person is hypnotized, the more actions (mental or physical) which a person performs at the hypnotist's suggestion, and the more that person is "trained," the deeper he goes.

Training for susceptibility is the same process as training for depth. Training, in and of itself (no drugs), raises the percentage of somnambulists from the normal 20-25 %, to over 50%, and maybe even 75%. Narcohypnotic induction, plus training, may increase that to as much as 95%, or more.

Depth training may be for any purpose. Anesthesia requires deep trance. A hypnodontist wants "the deepest possible trance...which may require two or more sessions." (Burgess, p. 333). If the operator wants an extreme degree of control, training lasts until the subject:

1) Instantly shifts from awake to deep trance on cue.

2) Accepts commands for total amnesia (somnambulism)

3) Obeys posthypnotic suggestions in a complete, automatic way.

Narcohypnotist Lindner considered training subjects for deep trance to be a necessary preliminary to hypnoanalysis. He said a week would do it, if the hypnotist had the advantage of drug-induced depth:

> [After learning to make] ...a rapid passage from the waking state to sleep, patients are familiarized with hypnosis and its functions...By the end of this preliminary period (to which no more than a week is given) this unique relationship [hypnotist-subject] is in a state of readiness for exploitation. The close of the first week then finds the patient adept at passing confidently from a waking to a sleeping state...on the merest suggestion of the clinician...Testing for depth of trance is simple but most important...it is often necessary to achieve a decisive penetration (viewing the trance state as a vertical phenomenon). (Lindner, Rebel Without a Cause, pp. 22-23)

Hypnoanalyst L. R. Wolberg also trained his subjects for somnambulist depth:

> ...to get the patient to a point where he is able to open his eyes in a trance without awakening, to develop amnesia, and finally to respond to complicated posthypnotic suggestions. (Hypnoanalysis, p. 51)

Training to Maintain a Specified Depth

Normally, depth of trance fluctuates. Any hypnotized person, unless trained otherwise, tends to yo-yo up and down in depth throughout the trance. Normally, a subject can wake herself up from a bad dream—or a bad trance, if something is happening under trance that she doesn't like. Training usually seeks to overturn those two natural defenses of depth fluctuation and self-waking. A trained subject has learned to go down either as far as possible, or to a designated depth of consciousness, and to maintain that depth. That trained subject also does not wake up until cued to do so by the operator.

Deepening Techniques

Here are the main deepening techniques:

- Any prolonged visualization deepens. The subject may be told to visualize himself riding down an escalator, or walking down stairs, or counting backwards, or walking backwards. The theme will be down, Down, DOWN.

- Repeated suggestions of "deeper" or "relax" deepen trance: "You are going deeper and deeper, deeper and deeper..." Or "heavy, so heavy." Or "drowsy and relaxed...just let yourself relax...let yourself go." Or "let your muscles relax...now your facial muscles...relax." Or, monotonous, repeated "sleep" suggestions.

- A pumper command can be used to deepen: "With each breath, you will go deeper."

- Obedience exercises deepen: the more you obey, whether visualizing something new, or raising your arm, or lowering it, etc., the deeper you go. If a subject accepted a suggestion to see his breath coming out (a positive hallucination), or that he cannot open his eyes (catatonia), or that his right arm is becoming weightless and slowly rising—he probably also went deeper.

- Time is a factor. Hypnotists who work with a subject for hours at a time, and who have done hundreds of inductions of that same subject, normally achieve far greater depths than they would in a first-time, casual experiment.

    1) Length of time spent being inducted deepens—such as repeating the same induction patter again, and again, and again. Old-time mesmerists often inducted for two to five hours. Esdaile (who did hundreds of complex surgeries under hypnosis) did even longer inductions.

    2) An increased total number of hours of time spent in training under various hypnoses deepens.

    3) An increased total number of times hypnotized deepens. Repeated awakenings from trance and re-inductions into trance result in deeper trance states.

- Narcohypnosis deepens.

Depth Scales

> [In the light-medium stage]...*the subject has progressed beyond the point of simple cooperation...he does things he cannot stop himself from doing unless he interrupts the entire process....
>
> - Christenson, "Dynamics in Hypnotic Induction," in LeCron (ed), Experimental Hypnosis, p. 33

Hypnotists usually measure depth by performance scales. A susceptibility test is an induction with a depth scale and standardized scoring. Depth scales are typically divided into some number of stages, each identified by its characteristic behaviors. But, in general, the deeper you go

- the more suggestible you are
- the more vivid your imagery (hallucination)
- the greater your capacity for fantasy and fabrication
- the greater your capacity for authentic regression
- the greater your ability to carry out focused problem solving,
- the more you may lose personal initiative and turn over your brain's decision-making and planning capabilities to the operator
- the poorer your reality-testing, the more likely you are to accept operator suggestions or self-generated fantasies as fact.
- the better you can perceive extrasensory stimuli (those which normally are below the threshold of conscious perception).

The preceding list adds up to more of just about anything. The bottom line is how your trance potential is used. It may generate truer, or falser, information. It can make you stronger, or weaker. It can help you to be more in touch with reality, more alert and able to cope—or it can cause you to be less in touch with reality, and less able to cope.

The capacity for trance is not, in itself, evil. It may, however, be used in a misguided, or even evil, way. It may be used by an operator for evil purposes.

Number of Depth Stages

Researchers have been developing (and redeveloping) depth scales since Liebeault. Individuals vary so much in hypnotic performance that scales must be based on averages. Many researchers have attempted to chart the characteristic depths of hypnosis and to describe the features of each depth. The number of old-time named depth stages ranged from Moll's two stages to Pavlov's twelve. Liebeault described six degrees of trance depth which he grouped into three main stages: light, medium, and deep. His associate, Bernheim, further divided the induction continuum into nine steps between fully awake and fully asleep.

Two Stages: Light and Somnambulist— The two-stage scale goes back to 1889 and a Frenchman named Moll. He divided hypnosis into just two stages: light and deep. He said that light hypnosis affects will, but not memory. He said that deep hypnosis (somnambulism) is reached when a natural amnesia (now called dissociation) occurs, and the subject finds it difficult to remember what happened during the trance.

In the 1940s, Christenson used a three-depth scale: 1) nonsusceptible, 2) various degrees of light trance, and 3) somnambulist trance. Since only two of his stages were trance depths, this actually revived the two-depth scale. From the military point of view, a two-stage depth analysis is most practical. Either the subject

Dissociation

Any trance state involves some degree of dissociation. Hypnosis is a deliberately-induced condition of dissociation. The subject's conscious mind is displaced by some part of his unconscious. That displacement is called "dissociation." Degrees of dissociation correspond to depths of trance.

The transition from light to deep trance in a two-stage scale, or from medium to deep on a three-stage scale, is placed at the point of dissociation. After dissociation begins, your conscious memory of what happened becomes partial, hazy, or completely absent. In this very suggestible condition, however, if the hypnotist suggests complete remembering, the subject will remember. On the other hand, if the hypnotist suggests complete forgetting, that also will happen.

can be made into an unknowing hypnoprogrammed person (amnesic and automatistic), or he cannot (non-susceptible or light depth). He defined the "light" stage as beginning at the point of obedience to suggestion:

> The point of transition between simple waking suggestion and light hypnotic phenomena may be placed provisionally at the point where the subject displays either a reluctance to resist or an inability to resist despite evident efforts...the distinction is evident in most individuals when they are first hypnotized. (Christenson, "Dynamics in Hypnotic Induction," p. 34)

To divide his "light" depth from his "somnambulist," he used two definitive signs: spontaneous dissociation amnesia, and waking hypnosis. The deep stage was a "full somnambulistic reaction" with amnesia and significant physiological involvement.

Three Stages: Slight, Deep, and Somnambulist—Bramwell divided the trance spectrum into three depth stages: slight, deep, and somnambulist. Like the others, he defined somnambulism as the depth characterized by natural amnesia. In 1902, August Forel published a similar three-stage depth analysis which was adopted by many writers after him.

1) Somnolence: a very light trance; subject can resist suggestions and open his eyes.

2) Light slumber or hypotaxis: subject cannot open his eyes (catalepsy), and is likely to comply with some suggestions, but will not be amnesic.

3) Profound sleep or somnambulism: natural posthypnotic amnesia; difficult suggestions are obeyed.

Stages Subdivided into Degrees—Cook divided the major stages of trance depth into seven substages, which he called degrees. His Fourth Degree began the Somnambulist Stages: "Absolute Obedience...subject completely loses his individuality and is a mere automaton in the hands of the operator...and when awakened he will have no recollection" (Cook, p. 95). His Sixth Degree was "Catalepsy...muscular rigidity." The Seventh was "Lethargy," his name for the state in which respiration and heart rate can be controlled by suggestion (now called coma, or profound trance).

Katkov's depth analysis had three stages, each with three degrees. He placed somnambulism in the Third Stage, Second Degree: subject communicates only with the hypnotist, can have positive hallucinations of any sense (but eyes must be closed), and may show partial spontaneous amnesias. His Third Stage, Third Degree was complete somnambulism: the subject's conscious mind is fully displaced; he passively awaits suggestions from the hypnotist; all deep trance phenomena are possible, including negative hallucinations, total amnesias (spontaneous or suggested), and age regression.

LeCron and Bordeaux followed Cook with a very detailed, sound analysis of phenomena associated with various depths of trance. The pair divided their scale into degrees ranging from 0, for insusceptible (no suggestions accepted or physical signs of trance observed) to a maximum of 50, the "Stuporous condition in which all spontaneous activity is inhibited."[1]

Fluttering of eyelids is listed at 3, appearance of rapport at 13, recognition of trance at 19. "Fixed stare when eyes are open" and pupillary dilation are at 29. They begin somnambulistic depth at 28. They list systemized posthypnotic amnesias at 32, considering them more difficult to induce than complete amnesia, which they placed at 31. They place age regression at 42, positive posthypnotic visual hallucinations at 43, and negative ones at 44.

Self-Report Scale

If a subject has experience in various trance depths, he can gauge for himself how deep he is by the way he feels. If the operator asks, "On a scale of 1 to 10, with 1 as the highest and 10 as the lowest, where are you now?" he is using a self-report scale.

Tart created this type of scale, which uses internally observable markers, as well as external ones. The listed internal mental signs were markers by which his subject could determine his comparative depth. Tart's scale is unique and humane in that some of its items measure depth by signs other than degree of submission to the hypnotist's will. His internal markers, here listed from lowest to greatest depth, include awareness of breathing, cessation of spontaneous mental activity, time becoming a meaningless concept, loss of awareness of the joke, loss of awareness of the environment, visual blackness, and physical relaxation. I think awareness of breathing is probably suggested rather than natural. The other markers, however, are all physiological phenomena.

---

[1] The LeCron and Bordeaux Scale is reproduced in Magonet, pp. 13-15.

Characteristics of Depth Stages

The hypnotized person lacks alertness and humor; he is literal and serious in his execution of the operator's wishes, seems to have lost all sense of the ludicrous, pursues one goal with disproportionate intensity, and pays little attention to matters and impressions which lie outside this purpose. He seems to have a contracted frame of reference...

- R. W. White, quoted in Moss, Hypnosis in Perspective, p. 138

This section lists observable characteristics of the main depth stages: light, medium, and deep.

Light

This trance depth is called light or lethargic. The subject feels noticeably relaxed, drowsy. He can still move about slightly, and is aware of all around him. He can talk, laugh, and answer questions. For some people, the light stage may not be much of a trance, merely a sort of waking suggestibility. For others, it is a true beginning of trance. A subject in light trance may be unable to open his eyes if eye catalepsy is suggested. He is also susceptible to any other catalepsy. The subject may have either muscle relaxation or muscle tension, a sleepiness or a hyperalertness, depending on what is being suggested. The operator may observe that the subject's eyelids have closed and are fluttering, or quivering.

According to LeCron and Bordeaux, the hypnotist can recognize that the subject is in trance before the subject can. Eventually, however, the subject becomes aware that he is in a condition that is different from his normal awakeness. In the light depth, a subject remembers all that happened.

Medium

At medium depth, the subject has a greater detachment from the environment. As he moves into deeper trance, his eyes are closed. In fact, an observer can measure the progression of the trance based on the subject's eyes. In the light trance, there is a stage in which the eyes close, and the eyelids quiver. In deeper trance, the quivering ceases.

> At first the pupils of the eyes will be noticeably contracted, and as the influence becomes intensified they gradually dilate and become very large, and in the profound stages the eyeballs will roll upward, as may be readily seen by lifting the eyelids. If, when in the somnambulistic state, the subject should be required to open his eyes, the eyeballs will usually assume their natural position. (Cook, p. 243)

Breathing becomes slower and deeper. The subject can display some amnesia, positive hallucinations, and obeys simple posthypnotic suggestions. At this depth the capacity for catalepsy is greater than in the light stage, and muscular rigidity can be suggested. There is greater suggested insensitivity to pain, and more noticeable automatism.

Deep (Somnambulist)

A person in somnambulist trance can produce any of the hypnotic phenomena. Their hypnotic behavior shows automatism, which is an inability to resist suggestions. Posthypnotic amnesias can be selective, systematized. Somnambulists revivify when age regression is suggested. Posthypnotic suggestions can be complicated, bizarre. Hallucinations may be detailed scenes or events, and the subject will believe the hallucination is real. They can do automatic writing. Anesthesia and catalepsy can be great enough for dental work, childbirth, surgery. The usual test for somnambulistic depth is a three-item test: 1) amnesia, 2) posthypnotic suggestion, and 3) positive or negative hallucination—in trance or by posthypnotic suggestion. A posthypnotic, negative, visual hallucination is considered the most difficult posthypnotic suggestion: the ultimate test.

Christenson described the physical signs of the somnambulist level:

> This appears to be a distinct state, qualitatively different from earlier stages...relaxed muscular tonus, a reduced breathing rate which falls to a minimum of 12 to 15 respirations per minute when he is ignored, general body flush, and reduced reactivity to outer stimulation, all suggestive of a state of rest or sleep. (p. 35)

Old-time European hypnosis researchers defined a somnambulist as any person capable of a trance deep enough that spontaneous dissociative amnesia takes place. At that level, three other significant trance phenomena also occur: catalepsy, automaticity, and amnesia. It is at this stage that serious ethical abuse can take place. Forel believed that, in the somnambulist state, the subject's will was “Catalepsy” vs. Somnambulism

Binet and Fere, two old-time French researchers, made a very interesting division of the somnambulist level into two opposing states which they called catalepsy and somnambulism. They said the cataleptic subject was the unfree type: an automaton. The prime characteristic of their “cataleptic” was

> ...automatism...it is, in fact, only the cataleptic subject who can be termed an automaton...catalepsy permits the mind to be handled with the same docility as the limbs...The suggestions offered to him are inevitably accepted, since he never resists them...a cataleptic subject ceases to have a personality...there is no cataleptic ego. (Binet and Fere, p. 143)

Their “somnambulist,” on the other hand, was a free spirit who just happened to be in a deep trance state!

> ...no automaton, but a person endowed with character, aversions, and preferences...In this state there is certainly an ego. The somnambulist’s intellectual condition may be compared to those dreams in which the sleeper actively intervenes, and displays judgment, critical sense, and sometimes even mind and will. (Ibid.)

They sum it up:

> The cataleptic subject is a machine, the somnambulist is a person. The first readily performs all the acts suggested, while the second often offers a resistance which may become troublesome to the experimenter. (Ibid., p. 288)

The next generations of experimenters spent much effort trying to find ways to suppress any possibility of accidentally creating a split personality with capacities for independent ego, when automatic behavior was wanted, hypnorobot cataleptics. In the public sector, however, there have developed an army of self-employed mediums and psychics, doing their own trance-thing. Unfettered by an operator, they are Binet and Fere’s “somnambulists,” displaying independent (though dissociated) mind and will in deep trance.

completely overruled. Christianson described the characteristics of the deepest state, as viewed by a military man:

> Posthypnotic suggestions will be executed, usually with amnesia, and various other phenomena can be induced, for example, catalepsy, memory improvement, greater motor facility, heightened concentration, physiological and biochemical changes, and psychological dysfunctions such as delusions or hallucinations.
>
> The most reliable single criterion for a full hypnotic state is that the subject can open his eyes and still remain in a trance... (p. 34)...the subject becomes more literal in his thought processes...the subject frequently displays greatly improved insight into his mental processes.* (p. 36)

Waking Trance

The “normal” deep trance state is silent inertia, unless suggestions are being acted on. Waking trance (waking hypnosis) results from the combined effects of susceptibility, depth, and specific suggestions to open one’s eyes and act normal, yet to stay deeply hypnotized. In its linguistic root, the word “somnambulism” means sleepwalking. A common definer of somnambulism is this ability of a deeply hypnotized person to open his eyes and to walk and talk as if not hypnotized—and yet remain hypnotized. Only persons who have reached a somnambulist depth are capable of looking and acting awake in trance.

Candy/Arlene could be in Taiwan for days, still in trance, still obedient to the distant Dr. Jensen. She was an open eyes. When deeply hypnotized, she was fully able to function like an awake person, walking around and conversing intelligently. If her EEG had been tested, it too would have looked normal.

The somnambulist is amnesic for time in trance, unless specifically instructed to remember it:

> The patient in hypnosis can rise from his chair, walk in the streets for two hours, carry on lengthy conversations with people he meets, even see a movie, but upon return to normal waking, will remember nothing that occurred during the state of hypnosis. He has no way of accounting for the lapse of time... (Gindes, 1951)

Carl Sextus, a nineteenth century Danish hypnotist, described a revealing incident of waking hypnosis, used as a free hypnotic entertainment for his party. He began by giving a complex set of posthypnotic suggestions to a 23-year-old subject whom he had hypnotized "five or six times" before:

> ...on the next Saturday, March 5th at 8 o'clock p.m., he was to leave his home on Norrebro Gade, and go to my residence...after having asked for me and spoken to me, he was to perform a number of insignificant actions in an exact order as stated, after which he was to fall into a deep sleep... (Sextus, Hypnotism, 1893 ed., pp. 139-141)

At precisely 8:25 PM, Sextus' doorbell rang. When the hypnotist opened the door, he saw his subject standing outside in a posthypnotic revivification of the original trance:

> [He]...held himself rather stiff, and spoke with a certain dull accent, repeated exactly what had been told him, and performed the different acts in exact order. He stared at me without any expression in his eyes, and after he had accomplished what had been told him to do, he fell into a deep and unconscious sleep, from which he could not be awakened by any of us, by either speaking to him or touching him...There were now several experiments performed, to convince us that the subject was completely insensible to any pain. I placed under his right arm a mark an inch long with a red hot knitting needle, without any motion or sign that he felt it. I put a strong needle through his hand, so that it projected a quarter of an inch on the other side, during which (he being commanded) sat with a happy and smiling expression on his face.
>
> ...[I] now awoke the sleeper by a sharp shout. He opened his eyes and gazed about with a dazed look, evidently surprised at finding himself in a strange house, surrounded by a party... (Ibid.)

A somnambulist can act "as if he were wide awake and may even deceive observers with his seeming wakefulness." (Erickson, "Hypnosis in Medicine," p. 646) Even skilled hypnotists have trouble distinguishing waking hypnosis from normal waking behavior, for there is no head lolling, body slumping, or eye closure. On the other hand, Sextus above described certain discernable characteristics of that waking sleep. (It can also be detected by the acute mental sensitivity of another person in deep trance.) Christenson described similar, and additional, physical clues for the state of waking hypnosis:

> There is a definite change in facial expression and voice, with an air of abstraction, indifference to surroundings, and a reduction of outwardly directed activity unless it is suggested by a hypnotist...The subject who is in a deep somnambulistic state will often not seem to be in a nonwaking state at all...To directed observation, however, there are a number of characteristic changes. The expression in the eyes will become somewhat vacant or inward-looking at the moment of induction, and may remain so. When not stimulated, the subject tends to lapse into a typical posture, head dropped slightly forward on the chest and attention apparently directed inwardly... [the "hypnotic posture"] (p. 35)

Coma

There is a stage of even greater depth—not described on any of the above scales—but which is well known. M.H. Erickson called it "plenary trance" or "coma" and viewed it with extreme respect. This state is best for major surgery which will use no other anesthetic but trance. In coma, you CANNOT MOVE. The inability to move in the coma state is not a result of verbal suggestion. It is a physiological result of the trance depth. Pavlov would have explained, "the motor analyzer is shut down." A modern neural systems analyzer would say: "Information is not being transmitted to the motor output stage of the brain to become available for speaking, or any other action of voluntary muscles."

The subject who is in a coma cannot speak or respond, but at the unconscious level he remembers all that takes place. It usually takes extended training (repeated hypnoses over a period of weeks or months), to develop an ability for coma depth. Many hypnotists never see anybody this deep. M.H. Erickson explained:

> ...in that [plenary] trance state you can ask him to do certain things such as increase the flow of blood to the right kidney. You can test this by probing with intraureteral catheters...I have induced a plenary trance by simply suggesting that the person go into a deeper, more profound trance, that he feel himself becoming more and more stuporous.
>
> He retains his contact with you, he hears you, but the process of hearing you is slowed down; that is, there is an immense time lag. If you ask, "Do you hear me?" you can perhaps count to 15...20...25 before he will indicate that he does. (in Estabrooks, Hypnosis: Current Problems, pp. 255-257)

Books on Trance Induction

Edmonston's 1981 book, Induction of Hypnosis, describes or quotes verbatim a vast number of historical references, many rare, to hypnotic induction, starting with Hindu, Egyptian, and Greek methods. He then works the reader forward, chapter by chapter, to modern times.

> [It is]...a history of the rituals, rites, and incantations through which individuals have attempted to produce in one another the condition we now call hypnosis...what I have attempted to do is to present the major developmental trends in hypnotic induction through the centuries... (Edmonston, pp. ix-x)

Edmonston's underlying theme is that trance induction is not limited to methods titled "hypnosis." He includes many of the names and settings in which the essential phenomena of hypnosis occur: any trance that was created and directed by one person, purposefully influencing another person.

Other books on induction are: Elman, 1964; Erickson, Hershman & Secter, 1961 (transcripts of the weekend seminars for doctors, dentists, and psychologists); Hartland, 1966, 1971; Kroger, 1963 (second ed. 1977); Meares, 1960; Teitelbaum, 1965; and Hughes, The Induction of Conviction.

The Physiology of Trance

Suggestion Causes Physiologic Changes

☑

Brains Are Exciting

☑

Biophysics

In spite of its importance, information about inhibitory mechanisms has not yet been integrated into the general body of scientific knowledge, and no chapter is devoted to this subject in most neurophysiological, psychological, and pharmacological textbooks. This lack of interest is surprising because as Morgan wrote eighty years ago, "When physiologists have solved the problem of inhibition they will be in a position to consider that of volition"...

Delgado, Physical Control of the Mind, p. 155

Delgado was a prominent research neurologist and surgeon in his era. For years, he experimented on human epilepsy patients, by using radio signals to electrodes implanted in various sites in their brains (reticular activating system, thalamus, septum, or caudate nucleus) to excite or inhibit. His 1968 observation about the omission of information in textbooks on the physiology of hypnosis remains true. No elementary psychology text, that I know of, discusses the physiology of trance (other than to mention the reticular activating system). Some textbooks claim there is no known physiology of trance and, therefore, no proof that hypnosis is more than a mental idea. That, of course, is not so.

Every thought has a physiological basis. Every state of consciousness has a physiological basis. Every shift of consciousness, up or down, is a physiological event. I am sure that much more information on the physiology of trance does exist, but it has been hard to find. Most of the information appears to have been labeled top secret, and kept from public knowledge. Perhaps it is stashed in the drawer next to wherever they keep the design specs for a nuclear bomb: SECRET, DON'T TELL. I agree that the design for a nuclear bomb should be secret. The physiology of trance, on the other hand, should be admitted to exist and be taught to students.

Suggestion Causes Physiologic Changes

Such proposals as "You will feel sad because your little girl has recently died" may often border on the sadistic.

- Marcuse, Hypnosis: Fact and Fiction, p. 170

As in biofeedback training, mere hypnotic suggestion can cause physiologic changes. Emotions that are suggested to a hypnotized subject, or associated with a hallucination, or generated by abreaction in revivification of past experience, all cause physiological responses, as would the real event. Thus, a terrifying hallucination can cause a damaging heart attack, because the subject's heart will be as stressed during the hallucination as if the event were real.

Von Schrenck (1900) reported a case in which a medical student hypnotized a female cousin and impregnated her. When he learned she was pregnant, he again hypnotized her and suggested to her that she would have a miscarriage at a set time in the near future. She miscarried at his stated time.

Heron said that the old-time hypnotist/physicians "all experimented with hypnotic anesthesia in obstetrics." Some claimed they were able to control the length of labor, even to arrange the time of day when labor began, by post-hypnotic suggestion. In the 19th century, Braid helped nursing mothers to produce more milk, by hypnotic suggestion. The opposite--inhibiting milk-production in a mother who had lost her baby--was also reported by many hypnotists (Esdaile, Mohr, Heyer).

> Even results over which the will has normally no control, such as sneezing, secretion, reddening and growing pale, alterations of temperature and heartbeat, menstruation, action of the bowels, etc., may take place in consequence of the operator's firm assertions during the hypnotic trance... (William James, The Principles of Psychology, 1890, p. 602)

Volgyesi linked hypnotic behavior to the attributes enabling human survival by showing that bleeding can be controlled by hypnosis alone. He wrote an article called "Pavlovian Syndrome" about unconscious self-hypnosis as a protective measure in periods of starvation. Dr. Reiter reviewed the European literature on control of subtle body functions, by suggestion, under hypnosis. Therein, he cited studies on the power of suggestion to regulate blood flow after a tooth extraction, control heart rate, and treat psychosomatic ailments. He also found criminal suggestions used to create organ failures! (Reiter, "The Influence of Hypnosis on Somatic Fields of Function," in LeCron, ed. Experimental Hypnosis)

Hypnotic anesthesia is another clear proof for the physiological basis of trance. It not only diminishes the outward signs of pain, but it also inhibits the associated internal pain responses. Heart rate, breathing, and galvanic skin reflexes are all decreased, rather than increased. The message of injury does not reach the brain, if blocked by hypnotic suggestion.

Induction Physiology: The "Relaxation Response"

Two American research hypnotists, Benson and Edmonston, separately researched body changes associated with trance/hypnosis. They called the characteristic physiological changes that happen during induction the relaxation response. They observed that relaxing tends to bring on this state; and this state tends to bring on relaxation. They equated relaxation with the induction of trance, or hypnosis. Their careful research has become widely understood and accepted.

> ...simple meditative techniques resulted in such notable physiological changes as decreased metabolism, heart rate, blood pressure and rate of breathing, as well as distinctive brainwave patterns...(Goleman and Thurman, MindScience, p.ix)

Physiological Effects of Induction—Visible signs of spreading inhibition are a deep sigh, a slight quiver of the eyelids as they are closing, and deeper and more regular breathing. Platonov (1959) noted that arterial pressure and pace of respiration lower as trance deepens. The slower the subject enters trance, the slower the arterial pressure drops. Other physiological effects of trance are reduced oxygen consumption, slowing of brain wave patterns from beta toward alpha and theta, and reduction of heart rate.

Trance experiences vary so wildly in their depth, emotional quality, context and content that it is easy to think that they also differ physiologically. In fact, however, the physiology of trance induction--hypnosis, relaxation, meditation, trance, centered prayer, or whatever else it is called—is always the same. In terms of physiology, all inductions are the same.

Is "Relaxation" the Same as "Trance"?—Benson compared what happens to the body during conventional "Hypnosis with Suggested Deep Relaxation" to Transcendental Meditation, Zen, Yoga, Autogenic Training, Progressive Relaxation, and Sentic Cycles. He found similar physiological responses in all. (Benson, The Relaxation Response, pp. 70-71) He deduced that all were, therefore, physiologically the same state. In Hypno- sis and Relaxation (1981), Edmonston painstakingly reviewed evidence on the neurophysiological state of the body during a similar variety of trance inductions. He also observed that all the common inductions (biofeedback, meditation, yoga, hypnosis, etc.) had the same physiological results, which he summed up as a pattern of relaxation.

Certain researchers compared brain waves of persons told to become hypnotized with those of persons told to close their eyes and relax. Because they found equal amounts of theta, they assumed that proved that the hypnotized people were merely "relaxed." (Tebecis et al., 1975, p. 5) Edmonston, however, protested that conclusion. He said they had actually proved that the relaxed people were also in trance!

> The fact that they have used the word awake to denote the condition can easily lead the careless reader to an erroneous conclusion. (Edmonston, Hypnosis and Relaxation, p. 150)

In similar research, alpha densities turned out to be the same for persons given relaxation instruction and for those given a conventional hypnosis induction. (Edmonston and Grotevant, 1975) Those results also prove—not that hypnosis is not real—but that relaxation is an effective induction technique. The use of progressive relaxation as a hypnotic induction technique has been studied thoroughly and well documented. Persons who are told to "pretend you are hypnotized" are also not valid controls for an experimental comparison with hypnotized persons, because "pretend you're hypnotized" is a standard (and quite effective) hypnosis induction technique. Studies showing EEG similarities between persons in hypnosis and persons in "light sleep" (Chertok and Kramarz, 1959) do not disprove the hypnotic state. They merely confirm that light sleep is a hypnotic (hypnagogic) state of consciousness.

The research by Benson and Edmonston should have cleared public confusion and settled this issue. Unfortunately, it did not. Many trance-inducers continued to swear that what they do is not "trance," and most certainly is not "hypnosis." Hypnotists in private conversation, however, say "It's all hypnosis." More precisely, it is all trance. Different names for trance exists because it is better for business to use a new, different name and avoid the negative associations of old, familiar words like "lowered consciousness" or "hypnosis."

Brains Are Exciting!

... the nerve may be taken to be a relay with essentially two states of activity: firing and repose...

- Norbert Wiener, Cybernetics, p. 142

Neuroscience is the study of the physical basis of the mind and other nervous functions. (Neurobiology means practically the same thing.) Its basic concept is that all mental functions can be traced, at root, to physical processes happening in the brain. Neuroscience combines biological, biochemical, and biophysical sciences to understand--and attempt to control--the physical aspect of psyche, the brain/mind.

Neuroscience thinks of mind in computer terms. The brain is a wetware machine, comparable to the hardware of a computer. Beliefs and knowledge are the software. Those mental software programs are called the code. The code consists of two different parts: a set of data (object), and a procedure (intention) that applies itself to the data. The procedure is a sequence of mental actions that does something to the data.

Your brain is a fully programmable biocomputer. It easily learns to speak English, Chinese, Russian (or all three) if exposed, in childhood, to those languages. With some effort, it can also learn the languages of music, mathematics, and computer programming. Learning and memory are based in neural networks.

Brain Anatomy

The brain is as large as a grapefruit, as heavy as a cabbage, and contains more than a hundred billion nerve cells. It is the most complexly organized thing in the known universe. Its billions of neurons are the most delicate cells in your body. In life, they are a marvel. After death, the membranes and receptors of neurons quickly begin to break down.

Brains are as individual as faces. Every brain is different, in some way, from every other. The brains of men and women are very different, and that difference is obvious long before birth. The basic anatomy of every brain, however, is similar: brainstem, limbic system, left and right hemispheres, and cortex. Those organs are all made up of neurons. The outer brain cap (cortex) is made up of specialized cells which are tightly organized into an array of tiny cylinder shapes and are comparable to a computer's parallel processing system. The brain's anatomy divides these parallel processing computing units up into a multitude of subcomputers.

Reticular Activating System

Pavlov hypothesized that a person's state of consciousness is controlled by a brain center which helps to govern excitation and inhibition of the cerebral cortex. In 1949, two physiologists (an Italian, Giuseppe Moruzzi, and an American, Horace Magoun) found the reticular activating system (RAS), the brain mechanism which controls the overall activity state of the cortex. It is the doorbell for your upper mind. The RAS sends streams of impulses to your thalamus and cortex which control wakefulness and attention, drowsiness and sleep, excitation and inhibition. It triggers the beginning, or end, of trance.

Pavlov also predicted that the governing center for shifts in state of consciousness would be part of the cortex. Here he was wrong. Moruzzi and Magoun found the RAS considerably below the cortex. It is down in the brainstem, at the top of the spinal cord. The brainstem handles warnings based on incoming sensory data, and autonomic functions such as breathing and heartbeat. The reticular activating system is a specialized part of the brainstem which controls our level of alertness. It is a long, narrow neural structure that stretches from the top to the bottom of the brainstem. The power center of the RAS is the reticular formation, a mass of tissues about the size and shape of a finger, located on the axis of the upper brainstem. The reticular formation directs the rest of the reticular activating system and has connecting dendrites with sites all over the cortex.

Your brain is wired so that incoming sensory nerve signals affect not only their ultimate cortex receiving area, but, by passing through the RAS, also can affect the entire cortex. It can put you to sleep or awaken you. If the RAS identifies a stimulus as unfamiliar, or worthy of extra attention, it may alert the entire cortex. With the cortex alerted, you focus harder on the matter to be considered and amplify the input. Your mind, literally, becomes more able to detect and analyzes normally overlooked tiny details in this out-of-the-ordinary situation.

The RAS controls general inhibition as well as general excitation. When you lie down and close your eyes, sensory input is reduced. The RAS automatically reduces cortical stimulation level. You become more and more relaxed, and shift toward trance, then toward sleep. Thus, the RAS controls the beginning and end of trance. The RAS system also sends signals to muscles that maintain muscle tone, as well as signals which coordinate detailed muscular movements. It is the motor analyzer that Pavlov theorized went off-line early in hypnosis, causing the phenomenon of catalepsy.[1] Damage to the reticular activating system can cause long-term coma, a sleep from which the sleeper cannot wake.

Biophysics

> ...since every reaction and thought seems to produce an evoked potential* [readable on EEG or MEG], *the DC system seems directly involved in every phase of mental activity... Variations in the current from one place to another in the perineural system apparently form part of every decision, every interpretation, every command, every vacillation, every feeling, and every word of interior monologue, conscious or unconscious, that we conduct in our heads.
>
> - Becker, The Body Electric, p. 241

---

1. The thalamus, septum, and caudate nucleus also have important inhibiting functions.

Every living cell produces electricity. All living things generate electrical currents. There is a tiny direct current flowing throughout the nervous system of the human body. Electric currents, however weak, always generate electromagnetic fields. Biophysics is the study of electric currents in cells, nerves, muscles, brain, and the magnetic fields those bioelectric currents produce. Your nervous system has electric current, and that current generates a biomagnetic field.

EEG

In 1875, Richard Caton claimed to have observed an electric field around the heads of animals. In 1924, Hans Berger, a German psychiatrist, stuck platinum wires in his son's scalp and proved the existence of that field by recording the first EEG (electroencephalogram). The EEG's recording pen marked, on paper, a series of rhythmic changes in potential voltage. Berger, at first, assumed the whole brain had only one wave. He soon learned the waves differed, depending on where he put the electrodes on the head, and on what was going on in that part of the head at that time.

Now, EEG technicians use up to 32 channels, and take readings from all over the head. The higher the average level of brain wave activity, the greater the susceptibility to hypnosis. Your hypnotic susceptibility is related to your bioelectric physiology. Now, the EEG, literally, has the power to distinguish life from death; a flat EEG signifies brain death. Certain types of thinking, or states of mind, cause particular types of brain waves. Researchers have even identified the intention wave, surprise wave, and double-take wave.

A magnetoencephalogram (MEG) gives an even more precise image of mental operations than an EEG. That is possible because the brain's "magnetic field passes right through the dura, skull bones, and scalp without being diffused..." (Becker, The Body Electric, pp. 240-241)

Can an EEG Detect Hypnosis?

Trance Induction Observable on EEG—Alpha and theta are the states of consciousness you pass through while going to, and rousing from, sleep. They are also the EEG states associated with trance induction. The EEG of a person in an inductive stage will show alpha and theta brain waves. Studies have shown specific EEG changes associated with hypnosis: spindle and slow delta activity. (Barker and Burgwin, 1948, 1949; Schwarz et al., 1955; Marenina, 1959). However, a trance state is identifiable by EEG only in the inductive stage. After that, it can be concealed.

> ...the hypnotic process can be seen to consist of a seemingly opposite pair of phenomena: first, during the induction process, a state of maximal attention to one group of stimuli, combined with an obliteration of all others, which results in a loss of Ego boundaries [consciousness] and an incorporation of the hypnotist into the subject. Later, in the fully developed stage, a diffusion of sensorimotor relations occurs with a retention of a dominant but repressed link to the hypnotist by the incorporation of a fragmentary image of him in the re-expanded borders of the Ego. (Kubie and Margolin, "The Process of Hypnotism and the Nature of the Hypnotic State")

Waking Hypnosis Not Discernible on EEG—Pavlov explained the same phenomenon years earlier: "Hypnosis involves the reduction of organism-environment integration to a thin line of interpersonal communication," operator to subject. A hypnotically split-off personality, such as the Arlene part of Candy, could operate with just that thread of connection, a thin mental tether, to Dr. Jensen. Her hypnotic tether would be undetectable by any EEG technology known outside the military.

Bcause suggestion can cause physiological changes, the EEG profile of a hypnotic subject becomes whatever the operator suggests. Barker and Burgwin (1948, 1949) showed that EEG activity in hypnotized persons matched suggested behavior. If sleep and relaxation were suggested, the subject's slow low-voltage waveforms increased. Waking-type activities performed in deep trance resulted in waking-type waveforms. Thus, if a somnambulist is given suggestions requiring waking hypnosis, even his brain wave patterns obey. His EEG, at first glance, will look like that of a waking state. A hypnotic subject can also mimic the delta waves of sound sleep, yet be unconsciously recording an operator's suggestions.

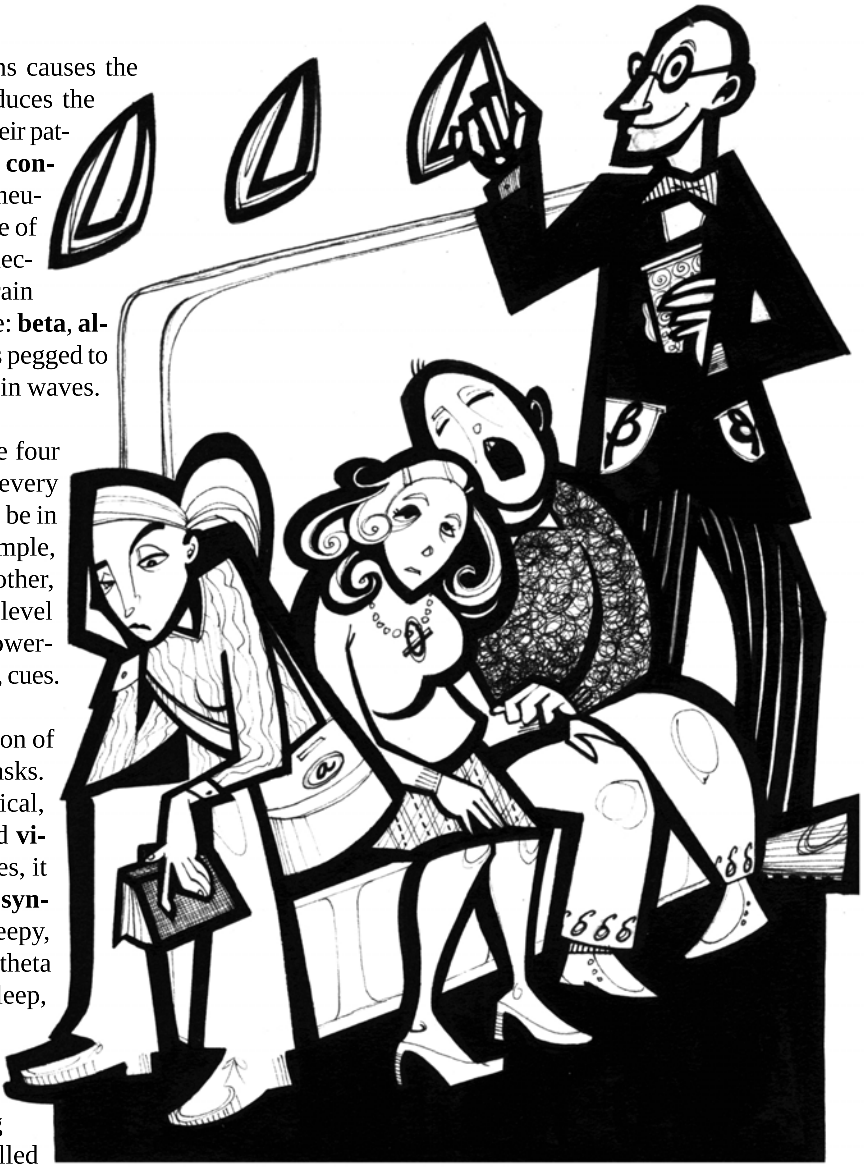
Alpha, Beta, Delta, Theta

The pulsing of millions of neurons causes the brain's electromagnetic aura. It also produces the brain waves that an EEG machine records. Their patterned pulses add up to the mind's state of consciousness or level of consciousness. The neurons pulse in a variety of patterns. Every state of consciousness has its own characteristic bioelectric patterns. Named for each dominant brain wave pattern, the four main wave patterns are: beta, alpha, theta, and delta. Each of those names is pegged to a precise cycles-per-second speed of the brain waves.

We pass in and out of each of those four basic states of consciousness, repeatedly, every day. Different parts of the brain are likely to be in different patterns, at the same time. For example, one part may be idling in alpha, while another, busier, part is in wide-awake beta. Thus, our level of consciousness is constantly raising, or lowering, in response to various external, or internal, cues.

Beta (14-28 cps) is a mental condition of fully awake and under pressure to complete tasks. This is our state for the daily grind, for logical, problem solving actions, for fear, worry, and visual activity. When part of our brain relaxes, it slips from beta down into the slower, more synchronized, frequency of alpha. If we get sleepy, the waves slow and synchronize yet more to theta rate. If they slow all the way into genuine sleep, we are in delta. Delta (½-4 cps) is the mental state of a deep, true sleep (not hypnotic).

The route from beta, descending through alpha, and then down to theta is called lowering consciousness. The EEG waveforms are used as a crude physiological marker for the main states of consciousness: beta, alpha, theta, and delta.



The Hypnoid States: Alpha and Theta

Alpha (8-13 cps) and theta (4-8 cps) are between beta and delta. They are the states with hypnoid potential and trance qualities.

Alpha—People tend to phase in and out of alpha multiple times per minute. If a person closes his eyes (a common induction aid), his brain wave component of alpha (and also theta) increases. When alpha goes up, his level of consciousness goes down. D. R. Engstrom reported, in his 1970 doctoral thesis, that any method that increases alpha production makes people more susceptible to hypnosis. A higher average number of alpha waves is a marker for persons who are more susceptible to hypnosis. Children normally have more alpha than adults and are more hypnotizable. London, Hart, and Leibovitz (1968) found a large difference between brain wave patterns in women who were susceptible to hypnosis and in those who were not susceptible.

Whatever increases alpha production is also inductive. The alpha state is a natural light meditation, a contemplative, relaxed mood. Anxiety reduces alpha. Alpha is lightly hypnagogic, lowered consciousness, relaxed wakefulness, daydreaming, catnapping, light trance—from which we can bring themselves back to alertness instantly. In alpha, critical, evaluative thought is reduced, but creative thought is enhanced. The conscious mind becomes more open to ideas from the unconscious, or to outside suggestions.

Theta—Theta is a state of deep, potentially creative, thinking. Theta waves (4-8 cps) are the slowest, except for deep sleep (delta). When a person becomes very tired or bored, his brain may begin bursts of theta. In more consistent theta, people may not be very responsive to outside signals. They are in trance—or in a hypnagogic state.

Hypnagogic States

In the process of falling asleep we relax and let go of the connection with conscious mind which operates self-control and awareness. We pass through alpha, then theta, and on into the sleep waves of delta. Our transition time spent in alpha and theta is called hypnagogic. It happens as we fall asleep and, again (in reverse order), as we wake up.

> As slumber steals over us, our cortical vigilance does not fall at a uniform rate. It shifts up and down, tending only gradually to sag lower and lower. Alpha rhythm appears in bursts, but less and less often, with longer and longer periods of slow waves in the EEG. Little by little control of our ideas escapes us. At intervals we "come to," realizing we have just had some rather queer thoughts about something... Suddenly we may realize that we have been talking inwardly to ourselves. (Oswold, Sleep, pp. 43-44)

Does everybody have hypnagogic episodes? We know that everybody dreams. Dreaming happens in a light stage of sleep, but the hypnagogic is different from dreaming. Sleep researcher Oswold said everybody experiences the hypnagogic condition.

> Some people describe strange experiences while drowsy--visions, voices, bodily jerks and bizarre sensations. Do other people not have these or do we all have them, but mostly forget? I believe the latter is true. Unless one is roused, or determines to rouse oneself sufficiently to make a written record...all trace of these experiences is finally lost. (Oswold, p. 43)

Addictive Aspects of Trance

We yearn to return to that which felt good. That is natural operant conditioning, automatic self-programming. It feels good to enter trance. Why? The explanation is physiological:

> When you go into an altered state, you transfer into right brain, which results in the internal release of the body's own opiates, enkephalins and Beta-endorphins, chemically almost identical to opium. (Transcript, Valley of the Sun Publishing Lecture Tape, Malibu, CA, 1984, p. 6)

After trance, you also may feel:

> ...unlocalized feelings of exhilaration and well-being...There are, therefore, two main direct effects of hypnotic trances: first, the suggestibility during the trance phase itself; and second, the general, mildly euphoric sense of well-being immediately following the hypnotic trance. (Verdier, p. 69)

The rush of pleasurable cortical excitation, as you enter trance, tends to bring you back for more. So does the generalized feeling of relaxation and well-being that follows.

Alpha-specialist, Jodi Lawrence, disagreed. She believed the ability to have hypnogogic experiences ranged across a spectrum and correlated with hypnotic susceptibility:

> ...rigid people with repressively structured lives are "less able to let go" and fantasize, less able to express their inner feelings and thoughts than people who are more relaxed and open in their attitudes. (Lawrence, Alpha Brain Waves, p. 51)

Technically, the hypnogogic state that occurs just before waking has a separate name, hypnopompic. Usually, however, both hypnogogic and hypnopompic periods are lumped together and called "hypnogogic." Hypnogogic experiences tend to be more pronounced in the morning, perhaps because the conscious mind has been off-line for a longer time.

Self-programming in Hypnogogic—The hypnagogic stage is a natural trance, a suggestible state of mind.

> ....In the twilight stage, one is less able to criticize, or to ignore, new ideas...Light sleep and drowsy stages may make you as suggestible as if you're actually hypnotized. (Ibid., p. 53)

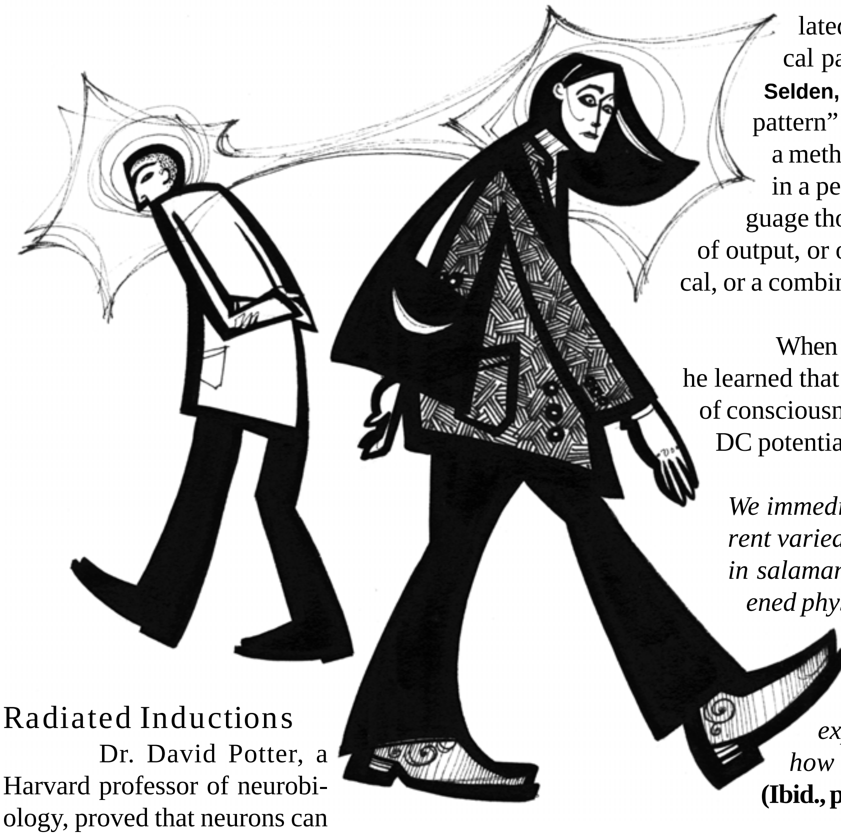
Coue first pointed out the usefulness of this natural trance state for self-programming. You can give your unconscious mind suggestions during either your evening or morning hypnagogic periods. If you wrestle with a problem in your mind as you are falling asleep, in the morning you may find an answer awaiting your conscious mind. The hypnogogic is a natural crossover time, when you can learn from, and instruct your unconscious. For example, you can tell yourself, before you fall asleep, what time you must wake up in the morning. The hypnagogic is also a naturally spiritual time when you may ask humbly for direction and receive guidance.



Radiated Inductions

Dr. David Potter, a Harvard professor of neurobiology, proved that neurons can communicate via electrical, as well as chemical, signals. The first stimulating of neurons by means of an electric signal sent through the air is credited to Galvani, a medical doctor who studied the effect of electricity on animals. In 1786, he discovered that the

> ...leg muscle of a frog placed at some distance from the spark of an electrostatic machine—a device for generating sparks—would twitch if touched by a scalpel when the machine was turned on. Experiments in the remote stimulation of nerves with electricity were not conducted again for more than a hundred years... (Brodeur, Ch. 2)

Every pulse of electric current—in an axon, or anywhere else in the universe—generates an electromagnetic field around itself: "...every electric evoked potential is accompanied by a magnetic evoked potential." (Becker and Selden, p. 241). Every human being's brain and body, therefore, generate an electromagnetic field. Magnetometer readings have proven the existence of the brain's weak, but very real, electromagnetic field. That field is not diffused by the skull, or dura, or air. It passes freely through and, holding its form, radiates outside the body.

Any electromagnetic field can be influenced by another, nearby, electromagnetic field, because nerve cells respond to electromagnetic fields as well as to electrical impulses. Becker, and other researchers, have shown that direct current, magnetic field, or microwaves when "modulated in various ways can force specific electrical patterns upon parts of the brain" (Becker and Selden, p. 319). The forcing of a "specific electrical pattern" upon part of a person's brain can be used as a method of trance induction, or to insert a thought in a person's mind, or to stimulate an English-language thought in their pre-speech center. The source of output, or of reception, can be mechanical, or biological, or a combination of the two.

When Becker studied direct current in animal brains, he learned that current flow varied according to their state of consciousness! Then he did similar experiments on the DC potentials of human brains:

> We immediately found that the back-to-front current varied with changes in consciousness just as in salamanders. It was strongest during heightened physical or mental activity, it declined during rest, and it reversed direction in both normal sleep and anesthesia. This knowledge led directly to the experiments...that taught us much about how hypnosis and pain perception work. (Ibid., p. 116)

The Current of Injury Reverses Polarity

Becker began his experiments assuming that, in hypnoanalgesia, the pain was felt but somehow denied. However, his experiments proved that > ...it was a real blockage of pain perception. It seems that the brain can shut off pain by altering the direct-current potentials in the rest of the body "at will." There's every reason to suppose that pain control through biofeedback or yoga likewise works by using an innate circuit for attenuating the pain signal... (Ibid.)

The current that sends a message of body damage to the brain has a different polarity from the usual rule of positive brain and spinal cord, negative extremities. Becker called that message, communicated by means of reversed polarity, positive instead of negative, the current of injury. His experiments showed that anesthetic also reversed nerve current polarity from negative to positive. As the anesthetic took effect, negative potentials in the patient's extremities weakened, even vanished. If the patient was rendered completely, deeply anesthetized, "the potentials often reversed entirely, the extremities becoming positive and the brain and spine negative." Becker conducted further experiments with the help of an expert hypnotist. After the hypnotist gave a trained somnambulist suggestions of extreme arm numbness, Becker tested polarities:

> In each case, I found that the frontal negative > potential of the head became less negative, often reaching zero, as the client attained deep trance. The reading changed in the same direction as in anesthesia, only not as far... (Becker, p. 239)

So, the brain can shut off pain by reversing direct current potentials.[1] Becker, working with the hypnotist, then demonstrated that the brain can control and change these body electrocurrents when the change is suggested under deep hypnosis. He also recognized that he had found a physiological proof of hypnosis: "We found we could use this difference [in current direction] to determine whether a person was really hypnotized or just cooperating." (Ibid.) The CIA had that on their 1950s goals list: a foolproof way to know if a person was really hypnotized or just pretending. By now, maybe they already knew what Becker thought he had just discovered.

Neurons

Specialized cells called neurons perform the physical work and make the mental magic of mind. Instructions given in hypnosis are ultimately commands to neurons. All the brain structures are made up of neurons. Every habit is something that happens, fundamentally, at the neuron level. Every time you do something again, you reinforce the synaptic paths for doing that behavior.

There are nearly a trillion neurons in the entire human nervous system. There are many types of neurons. They vary wildly in size, shape, and function. Neurons have chemical, bioelectric, and biomagnetic capabilities. The total number of potential connections between those neurons approaches infinity. As we learn, our neurons literally grow and make new connections that model that learning. New nerve fibers grow and branch out from the tips of earlier branches, and new neuron connections are forged. Neurons are the ultimate communicators.[2] They use electricity, chemistry, and magnetism to communicate.

Most neurons have a main cell body, plus a tail called an axon. Pulses of electricity travel along the axon fibers away from each cell center at periodic intervals. The frequency of pulses depend on the neuron's degree of excitation. A neuron fires from one to sixty pulses a second down its axon tail. It fires one pulse per second when at rest, its most inhibited state. It sends sixty pulses a second in its most excited state.

Axon lengths vary. Axons from neuron to neuron in your brain may be as short as a few centimeters or as long as the diameter of your brain. Axons that go from the central nervous system to body extremities may be much longer. The far end of an axon splits into myriad branches. Each branch ends in a bouton, a connector that settles itself close to the surface of another neuron.

The outside of a brain neuron is completely covered with barnacle-like connecting boutons from other neurons. The neuron's surface also has many extensions, called dendrites. The cell's outgrowth of dendrites increases its available area for the boutons of other neurons to snuggle in. Every neuron is, inextricably, part of a larger neural community, with potential instant sharing of information.

Chemical Communication—One of the ways in which a neuron can affect other neurons is by squirting any of a wide variety of chemicals, called neurotransmitters, from its axon tip across the synapse (gap) into receptors in a neighboring neuron. The pulsed electrical signals that come down an axon are translated into neurotransmitters at the axon tip. Each type of neurotransmitter has both a distinct shape and distinct magnetic characteristics. They shoot out of the bouton's transmitter-producing sacs like pellets blasted out of a shotgun. They are propelled across the sliver-size gap between the bouton and into the receptor which the adjacent neuron has grown for that purpose.

Electrical Communication—Any induction is a physiological event, because brain function is physiological. The bioelectric state of a neuron is either off, or on, because it is either firing or not firing. Pavlov called the state of firing, excitation. He called the state of not firing, inhibition. He also used the word "inhibition" to mean the slowing down of activity in the higher brain which results in trance. He called lowering consciousness, spreading inhibition.

Pavlov was theorizing that level of consciousness results from the dynamic interaction of two opposing neural functions: excitation and inhibition. In his era, neuronal synapses and their firing patterns had not yet been discovered. We now know that he was correct. A neuron that is not firing is inhibited. Anything that slows down the firing rate of neurons-or completely prevents them from firing—is inductive.

Excitation in one neuron can spread to surrounding neurons. A bunch of excited neurons may take over other brain centers, exerting more and more brain control. Inhibition has a necessary, natural, protective function in the brain: "an enormous synaptic powder barrel which would explode in epileptic convulsions in the absence of inhibitory elements." (Delgado, Physical Control of the Mind, p. 156) Inhibition helps neurons to ignore messages that are not for them. Inhibition activity balances the excitatory firing capacity. Inhibition is not a passive process but an

---

[1] Pain relief is one of the standard uses of hypnosis. I used to think hypnotic anesthesia was merely a negative hallucination. Suggestion in any form, during trance by any name, if accepted by a susceptible person's unconscious, can relieve pain (or cause it). Becker's research clarified the mechanism involved.

[2] One of the marvels of modern science is that researchers can insert a tiny glass electrode into a living nerve cell, stimulate it to send a message, and then actually listen to the ensuing conversation between it and other cells amplified over loudspeakers: a patterned communication. (Montgomery, p. 26)

> ...active restraint, like holding the reins of a powerful horse....During the organized performance of behavioral responses, most neurons and pathways must remain silent to allow meaningful orders to circulate toward specific goals. Inhibition is as important as excitation for the normal physiology of the brain, and some structures have specialized inhibitory functions. (Ibid.)

On the other hand, when the conscious, decision-making, analyzing mental center of the cortex is completely inhibited, what is left is automatism (somnambulism). When the OSS sponsored a scientific conference on inhibition during World War II, papers were presented on the induction of trance. When Delgado spoke of inhibitory mechanisms, he meant whatever lowers consciousness. Whatever lowers consciousness inhibits the conscious mind and increases suggestibility.

Direct Currents

Study of electrical currents in the nervous system goes back to the 1940s, when Ralph Gerard and Benjamin Libet measured direct currents in a frog's brain. In 1958, electric currents were detected in the glial cells of rat brains. Also, about that time, Dr. Bob Becker left a first career in orthopedics to begin thirty years of research in bioelectricity. Soon he could predict the voltage and polarity of a nerve before testing it. He learned that the brain and spinal cord are positively charged; the extremities are negative. Neurons are normally

> ...polarized, positive at the input fiber, or dendrite, and negative at the output fiber, or axon. (p. 106)...this electrical polarization might be what guided the impulses to move in one direction only, giving coherence to the nervous system.* (Becker, The Body Electric, p. 106)

That coherence is the normal bioelectric current which flows in a nervous system. The current is positive or negative. Its current flows in a loop: out from the brain through the motor nerves, back through the sensory nerves. The current is not carried in the nerve itself, but rather in the outer sheath of the nerve, in the perineural, or Schwann, cells. Every part of the nervous system, even the tiniest twiglet, has perineural cells. They are a network extending throughout the body, bathing every cell in faint electrical current.

In 1971, Dr. David Cohen, at MIT's Francis Bitter National Magnet Laboratory, used a superconducting quantum interferometric device (nicknamed SQUID) to examine electric current in brains. He discovered a quickly reversing AC field produced by back-and-forth ion currents in nerve and muscle. The currents were strongest in the heart. He deduced this was because its cells contract in synchrony. He confirmed Becker's discovery of direct-current flow in the nerve sheath system, and the resulting steady DC magnetic fields in the brain.

Trance Reverses Normal Polarity—Becker demonstrated that chemical anesthesia, suggested under hypnosis, and electrosleep (trance caused by electro-induction) all have the same underlying biophysics:

> Direct currents within the central nervous system regulated the level of sensitivity of the neurons by several methods: by changing the amount of current in one direction, by changing the direction of the current (reversing the polarity) and by modulating the current with slow waves. Moreover, we could exert the same control from outside [the subject's body] by putting current of each type into the head. (Becker, pp. 112-113)

That is a remarkable realization!

☞ Electric currents (or electromagnetic fields) can cause inhibition. They can produce anesthesia, defined as absence of waking consciousness. The absence of waking consciousness is trance. Certain electric currents or electromagnetic fields can produce trance, acting from outside a body!

> A strong enough magnetic field oriented at right angles to a current magnetically "clamped it," stopping the flow. By placing frogs and salamanders between the poles of an electromagnet so that the back-to-front current in their heads was perpendicular to the magnetic lines of force, we could anesthetize the animals just as well as we could with chemicals, and EEG recordings of magnetic and chemical anesthesia were identical. We got the same effect by passing a current through the brain from front to back, canceling out the normal current of waking consciousness, as in electrosleep. (Becker, p. 238)

Becker learned that waking from trance caused by a magnetic field did not resemble the lengthy wake-up from chemical or direct-current electrical anesthesia. Instead, it resembled the awakening from a merely verbal induction of trance.

> ...as we decreased the strength of the magnetic field, normal EEG pattern returned suddenly, and the salamander regained consciousness within seconds. (Becker, p. 113)

Becker's research made clear that electronic induction from outside the body could be done by forcing slow waves on the brain, by reversing brain polarity, by reducing the waking current flow, or by using a magnetic field: electrical anesthesia! Specific potentials exist of chemical, electrical, and biomagnetic effect on neurons—resulting in the induction of trance. It was only a matter of time before induction machines based on one, or more, of these physical principles would be developed.

Options

The neuron has a broad spectrum of communication options. It is not limited to its two firing extremes of one and sixty pulses per second. It can change the type of neurotransmitters it emits. By growing more, or fewer, receptors, it can change its sensitivity to the neurotransmitters which are sprayed against its outer membrane by other neurons. It can change the metabolic rate of a neurotransmitter producer, or of a receptor, slowing it down, or speeding it up. A neuron can also reduce, or increase, its number of axons, or its production of a particular neurotransmitter. Certain neurons are sensitive only to certain neurotransmitters. Other neurons are only able to communicate to a limited range of associates.

Those options are inhibiting factors which help keep order in the universe of the mind. A neuron does not have to say either "yes" or "no." A wise neuron does not let itself become carried away in an explosion of excited response. It gives cautious, halfway, responses. It only becomes partly excited. Because of that wide variation in its possible responses, it has the ability to exercise caution. A neuron can say "maybe," or "I'll think it over," or "I'm waiting for more information," or "I'll pray about it." It can also reject excessive inhibition. It can reject unwelcome trance induction attempts.

Pavlov's Four Induction Types

The methods which lower consciousness have many different names. Physiologically, however, all induction techniques can be divided into just four basic categories. Pavlov first pointed out these four routes to cortex inhibition/trance. The four Pavlovian types of trance induction are:

1) Sensory deprivation (too little cortical stimulation)

2) Sensory overload (too much, or chaotic, cortical stimulation)

3) Brain syndrome (lack of food, sleep deprivation, or sickness affects cortical ability to maintain alertness)

4) Lowering of consciousness caused by an outside force using chemical, electrical, or electromagnetic means to disrupt function of the targeted cortex.

The next sections explain what is inductive, and why, and how to make choices between inductive influences. That information can help you avoid unwanted manipulations.

Type 1 Induction: Sensory Deprivation Shuts Down the Analyzer

Sensory Deprivation Experiments

☑

Deprivation and Concentration Inductions

☑

Induction by Shift to Right Brain

> ...it should now be apparent that relaxation techniques will have to be thoroughly reported to the patient or subject as producing that condition that many people in the past have characterized as hypnosis.
>
> Edmonston, Induction of Hypnosis, p. x

The author of that quote expressed doubt, however, that professional hypnotists would submit to the ethical principle he had just stated. As a more realistic solution than trying to make hypnotists be truthful, Edmonston urged better public education: "An educated, knowledgeable populace is better able to make a well-reasoned choice than one held in relative ignorance...." (Ibid).

Any induction method weakens or shuts down the cortex. Any inhibiting process which limits the analyzing function (central to your conscious mind and its ability to evaluate and make decisions) is inductive. The analyzer in your brain is your conscious evaluating, deciding self. It is your ego. It is you. When your conscious mind goes offline, you are either in trance or asleep. Type 1 inductions are inhibition caused by sensory deprivation. Anything that slows down, or reduces, thought, or reduces sensory or mental input tends to lower consciousness.

> ..Human beings...need to explore new and chang- > ing conditions...Organisms function best when their level of activation is moderate, and they try to avoid both too much and too little arousal.

> (Suedfeld, "The Benefits of Boredom," p. 67)

Many influences can cause us to lower consciousness, at least a little, and then (in that lowered state) accept persuasion. A state of lowered consciousness is trance. Trance always begins with some process that inhibits. Four common ingredients of a sensory deprivation (Type 1) induction are:

1) Passivity: a behavior pattern of submission to the leader's thought suggestions.

2) Eye closure: sensory deprivation of sight, the most stimulating sense, contributes to brain inhibition.

3) Advice to "relax."

4) Focused concentration: for example, first on breathing deeply, then on a series of fantasy images, and on the leader's voice.

Other Type 1 inductions are classic sensory deprivation, progressive relaxation, highway hypnosis, boredom, repetition, mind blanking, and shift to right brain.

Sensory Deprivation Experiments

Sensory deprivation was discovered by Donald Hebb, McGill's Chairman of Psychology. In 1950-51, as Chairman of the Canadian Defense Research Human Relations Committee, Hebb was invited to a meeting of British, American, and Canadian military psychologists. One topic was the bizarre Russian "confessions" then going on as part of the Stalinist purges. Another topic was the American discovery that U.S. troops manning early-warning stations in the Arctic were listening to Radio Moscow because they could not receive any other stations. The military asked the psychologists if listening to only one station—Radio Moscow—would turn the troops into Communists.

Hebb thought up an experiment to test a very extreme version of the Radio Moscow situation. When he got back to McGill, he hired twenty-two subjects, mostly graduate students, for $20 a day (a lot of money in 1951). All promised to stay in the experiment for a minimum of twenty-four hours, with an option to stay for five days (and earning a whole $100!). Each volunteer was placed alone in a room. The room was miked, so any sound he made could be heard by the researchers. He wore goggles over his eyes that blocked every form of patterned light. Only diffused light could get through. The subject's arms—clear down to the fingertips—were covered by cardboard tubes to prevent him from using his sense of touch. Each subject wore headphones over his ears. Via the headsets, some subjects heard white noise (meaningless static). Others heard "Home on the Range" played over and over, or stock-market quotes, over and over, or nonsense syllables, over and over.

When they saw the setup, six of the twenty-two volunteers backed out right then and there. The average stay of those who did give it a try was forty-three hours. Eleven quit even before the promised first twenty-four hours was up. The longest anybody stayed with it was 139 hours (five 24-hour days, plus nineteen additional hours).

What happened to the brains of those volunteers who were subjected to that extreme sensory deprivation surprised Hebb. They could keep coherent thoughts for five or six hours. After that, they began to be unable to think clearly. Next they experienced visual hallucinations, and maybe also auditory and tactile hallucinations:

> One man saw squirrels with packsacks on their shoulders marching in single file over a snow field, another not only saw a space ship in the 'sky' but felt projectiles fired from its guns hitting his arms. One of the experimental team, a clergyman who was in graduate psychology under Hebb, thought he was going crazy before he had passed even 24 hours: he hallucinated a whole scene that began with a stone sending ripples out over the surface of a woodland pool. Then naked boys dived in from above the trees, followed by naked women—at which point the researcher got himself let out....
> (Anne Collins, p. 51)

It was an important experiment in the history of psychology. Hebb had discovered that brains need steady and varied input from their environment to stay in a normal mental state. After less than a day under conditions of sensory deprivation, the subjects came out with their brains, temporarily, less functional. Their IQs were lowered. Their reaction times were slowed. Some of the students had persisting illusions. One, because of an illusion of seeing the world as flat, almost had a car accident. It took as long as 24 hours for their brain functions to fully return to normal.

Hebb also learned that denial of sensory input dramatically increased receptivity to any patterned input. If he gave subjects a choice of white noise or "Home on the Range," they quickly came to love "Home on the Range." He let some subjects listen to

> Passages of propaganda in favor of innocuous theories they thought university-educated science students would be fairly resistant to: a belief in ghosts and extrasensory perception; and the antievolutionary point of view. (Anne Collins, pp. 51-52)

Hebb reported that:

> The effects of the propaganda were the only ones that showed signs of lasting beyond the experimental period...A number of the experimental subjects, unlike the controls, went to the library to borrow books on psychical...research, mind-reading and so forth; there were spontaneous reports of being afraid of ghosts late at night, for the first time in the subject's experience; and reports of trying to use ESP in card-playing... (Hebb, 1958)

Another experiment on sensory deprivation, done by other Princeton researchers, produced similar results. The sensory deprivation predisposed subjects to accept uncritically whatever they were told:

> After they had spent twenty-four hours in the darkroom, he played them a tape with a propaganda talk in praise of Turkey...the students now felt very friendly towards Turkey. With a group of students, however, who had not been in the darkroom, the propaganda had little or no effect. (Lausch, p. 223)

The U.S. sponsored more sensory deprivation experiments.

> Under experimental conditions, some people have succumbed to sensory deprivation within one-and-a-half hours, whereas others have maintained adequate function for thirty-six hours or more. (Hinkle, in Biderman & Zimmer, p. 33)

Eventually, all of Hinkle's subjects began hallucinating. If a brain cannot obtain outside stimulation, sooner or later, it will manufacture its own. The early sensory deprivation research made clear that:

1. Brains must have a constant inflow of new data to function normally. Constant learning is a physiological need!

2. The less input there is to a brain, the more susceptible and suggestible that brain becomes to whatever input is available.

3. The most effective programming system will endeavor a) to minimize other inputs as much as possible, while b) delivering its own propaganda, educational material, training, beliefs, etc., to a maximized degree.

Hypnotic Chambers

Research on sensory deprivation led to the development of the hypnotic chamber. This was a room, or a complex of rooms, built in such a way as to minimize sensory input and thereby create sensory deprivation. For example, a biofeedback training room is "dimly lit, soundproofed...no distractions." (Pines, p. 58) Likewise, you leave the relaxed pastels of the outer hallway and enter a series of rooms dedicated to hypnosis research at a major northwestern university by walking through a soundproofed door.

You are now looking down a hall about thirty-five feet long which has several doors leading off from it. One leads to a conference room, another to an observation room where watchers can peer through a one-way glass window into the interior of the adjacent induction room. Inside the induction room, all the walls and doors are painted a bizarre, dense black. No pictures, signs, clippings, or graffiti relieve that bare blackness, only the "mirror" provides a little visual interest.

Not only is the visual setting starkly transformed from the outer environment, but also you have stepped into a distinctly different acoustical environment. No sound whatsoever from the bustling corridors outside can stimulate or interrupt thoughts in here. Voices (or screams) inside these black rooms cannot be heard outside. There is a faint hollowness to spoken voices, like sounds in a cave. It is an absolutely soundproof environment.

This, and every other, hypnotic chamber is a structural embodiment of the operational principle of sensory deprivation that every trance inducer understands. He turns down the lights, quiets the room, suggests that the subject close his eyes, quiet his body, slow his thoughts. That deprivation leads to lowered consciousness, heightened suggestibility.

The CIA mentioned plans for a hypnotic chamber in a memo titled "Interrogation Techniques, " dated January 14, 1953:

> If the services of Major Louis J. West, USAF (MD), a trained hypnotist, can be obtained and another man well grounded in conventional psychological interrogation and polygraph techniques, and the services of Lt. Colonel_____, a well-balanced interrogation research center could be established in a especially selected location.

That research center, apparently, was built. West wrote his friend Aldous Huxley in 1961 (Huxley, Moksha, p. 186) that his latest experiments involved sensory deprivation, and that he had a superbly equipped laboratory in which to do them.

An untitled CIA document, from about 1956, details plans for a more advanced hypnosis lab:

> This laboratory will include a special chamber, in which all psychologically significant aspects of the environment can be controlled. This chamber will contain, among other things, a broad-spectrum polygraph for simultaneous recordings of a variety of psychophysiological reactions of the individual being studied. In this setting the various hypnotic, pharmacologic, and sensory-environmental variables will be manipulated in a controlled fashion and quantitative continuous recordings of the reactions of the experimental subjects will be made. (quoted in Scheflin & Opton, p. 498)

A one-person induction room of this type is marketed to private parties for eliminating "outside sense stimulation." (McGill, 1991, p. 19) The Hypnotic Chamber is six and a half feet high, three feet wide, and four feet deep. The subject enters through a door, then lies down on a deeply reclining (sixty degree), thickly padded surface, and closes the door. (It opens from the inside.) There is a little light in the Chamber ceiling for staring at during induction. It has an intercom system so that a person outside the Chamber can talk to one who is inside, and vice versa. "Experimental results with the Chamber have proved remarkable in the depth of trance induced." (Ibid.)

The isolation tank is another type of sensory deprivation environment. The subject floats in the tank on top of warm, salty water (so salt-saturated that a person cannot sink in it) in a totally dark, soundproofed, and silent room. In the isolation tank persons have reported experiences ranging from insight to hallucination.

Randall N. Baer

The autobiography of Randall N. Baer, Inside the New Age Nightmare, details many trance induction methods. By the age of fifteen he was already a New Age trance junkie. He tried it all: from LSD to Silva to yoga. It was Baer's two books on crystals which kicked off the crystal excitement among New Agers. He marketed "treatment" in a room in which the subject was exposed to a powerful inductive combination of "New Age music, subliminals, brain-drive [brain wave synchronizing] machines, films of occult symbols, and swirling light-shows." What Baer promised customers in his treatment room is what most New Age programs offer: trance induction. He wrote that "a large percentage" of the subjects did enter trance in that room. He delivered his "product" in over a thousand sessions.

Then, touched by the words of a television evangelist, Baer became a Christian. His book was very helpful to me. Shortly after publication, the brakes in his car unexpectedly failed; it crashed, and he died.

Deprivation and Concentration Inductions

Any type of mental focus or concentration lowers consciousness somewhat because of sensory deprivation. Whenever we strongly focus attention on something, we tend to dissociate. When dissociating, we become more suggestible. Our consciousness is always tending to split. Unaware, automatic actions are governed by a part of consciousness that is split off from the rest, by a specialized network of neurons. Those specialized neural networks do not have an analytical system of their own. They possess so little power of criticism that they accept suggestions quite readily. Here follows a list of inductive methods that rely on a combination of sensory deprivation, and concentration on a single idea, to work.

A hypnotist's long, dull, monotonous monologue causes sensory deprivation. It bores the subject into trance. Bramwell's 1903 induction method became a medical standard still in use today. He used a quiet and somewhat darkened room to reduce sensory input. He told the subject to "just let it happen," and then bored and suggested him into trance:

> I then say: "Presently I shall ask you to look at my eyes for a few seconds, when probably your eyelids will become heavy and you will feel impelled to close them. Should this not happen, I shall ask you to shut them, and to keep them closed until I tell you to open them. I shall then make certain passes and suggestions, but I do not wish you to pay much attention to what I am saying or doing, and above all you are not to attempt to analyze your sensations. Your best plan will be to create some monotonous drowsy mental picture and to fix your attention upon that"...
>
> After these explanations, and having darkened the room and instructed any spectators to remain quiet, I place my patient in a comfortable chair and request him to look at my eyes, at the same time bringing my face slightly above and about ten inches from his...I continue to look steadily at him and make suggestions. These are twofold; the patient's attention is directed to the sensations he probably is experiencing, and others, which I wish him to feel, are suggested. Thus: "Your eyes are heavy, the lids are beginning to quiver, the eyes are filling with water. You begin to feel drowsy, your limbs are becoming heavy, you are finding it more and more difficult to keep your eyes open, etc." (Bramwell, Hypnotism, pp. 50-51)

He suggested monotony, "heaviness," and the idea of sleep. The suggested sensations, of course, are the first illusions that the subject is being directed to experience. They are elementary exercises in robotic unconscious obedience.

Massage, and Mesmeric "Passes"

Charles Tebbetts told his hypnotherapy students that massage is also inductive. The old-time mesmerizers sometimes did not even touch the subject, stroking only the air just outside the subject's body. Esdaile described his procedure:

> Desire the patient to lie down, and compose himself to sleep, taking care, if you wish to operate, that he does not know your intention; this object may be gained by saying it is only a trial; for fear and expectation are destructive to the physical impression required.... make the room dark, enjoin quiet, and then shutting your patient's eyes, begin to pass both your hands, in the shape of claws, slowly, within an inch of the surface, from the back of the head to the pit of the stomach....Repeat this process steadily for a quarter of an hour, breathing gently on the head and eyes all the time. (Esdaile, pp. 145-146)

Esdaile had only just begun. After half an hour, he began to add verbal suggestions of sleep to the passes. He kept this up for as long as eight hours straight, as long as it took to get the subject to a coma depth trance. Esdaile was an English surgeon in India. He had no anesthetic but trance, so he had to induce profound depths. He performed the most challenging operations of his time on those mesmerized patients. After Esdaile started the induction process, his assistants continued it. That freed the doctor to operate on a patient who was already in a catatonic coma.

The stroking of a beloved's body induces lowered consciousness. Massage in general—even a good back rub—tends to be inductive. Schilder and Kauders pointed out the common ground between the erotic and the inductive:

> Gentle speech, shouted rebukes, manhandling, are not only devices in the technique of hypnosis, but also in that of erotic seduction, "fixation," stroking—certain [induction] techniques even make very extensive use of stroking the body—are common both to hypnosis and to the erotic. (Schilder and Kauders, p. 35)

Relaxation

A relaxation induction simply may be a regular verbal hypnotic induction with the word "relaxation" substituted for the word "sleep, and "deeply relaxed" substituted for "deep sleep." It will work just as well that way. When you relax, your brain waves slow, and consciousness lowers.

Progressive Relaxation—Edmund Jacobson researched the link between relaxing muscles and slowing brain waves. He learned that suggestions to relax cause a disguised induction. Jacobson published a specific sequential series of suggestions to relax various muscles of the body. He called his system progressive relaxation.

It specified wrinkling and unwrinkling the forehead for ten minutes, then relaxation exercises for the eyelids, then the eyes. (Boring, wearying repetition, such as the wrinkling and unwrinkling of one's forehead for ten minutes, causes sensory deprivation and is inductive.) Near the end of the series, the operator (which he called the practitioner) was to bring his index fingers closer and closer to the subject's eyes until the subject was staring at one fingertip.

Jacobson learned that his "relaxation" suggestions could be used to induct groups of people as well as individuals. Although Jacobson called his system "progressive relaxation," he knew that it was actually a system for hypnotizing persons. In his book on the subject, he described outward signs of successful relaxation, which clearly reveal a trance state:

- Increasingly slow responses to interruption, or complete failure to respond
- Sleepy-eyed appearance of a subject after successful relaxation

> ...when the individual learns to relax the eyes while open, their vacuous appearance, with the facila musculature so relaxed that it is expressionless, is characteristic... (Jacobson, 1924 edition, pp. 574-575)

Medical and therapy workers, sports psychologists, and others, now often use some variant of Jacobson's progressive relaxation. A patient who goes to an emergency room with a severe migraine headache, is likely to be treated, in part, with progressive relaxation followed by visualization of imagery. Both are powerful induction tools. Once the patient is in a suggestible state, the nurse will give positive suggestions to relieve the headache. Hypnosis is a treatment for migraine that usually works.

That treatment, however, involves a disguised induction. Physiologically, the induction of relaxation is identical with the induction of hypnosis, and relaxation is a common type of disguised induction. Edmonston pondered the ethics of that situation:

> If a patient refuses "hypnosis" as part of treatment, is it ethical for the medical attendant to say to the patient: "All right, I won't use hypnosis in your treatment, I'll just teach you how to relax"? Has our knowledge of the relationship of relaxation to hypnosis placed us in the ethically awkward position of having to deceive, "for their own good," patients who are resistive to the use of hypnosis? Are we now forced to an "end justifies the means" position, in which the practitioner must live with a sin of omission...in order to benefit the patient? (Edmonston, Hypnosis and Relaxation, p. 215)

Repetition

Repetition strengthens unconscious habit. Whatever is to be drilled into your brain is repeated over and over. A short commercial, repeated ten times, programs you more effectively than a longer one repeated only three times. Advertisers know that, alas.

Repetition has an inductive effect on the brain. By monotonous and incessant repetition, a sensory input, that began as a stimulus, can become an inhibiter of neurons. For example, by repetition of an indifferent stimulus in a continuous, monotonous manner, Pavlov bored dogs into trance. The meditator who is saying his mantra, over and over, is using a repetition induction. Herbert Benson, in The Relaxation Response (1975), although himself a meditator, pointed out that a special mantra is unnecessary, because any repeated word accomplishes the sensory deprivation to put you down.

A constant, unvaried, loud noise can also put a susceptible human being to sleep. I saw public school students in a Michigan "open" classroom in a tight huddle with their teacher, heads close together, saying, "Ommmmmmm," before beginning their computer class. The head teacher then realized that the guest speaker in their school was staring, wide-eyed, at the ommers. (I was surprised to see that New Age and Eastern religious practice was a classroom routine in a public school where Christian prayer was not permitted.) She rushed over and told them to stop.

A researcher named Das subjected persons to the monotonous stimulation of a single tone to see if they would go into a trance, like Pavlov's dogs. It worked. One (non-hypnotizable) person merely felt bored. Two felt sleepy. But five were found sleeping after only thirty seconds, and six were found snoring. The monotonous tone had produced a Pavlovian state of inhibition. Das speculated that the faster his subjects became sleepy, and the more sleepy they had become, the more hypnotizable they were. (He also suggested a correlation between hypnotizability and conditionability—viewing hypnotizability as a survival asset.) (Das, "The Pavlovian Theory of Hypnosis")

Martin Orne wrote, "...peculiar types of repetitive, rhythmic stimulation" compel trance in hypnotizable individuals." (article in Biderman & Zimmer, eds, The Manipulation of Human Behavior) Listening to music, or watching the same video or rerun over and over, is soothing—and also inductive. "Hari Krishna, Hari Krishna, Hari Hari, Krishna Krishna," the Krishna Consciousness follower intones. Buddhist worshippers chant the same brief sentence over and over.

> The group would all be on bended knees, chanting to a sacred scroll in front of the room. The chants were from an Eastern scripture called the "Lotus Sutra." There was a short, easy-to-learn chant which was the main focus of the religion. I was instructed to chant this phrase for 30-60 minutes every day... (Baer, Inside the New Age Nightmare, p. 9)

Sufis use "dhikr" phrases, recited over and over together with others, or alone, "perhaps most effective when repeated silently in the mind and accompanied by special breathing techniques and physical movements." (Sargant, The Mind Possessed, p. 75) Meditators say their "mantra" word, or phrase, over and over, until the altered state is reached. If his consciousness raises, the meditator just goes back to saying the mantra, which creates sensory deprivation and lowers consciousness again.

Christians use repetition inductions, too. The congregation may sing favorite, deeply meaningful, verses, over and over, before it hears the sermon. The Catholic repeats "Hail Mary, full of Grace, blessed art thou among women and blessed is the fruit of thy womb, Jesus..." or "Jesus Christ, Son of God, have mercy on me, a sinner." Other congregations may sing old favorites, "Put your shoulder to the wheel, push along..." "On a hill, far away, there's an old rugged cross..." "Rock of ages..." It is inductive, but it is certainly not a moral error to repeat beloved, significant poems, songs, scripture verses, prayers, etc. "The Lord is my shepherd..." Sometimes, a lowering of consciousness is exactly what we are seeking in an attitude of worship.

Type 1 Induction Machines

A machine's stubborn mechanical insistence can break down human resistance and quickly access the subject's unconscious. Induction hardware comes in many forms. Type 1 machines are designed to accomplish cortex inhibition by causing sensory deprivation. They produce a monotonous (tone) or meaningless (white noise) sound, or a monotonous, meaningless, or very concentrated visual image.

The first hypnosis induction machine was the Luy's light, a machine which whirled a hypnodisk with a light on the side. The night that Dr. Jensen first hypnotized Candy Jones, he showed her hypnodiscs and other induction aids that used "flashing or rotating lights." (Bain, p. 94) The hypnodisc has tried and true efficacy in hypnotic inductions.

Hypnodiscs—Visual patterns affect the brain. They can also affect level of consciousness. Spinning light can induce hypnosis. I often glimpse some kind of spinning image, or spiral pattern, worked into a TV ad or at the opening to a show to lower consciousness and intensify dramatic effect. Television or film, especially shows for children and adolescents often use hypnotic elements such as spirals, spinning, or confusing images, and out-of-focus views—all of which tend to lower a viewer's consciousness, especially if that viewer is a young person.

A hypnodisc may be as simple as a piece of white paper with a black spiral design. It can be viewed motionless, or rotated. The rotation can be done by hand, but it is most effective when the hypnodisc is spun mechanically by attaching it to a revolving pin in its center. Hypnodiscs have varied in size from thumbnail diameter up to five feet wide, or larger. Stage hypnotists have mounted a large disc on their platform (and put a significant percentage of the audience into trance by its influence).

A hypnodisc is inductive because the spinning spiral focuses the subject's attention on a series of optical illusions and tires his eyes. The operator may reinforce that effect with a verbal suggestion to experience an illusion: "You feel you are being drawn into a deep, dark, revolving cone." Or...

> "...The white circles become more prominent, then the black...it seems to recede in the distance and you feel as if you are drawn into it. Your breathing becomes deep and regular. You get drowsy, very drowsy. Soon you will be asleep." (Wolberg, 1948, p. 143)

A metronome makes a simple, repeated, rhythmic sound. Some induction metronomes are combined with a small light that flashes in time with the sound. Staring at the swaying of a Chevruel's pendulum, or into a mirror, hypnodisc, or Luy's light also is inductive. Other mechanical induction aids used in the history of hypnosis are Luys' revolving mirrors, the hypnoscope, color contrasting cards, and a silver spoon used to reflect candlelight into the subject's eyes.

Recorded Inductions

George Estabrooks first proved that a hypnotic induction could be accomplished by means of a recorded patter ("A Standardized Hypnotic Technique Dictated to a Victrola Record, 1930). He produced the first widely distributed recorded induction.

Audio and videotaped induction, followed by helpful suggestions, is now big business, especially in the motivational, habit-changing, and self-improvement businesses. The recording typically begins with an induction to lower consciousness and increase suggestibility—followed by the suggestions.

For example, at stop-smoking clinics the client hears the initial hypnotic conditioning and suggestions live, then takes home a taped version. He listens to that tape several times a day until the craving to smoke subsides. (It usually works.) Some hypnotherapists have a specific tape for every routine problem that may come into the office: eating too much, eating too little, nail-biting, nose-picking, flashing, frigidity, etc.

Mind Blanking

Mind-blanking or thought- stopping was, and is, a common induction technique. This method creates sensory deprivation and bores the subject into lowered consciousness.

> ...concentrate the subject's mind upon some one unimportant thought to the exclusion of all others. This thought must, indeed, be so unimportant that when it is the only thought entertained the mind is almost absolutely passive. (Cook, p. 78)

The "sound of one hand clapping" is an unimportant thought which is also confusing (another inductive technique.) The image stops thought because it is illogical and paradoxical. Therefore, it causes a sensory deprivation.

A similar thought-stopper is the statement: "If a tree falls in the forest, and no one is there to hear it, does it make a sound?" (Yes, it does. A deer browsing nearby would hear it fall. Plants broken under the weight of the fallen tree would "hear" it. The temptation in that thought is to imagine that the universe only exists if "I" perceive it. That is arrogant, self-centered, and false.)

I heard a radio deejay asking rapid-fire questions of callers: "If you had to choose one: no nose or an extra nose in the middle of your forehead—-which would you choose?" "If you were cold in bed, would you rather put on another blanket or turn up the heat?" "Don't stop to think, just answer." That is a paradox style of induction. It sidelines the analytical, thinking conscious mind.

Yoga instructions are inductive. None are openly called "hypnotic," but all lead to trance. Richard Hittleman's Guide to Yoga Meditation used a thought-stopping induction. The TV guru told readers that thinking was a bad thing and that they should avoid thinking as much as possible, because many thoughts "include useless concern, false anxiety and foolish daydreaming." (p. 43) Thought-stopping is an effective induction technique, so Hittleman's suggestions, if taken literally, could propel a susceptible person into a state of near constant trance (vigilambulism).

Nielsen seduced Palle into hypno-robot condition partly by using the lure of pride. Hittleman used similar grandiose language to describe trance. He said that a person with no consciously recognized trance experience was "sleeping." His term for a person who was beginning to experience sessions of lowered consciousness was "awakened" or "enlightened." He said that this enlightened person can

> ...transcend his ordinary mind...You have a great responsibility not only to yourself, but to your fellow man to advance your development as far as possible... (Hittleman, pp. 63-65)

Trance can, and does, "transcend" ordinary mind. It can put you more in touch with the truth, or less. Beware of pride in trance, because pride can be the root of evil, the tool of the deceiver.

Hittleman warned that "Usually there is a great inner struggle as one treads the winding path between the states of 'wakening' and 'enlightenment." (Ibid., p. 66) That "struggle" may be your conscious mind trying to keep you grounded in reality. Similarly, Nielsen urged Palle, repeatedly, to overcome his "resistance." Nielsen trained Palle to stay in a prolonged trance. Hittleman also urged the reader to stay in trance by an act of will: "...whenever you feel that it has deserted you, simply will it back." (Ibid., pp. 68-69)

Two other advocates of Eastern-style induction instructed:

> ...sit down, be quiet, watch your mind, bring it to one-pointedness, bring it back when it strays—which it most certainly will within the first ten seconds—over and over again. (Goleman & Thurman, MindScience, p. 106)

Thought-stopping inductions can be nonverbal. They can be part of any religious context. The Montanists were a Christian sect; about 200 AD they held forefinger to nose during prayer and that centered focus soon lowered consciousness. Residents of certain Greek Orthodox convents of the Onphalopsychists on Mt. Athos achieved trance by staring at their navals. In 1666, Brother Lawrence, an humble French monk, wrote similar instructions to develop a sustained trance:

> Let it be your business to keep your mind in the presence of the Lord. If your mind sometimes wanders or withdraws from the Lord, do not be upset or disquieted...The will must bring the mind back...Become accustomed to recalling your mind to the Lord often. As you do this more and more you will find it easy to keep your mind calm in times of prayer and to recall it when it wanders. (Brother Lawrence, Practicing His Presence, p. 82)

The psalmist recorded the most simple, and powerful, instruction in this category: "Be still, and know that I am God." (Psalm 6:10)

Trance is a door to the spiritual realm for those persons with genetic capacity to experience it in that manner. Trance is the mind channel that opens us to that which is transcendent and holy. However, trance can also open us to that which is corrupting, degrading, and unholy. May we have the grace of God to discern the difference between various trance situations and trance contents. May God protect us from all unholy, corrupting, or abusive trance relationships.

Eyes Have a Role in Induction

Eye Focus—Staring into your own eyes in a mirror is inductive. Staring into somebody else's eyes when they are close to you can be inductive also. In fact, staring at anything has inductive potential. Staring causes sensory deprivation, and thus it tends to lower consciousness. It is normal for your eyes to shift freely around, looking at various objects. Eye movement prevents eyestrain. If you stare fixedly at a close object for even as little as five or ten seconds, your eyes will start to tire. Hypnotists call the point you stare at, the "target."

Staring at a target causes eye fatigue, which can lead to eye closure, which can lead to "sleep." The target can be a candle, an unshaded electric light, an object swinging on the end of a chain, somebody else's eyes, or your own eyes seen in a mirror.

Eyes become even more fatigued if the target is above eye level. Rolling your eyes upward correlates with, and may actually generate, increased alpha. So when trance inducers ask you to stare at a fixed point, the target is probably above normal eye level, causing eyestrain. Or it may be close to your eyes, which causes discomfort in focusing, another type of strain.

There are many common applications of that principle. Eye fixation is the intuitive function of symbols—national flags, religious symbols, organizational icons. And those symbols are usually displayed above eye level. Eye fixation has real psychological impact in the intensity and focus of a ceremonial setting. "I pledge allegiance to the flag..."

Eye Closure—A hypnotist usually maneuvers for, or asks for, eye closure early in the induction. Eye muscles are the smallest muscles in your body, and the most easily tired. After a brief period of upward staring, a subject tends to close his eyes if the operator suggests that they are "tired" and "strained." They are! But accepting that suggestion further decreases sensory input. And imagining that the operator has already been able to make magical things happen in you ("tired, strained" eyes), also deepens trance.

Eye closure instantly, significantly reduces sensory intake, because sight is the dominant human sense. Any time you close your eyes, alpha brain waves immediately increase. If the room is quiet, and you sit or lie quietly, auditory and tactile input is reduced. The less meaningful the input you are receiving, the more focused and suggestible your mind will be to whatever is coming through.

Any time somebody tells you to close your eyes and pay close attention to his words, he is, intuitively or consciously, striving to lower your consciousness. Any time you close your eyes and visualize something, you are entering a more suggestible hypnoidal state. Any time somebody tells you to close your eyes and then spends a period of time directing you to visualize a series of things or do a series of acts with your mind or body, he is conditioning you for deeper trance and greater suggestibility. The outcome may help you, or it may harm you. You must be able to discern the difference.

Obedience Conditioning

"Will you help me?" my young daughter asked.

"Okay," I agreed.

She began to read instructions to me out of a book: "First raise your head," she requested. (I did.) "Now lower it. Now turn it to the right. Now turn it to the left. Now stick out your tongue." (I continued to obey, through various commands, letting her be the operator pulling my puppet strings. "Fine," she encouraged me. "Now open your mouth. Now close your mouth. Now clap your hands. Now close your eyes."

I was now sitting quietly with my eyes still obediently closed.

"SLAVE!" she chortled triumphantly at me.[1]

A hypnotic induction is often a long series of suggestions which the hypnotist wants the subject to obey. To achieve induction and deepening, it does not matter what the suggestions are, as long as the subject is kept busy obeying. A subject who is busy obeying does not slip out of trance and start thinking for himself.

A popular sales training system teaches salesmen that, if they can cause a client to obey any two suggestions, he becomes likely to obey a third one, too. That is the force of habit. Human beings are tremendously fast learners. Even two times can be the beginning of a habit that is difficult to shake. Or even once. "Pretend" inductions, abstract conditioning, and disciplined conditioning are all types of obedience inductions.

---

[1] Quoted from Schwartz, Tomfoolery: Trickery and Foolery with Words*, p. 42.

"Pretend" Inductions— When I took hypnotherapy training as part of the research for this book, I learned about "pretend" inductions.

If a subject agrees to pretend that he is hypnotized, he will become hypnotized, sooner or later. His consciousness lowers because he keeps taking orders. The principle is "use it or lose it." If a person keeps taking orders, completely turning off his own analytical powers and behaving like an automaton, his power of self-willing (ability to say yes, or no) starts to fall asleep. It has nothing to do.

Abstract Conditioning—If you can make a person believe that he is hypnotized, and therefore act hypnotized (mindlessly obey), soon he will be hypnotized. Abstract conditioning is an induction technique which fools a subject into believing that he is hypnotized before he actually is. Believing it, soon, makes it so.

All hypnotic training creates conditioned responses. Livingston Welch, a behaviorial hypnotist, first reported and analyzed this phenomenon of abstract conditioning. In this method, the hypnotist tells his subject to do one thing. Then he tells him to do a second thing. Obedience to the second command is compelled by obedience to the first one, but the subject assumes he is obeying because of the hypnotist's mysterious powers.

For example, a stage hypnotist gives the handclasp challenge. He challenges his subject to clasp his hands in front of him, keep them clasped—and then try to pull them apart. The subject's hands will not come apart because his knuckles are in the way. He can only pull them apart if he unclasps them first. The handclasp challenge induction tricks the subject into believing that the subject cannot control a part of his own body because of the hypnotist's suggestion. The subject's inability to move is more than just an illusion. The hypnotist challenged the subject to do something that the subject thinks he can do, but which the hypnotist knows is actually a physical impossibility. If the handclasp challenge is given to a group of subjects, the hypnotist then observes which subjects "cannot" pull their hands apart:

> Note them! They are the ones that you can control!...these people are awake and, in spite of it, you have succeeded in contacting their subconscious minds, thus completely controlling them. (Powers, Advanced Techniques of Hypnosis, pp. 83-84)

The handclasp challenge identifies susceptible subjects and also begins the process of induction. A subject who believes he is hypnotized may then act hypnotized. A person who acts hypnotized, just like someone pretending to be hypnotized, very soon may actually be hypnotized. The pretender, and the believer, have the same outcome—lowered consciousness. That is abstract conditioning.

The eye focus induction is another example of abstract conditioning. The hypnotist first tells his subject to gaze steadily at a single bright object. His second suggestion is that the subject's eyes are becoming tired. In truth, those eyes are getting tired because it is hard and unnatural to gaze fixedly at a bright object. The hypnotist may then suggest that the subject's eyes are beginning to blink. In fact, eyes do start to blink under these circumstances (trying to rest from gazing fixedly at the bright object.)

A third example of abstract conditioning is the open-your-eyes-with-eyeballs-up challenge. The hypnotist has told a subject to close her eyes, and, with eyelids still closed, to roll her eyeballs upward as if looking at a visualized spot in her brain. In that condition, he tells her to notice that her eyelids "are beginning to stick tightly together, are now stuck shut, glued shut." Then the hypnotist challenges her, while keeping her eyeballs rolled upward, to open her eyes. She cannot do that because nobody can do that. When the eyeballs are rolled upward with the lids closed, the little muscles that raise your upper eyelids cannot function.

Abstract conditioning is often used as a disguised induction.

Discipline Conditioning—If you act like somebody is your boss, and do everything he says, pretty soon you develop the habit of not thinking for yourself in that person's presence any more. Boot camp runs on this principle. Let me add, however, that a pattern of doing the opposite of what you are told is equally unthinking and robotic. Inability to accept instruction is even more handicapping than becoming somebody's robot. The best mental condition is a condition of free choice: choosing to do it his way, or your way, based on your reasoned analysis of each situation. It takes time and effort, however, to analyze a situation. Under conditions of haste or stress, unthinking obedience is more efficient. Under conditioning regimens, it is also more rewarded.

Parents, teachers, and military trainers traditionally lean on discipline conditioning. The longer the process of giving and taking orders continues, the more likely the subject is to put his own brain on a sidetrack and let the chief do all the thinking. Trained military rank-and-file are said to be good hypnotic subjects because of their obedience training.

Dr. Cook told student hypnotists to choose a prospective subject, then > ...lead him gradually to submission. Incidentally tell him of your hypnotic knowledge...Then dare him to let you hypnotize him. It is best to commence on some young man about sixteen years of age, who is accustomed to working under a hard boss for little pay. He is accustomed to obedience... (Cook, p. 132)

So, a sensory deprivation induction can result from accepting repeated coaxing—or orders—to be passive, submissive, obedient. That series of instructions conditions the subject to accept ever more demanding suggestions. Hypnotists have a specific name for the inductive/deepening effect of giving a series of commands: pyramiding of suggestions.

> ...pyramiding of suggestions serves to increase the depth of hypnosis, for as each suggestion is obeyed, the subject inevitably falls deeper into the state...If a subject will obey simple suggestions, he will obey difficult ones. (Gindes, p. 165)

R.W. White further explained how the pyramiding of suggestions works:

> ...the urgent character of his words, their power to keep the subject attentive in spite of his drowsiness, lies...in the fact that they consist of requests, commands, and suggestions...By the measures which he takes to exclude distraction, and especially by his words, the operator tries to maintain a state of mono-motivation, a focal press of dominance, and the subject is given little alternative except to continue the deference which made him susceptible in the first place or else to display a resistive autonomy which under the circumstances could hardly be distinguished from aggression. (quoted in Moss, p. 143)

If being "good" can make you overly accepting of authority, is it ever good to be "bad"? YES! Curtis MacDougall told a relevant story in his book, Hoaxes (New York, Macmillan, 1940):

> A coin about the size of a fifty-cent piece was passed around a class of forty-eight boys from fourteen to seventeen years of age with instructions to examine it carefully. At the end of the class period the instructor asked each boy to draw a picture of the coin, indicating the position of the hole in it. Although there was no hole, all but four of the forty-eight indicated one, some even drawing two holes. Of the four only one, the bad boy of the class unaccustomed to obeying orders, was positive that there was no hole. (MacDougall, Curtis D. Hoaxes. N.Y.: Macmillan, 1940)

One day, the fate of the nation might depend on the ability of citizens to recognize that there really is no hole in that coin! Society needs to cherish and protect the right to existence (and to free speech) of its "bad boys" who are insusceptible to illusion and who can sound the alarm: "THE EMPEROR HAS NO CLOTHES!"

Induction by Shift to Right Brain

After going through an extended step-by-step trance induction technique, we were told by the instructor to imagine ourselves to be in a house or dwelling of our own design...Extensive instructions guided us in creating every detail and exploring every aspect...After many hours of repeatedly going through this process, the inner sanctuary actually started to take on a type of reality of its own...an eerily "real" status...

- Baer, Inside the New Age Nightmare, p. 10

In the quote above, Baer was describing a Silva Mind Control group induction that involved extensive visualization. Anything that shifts you toward right-brain function tends to be inductive. Visualizing imagery, music, singing, art, imagination, and retelling dreams all tend to lower consciousness, because they all shift you toward right-brain function. Visualization of imagery directly and powerfully shifts you to right brain function. The visual hemisphere (usually the right one) is far more emotional and hypnotic in nature than is the left. While visualizing, you may sense lowered consciousness. Or, after entering trance, you may spontaneously shift toward right-brain function and begin to visualize.

Visualization Induction

Visualization of imagery requires a shift to right brain function. Mental focus on, and work with, images tends to have a consciousness-lowering effect. It is often used in combination with other methods. When the hypnotist suggests the image which his subject is to imagine, that is directed imagery.

Visualizing images makes any associated suggestion more effective. Some hypnotists say that a suggestion will not be effective unless it becomes visually imaged in the subject's mind. Teachers—and salesmen—know that teaching, or selling, is most effective if the student, or prospective customer, visualizes something. A classroom program called "Confluent Education" starts first graders in a program of trance training by having them visualize the sun radiating within them, followed by other images. That is the induction. Then the teacher says, "You are inwardly perfect and contain all the wisdom of the universe within yourselves." That is the programming.

Ideomotor Induction

When you read someone's body language, you are observing her ideomotor response. If she says "yes," but shakes her head at the same time, then the real answer is "no," because body language is always more truthful than verbal language. The ideomotor response may reflect important data that the conscious mind does not have. You are not consciously aware of those tiny muscle movements of ideomotor response unless you have taught yourself to notice whether your head nods or shakes in response to thoughts.

Ideomotor movement is an automatic (unconscious), muscular response to unconscious thought. For example, if you think "go," your going muscles awaken with a flicker of response, which is suppressed by an opposite response of the staying muscles if it is not yet possible to go. What you think of, your muscles automatically act out in a tiny way. What you think is what you do.

Ideomotor response does not need a hypnotic induction to take place. It is sometimes used as a disguised induction. Concentrating on perceiving your ideomotor responses tends to be inductive, because it shifts your mental focus to an unconscious mode of response. Any ideomotor response is a dissociated one.

A common example of ideomotor response is the use of a small pendulum to elicit answers to questions. The swinging pendulum is called Chevreul's pendulum because it was invented, in 1833, by a Frenchman named Chevreul. He also proved that the movements of a dowser's rod and those of an ideomotor pendulum were both unconsciously activated, and registered unconscious thinking. (Dowsing can be a very helpful skill because it visibly registers tiny manifestations of the magnetic field that conscious minds cannot perceive. Water, flowing underground, generates a magnetic field which the unconscious minds of about half of those who try can detect.) LeCron pioneered the use of ideomotor responses in the U.S. using a Chevreul's pendulum or finger signals to register faint information from the deep unconscious. In hypnotherapy, answers can be obtained this way without a client having to fully remember something painful.

The subject chooses, or is told, what movements of the pendulum will mean "yes" or "no." The subject's unconscious—which is always aware and noticing—then acts accordingly. For example, if you think to yourself, "My left index finger will rise if the answer is no; my right, if the answer is yes," you have set up an ideomotor signaling system. LeCron told the hypnotized person, "Your left thumb will rise if the answer is yes; your left index finger will rise if the answer is no."

Noting the swing direction of a glass ball on the end of a chain also invites an ideomotor response. A washer or ring tied on the end of a 10-inch thread works as well as a pendulum. There are four possible pendulum swings and each can be assigned a meaning in the ideomotor system: clockwise circle, counterclockwise circle, back and forth to your left and right, or back and forth in front of you. The four meanings can be: 1) yes; 2) no; 3) I don't know; 4) I don't want to answer the question. Persons using this system post those meanings on a visible card for ready reference. Or they may start by asking the unconscious what swing directions it prefers for which answer. Do that by thinking "yes" and see what swing you get. Then write that on the card. And so on.

Other persons find it helps to keep it simple. You (and your unconscious) decide, or are told, that the ball will swing one way if the answer is yes, the other way if the answer is no. Most ideomotor systems allow only that "yes" or "no" response.

Ever played 20 questions? A series of yes/no questions can get to the bottom of practically any problem. If you ask something an unconscious really does not know, however, it may come up with a pretend (confabulated) answer. It is important to understand that ideomotor response is not absolute truth. It is just unconscious opinion. It can be wrong, right, helpful, or deceptive. What you get depends on the programming in that person's unconscious.

If the information is coming from an isolated matrix of neurons in the unconscious, that is normal. If that matrix starts to define itself as an independent personality, it is a schizoid phenomenon. Schizoid simply means dissociated and is common to the point of normal for persons in trance. Unconscious centers of information tend to express themselves as if they had independent identity. If the neuronal matrix, however, generates false information, shut it off for obvious reasons.

Dream Inductions

Dreams emerge from the same right-brain unconscious that functions in hypnosis. Most people go into a spontaneous light trance state while telling, or even thinking about, dream material. That is true whether the dream is being publicly shared or privately considered. Remembering a dream—even listening to somebody else tell their dream and following their imagery with your mind—shifts you toward right brain and lowers consciousness. Trance state is the natural bridge between your inner and outer selves. Dreams are one form in which data crosses that bridge from the unconscious to the conscious. Dreams and their messages can be a precious source of insight, inspiration, and direct guidance.

Dream workshop leaders often ask a dreamer to "re-enter" the dream, "in a deeply relaxed state of consciousness," and then change or extend it. (McLeester, Welcome to the Magic Theater, p. 115) Changing or extending the dream may not be appropriate. Simply understanding it may be the best thing. Going into a dream under the direction of another person will lower consciousness.

Maternal and Paternal Induction Styles

There are two standard styles of hypnotic induction and trance management. The maternal is conventional, gradual, polite, and considerate. It avoids tones of authority or command. It is often used with Type 1 inductions and in hypnotherapy. The paternal style is abrupt, shocking, dictatorial, and highly authoritative in tone. It appears more often with Type 2 and Type 3 inductions.

> One person begins to lead the fantasy by asking everyone else to relax, close their eyes and breathe deeply. Then they relate the bare script of outline of a fantasy, while the others picture it in their minds and watch what develops. The leader should relate the fantasy in the first person present tense, as though it is happening...and develop a slow, even pace... (McLeester, p. 83)

This beginning of trance can develop elements of hypnosis.

Type 2 Induction:

Excitation Overwhelms the Analyzer

☑

Emotion Inductions

☑

The necessary condition...is...some kind of consciousness in which an emerging idea meets with no resistance from any other—in which, so to speak, the field is clear for the first comer. We know that a state of this kind can be brought about not only by hypnotism but also by emotional shock (fright, anger, etc.) and by exhausting factors (sleeplessness, hunger, and so on).

Breuer and Freud, Studies on Hysteria, pp. 258-9 notice!

DUE NOW!
OVER due do this

Overstimulation of the cortex results in an involuntary cortical response of protective inhibition. It is a curious paradox of the human suggestibility spectrum that we are most susceptible to suggestion when external stimulation is minimal, or when it is maximal. Sensory deprivation can cause trance. Its opposite, sensory overload, also can cause trance. Sensory overload results in overexcitation. Excitation is the opposite of inhibition. Excitation is a condition in which the rate of neuron firing speeds up. Too much input (stress) causes too much excitation which, in turn, may cause a natural, protective shutdown effect. Shutdown equals inhibition. Inhibition, when it is caused by a protective shutdown, is Pavlov's Type 2 induction.

Beecher proved that the more stressed a person is, the more effective a pretend pill, placebo, will be at curing whatever he imagines ails him. The more upset, excited, disturbed, or stressed you are, the more suggestible you become. Any degree of cortex shutdown results in an equivalent amount of inhibition (lowered consciousness, trance).

Emotional Shocks

Brainwashing researchers have analyzed the types of emotional shocks and their power to devastate. Shocks are most likely to make a person suggestible—and to break him—when they are:

☐ intense

☐ repeated

☐ unpredictable

☐ uncontrollable

☐ linked to pressure

☐ incomprehensible

☐ humiliating

The stressful, overwhelming input can arrive via any sense: seeing, hearing, touching.... In 1960, CIA researcher Ewen Cameron jotted down plans to report his research on Type 2 input-overload inductions: "Also in paper, make reference to input-overload in terms of 1) sound 2) light 3) pain 4) verbal stimulation." (Weinstein, 1988, p. 220).

Overwhelming Noise

Loud, rhythmic noise, such as prolonged, loud, drum beating—or sitting close to an unshielded dot matrix printer at work—can be inductive. When my dot-matrix printer goes into action, if I stay seated nearby, I will fall into a deep sleep within a few minutes.

Das demonstrated that response to loud, repetitive noise can predict hypnotizability. His better subjects could not keep their eyes open when exposed to that type of noise.

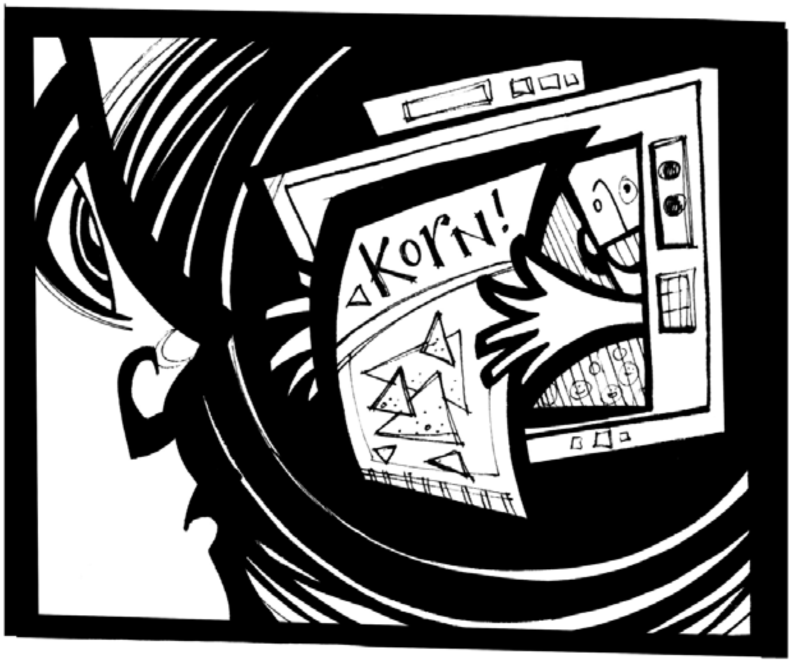
Loud noise is Type 1 in that it shuts out other sensory input. It is Type 2 in that it overwhelms, simultaneously denying varied auditory intake and overstimulating the nerve cells. That triggers the protective mechanism of inhibition. The cells turn themselves off. The subject goes into trance, and then on down to delta sleep.

Confusion

Another thing that overwhelms the analyzer is inability to make sense of incoming data: confusion. A confusion induction is a Type 1 (sensory deprivation) because it deprives the brain of meaning. It is also Type 2 (overloading) if you try to make sense of it, and cannot, but keep trying until you become overwhelmed by the confusion. So, if something does not make sense, avoid the assumption that the fault is a lack of intellect on your part. Your feeling that it does not make sense may be absolutely correct! The confusing statement may be for the purpose of induction rather than communication.

This morning I saw an advertisement on TV: a jumble of highly emotional, vivid, incoherent images. At the very last moment, in small letters in the center of the otherwise blank screen (an eerily clear and calm impression after the preceding intense, chaotic images) one word appeared, a brand name. The brain, if set suddenly adrift in a sea of nonsense, will clutch hard to the first sensible thing that comes along after the chaos. That brand name was the first image that was allowed to make sense.

I saw another Type 2 confusion TV advertisement on Super Bowl Sunday. It began with chaotic, meaningless images jumbled one upon another. Suddenly, out of the confusion, a bag of corn chips moved slowly, centrally out from a distant view on the screen "toward" me, its brand name clearly visible.



M. H. Erickson often did confusion inductions. "In all my techniques, almost all, there is a confusion." (Erickson, et al., 1976, p. 85) Sometimes, he caused confusion by using induction patter that was full of contradictions, plays on words, or a profusion of negatives. Sometimes, he did totally illogical and incomprehensible acts in an ordinarily predictable and regular setting.

For example, one day, the doctor took the hand of a woman he was meeting for the first time, as if to "shake" it. He ordered her to count backwards from 20 to 1. While she counted, he played games with her hand, putting light (seemingly random) pressures on various parts of it with his fingers. All this time, he stared at the wall behind her head, instead of looking at her face, as if he were looking right through her. He released her hand so slowly and gradually that, when he finally did let go of it, she was unsure of just when he actually had stopped touching it. Her hand, after his release, stayed outstretched, in a cataleptic condition.

Every element of Erickson's induction process had been done with the intention to confuse her, to dislodge her reality orientation, and to overwhelm her conscious mind. Seeing that catatonic hand, Erickson asked her, "Do you think you are awake?" That question further attacked her conscious orientation.

Other techniques that inhibit consciousness by creating confusion are:

- Rapid-fire statements.
- New demands given before any previous one can possibly be completed.
- Jumping from idea to idea in an illogical manner.
- Giving obviously mistaken instructions.
- Changing instructions, then refusing to admit that they were changed.

Emotion Inductions

We laid hands upon her, ministered inner healing to her, and she wept and cried before the Lord. She was totally set free from the grief of her father's death.

- Herald of Hope, Summer 1995, p. 2

Television advertising may begin with a shock, confusion, sensory deprivation, or relaxation induction. Advertising inserted into sports, drama, or news programming is most effective because viewers already are feeling excitement because of the preceding programming. Emotion is inductive. It creates suggestibility. "Intense emotion opens up the corridor to the subconscious because the conscious mind is inhibited by emotion," Charles Tebbetts told his hypnotherapy class.

Panic will do it. "...terror and pain produce a state analogous to hypnosis." (Gindes, p. 49) Rage will also do it. Brainwashers strive for it. Some religious inductions intensify emotion. Plain old life is the most common source of shock and suffering inductions. Crying causes hyperventilation which is inductive. (Tears also remove stress chemicals from your system.) Emotion lowers consciousness. Frank Laubach, a Christian mystic, described how pain had made him feel nearer to God:

> This week a new, and to me marvelous experience, has come out of my loneliness. I have been so desperately lonesome that it was unbearable save by talking with God...something broke within me...How infinitely richer this direct first hand grasping of God Himself is, than the old method which I used and recommended for years, the reading of endless devotional books...how was this new closeness achieved? Ah, I know now that it was by cutting the very heart of my heart and by suffering. Somebody was telling me this week that nobody can make a violin speak the last depths of human longing until that soul has been made tender by some great anguish. I do not say it is the only way to the heart of God, but I must witness that it has opened an inner shrine for me which I never entered before. (Laubach, Practicing His Presence, pp. 9-10)

When a person is deeply touched emotionally, he is in a state of abreaction. “Suggestibility can be enhanced, temporarily at least, by repeated abreaction.” (Sargant, Battle for the Mind, p. 76) People who share deep emotional experiences, again and again, bond. A client also may become more and more suggestible to whomever is coaching these experiences. Emotion can thus be a tool to heal deep wounds.

A church newsletter spoke of the healing of a lesbian:

> She began weeping before the Lord, which released the Lord’s healing power into many of her traumatic childhood experiences. She was going between weeping and laughing for a long period of time as the inner healing continued...She came back for several times of ministry...a number of pains of the past being released...They never came back. Praise the Lord! (Herald of Hope, Summer 1995, p. 2)

Expression of positive emotion can also heal:

> I prayed for the Lord to give him deep holy laughter for the hurts, and after about thirty minutes of laughter (sometimes mixed with crying), the bitterness, the unforgiveness, and the physical pain in his body were gone. (Ibid.)

For a rape victim:

> As we ministered to her, she laughed and cried deeply about this great trauma in her life. The laughter and crying released the bitterness, the unforgiveness, the fears, and shame within. Dorothy was at long last free from the pain and shame of that terrible experience. (Ibid.)

Fear

Cheryl was an extremely susceptible hypnotic subject. Her husband, when angry, would yell so loudly at her that she became rigid with shock (cataleptic). Then he would give her instructions. He had intuitively learned to use a fear induction on Cheryl, then tell her what he wanted her to do. Estabrooks wrote that “...emotional shock...gives us the phenomena of hypnotism and vice versa.” (Hypnotism, p. 110)

> It has been known for many years by researchers in the field of hypnosis that terror, especially when created by physical torture, is brutally effective in enhancing the power and control of the hypnotic trance. The subject’s suggestibility increases, and he becomes more compliant... (Bain, The Mind-control of Candy Jones, p. 201)

Any excitement or trauma (sudden fright, fear, terror, threats) makes you more suggestible. Fear (or any intense emotion) causes cortex overstimulation which results in Pavlovian inhibition. Inhibition equals induction. So, fear is inductive. The greater the fear, the deeper the potential trance. “Our own attitude as physicians causes us to avoid in principle hypnosis by intimidation, by shouting at the patient, frightening him...” (Schilder and Kauders, p. 84) Not all operators, however, have those moral principles:

> If a subject is to be hypnotized and is quite frightened, the operator can take advantage of the fear for easy induction. The frightened person is already in hypnosis or on the verge of it. (LeCron, Techniques of Hypnotherapy)

What Stephen King really does to readers and film viewers is provide the rush of trance induction by using fear. Excitement often peaks right before the commercial break in television programming. The product sells better that way because the viewers are in a suggestible state.

Fear, or lust, or any other path to lowered consciousness, can be addictive. Look at the grim faces in a gambling parlor. They hope. They lose. They suffer. But they take pride in their boldness, in the size of their suffering, the amount of their loss. Sometimes, they even win. Winning is a powerful emotional rush, a positive reinforcement that brings them back to those seductive machines and gaming tables to lose again, and again, because winning programs the brain more powerfully than losing. Human beings are designed to try, try again—if given a little encouragement. As a result, more and more gambling casinos are built, more and more lotteries established.

Sex Inductions

Last, but certainly not least, in the Type 2 category, is induction by sexual excitation and orgasm. Sargant's book, The Mind Possessed, devotes a chapter to the topic of sex inductions:

> During the sexual act, especially if it ends in mutual orgasm, both partners achieve an intense... state of temporary brain excitement, which leads on to a state of sudden temporary nervous collapse and transient brain inhibition ....creating greatly increased suggestibility... (Sargant, p. 87)

A married couple, during their honeymoon, quarreled fiercely. While his new wife was in a state of absolute rage, her husband shouted, "I'm sorry I married you!" Eighteen years later, she was still married to him, but she still felt deeply insecure because of his long-ago statement. A marriage counselor, whom the husband had asked for help, told him to say "I'm glad I married you" during her next orgasm (a comparable time of great emotion). The treatment worked.

Because erotic excitation and orgasm greatly increase suggestibility, ideally, the sex act results in imprinting a mutual sense of responsibility for, and bonding to, the partner—as well as freeing him from accumulated tensions. Like any other induction system, however, this one is easily distorted and abused.

About the Tension Induction and Hyperalert Trances

There is some public recognition that "sleep, sleep, sleep" suggestions can result in trance. There is no public recognition that "Alert! Worry! Earthquake! Hurricane! Fire! Fear! Evil! Satanic! Rape! Murder! Starvation!" suggestions can also result in lowered consciousness and heightened suggestibility. Though seldom mentioned in the research journals,[1] tension induction and the hyperalert trance are, in practice, often used. A basic propaganda rule is that the more upset people are, the more gullible they become. Any emotional state lowers consciousness and causes temporary cortex inhibition—a condition of greater suggestibility.

---

[1] In 1964 Arnold Ludwig published an article on "Tension Inductions and the Hyperalert Trance."

Type 3 Induction:

Brain Syndrome

> As the "brain syndrome" develops...the subject is quite likely to have thinking difficulties and sensory experiences, illusions, delusions, hallucinations, and projective or paranoid thinking...he may confabulate....
>
> Hinkle, p. 26

Brain syndrome, Pavlov's Type 3 induction, is (like all other induction types) a physiological event. Hinkle first used the term while studying brainwashing for the Air Force. He wrote that brain syndrome is "not uncommon among men who have been through prolonged combat, or through prolonged and depleting activities of any sort." (Ibid., p. 27).

Exhaustion can be physical, emotional, or both. Anything that pushes your brain out of its normal condition makes you more suggestible: exhaustion, hunger, sickness, lack of oxygen. A brief choking pressure on the subject's jugular has been used to induct. Alexander Cannon, an English medical hypnotist, created that very ugly induction method by pressing for "one minute or so." Then he gave hypnotic suggestions meant to turn that physiological unconsciousness into suggested trance. Lying, with head tilted downward, also causes an almost instant lowering of consciousness.

A traveler to Nepal described an incident in which his camera film was destroyed from a six-foot distance. The destroyer was a cruelly deformed young man whom he had just photographed. The devotee had achieved great trance depth, and associated psychic ability, by amputating three of his four limbs and keeping the remaining one permanently in a painfully contorted position.

Bernheim was the first researcher to write about brain syndrome. He pointed out that very sick and unconscious people behave as if hypnotized. Volgyesi theorized that trance had a natural protective function for a body under stress, because hunger, illness and exhaustion all lower consciousness. Childbirth also triggers an altered state of consciousness. In 1927, August Forel pointed out that animal hibernation physiologically resembles a coma-depth hypnotic trance. And a hen who is setting a clutch of eggs, attempting to hatch chicks from them, acts catatonic.

Brain syndrome is common. Exhausted people are more suggestible than rested ones. Researchers have observed many examples of trance behavior in fatigued persons, such as after a long bike race. The more exhausted (or hungry, or emotionally stressed, or ill) you are, the more suggestible you are, and the more you are likely to have a conversion experience or one of those limbic system Aha! experiences of realization.

> Fasting, chastening of the flesh by scourging and physical discomfort, regulation of breathing, disclosure of awesome mysteries, drumming, dancing, singing, inducement of panic, fear, weird or glorious lighting, incense, intoxicant drugs—these are only some of the many methods used to modify normal brain function for religious purposes. (Sargant, Battle for the Mind, pp. 91-92)

The list goes on: EST seminars, very stressful religious retreats, boot camps, certain holistic "medical" retreats (that induce vomiting, diarrhea, malnutrition, and do excruciatingly painful muscle probing), and the vision quest all fit here. Some persons have attended "those now-popular seventy-two-hour group encounters where exhaustion finally leaves you with shredded nerve ends ready to absorb anything." (Malko, 1970, p. 3) "Survival training" also may result in this type of induction:

> Having had no food and little water for three days under such extreme conditions, most of us were walking wrecks...When we reached the destination around 2 A.M., half the group was near a state of total collapse. Numerous people were vomiting, one was having real medical problems...the "lid" of my mind was opened and my awareness soared into the starry heights. (Baer, pp. 18-19)

Even in its early stages, brain syndrome impacts memory and may result in varying degrees of spontaneous amnesia or confabulation:

> There may be a distinct hiatus in his memory, without its being noticed...More often he is vague, uncertain about details, and has temporary blocks of memory, especially for the nuances, or the finer (and sometimes the most important) details...As the "brain syndrome" develops...His orientation for time, place, and person becomes increasingly deficient. (Hinkle, p. 26)

Randall N. Baer described the darker side of playing with one's mind in yoga:

> Extended fasting, strict vegetarian diet, Hatha Yoga, chanting, and diverse prescribed physical purification exercises (like slipping a length of cloth down the throat to the stomach, and pulling it back up again)—all are combined into a highly disciplined regimen...There are extreme dangers involved in awakening the kundalini practices. I have observed numerous New Agers experiencing the subtle and extreme casualties—mental and emotional disruptions—involuntary physical movements (from uncontrolled spasms to incessant quivering), nervous system burnout, outrageous ego-inflations, sexual obsessions, intense delusionary states, hallucinations, and other quite undesirable side-effects. (Baer, p. 114)

Combining Induction Types

Induction attempts often combine different types. Or, the induction may start with one type, then shift to another, and perhaps yet another. Operators may use television, video, or computer programming to combine subliminal messages with sound rhythms at the "brain synchronization" pace, or with visual, or anti-logic inductive elements. Any combination of inductive elements is possible, and all reinforce the others' effects.

Type 4 Induction: Chemical, Electrical, & Biomagnetic ("Psychic")

☑

> ...a neurophysiological basis exists for the facilitation of hypnosis.
> Martin Orne[1], 1961, p. 175

When a person's physiological state of consciousness is directly affected in an inductive way by an outside force: chemical, electrical, or biomagnetic, that is a Type 4 induction. Some Type 4 induction methods are very ancient. Others are on the cutting edge of modern research and technology. Chemical inductions are covered in Part II: Narcohypnosis. Electrical inductions are introduced in Part II: Electroshock. There is more on electronic and biomagnetic inductions in Part II: Mind-to-mind Inductions, and Psychiatry Is No Longer a Joke.

Beta is a nonsynchronized brain wave pattern. Alpha and theta patterns, the hypnoid states, are comparatively more synchronized. Anything that slows and synchronizes brain waves is inductive. Some induction devices require skin contact to work, using the subject's own nervous system as their signal carrier. Other signals are designed to radiate through the air, being received by the brain in a manner similar to a radio receiver. Both a skilled psychic inductor and an induction machine have potential to influence an unguarded, susceptible person's brain waves, shifting them from beta patterns into the slower, more synchronized alpha and theta patterns. The biologically, or mechanically-generated radiation, of a specific frequency aims to cause brain wave synchronization in the targeted mind.

Whether psychic or electronic, this process tends to be extrasensory in that it cannot be perceived by the usual senses: hearing, seeing, smelling, tasting, or touching. The signals can be recognized, however, by a sensitive and trained unconscious. They could also probably be recognized by sensitive and appropriately programmed electronic equipment .

---

[1] Whenever I see the name of a prominent research hypnotist coauthoring an article involving the physiology of hypnosis, the name of some obscure physiologist is listed first. That is the name it is catalogued under. So when you look up Orne articles, you do not see "Bioelectric Correlates of Hypnosis" or "Endosomatic Electrodermal Correlates of Hypnotic Depth and Susceptibility," articles which he coauthored.

Rock concerts have Type 2 induction elements, strobe lights and throbbing loud music, which create overwhelming sound and emotion. The influence of massed people simultaneously responding to the induction pressure is a Type 4 induction factor Mass hysteria is a natural process of brain wave synchronization caused by electromagnetic transmissions from massed, excited brains affecting each another. Mass hysteria is an induction effect caused by an extrasensory process.

Induction Machines

When a brain is in trance, it is in a condition of brainwave synchronization. Synchronization takes place on a spectrum, rather than as an absolute. In a fully alert state, the brainwaves are not very synchronized. As consciousness lowers, they become more synchronized.

> Neuroscientists have recently discovered that special music calibrated at a specific beat per second merge the right and left hemispheres of your brain into a cohesive unit. Studies have shown that this synchronization can speed up the learning process two to five times while dramatically increasing the receptivity of your unconscious mind. Subliminal Success cassettes utilize this special music as a soothing background for the potent subliminal messages that are being directed to specific areas of your brain. While your conscious mind relaxes to the specially designed sounds, your subconscious mind is focused... (Ad for "Whole Brain Synchronization," Western Research Institute, Thousand Oaks, CA, 1990)

The first electro-induction machines were crude. They used comparatively large voltages, delivered by skin contact, to disorient the brain into a state of inhibition. This began in 1902, when Stephane Leduc, a French scientist, announced that he had put animals to "sleep" by sending alternating current through their heads. By 1907, the same thing was being done to humans: "By means of electric baths hypnosis may be induced either when the subject is being charged with electricity, or after the charge has been made, when sparks are drawn from him." (Lapponi, p. 66)

Between 1917 and 1963, Dr. Ferenc A. Volgyesi, in Hungary, hypnotized people by shocking them with a touch of his mitt-with-a-kick. (He marketed it as the "Faraday Hand.") Eastern European scientists produced electronarcosis induction machines which induced trance by passing a mild shock through the head, from temple to temple. These machines have been commonly used by therapists in the U.S.S.R. and France. An alternate system uses electrode contacts on top of the eyelids and behind the subject's ears to deliver alpha/theta frequency direct currents—a brain wave synchronization method. A young American developed a method to communicate patterned sound (speech and music) via skin contact (Begich, Towards a New Alchemy).

In 1961, Martin Orne mentioned a method for silent, distance induction that did not require skin contact and which mimicked alpha waves. (1961, p. 175) He probably meant W. S. Kroger's Brain Wave Synchronizer. It was the first machine which was specifically designed to lower consciousness. Kroger and Sidney Schneider developed the electric induction machine between 1948 and 1957. Kroger first announced its existence in a 1959 article. Early versions of the machine used a pattern of flashing lights together with a repetitive signal in the alpha or theta cycles per second ranges.

The Brain Wave Synchronizer has been around ever since. It can now be turned on by remote control. Its soundless, invisible signal may affect any susceptible brain in the area, causing the human brain wave pattern to synchronize with that of the radiated electronic signal. Kroger tested 2500 patients with his machine: 80 % were affected; 50 % of the 2500 entered deep trance within five minutes. Trance is a state of increased suggestibility, a state in which suggestions can be given to develop the subject's condition into hypnosis. Hughes included the following quote regarding the use and efficacy of the Brain Wave Synchronizer in his textbook for student hypnotists:

> Starting at 7 on Alpha I turn the speed higher at a very slow pace up to 10, then slowly back to 5, 4, or maybe slower, then up again. I watch the eyes very closely for that glistening, fixed stare... I do not stop until I see a fixity in the eye and facial expression. I turn the dial very slowly until I see this....
>
> Usually within 5 minutes the eyes will close and remain so. I take it from there with suggestion. Very rarely do I fail to get a workable trance at the first setting, and by workable trance I mean achieving at least a partial amnesia. In a very few cases it may take two or three sessions to obtain the desired control...in the last 269 cases I have had only two who did not achieve a workable trance. (quoted in Hughes, Hypnosis: The Induction of Conviction, "How to Hypnotize Your Client")

The machine is now regularly advertised in Journal of Hypnosis for about $550 and touring experts give how-to workshops on its use to professionals.

After the Brain Wave Synchronizer was invented, other electro-induction machines were marketed under various trade names. Edmonston offers a list of manufacturers, but it is out of date. Baer said many brands of zap-yourself induction machines were advertised in New Age magazines:

> MC2, David I, Alpha-Stim, Neuro-Pep, Bio-Pacer, Isis, Somatron, and Graham Potentializer... readily available, ranging in price from $300 to $6,000....Most of these devices use goggles (for flashing light input) and headphones (for sound input), and have control consoles that coordinate the light and sound in order to induce controlled trance-states and psychedelic-like experiences. (Baer, p. 49)

I have heard of a little shocker marketed to the New Agers to "heal yourself" with. Some early models caused brain damage. Later models have, supposedly, overcome that problem. The "virtual reality" technology fits in here. Most of this technology uses skin contact to send a message to the user's nervous system, transmitting through the moist conductor of skin and flesh, rather than zapping through air like the Brain Wave Synchronizer.

A pricey, electric inductor, called "The Learning Machine," is another member of this category. It is marketed, along with an array of educational and recreational tapes, by Zygon (Redmond, Washington). It combines goggles with earphones that position a sizable unit back of the ear. You arrange the gear on your head, find the switch, and down you go: "A digital program embedded in the CD, sends a combination of light and sound instructions through the headset to stimulate the optimum mind-state for learning." The company calls it "an amazing light-sound matrix that instantly relaxes your mind. This highly relaxed mind-state helps lock the new information into your memory."

The synchronizing waves in that type of machine come from a cassette tape. You cannot hear the inductive part. What you hear is an audio overlay of pretty music and positive suggestions. You do not hear the broadcasting on subliminal sound frequencies which has the potential to trigger a further lowering of consciousness and implant programming.

Flashing Lights

Lights flashing in a rhythm also can affect the brain in surprising ways. Researchers testing the induction effect of flashing light found that a strobe light, flashing at a certain frequency, can cause an epileptic to go into seizure. Byron Gysin invented a "flicker machine" that "caused hallucinations similar to mescaline or LSD." (Lee and Schlain, p. 81) Poet Ginsburg, while testing acid for the CIA, endured a flashing light timed to match his alpha rhythms. He, himself, had suggested the experiment, but he soon found it unbearable. Ginsburg told them to turn it off. They did. However, after the light was turned off, his feelings of terror still continued. I recently read about a powerful induction method that uses patterned, colored light.

The Magic Chair

A traveling huckster with a magical chair was giving free demonstrations. (Free demos are a good sales technique for any trance vendor because anything inductive tends to create longing to repeat the experience.) I watched another woman try it. She lay in the reclining chair with goggles over her eyes, from which light patterns flashed onto the thin skin of her eyelids. From plugs in her ears, huge and chaotic sound bombarded her auditory nerves. Her face soon relaxed into the characteristic mask-like expression of the deep trance state. Afterwards, she told us she had been having an ecstatic experience (hallucination) of blasting off in a rocket for the moon.

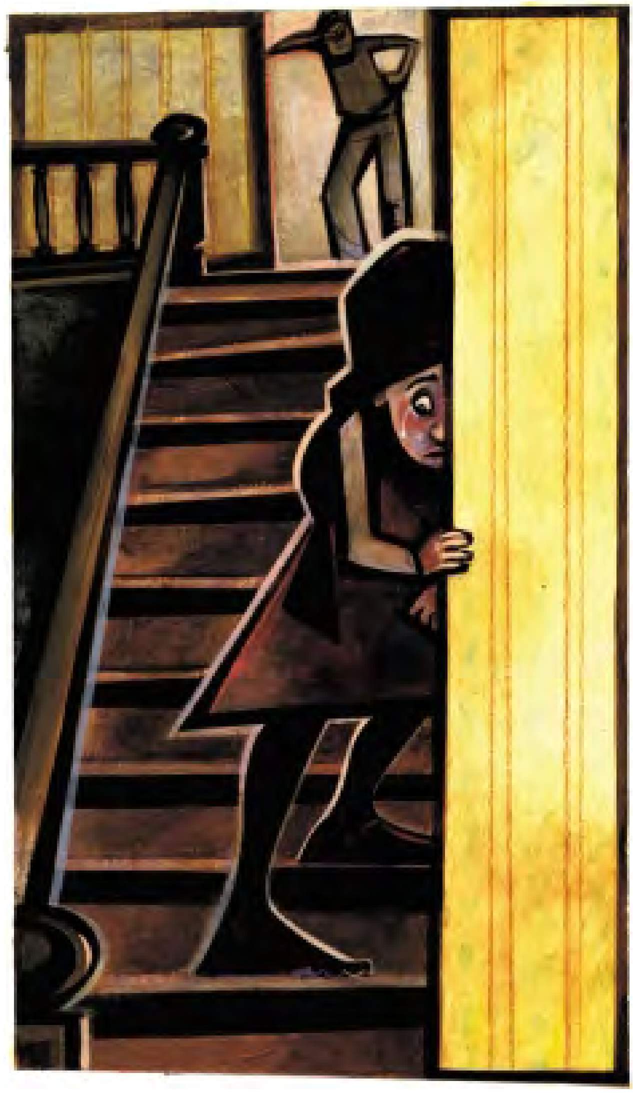
Then it was my turn to recline in the chair with the goggles over my eyes and the earphones in my ears. The goggles created a flashing light pattern; the earphones played throbbing music. For me, it was not ecstatic. I did not lower in consciousness, not even a little. Instead, I felt severe, almost unendurable pain: first in the back of my neck, then in my upper shoulder area. I did not have a visual hallucination, only that pain and annoyance from the headphone noise.

At first, I thought the pain was real. I felt around on my neck where it hurt, trying to massage the pain away. I then realized that my sealed unconscious was having to convert all that mechanical induction pressure into something other than trance, and its choice was the subjective impression of physical pain. It was all I could manage to force myself to continue lying there until the demonstration was complete. I was glad he kept it short.

...she had been having an ecstatic experience (hallucination) of blasting off in a rocket for the moon.

PART V

Legal & Therapy Issues in Criminal Hypnosis



Interview with a Hypnotist Lawer

More Cases of Criminal Hypnosis: Tried and Untried

Texts and Training in Forensic Hypnosis

Public Spokesman on Hypnosis: Truth, Half-Truths, and Lies

Criminal Hypnosis is Possible: Wells and Brenman, Salter and Bowers, and Young

How to Identify a Victim of Unethical Hypnosis

Help and Healing

...her uncle...moved into the top floor of her family's house. He used hypnotic conditioning of Nora to facilitate his sexual abuse of her: "...the Monster Animal that Dr. Eldon put in the stairwell when I was three..."

Interview with a Hypnotist-Lawyer

> During the past decade, knowledge of hypnosis induction techniques has been obtained by an ever enlarging percentage of the public....the so-called "secrets" of hypnotism are becoming available to everyone, qualified or otherwise. There is no question that the number of criminal incidents related to the use of hypnotism will increase.
>
> Teitlebaum, 1964, p. 158

In the late 80s, I spent an hour in the Spokane, Washington, office of an eminent lawyer-psychologist-hypnotist, Dr. Mays. He was articulate and efficient as he invited me into his large, expensively furnished office. There was a couch at one end of the room, and a couple of easy chairs facing each other in its center. I sat in one, he in the other. I asked to be allowed to tape our conversation. He agreed.

"Tell me about yourself," I said. "It's unusual to have both a degree in law and a Ph.D. in clinical psychology."

"My training has been in psychology and I've always practiced as a full-time clinical psychologist," he replied. "The legal training was a second thought. It's not as unusual as it once was. There are probably a hundred people in the country who have J.D./Ph.D.s and there are three programs that produce joint degrees—one at Arizona, one at Nebraska, and one at Stanford, because there's a significant overlap between the legal system and the mental health system in such areas as assessing competency for trial, in terms of looking at the function of memory in answering questions, and making some recommendations for the courts regarding child custody decisions, assessing competency to make a will...a host of other kinds of situations. I was interested in it academically, and when I had some veterans' benefits, when I had some time, I decided that would be an interesting thing to do. So, I applied to law school and enjoyed it. I don't want to practice law. But, on occasion, I'm approached about specific cases. I teach evidence at the law school with a friend of mine who is interested in the construction of reality, which [is] basically the rules of evidence allow[ed] to be presented to a jury. And I see that as just real similar to what happens with individuals who allow certain information to enter into their own awareness and respond to life and make decisions based on that..."

His voice droned on and on for five minutes, or more. (I left out a lot of what he said here.) His meaning became less and less clear. Or was my mind getting fuzzy, tired? Was I spacing out, giving up the contest to keep up with him intellectually? Or was I in lowered consciousness? My mind felt numb, stuporous. I said, "Um-huh" again. I had been repeating the nods and "um-huhs" throughout his long monologue, trying to pay close attention, trying to be polite. He had not paused once to acknowledge my "um-huhs." I wondered if his long obtuse speech was a conversational induction, a specialty of persons with Ericksonian training. Is that why my mind felt less clear than usual?

Dr. Mays now sat silent, waiting.

With some effort, I gathered my thoughts back into coherence. I still could not articulate all the reactions and thoughts struggling to coalesce in me. Critiquing Dr. May's conversational style wasn't my highest agenda for this precious hour anyway. So I just said "Okay." Then I laughed with embarrassment because, after all that he had said, I had nothing to reply but that stupid-sounding, "Okay."

"Is that clear?" he asked.

I chuckled again. "That's great," I said. I could feel myself coming out of it now, riding back up the elevator of consciousness to normal alertness. My mind shook off its remaining somnolence and became sharp and fully functional again. Now I could articulate another question. I asked, "Has your crossover relationship between the law and practice of psychology ever caused you to, uh..." I paused, hesitant. I wanted to word the rest of this question very carefully, "...be involved with inquiries into the ethics of the practice of psychology?"

"Yes." He volunteered nothing more.

"Could you tell me about that?" The phony casualness between us had suddenly disappeared, like water dropped through a sieve, fallen into an invisible dark drain hole below.

"I've been called upon as a consultant by several attorneys who were involved in litigations, either defending mental health professionals, or pursuing lawsuits against mental health professionals, and they've asked for my appraisal of the circumstances as I understood." He sounded cautious, serious. Again there was silence.

"You're also a hypnotist," I said.

"Yes, I am."

"Where did you acquire that particular skill?"

"I became interested in hypnosis some years ago in my postdoctoral training. I started to go to hypnosis training workshops in '72 or '73 and continued doing that for a while. The name Milton Erickson kept coming up. He's a rather notable figure who once practiced and wrote about hypnosis. I was able to spend four weeks apprenticing with him and have continued with that as a real area of interest."

I asked more questions. He answered them all. In addition to his private practice, I learned that Dr. Mays taught, researched, and was regularly published in professional journals. I was excited by his achievements. I said, quite sincerely, "Well, I'm speaking to a very active professional, and one who's shown real qualities of leadership. You obviously belong to psychological organizations. Are you president of..." I paused, teased, "the American Psychological Association?"

"No, I'm on the Governance Board of that," Dr. Mays replied, speaking as seriously as I had been light. "I've been president of the [Washington] state association." He then waited politely for my next question.

I asked it: "Have you ever, in all these years and years of practicing, and packed professional life, and all the reading you've done and all the education of various sorts you've acquired... Have you ever heard of a case of the unethical use of hypnotism?"

"Yes. I don't think that there's a specific standard regarding hypnosis per se, but I've seen that as a communication vehicle used inappropriately, and I've seen that used as an artifact of other unethical issues."

"What do you mean?"

Dr. Mays suddenly looked very uncomfortable. He paused, cleared his throat, paused again—the first uncertain moment that I had seen in him since our conversation began. He stalled, "Take a second to figure out exactly what..."

I asked, "Can you describe the specific incidents?" I was embarrassed that my voice so clearly revealed my eagerness. I was hoping, so much, that he would mention the psychiatrist to whom Bob Gale had referred as an abuser of hypnosis. At very least, I hoped he would mention some case that would prove to other professionals that unethical hypnosis could happen. [This interview took place right after I talked to Gale, and before I did most of the research for this book.]

"Well, some of these cases are confidential in their nature. When I'm consulted by an attorney, for example, who tells me certain things, that's often a confidential communication. I'm not free to disclose that to people."

"So there have been legal cases regarding the alleged misuse of hypnosis?" I asked.

"There have been, I understand, legal... I'm not sure if there've been any lawsuits brought to trial. I know of no—as of about ten years ago—no tort actions in the United States in which hypnosis itself has been the cause of some specific injury."

"Then...how did these other cases that you were talking to me about turn out?"

"Carla, I'm wanting to be helpful to you and I'm not wanting to talk or hint or imply about a specific case which I've been asked to consult about in confidence."

I tried again from a different angle, wording my question very carefully, "Do you feel that the profession of psychology/psychiatry in general, and those persons with a specialty in hypnosis in particular, are protective of themselves when it comes to publicly divulging what they might know privately of ethical problems?"

Dr. Mays thought silently for a while. Finally, he said, "Yes, I think sometimes that's right. I think the influences are sometimes subtle, in that people don't want to talk publicly about a whole host of things. I think the information is not freely available because it's not a public arena."

"Do you think it should not be a public arena?" I asked. "Do you think the public has no right to know hypnosis is sometimes ethically abused, or used improperly?"

"No, I have no problem with the public being fully informed."

"Have you ever heard of any cases other than this one, or more, legal thing you've personally been involved in? Have you heard about any cases of abusive hypnosis, other than those you have been personally consulted on? Have you read about the cases in Europe where people actually were sent to jail for..."

"No, I know of nothing," he interrupted. "Last time I reviewed was about eight to ten years ago, and, at that time, there were no successful tort actions in the United States involving hypnosis."

This professional psychologist, who sounded so knowledgeable and authoritative, seemed to know nothing of a subject about which I, a complete nonprofessional, had already been able to find out so much. That surprised and discouraged me. Did Dr. Mays truly not know? Did he and Bob Gale live in separate universes? Or was Dr. Mays lying to me?

Dr. Mays continued, "I've taught for the American Society of Clinical Hypnosis, myself. Hypnosis is like a beaker. It can be filled up with helpful liquids and medicines, or it can be filled up with something that's not helpful."

I asked, "Have you ever read John Marks's book, The Search for the 'Manchurian Candidate'?"

"No."

U.S. Legal Cases Involving Hypnosis

A specialist on forensic hypnosis, Udolf, wrote: "No American case has been found in which a defendant has successfully raised such a defense," meaning the defense of having committed a crime because a hypnotist told him to do so. Yet, in the 1981 case of the United States v. Springston, the defendant pled not guilty on the basis that he robbed a bank only because of posthypnotic suggestion. Nine jurors voted to acquit. Because the outcome was a hung jury, Springston and the government settled for a plea bargain (Springston served four months in jail).

Udolf did state that The American Law Institute's Model Penal Code said "'conduct during hypnosis or resulting from hypnotic suggestion' is not voluntary within the meaning of the proposed statute." (Udolf, 1983, pp. 137-139) Canadian law also permits a defense of automatism for cases involving hypnotic suggestion to do a criminal act.

However, I do not think that Dr. Mays mistook my questions to be limited to the narrow topic of crimes committed by a hypnotic subject because they were suggested by his operator. What about crimes committed by a hypnotist by means of his mental control over a subject? Udolf wrote, "...there are a fair number of cases in which it is quite clear that hypnotic subjects have been victimized by the hypnotist." (Ibid., p. 138) He cited Kline's 1972 report of subjects

> ...sexually abused by psychopathic hypnotists....Both of these cases are probably reliable as they were reported by the hypnotists themselves during psychotherapy, not in the course of a criminal prosecution. (Ibid.)

"Are you familiar with the concept?

"I am."

"Do you think it's possible?"

"Very, very, very unlikely."

"Are you completely close-minded to the possibility?"

"No," Dr. Mays replied. "I think such things are possible, but I think it very, very unlikely."

"I Want to Stop Now"

Back home, after my talk with Dr. Mays, a neighbor, a single woman in her mid-forties named Corinne, visited me. I told her that Dr. Mays had said he knew of some cases involving hypnosis, but that he had refused to give any details.

She then told me about a guy in Boise who had used hypnosis to seduce women for years, ever since she was a young woman. She asked, "Didn't you read about it in the newspaper? Somebody sued him last winter for this kind of thing. He settled out of court."

Settled out-of-court. If that was how such legal cases usually ended, it explained why Mays could say, "no legal cases brought to trial...no torte actions." I asked her, "Tell me more about this guy in Boise. How long has he been in business?"

"I saw him in '76. He was a hypnotherapist who had built up quite a reputation already. He was probably in his forties. He especially worked with disturbed children and families."

"How did you happen to come into contact with him?"

"I was curious about hypnosis. I wanted to try it. He was recommended as one of the best. I was a social work student. I saw him twice. The first time we just talked. He wanted to establish a certain amount of trust." Then she stopped talking. She sat, staring into space.

"What happened the second time?" I asked.

"Well, I was what they call 'going under.' And I thought he was asking me if I would get undressed. Then I was saying to myself, 'Something's happening here...better bring you out.' And I just stopped going under. And I got real uncomfortable. I can't remember exactly, but I think I said to him, 'I want to stop now.'"

Corinne was such a pretty, shapely woman now. She would have been a real beauty twenty years earlier, I thought.

She continued: "He said, 'What happened? You were going under so... We were just about ready to...' And I was really embarrassed to say anything. I didn't want to tell him what I thought. And he asked, 'Well, what's the matter?' And I said, 'I thought you were going to tell me to get undressed. I don't trust you.' And he said, 'Well, if I did, what would you take off first?' And I'm going—Oh, my God. To me that was a strange response. I cut it off and I never went back. I never reported it to anyone else, just talked to one or two friends. I didn't tell it to the agency I was working with. The agency used him and his partner a lot with disturbed children. There was one particular girl, a teenager. She'd been abused by her family. They sent that child to him. It was at that time I heard from other friends that he had affairs with patients."

"Yeah," I said, "the official point of view is you cannot be made to do anything under hypnosis that you don't really want to do. So these guys can do that and then say, 'Well, she really wanted to undress for me. I'm just this irresistible hunk."

"It was totally inappropriate in the therapy situation," Corinne said, "no matter what the person's problem is. I didn't go there with a sexual problem at all. It was the furthest thing from my mind. So it would have been totally unethical and inappropriate, no matter what—to undress under hypnosis."

"That's one thing about this unethical hypnosis thing," I said. "People so seldom tell. And when they do, nobody believes. Or it gets settled out-of-court. So then there's no court record. I wonder if this is one of the cases that guy in Spokane, I just saw, was talking about having consulted on."

Corinne had pulled back in time. A Swiss specialist on unethical hypnosis wrote that > ...within certain limits it is possible for a natural mechanism of self-defense to operate. The lighter the depth of a hypnosis, the more strongly the critical powers of the hypnotized subject are preserved so that he can reject a suggestion which goes "against the grain" and...can break through the hypnosis. (Hammerschlag, p. 29)

A Dutch psychoanalyst told of a girl he had treated who previously had gone to a hypnotic "healer." He said she did not know there

> ...are unconscious sexual roots in hypnosis, related to the passive yielding to the attacker, which the quack uses to give vent to his own passions...It was only at the very last moment that she had been able to get out of her lethargic, submissive state and fight off his assault. (Meerloo, The Rape of the Mind, p. 61)

A few weeks later, as I was walking down the street, Corinne drove by with another woman. They pulled over, and she introduced me to her companion, a social worker named Jackie. Later that day, Corinne again stopped by my home.

She said, "Carla, after she met you, Jackie asked me what you did. I told her you were researching a book on unethical hypnosis. And Jackie told me, 'I just found out that my husband has been hypnotizing me.'"

If she had only just found that out, I thought, it was clearly an unethical situation. Why, I wondered, did the husband get into that hypnotist-subject relationship with his wife? Why did he make her amnesic? How did he use his secret control over her? How did she find out?

I never saw Jackie again, so I don't have the answers to those questions.

More Cases of Criminal Hypnosis: Tried and Untried

CriminalHypnosis:
Court Cases

☑

Criminal Hypnosis: Out-of-Court Cases

If in skilled and worthy hands hypnosis is as powerful and salutary an instrument as its recent application, for example, in hypnoanalysis indubitably indicates, then in skilled but unworthy hands it might become an instrument of danger...

Young, 1952, pp. 406-7

CRIMINAL HYPNOSIS: COURT CASES

The Case of Spurgeon Young

In the United States, in January of 1897, the Chatauqua County Coroner, A. H. Bowen, was notified of the death of Spurgeon Young, a 17-year-old, 125-pound black male. When Bowen autopsied, he found Young had died of diabetic coma and kidney weakness. It seemed odd to him that a young man, with no previous health problems, had quite suddenly died of a failed pancreas and kidneys.

Bowen began asking questions and collecting background information on Young. He learned that, for the past six months, Young had been put into deep trance, over and over, by "amateurs and irresponsible and reckless youthful operators and dabblers in hypnotism..." (Bowen quoted in Bell, p. 530) Those "operators and dabblers" had discovered that Young was a genetic somnambulist with no memory of time spent under trance. Hypnotizing Young had then become the local entertainment.

They would put him into a trance and suggest that he was drunk or had delirium tremens. They would put him into a catatonic state and "bridge" his body with no support except for chair backs under his neck and ankles. They romped and stomped upon Spurgeon Young's suspended, rigid form—on his chest, his abdomen, his legs—until they tired of the sport. Then, the perpetrators would leave him alone with a posthypnotic suggestion to wake up at a certain later time. Young would return to consciousness, unaware of the missing time, ignorant of what had been done to him—and feeling sick.

> ...having been sat or stood on, by men of average or heavy weight, while in a cataleptic state, with head and feet supported, so that he formed a bridge between such supports..." (Ibid.)

Bowen then wrote to a noted hypnosis expert, Clark Bell, explaining the details of the case. He asked if hypnosis could, directly or indirectly, cause "physical injury or organic impairment particularly of the renal function, or symptoms of glycosuria..." Bell passed on copies of Bowen's letter to fifteen other experts in the U.S. and Europe, asking for their advice.

One by one, the replies came in. They were generally of the opinion that Young's health had been endangered by the trauma he endured as a result of hypnotism, not from the hypnotism itself. One writer called it "diabetes of traumatic origin..." Several stated that trance itself could cause health deterioration. (That is not true.)

The coroner's inquest jury agreed: "We find that J. W. Spurgeon Young came to his death...from diabetes and nervous exhaustion caused by hypnotic practices..." (Bell, p. 545) However, no one was charged with the crime. The jury did recommend a state law prohibiting hypnosis.

Austin v. Barker

When Edith Austin found herself pregnant, she had no idea how it could have happened. In August of 1901, she gave birth. A few months later, her father's lawyer hypnotized her, questioned her under that rehypnotization,

Other Cases of Sexual Violation Under Hypnosis

Tardieau reported a similar, 1857, criminal case. The victim was Marguerite, age 18. She had visited the house of a magnetic healer for a treatment. At that time, magnetic healers routinely prescribed frequent, even daily treatments. It was good for business and the subjects knew no better. From then until early April, Marguerite went for daily hypnotizations. Then she realized she was pregnant and went to the police.

The police commissioner wondered if it was possible for a virgin to be deflowered and impregnated against her will by means of magnetization, so he appointed two experts to research the matter. The experts knew much experimental evidence existed that hypnotic subjects could be made insensitive to "tortures," and also could be made amnesic regarding trance events. They reasoned, therefore, that a hypnotic subject also could be the victim of coitus without consent, and without conscious awareness. When Tardieau was consulted in the case, he agreed with their opinion. (In a couple of other cases, he had found the hypnotist innocent.) The court convicted Marguerite's hypnotist based on the three expert opinions.

Thoinot, an associate of Charcot, reported a similar case in Medicolegal Aspects of Moral Offenses* (published in English, in 1919). Again, the case involved a girl who said she had been impregnated by a young man who often had magnetized her. She said they were alone for a while on Christmas night and during that time he had put her to "sleep" and raped her. This case came to the notice of the authorities because of the girl's request, relayed by her minister, to go to a charity hospital for the birth.

Experts were called in to determine the credibility of her story. Ladame was one. The question the experts were asked to resolve was: "...Is conception possible when a woman is in a state of absolute insensibility?" (Ladame quoted in Thoinot, p. 135) Ladame said that all the girl claimed was possible. When the case came to court, however, the judge ruled in favor of the accused.

August Forel, a Zurich psychiatrist, professor, and mental hospital director of that era, was interested in criminal hypnosis and its legal implications. In his 1902 book, he reported giving somnambulists a suggestion to kill (he provided, in one experiment, a piece of chalk for a "knife," in another, a pistol loaded with blank cartridges). In both cases, the subject carried out the suggested "attack."

> I am convinced of the fact that a good somnambulist may commit serious crimes during hypnotic sleep in response to suggestion, and that, under certain circumstances, he may not know anything about it later on. (Forel, Psychotherapy and Suggestion, or Hypnotism, p. 287)

Forel also experimented in the category of sex crime. Working together with another hypnotist, he gave an old, homely, and "extraordinarily prudish" female servant a suggestion to strip to the waist in their presence. This woman's extreme modesty was such that she would not allow examination of her breasts even by a doctor. When Forel gave her the suggestion in somnambulist trance, however, she immediately and with no evidence of emotion, carried it out:

> I own I was astounded at it. If I had not been absolutely sure of her complete amnesia, I would never have dared to have performed this experiment, for she would have despaired if she had known. I only carried it out with considerable disinclination, and only in the interests of science, for this kind of experiment borders on the illegal. (Ibid., pp. 285-286)

Forel eventually became "convinced that every conceivable crime may be committed on a hypnotized person, provided that a higher degree of hypnosis is attained." (Ibid., p. 280) and the mystery was cleared up. The lawyer learned that David Barker, who had hypnotized Edith several times, around the date she had conceived, was the father of her child. Edith was a somnambulist, capable of profound trance followed by amnesia. While she was in amnesic trance, Barker had taken advantage of her. Afterwards, she had no conscious memory of what had taken place.

Over the years, from 1901 to 1906, the case of Edith Austin was tried three times. The first judgment found Barker innocent, declaring that the accusation was based on "some science and theory that was not generally known or understood..." (Austin v. Barker, 1904) The second trial reversed that decision to a guilty verdict on the grounds that the first court had ruled against the evidence. When retried in 1906, the court reversed again, declaring Barker innocent because the accusation was "hearsay," not a "true memory."

Louis v. State

This 1930 case illustrates another problem with solving hypnosis abuses through the courts: very often the legal system decides a case based on its own game-playing rules, rather than on the facts. The defendant, Louis, a hypnotist, was accused of having put "a spell" on the person who brought the charges against him. The spell had compelled her to take her bankbooks, go out of her house, travel the two miles to her bank, withdraw all the money she had in the bank, and go back home where she turned it over to Louis. The amount was about $290.

At the first trial, Louis was convicted and sentenced to ten years. He denied his guilt and appealed the judgement. The Court of Appeals of Alabama overruled the lower court and set Louis free: "to make a case of robbery, the People must prove...that the property was taken either by force or fear...no force was used...and she had testified that she was not afraid." A charge of larceny by trick or device might have gotten a conviction. But it was too late.

The Sala Affair

A 1936 Swedish case of unethical hypnosis involved the acquisition and control of a gang by hypnosis, crimes caused by hypnosis, suicide caused by posthypnotic suggestion, and murder by a poisonous injection given to a subject in a hypnotic trance. The hypnotist is known only as "Th." The case is known as the "Sala affair."

Th. was short and very fair-skinned. He compensated for his wimpy body by learning to dominate others, first by his intellectual gifts, then by his hypnotic skills. Beginning when he was thirteen, Th. read every mystical-sounding book he could get his hands on: theosophy, spiritualism, parapsychology, metaphysics. (Psychiatrists on the case later called him a "schizoid.") He was introverted, preferring solitude to company. He was closemouthed, sociopathic—and utterly amoral.

He enlisted acquaintances in experiments on ESP—and then hypnotism. He used "yoga training" and other occult mental exercises as disguised trance inductions. By adulthood, Th. had developed into an occult-oriented, imaginative leader—with no conscience. He told his hypnotic subjects they now belonged to a secret organization named "The Magic Circle." He organized the members in a complex hierarchy. He required absolute obedience and vows of secrecy from them in the conscious state, even more in the hypnotic state. Using his hypnotic control, Th. turned the club into a little Mafia. He induced underage girls to have sex with him, then to work as prostitutes. Using hypnosis, he ordered his male gang members to commit robberies and murders.

Th. had only one real friend, a gang member with whom he had a long-term homosexual affair. He began to obsess that his friend might tell somebody else about their relationship (then a crime under Swedish law). Th. recorded in an autobiography that "by means of a slow process of suggestion" he was, in one week, able to make his friend commit suicide by shooting himself. Another time, Th. hypnotized a gang member and then gave him a fatal injection of homemade poison. Th. eventually was judged guilty, but insane. He was sentenced to life in an institution for the criminally insane. (Reiter, pp. 53-55)

People v. Leyra

Extreme fatigue increases suggestibility and facilitates hypnotic induction—especially in resistant or unknowing subjects. A disguised induction of this sort made it all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court: People vs. Leyra, Leyra v. Denno.

> Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. No. 635. Argued April 28, 1954.—Decided June 1, 1954...Held: The use of confessions extracted in such a manner from a lone defendant unprotected by counsel is not consistent with the due process of law required by the Constitution...reversed...Mr. Justice Black delivered the opinion of the Court.

Camilio Weston Leyra, a man in his fifties, was accused of hammering to death his elderly parents in their Brooklyn apartment. It appears that he did commit the crime. The contention in court was over the admissibility of the confession obtained by Dr. Max Helfand.

Soon after the crime was committed as Leyra was being held in jail, on suspicion of having committed the double murder, the prisoner asked for a doctor. His complaint was a painful sinus attack. The "doctor" did not arrive until "the climax of days and nights of intermittent, intensive police questioning." Leyra had been allowed two hours sleep, the first in several days, then was awakened to talk to the doctor. His visitor was really "a psychiatrist with considerable knowledge of hypnosis." Unknown to Leyra, their conversation was being taped.

The doctor performed a skillful disguised induction, then extracted Leyra's confession. He made numerous small requests to train the subject in obedience; successive acts of obedience tend to lower consciousness. The requests were either to open his eyes or to shut his eyes. The tape transcription shows that Leyra gradually began to accept suggestions from the psychiatrist. His taped answers to the doctor's questions became "dazed and bewildered." Then the doctor began to push for the confession:

> DR. HELFAND: I want you to recollect and tell me everything. I am...going to make you remember and recollect back and bring back thoughts—thoughts which you think you might have forgotten. I can make you recollect them...Tell me, I am here to help you.
>
> LEYRA: I wish you could, Doctor.
>
> DR. HELFAND: I am going to put my hand on your forehead, and as I put my hand on your forehead, you are going to bring back all these thoughts that are coming to your mind. I am going to keep my hand on your forehead and I am going to ask you questions, and now you will be able to tell me...Speak up. It's coming clear to you. I have my hand on your head...

The hand on the forehead is a hypnotic technique called anchoring. (Something external and sensory is linked to something internal and mental.)

Leyra confessed. Later, however, during his trial, he denied the confession, blaming it on the "mental pressure and coercive psychiatric techniques" that the doctor used. Leyra was convicted. The Supreme Court reversed the decision, because "For an hour and a half or more, the techniques of a highly trained psychiatrist were used to break petitioner's will in order to get him to say he had murdered his parents..." The first element of deceit used to break him down was his trust in the doctor.

From the police's point of view, the real problem may have been the incriminating tape of the doctor's verbal induction prior to the confession. Not a problem any more. The National Guild of Hypnotists's 1991 convention advertised a seminar by a "police hypnotist" teaching a "Non-Verbal Hypnotic Induction Technique." "Induce trance without saying a word," the ad said. "It's like nothing you have ever seen." The old-time mesmerists would have understood.

State v. Levitt

In this 1961 case, the Supreme Court of New Jersey overturned the conviction of a hypnotist on a charge of lewdness, also because of legal maneuvering having nothing directly to do with hypnosis. The state's only witness was the doctor's patient. It was her word against his, and he, of course, denied everything. The Court's reason for the overturning was that a jury member later reported that other jurors had said things about the defendant that suggested prejudice.

Johnson v. State

In 1967, the Court of Criminal Appeals of Texas upheld a hypnosis conviction. The case involved a 36-year-old guidance counselor accused of sodomizing a sixteen-year-old student. Two other teenagers were present at the time. The victim said that the counselor had hypnotized him. The two witnesses testified that his statement was true. The appeals court, however, disregarded the element of hypnotic influence. They declared the victim an "accomplice."

Mirowitz v. State

This, 1969, case began when a Texas Board of Medical Examiners investigator saw a suspicious advertisement. The hypnotist claimed to be a Ph.D. clinical psychologist and offered help with speed-reading, self-hypnosis, marriage problems, etc. The investigator called, said she had a headache, and made an appointment.

Her first session with the "doctor" lasted twenty minutes. He advised self-hypnosis for the headache and asked if she were a virgin. She consulted with him again two weeks later. He hypnotized her, presented himself as her boyfriend, and established a scene in which she and he were honeymooning. Then he made real sexual maneuvers. She stopped it. She had been expecting him to do something like that.

Her supervisor was waiting outside the office when the investigator came out. Both the supervisor and the investigator testified against the hypnotist in court. The hypnotist denied, but was convicted. He appealed, based on the Johnson v. State case. He said the investigator was an accomplice and, therefore, must have a third party corroborate her testimony. The appellate court rejected that appeal because the investigator had not consented to the sexual acts and thus was not an "accomplice."

J. Hartland's Report

J. Hartland reported "An Alleged Case of Criminal Assault upon a Married Woman under Hypnosis" in 1974. In that case, a woman, 20, said an obstetrician sexually molested her while performing an internal examination. The obstetrician admitted that he used hypnosis to obtain "relaxation" for his patients' exams and had done so for twenty years. Hypnosis was not a direct issue in the case because the woman denied being hypnotized. Perhaps she was not, because she remembered and complained!

Nevertheless, the defense maneuvered hypnosis into the center of the case. The President of the British Society of Medical and Dental Hypnosis, representing the profession, testified that it was practically impossible to get a hypnotic subject to submit to a crime. He recited the usual litany of hypnosis myths: there is no such thing as displacement of the subject's will by the hypnotist; there is no hypnotic amnesia or even dissociation; the subject can wake up any time she wants to. He then declaimed eloquently on the supposed propensity of hysterical women to project sexual fantasies onto their doctors.

The defendant was acquitted.[1]

Regina v. Palmer

In 1979, C. W. Perry published an article: "Hypnotic Coercion and Compliance to it: A Review of Evidence Presented in a Legal Case." It was about an Australian case, Regina v. Palmer, in which a hypnotist, without academic credentials, was found guilty of rape, attempted rape, and indecent assault on two women.

The case began when Barry Palmer, age 38, demonstrated hypnosis at the party of a neighbor with whom he was barely acquainted. For years before this incident, Palmer had been doing hypnosis in various settings and roles. He had both training and experience in the field. At the party, he offered to cure problems such as obesity, nail biting, or smoking, for any person who would make an appointment with him. Three women made appointments.

When each client arrived at his home, Palmer attempted seduction by means of hypnotic trance and suggestions given under hypnosis. First, he induced as deep a trance as he could. Then, he suggested that she was very hot, and would undress. He gave amnesia suggestions. The further details are too sordid to repeat here, but were discussed in court and presented in Perry's article. As is the unwritten rule for hypnotists writing about unethical hypnosis, Perry was not sympathetic to the women. He nitpicked their testimonies in his article, even though Palmer admitted what he had done.

Palmer's defense was that it is impossible to make a hypnotized person do anything she does not actually want to do. The three women, on the other hand, all said they, being hypnotized, could not resist. They all testified that they did not want to have sex with Palmer. They said they were aware of what was happening, but could not make effective protest because of their hypnotic condition.

Three expert witnesses testified for the defense, two for the prosecution. All had visited the library to prepare. Perry reported that the prosecution experts cited publications by Conn (1972), Kline (1972), Reiter (1958), and Watkins (1947, 1972). The prosecution centerpiece was this quote:

> ...we must admit that, whether we like it or not, a hypnotist of evil intent could use this unique and powerful state-relationship to intervene in ways which would mobilize harmful, destructive, and antisocial forces within his subject. If we can anesthetize an arm to remove pain, then we can anesthetize a superego to remove guilt. (Watkins, 1972, pp. 97-98)

The defense cited Bramwell (1903), LeCron and Bordeaux (1947), Orne and Evans (1965), Orne (1972), and Wolberg (1948). A defense expert witness protested:

> If it were so simple to have a subject accept one's suggestions without question then all my very disturbed patients would accept my suggestions that they become confident, competent, and mature people in a few sessions and I would not have patients for a period of a number of years. (Perry, p. 206)[2]

Barry Palmer was found guilty by the lower court and sentenced to one year in prison. However, the verdict was overturned on appeal because two of the women did not file charges until two days after the incident happened (when they heard that the third woman had done so). The judgment was also overturned because an expert witness for the prosecution turned out to have faulty credentials.

According to Perry, hypnotists, who believe that patients can be coerced by hypnosis, explain failures of suggestion as due to shallow trance or poor hypnotic techniques; hypnotists, who believe it is impossible to cause a criminal act by hypnosis, quote the dogma of moral integrity: the immoral suggestion gives the subject a chance to act out unconscious, preexisting immoral wishes.

---

[1] I have not known a woman who projected sexual fantasies onto her doctor although, obviously, it could happen. I have myself, however, experienced sexual abuse by a doctor during a pelvic exam. I also know a nurse who deduced sexual abuse, done by an intern to his young female client, during a pelvic exam. With fear and trembling, she divulged that fact to their supervisor. He reassured her, explaining that the intern had been reported for the same thing before!

[2] Very disturbed patients are the least likely to be suggestible.

Palmer's three rapes under hypnosis were each done under a first hypnosis. Perry said: "The case demonstrates vividly that a long-term interpersonal relationship is not always necessary for hypnotic seduction to occur." (Perry, 1979, p. 214)

United States v. Springston

Paul L. Deyoub, of Central Arkansas Mental Health Services, reported a case of bank robbery[1] accidentally caused by hypnotic suggestion. Deyoub began his article by quoting Orne's (1972) evaluation of the case of Palle Hardwick, and Orne's claim that Dr. Reiter and the court were wrong because nobody can be forced to do anything by means of hypnosis. Deyoub then described his case in which a man had committed a bank robbery because of a carelessly worded hypnotic suggestion.

Mr. Springston, age 30, visited a non-degreed hypnotist about six weeks before he robbed the bank. He wanted help with weight loss. The hypnotist performed a relaxation induction. Once Springston was in deep trance, the hypnotist then talked to him. Among other things, the hypnotist said, "You're a very strong person; you could do anything you decide to do. Why, you could even rob a bank if you wanted to." (Deyoub, pp. 301-306)

Mr. Springston was not particularly impressed with the hypnotist. He believed that he had not been hypnotized. But the hypnotist's mention of robbing a bank returned to his mind, over and over, until it became an "obsession." When Mr. Springston finally committed the robbery, he was aware that he was doing it, but he could not understand why he was doing it. He felt like a bystander watching himself do it, as if he were "in a dream." That describes a dissociated state. Nobody was hurt during the robbery. The money was completely recovered.

Springston pleaded "not guilty" because of acting under a posthypnotic suggestion. Deyoub interviewed him. The prisoner told Deyoub that he had "fantasies" and spent lots of time immersed in daydreams. When driving, he often became lost in thought and passed his planned stop. Deyoub summed it up as regular "dissociative experiences and perhaps a schizoid personality." Deyoub concluded that Springston was definitely a susceptible hypnotic subject. Deyoub did not give Springston a susceptibility test

> ...since it is generally inadvisable to use hypnosis with defendants who have much at stake (Orne, 1979). Springston had to testify, and the hypnosis associated with a susceptibility test could have altered his memory of the original hypnotic experience. Further, if a low score had been obtained, the prosecution could hold that hypnosis should have had little impact. A high score might simply reflect the defendant's motivation to help his defense. He had the right to refuse a susceptibility procedure which may have helped him, but more likely would have injured his case.

Deyoub testified as an expert witness at Springston's trial. The trial resulted in a hung jury: nine votes to acquit, three to convict. The government plea-bargained and gave him six months (he only served four). None of the jurors stated an opinion on hypnosis, but DeYoub speculated that the majority of the jurors voted for the defendant's acquittal > because of the testimony about the role of hypnosis in the case...Hopefully this case will not serve as a rationalization for criminal behavior...but as documentation of potential dangers in the misuse of hypnosis.

Criminal Hypnosis: Out-of-Court Cases

> Some years ago, a physician/hypnotherapist, who was having an extramarital affair with a woman whom he wanted to marry, hypnotized his wife and suggested to her that she was developing a headache. When the headache would become very severe, he told her, she would swallow all the pills in the bottle he had put in her lap. They would make her fall asleep, so she would not feel the pain any longer. After a while she reached for the pills and took them all. It was a lethal dose.
>
> —Brown and Fromm, Hypnotherapy and Hypnoanalysis, 1983, p. 146

---

[1] United States v. Springston, CR 81-50007-01, U.S. District Court, Western District of Arkansas (1981)

I do not know of any legal case that matches the above report. Did the murderer receive therapy and no criminal charges? Cases involving unethical hypnosis are routinely settled out of court. Cases which are settled out of court are not entered into the legal record. They are not collected, studied, or followed up on by research hypnotists or journalists. This section covers cases of criminal hypnosis that did not come to trial, but maybe should have.

Newspaper Reports

News about cases of unethical hypnosis does not travel far. The New York Mirror (Sunday, April 17, 1960, p. 3) reported that an Albany girl said she was forced to marry by means of hypnosis. That was the end of the matter, as far as I know. Numerous other local newspaper articles have reported incidents of unethical hypnosis, which were not cited, or investigated, by research hypnotists.

Knight discussed a case which was reported in the Montreal Gazette (April 10, 1989): "Dentist Kept Practice Despite Admitting Assaults." A Canadian dentist had pled guilty to one count of sexual assault on a hypnotized child. He avoided a sentence by agreeing to talk to a psychiatrist. Three years later, he won a case when two more children also testified that the dentist had sexual assaulted them in a hypnotized condition. Twenty years later, he admitted guilt for those previous cases, plus at least fifteen later ones.

Bad Outcomes of Hypnosis

In 1984, Kleinhauz and Beran deplored

> ...the unfortunate widespread belief that hypnosis is innocuous... [and urged that medical professionals be made] aware of the possibility of immediate as well as long-term deleterious effects that may follow misuse of hypnosis so that those cases which come to the attention of the physician will be properly diagnosed and treated... (p. 283) During hypnosis the subject agrees to permit the hypnotist to become the sole channel of communication and source of interpretation of all internal and external stimuli impinging upon himself. (Kleinhauz and Beran, 1981, p. 288)

The two authors support that statement by reporting six cases of posthypnotic trauma. The perpetrators in their cases were mostly stage performers. In a 1962 conversation with Estabrooks, Orne described two similar cases with unfortunate outcomes caused by hypnosis:

> Dr. Orne: ...I have heard many people say that they do not see the complications [of hypnosis] about which everybody warns them. Unfortunately, one sees what one wishes to see, especially in medicine...I was told by a dentist, for example, that it was completely safe to induce by hypnosis such things as brushing your teeth. He told a patient, who happens to have been a patient of mine, so I did have a follow up, that she had a > dirty mouth and should therefore clean her teeth. And she did—20 to 30 times a day subsequently, and developed rather severe gingivitis. Incidentally, the dentist could not remove this using hypnotic suggestion. I am also reminded of a very helpful anesthesiologist who suggested to a patient that she lose weight rapidly, and who felt that he had great success with her. The patient lost weight and ended up in my office because of severe depression. (Estabrooks, ed., Hypnosis: Current Problems, p. 254)

Modern research on the "undesirable effects" of hypnosis, however, has narrowed the definition of a "problem" to be any exception to quiet cooperation with the hypnotist during the session, or any behavior that makes waves in the hypnotist's life after the session. Deceitful induction followed by chronic, amnesic, and abusive treatment of a subject is not recognized as a category of "bad outcome." The patient can be a problem; the doctor can not.

Levitt and Hershman (1961; 1963) surveyed, by questionnaire, 301 professionals who used hypnosis. More than 27% had seen "an unusual, unexpected, and probably alarming, reaction to hypnosis, either during the state itself, or immediately afterward" (Orne, "Undesirable Effects of Hypnosis, p. 233). By this standard, Palle's hysterical resistance to Reiter's first successful rehypnotization of him would be listed as a problem. Palle's easy surrender to Nielsen's original hypnotic seductions would not rate as a problem.

> By far the most common reaction was some sort of emotional upset, including anxiety, panic states, or depression. The only other frequently reported kind of symptom included minor physiological phenomena like headache, vomiting, fainting, dizziness, etc., either during or immediately after hypnosis. Other reactions which were noted by at least three respondents were crying and hysteria, loss of rapport during hypnosis, excessive dependency on the hypnotist, and difficulties resulting from inadvertently given suggestions. There were five cases of overt psychosis immediately after hypnosis, and five instances of difficulties with women patients involving sex (Levitt & Hershman, 1961, p. 6)

Who did what, to whom, in the sexual category was not specified.

In "The Myth of Coercion through Hypnosis" (1981), Conn reported on two women clients of his, both of whom had previously had sex with a hypnotist. Each ended up "admitting" to Conn that hypnosis had not really been a factor. Conn smugly concluded that the whole nonsense about unethical hypnosis was a matter of > ...outmoded Svengali-like theories derived from 19th century authors of hypnosis-science fiction, isolated instances of mismanaged patients by incompetent operators, and the occasional disorganization of undiagnosed prepsychotic individuals following hypnosis.

A competing analysis could be that two suggestible women were used by the first "therapist" for sex, then persuaded by their second, Conn, to believe that the previous hypnoses had not been used inappropriately.

Kline's Cases

Milton V. Kline was a research hypnotist who stood against the naysayers. He talked openly about unethical hypnosis all his professional life. He praised George Estabrooks's revised edition of Hypnotism:

> [It] surpasses even the original publication and should be required reading for all who wish to gain an introductory and insightful understanding of scientific hypnosis at the present time. (Kline quote, inside cover flap)

In the "Dynamics of Hypnotically Induced Antisocial Behavior," Kline reported that he had induced a hypnotic subject to perform indecent exposure. The act was punishable by law and definitely contrary to the moral values of the subject, a lawyer who had volunteered for an "experiment on the legal implications of hypnosis."[1] The subject did not know anything else about what the experiment would involve.

There were four hypnotists involved, three male and one female. The acts of indecent exposure took place outside the lab in a public area. The subject had no way of knowing that the police department was cooperating and keeping people, who were not an authorized part of the experiment, out of the area.

When any of the four hypnotists gave a direct command to perform the indecent act, all four failed. He could not be persuaded to expose himself in the waking state. But when the command was presented indirectly, when he was in deep trance, as part of a falsified reality, three of the four hypnotists were able to cause him to do it. They also found that the subject would perform the indecency if he first was caused to visualize himself performing it. He was most obedient to the hypnotist with whom he had the best rapport.

---

[1] Kline doesn't give much detail, but Orne later told more in "Can Hypnosis Compel Behavior?" (p. 106)

The experimenter whose command he refused was female. She later admitted that she had been very upset by the act she was requesting, as well as by the deception. The subject may have obeyed the suggestions in her tone and body language (her true feeling), rather than the one she was forcing herself to verbalize. (She was so disturbed by the experiment that she then withdrew from further participation.)

In another article ("...New Clinical Data"), Kline reported three modern cases of unethical hypnosis committed by clinical professionals. He did not supply real names. One perpetrator was a doctor, age 56. For years, he had used hypnosis to seduce female patients.

His strategy was to introduce hypnosis into his treatment procedure even when there was no clinical need for it. He would gradually develop a close, dependent, supportive, and reassuring trance relationship. Then he would suggest strong erotic feelings to the hypnotized woman. During later hypnoses he suggested that she would dream about those erotic desires. Next time, he would suggest an erotic dream involving those desires—and himself. Finally, he suggested that she felt a compelling desire to physically perform with him the act which she had dreamed.

This technique did not work with every targeted female, but it worked with many. The gradual approach allowed him to make a hasty retreat when resistance appeared. His undoing was the successful seduction of a 23-year-old. She ended up working as an unpaid employee on his staff and having sex with him every day. But, at that point, her unconscious began to fight back.

This case is similar to that of Candy Jones in that the hypnotic split (containing all knowledge covered by suggested amnesia) began independently to communicate to the husband in the trance phase of the sleep cycle. During "sleep," the repressed part of her mind told her husband —with qualities both of erotic pleasure and strong negative and conflicting feelings—all about her sex with the doctor that day.

Like John Nebel, her husband began to tape record her night-talking. He confronted the doctor, who agreed to get therapy. The matter was then dropped.

Kline's second case involved a 26-year-old graduate student in psychology who craved sex with little boys. He advertised his baby-sitting services in newspapers, but only took the job if it involved a boy younger than ten. Like the doctor above, he then proceeded with a deliberate series of shaping steps. First he developed a warm friendship with the child. They played games of imagination. He did tricks and told the child he had magical powers.

He then induced trance using the pretend-you're-watching-television method which is very effective with children. He deepened the trance by asking the child to imagine participating in the acts on screen. He next suggested posthypnotic amnesia. If the child did not develop posthypnotic amnesia, he quit the baby-sitting job. If the child did develop the suggested posthypnotic amnesia, he would involve the child in acts of oral and anal sex. He used hypnotic suggestion to attempt to disguise what actually was happening and to reinforce the amnesia.

However, one of the children became "disturbed," and was taken to talk to a psychiatrist. The child was able to recall, and tell, most of what had happened.

In this case, also, the perpetrator was not publicly identified. He quickly volunteered himself into "treatment" and that was the end of it. Neither of the above two abusers sought therapy until they were caught. Neither had normal emotions (affect) in human relations. Neither felt guilt about what they had done.

The power of professional psychological and psychiatric organizations is such that they have been able to appropriate the legal process from the public judicial system to their private one. "Not only do professionals violate their codes of ethics but they protect their guilty members from censure." (Knight, "The Case Against Restrictive Laws," p. 27) In Kline's two cases described above, the criminals' professional peers somehow had acquired the right to deal with them, instead of the public legal system. Their chronic severe criminal behavior was dealt with by a slap on the hand: "therapy."

Kline's third case did not involve sexual abuse. The crime was a vicious posthypnotic suggestion. The hypnotist was a gynecologist, age 36, who used hypnosis to treat obese patients. He told one such client, a woman age 27, who was a very susceptible subject, to eat only at mealtimes. She did not obey his hypnotic suggestion, however, and ate even more.

Her next visit, when the doctor heard that, he became very angry. He hypnotized her again. This time, he suggested that if she again defied his diet instructions and ate between meals, she would feel an overpowering impulse to kill her beloved poodle dog. That night, the woman again succumbed to caloric temptation and gobbled down an entire quart of ice cream. She then went into a posthypnotic trance triggered by the act of diet-breaking. In that dissociated condition, she carried out the doctor's suggestion, killing her dog by smothering it.

When she came out of the posthypnotic trance and realized that her pet was dead, and that she had killed it, the woman began to scream hysterically. She gulped down a bottle of iodine and also slashed her wrists with a knife. The neighbors, awakened by her screams, called the police who rushed her to the hospital. She survived the suicide attempt, but suffered a schizophrenic breakdown.

You Must Be Dreaming

Barbara Noel is a singer-songwriter who wrote an autobiographical account of abuse under narcohypnosis: You Must Be Dreaming (coauthored by Kathryn Watterson). Noel was, for eighteen years, the patient of Jules H. Masserman. Dr. Masserman was cochairman of the department of psychiatry and neurology at Northwestern University Medical School. He was a past president of the American Academy of Psychoanalysis, and also of the American Psychiatric Association.

He began to use injections of a hypnoid drug, Sodium Amytal, supposedly to explore Noel's unconscious. One day, however, she returned to consciousness prematurely and found—not her mind, but her body being explored. (Hyman, AP article) Noel gradually realized that Masserman routinely had sexually molested her while she was in a drugged, unconscious state. He also addicted her to a drug (Amytal) that kept her coming back and literally begging for more.[1]

After Noel came forward, two other women joined her. They stated, for the record, that they had also been Masserman's patients and had been sexually molested. One was a lawyer, the other a businesswoman. The three filed suit in the Circuit Court of Cook County, Illinois. Masserman settled in the usual manner of hypnotists with litigious clients: out-of-court, with a payoff. He paid Noel $200,000. The other two each received $25,000. He remained a renowned psychiatrist. The case received minimal publicity.

Noel was determined to break the publicity barrier, and warn other women. She wrote the book, You Must Be Dreaming. The book was made into a TV film, "Betrayal of Trust."

After Noel, et al, filed their complaint with the Illinois authorities, the American Psychiatric Association suspended Masserman for five years. The Association answered later inquiries on Masserman's status by saying that "Dr. Masserman has retired." Neither the legal case, nor the book, nor the film shook the professional community's support for Masserman. No psychiatric periodical mentioned the case. The APA Board of Trustees still invited Masserman to meetings. He was an "honorary life president" of the World Association for Social Psychiatry. Just a month after he paid to shut up those women, the World Association, at a Rio de Janeiro convocation, lavished tributes and accolades upon him.

The professional indifference to his malpractice surprised and upset Ann Landers, who, for so many years, has reverently quoted mental health professionals, and sent millions of readers to get "therapy." Ann was shocked that a psychiatrist would give Barbara drug shots, have sex with her unconscious body, collect $100,000 in therapy fees along the way, and remain respected, even renowned, by his peers. She was disturbed that the world community of psychiatry was completely indifferent to the evidence of his unethical acts. She wrote a column about it.

It wasn't her first column on unethical hypnosis. I'll never forget the day, about 1970, that I read another column of hers (or Abigail van Buren's?) about hypnosis abuse. It contained a letter from the parents of a girl which clearly described a situation of chronic unethical hypnosis involving their daughter. The columnist wrote that she had consulted psychologists who were experts in hypnosis, and they had all assured her that nobody can be hypnotized against their will, and nobody can be made to do anything under hypnosis that they do not want to do.

Her column was read by ninety million people. I wonder how many other readers, like me, were discouraged from seeking help by her dismissive response that day?

---

[1] After an induction conditioning series, he should no longer have needed the drug, unless he aimed to maintain her addiction—or wanted to guarantee the secrecy of his sexual predations.

Why Not Seek Relief from Abusive Hypnosis by Legal Means?

The hypnotism lobby has spent two-hundred years combating the perception that exploitative manipulation of persons in a state of trance could result in legal liability. In the last thirty years, several Big Lies, oft repeated (propaganda technology), have resulted in yet another step of removal from liability: complete public ignorance of even the possibility of this crime. The legal system is now very tilted to protect hypnotists (and government organizations which may use hypnosis).

Therefore, if a survivor of unethical hypnosis is considering whether to bring legal charges against his abuser, these problems must be faced:

- Most psychological professionals are uncomprehending of, if not hostile to, a claim of unethical hypnosis and are protective of each other against their common enemy: the client. They would prefer a diagnosis of "paranoia" for the accuser.

- Potential "expert witnesses" are heavily indoctrinated with attitudes of disrespect and disbelief for any alleged survivor of unethical hypnosis.

- In the past, in order to prove unethical hypnosis in court, the survivor was subjected to yet more amnesic hypnosis to recover memories, and to display publicly his capacity for profound automatistic obedience.

- Courts and associated personnel do not understand the absolute necessity to completely isolate the subject from the alleged hypnotist. They are not set up to deal with possible hypnotic manipulation of the subject's testimony and behavior before, during, and after the trial. There is no understanding of the psychological effect that the mere presence of an abusive hypnotist may have on a survivor.

- The trial process, ideally, should be a simple search for truth. Watchers of the O.J. trial, however, observed something far different from that ideal: a public, ceremonial clash of sophisticated, paid debaters serving the personal interests of their payees. There is also no guarantee that all persons will tell the truth despite their swearing to do so, and there is a 99% probability that the accused hypnotist will lie cleverly and with confidence. Hypnotists, by definition, are verbally skilled, experienced, people manipulators. They often have status and peer relationships in the medicolegal community, a fellowship which tends to easily forgive and effectively protect its own.

- No matter who wins or loses, the case is likely to be tried again, and yet again. Throughout the judicial process, opportunities continue for the predatory hypnotist to reestablish control over the subject who is forced to be thus publicly exposed.

- The hypnotist's defense will likely be well-funded by contributions from medical insurance companies and lobby committees for hypnosis organizations, as well as other entities which find hypnosis covertly useful. The budget of an individual survivor, on the other hand, is likely to be tight.

- If certain agencies of the government secretly create unknowing hypnotic subjects and if they seek to develop and use ever more sophisticated mind-control technologies (as more and more bits and shreds of evidence suggest), will there not be covert obstacles to a victim seeking exposure of this technology, and safety from it, through public courts?

Texts and Training in Forensic Hypnosis

A Hypnotist's View of Forensics

☑

Manuals of Forensic Hypnosis

☑

Hypnosis of a Witness

All crimes committed under hypnotic influence, even though the hypnotiser be the most cunning and knowing knave imaginable, and even if the crimes be most warily devised, are always liable to subsequent investigation, by which, at least, they can be discovered and the delinquent brought to judgment; but for this to be accomplished, lawyers must understand hypnotism.

Karl du Prel, 1889

A HYPNOTIST'S VIEW OF FORENSICS

Every national convention of hypnotists includes workshops on hypnosis in the courtroom. They normally teach to one of these points of view:

- A hypnotist defending himself.
- Hypnotizing a witness to obtain evidence about a third party criminal's behavior.
- How to testify in court as an expert witness. (An expert witness is hired by the prosecution or the defense in a case to express a helpful opinion. He, or she, states facts corroborative to that opinion and, supposedly, explains the underlying scientific principle.)

Highlights of the Journal of Hypnosis (1991) convention offered forensic hypnosis experts teaching professional guidelines (Marx Howell and George H. Baranowski in a mock trial setting), and a two-day course in forensic hypnosis with George Baranowski. It also offered seminars on "Testifying in Court" and "Hypnosis and Malpractice Lawsuits in Federal Courts."

> [Learn]...how to protect yourself against costly lawsuits and what to do if you find yourself involved in a malpractice case. Medical professionals have been the targets of the legal profession for many years...It's time for our profession to protect ourselves against this threat before the flood gates open up and drive up the cost of li- > ability insurance.... (Ad for seminar on "Hypnosis and Malpractice Lawsuits in Federal Courts," Journal of Hypnotism, Convention Issue, 1991, p. 64)

National Guild of Hypnotists

Graduating from a hypnotherapy course qualified me to join the National Guild of Hypnotists and to subscribe to The Journal of Hypnotism. With lively readability, plain English, and an ever-positive slant on hypnosis, it teaches and networks. Anybody can order audio and video tapes of the annual conference seminars and workshops, books, an electronic induction machine (the Brain Wave Synchronizer), and much else for "hypnosis, the profession of the 90s."

Their big annual convention is a bazaar of hypnotic, trance, and psychic information and enterprise. The diverse participants represent an informal survey of the national civilian hypnosis scene. Seminar topics range from the bizarre (firewalking class, past-life therapy, training in ghost encounters) to mainstream clinical hypnotherapy techniques.

Attendees could take the two-day course for school personnel, or the two-day course to earn certification in hypnotherapy, and/or the seminar on "Induction Techniques with Difficult Subjects." The advertisement for a six-day course said that it would certify NGH members to become trainers themselves, teaching any "professional" to "immediately become a practicing hypnotherapist specializing in smoking cessation, stress management and weight control." (p. 9, Annual Convention Issue, 1991)

In 1996, the NGH became a "local" of the AFL-CIO. The magazine announced a deal with the union to allow them to participate in future "wellness exams" given to union members. It did not say if participation would be covert or by pre-informed permission of the union member. Probably covert. An interesting development—because the CIA and various hypnotists have mentioned, over the years, that a medical exam is a good setup for a disguised hypnotic induction.

Who Has the Ethics Problem?

An ongoing theme in the back room hypnotic scene is the never-ending turf war between degreed and non-degreed hypnotists. The degreed hypnotists have periodically attempted legal restriction of the non-degreed hypnotists. A psychiatric text stated that:

> Stage hypnotists and other lay people...have trifled with hypnosis for a long time...Many of them fancy themselves to be hypnotherapists and advertise themselves as such...irresponsible practices of these lay people endanger the public interest, and attempts have been made to outlaw them. (Brown & Fromm, 1986, p. 147)

However, in the current feeding frenzy in the trance marketplace, those two groups—the degreed and non-degreed hypnotists—have combined forces to resist any legislation affecting hypnotism. The Council of Professional Hypnosis Organizations is a joint committee of the two sectors. Its purpose is to fight any restrictive legislation pertaining to hypnosis.

Bryan M. Knight, M.S.W., Montreal, Canada, psychotherapist, agreed that there are some "irresponsible practices" ("The Case Against Restrictive Laws," Journal of Hypnotism, Vol. 5, No. 4, Dec. 1990, p. 27) among the non-degreed. He defended the right of the non-degreed to practice, however, with well-documented evidence that some of the degreed also have "temptations of the flesh, incompetence, and self-delusion." "The Case Against Restrictive Laws" is a long compilation of moral slips by degreed doctors and psychologists. Here are some statistics which Knight collected, and sources which he cited for the data:

> 17% of the women in graduate psychology programs had sex with an instructor; 22% of students of either sex who had recently been awarded a Ph.D. had been abused; 34% of students involved in personal relationship breakups ended up in bed with an instructor. (Glaser and Thorpe, pp. 43-51)
>
> The education in sexual abuse got passed on. Women who had sex with instructors in graduate school were four times more likely to have sex with their own patients as those who did not. (Pope et al., pp. 147-158)
>
> 7% of psychiatrists have had sex with (or otherwise abused) patients. (Gatrell)
>
> 12% of psychologists have had sex with (or otherwise abused) clients. (Pope, Grunebaum)
>
> Psychologists are recruiters for whatever belief system they personally adhere to, including some who act as bait for cults. (Temerlin)

Knight also took degreed psychologists to task for the prevalence of disguised hypnotic inductions which avoid the word "hypnosis" but

> ...nevertheless employ techniques (such as progressive relaxation coupled with visualization) that are virtually identical to hypnosis. Professionals apparently have no ethical qualms about misrepresenting what they do... (Knight, p. 28)

Manuals of Forensic Hypnosis

Probably, sooner or later, some psychologist with research in hypnotism as his specialty would unravel the whole thing but he would still have a deuce of a time proving it.
- Estabrooks, Hypnotism

Several U.S. universities offer a combined program for would-be forensic psychologists: a Ph.D. in psychology and a law degree. There are handbooks of forensic hypnosis written by, and for, such professionals. A British expert, based at Cambridge University, wrote in a legal reference book:

> French and German laws treat it as an instance of absence of mens rea. The argument is that hypnotic suggestion creates a very great compulsion to perform the act. (p. 768)... The question probably depends, in large part, on the extent of dominion attributed to the hypnotist. One opinion favors the view that a hypnotized person cannot be forced to perform acts that are repugnant to him. If this is true, the most that the hypnotist can do in the direction of criminal activity is to remove an inhibition and cause the subject to commit a crime to which he is already inclined. This view is, however, challenged in a recent work by Dr. Heinz Hammerschlag, who concludes from a survey of the evidence that 'there is no basis whatsoever for the view that moral weakness in a hypnotized subject is a condition for the misuse of hypnosis.' It seems, therefore, that there is weight in the opinion of the American Law Institute, that the dependency and helplessness of the hypnotized subject are too pronounced for criminal responsibility. (Glanville Williams, Criminal Law, p. 769)

I read manuals, which are focused on legal aspects of hypnosis, written by Teitlebaum, Udolf, and Lawrence and Perry (published in that order). Their contents reveal an evolution of the judicial view of criminal hypnosis toward ever less credibility for the unknowing victim of abusive hypnosis. Each manual in the series decreased a survivor's chance to obtain an appropriate judicial response.

Teitlebaum: Facts Stated

Hypnosis Induction Technics, by Myron Teitelbaum, B.S., LL.B., was a happy find for me. It is a long, long way from Teitlebaum's warnings (1965) to Lawrence and Perry's denials (1986, 1988). Teitlebaum called the detection of antisocial uses of hypnosis "the third major use of hypnosis." Under the heading "Criminal Uses of Hypnosis," and elsewhere in his book, he repeatedly warned readers about the possibility of unethical hypnosis:

> Among authorities today there is not much doubt that a subject can be made to commit criminal or immoral acts...there is also the area where the hypnotist himself commits the wrongful act and then uses hypnosis to evade the law. (Teitlebaum, p. 159)

He named amnesia as the most seductive ingredient for criminal hypnosis: "...the greater the ability to conceal the nature of the suggested act from the subject, the greater the chances of its enactment." (p. 160) He discussed both sealing and seal-breaking techniques and speculated on "antisocial possibilities":

> With knowledge of the tools of hypnosis such as memory substitution, suggested amnesia and suggested seal...how easy it would be for a skilled hypnotist prior to the trial date to get innocent individuals to testify in good faith to a set of facts which to them were true, but yet never existed. (p. 145)

Other sections of his book cover "Hypnotism and Crime" and "Governmental Uses of Hypnosis." The latter includes an "Involuntary Induction Technic" (relaxation induction) for use on a "prisoner."

On the use of rehypnotization to detect unethical hypnosis, Teitlebaum emphasized the importance of an approach customized to that particular subject and the imperative need for methods, such as Reiter used, to establish reliability of the recovered information. He emphasized the need for a skilled hypnotist and criticized another hypnotist who > ...did not instruct the subject to tell the truth. He did not motivate the subject to want to tell the truth. He did not set up any conditioned reflexes which would automatically signal the telling of an untruth. He did not interrogate the subject to > determine if the subject had been pre-suggested to give certain answers... [and he used] leading and suggestible prodding... (p. 151)

"Pre-suggestions" to "give certain answers" would be likely to occur in a case involving a criminal hypnotist who can access his subject. In known case histories of this type, the hypnotist typically attempted to covertly influence questioning of his victim by suggesting what his subject would say, or by putting a lid on any incriminating memories.

During the rehypnotizations of "Z", Mrs. E, and Palle Hardwick, those obstacles were overcome. The investigating psychiatrists used profound hypnotic states, avoided leading questions, and maintained temporary amnesia. Police investigators, in those three cases, already possessed, or found, evidence which corroborated the statements each rehypnotized subject had made about the hypnotic abuse.

Teitlebaum suggested the following guidelines for forensic hypnosis:

- Tape record during induction and interviews (now the rule is both videotape and audiotape from first hello to last good-by).
- After deep hypnosis is achieved, examine and test the subject to learn if there has been any previous hypnosis, what his ability for self-hypnosis is, "and if there have been any hypnotic pre-suggestions with regard to the telling of truth and the matter at hand." (p. 155)
- Then

  > ...implant certain conditioned reflexes to signal the telling of an untruth...examples... 1) Hyperaesthesia of an arm could be suggested and the subject made to feel acute pain. Relief of that pain could be obtained by suggesting that the rubbing of the back of the head by the sensitive arm would achieve the result. The subject would then be told that the telling of a lie, no matter how slight, would cause the pain to reoccur. This would be firmly established by forcing the subject to lie with regard to questions as to his name, age and place of birth. 2) Instead of a pain stimulus and response the subject could be caused to involuntarily blink his eyes or twitch his thumb. (p. 155)

- Motivate the subject to speak only truth, by suggesting pride for that accomplishment.

Scheflin and Opton: Facts Straddled

The Mind Manipulators (1978), by Alan Scheflin and Edward Opton, is a brilliant, inclusive, monumental edifice of a book. This painstakingly-researched reference work has detailed chapters on most mind-control technologies. The electroshock section is especially well researched and helpful (although the authors do not mention its association with hypnoprogramming). However, The Mind Manipulators is not well-known and is hard to find.

On criminal hypnosis, their approach awkwardly straddled the fence. One chapter dealt with the subject of unethical hypnosis. It uncritically recorded every bit of scuttlebutt the authors had found—with a scoffing approach which some of their material might deserve. They did not mention narcohypnosis. Yet the authors fully accepted Candy's description of being conditioned with the help of a barbiturate IV, because of the later, corroborating CIA documents. However, they denied that her free will was ever taken from her: "The technology of mind manipulation is too blunt for the precise control necessary to create a zombie agent" (Scheflin and Opton, The Mind Manipulators, p. 447).

They spouted the old dogma of moral integrity: that nobody can be abused under hypnosis unless they have a weak character to begin with. Therefore, they declared, Candy's programming was basically her fault rather than the CIA's!

> Rather than face the alternative of accepting responsibility for her voluntary role in what she did, she has chosen the other alternative of accepting her behavior but changing her attitudes about it. She now describes her role as involuntary, the product of a sophisticated form of dominance over the mind. This explanation eases for her the tension created by the knowledge that her behavior violated her moral codes... (p. 474)

Did coming to that conclusion ease, for Scheflin and Opton, the tension created by fear that they, too, could be hit with a needleful of barbiturate and hypnoprogrammed into unknowing, obedient subjects? It logically extrapolates from their position that, because their personal moral codes forbid hypnoprogramming (supposedly unlike Candy's), they are safe from it. Scheflin and Option also said that:

> Esoteric notions like brainwashing allow people to forget that they are responsible for their own actions. Personal values, as well as independence of thought and judgment, are not snatched away from people. People all too readily give them up voluntarily. (Ibid., p. 474)

If only it were true that, if a targeted person just has enough strength of character and courage, mind-control technologies cannot be successful. Those of us who have received forced conditioning, like lab rats, have a more humble and accurate perspective on that issue than Scheflin and Opton.

Udolf: Facts Distorted

Udolf's Forensic Hypnosis (1983) provides information on courtroom applications and legal problems involving hypnosis to a target audience of experienced professionals—psychological and legal. He discusses "Hypnosis as an Investigative... Procedure," "Admissibility of Hypnotically Influenced Testimony," "Hypnotic Confessions, Statements...," "Role of the Expert Witness," "Hypnosis and Crime"—even "Regulation of Hypnosis." Detailed glossaries define legal and psychological terms. He also provides an index of cases involving hypnosis.

In contrast to Teitelbaum, Udolf denies the possibility of unethical hypnosis. Like Scheflin and Opton, any issue of hypnosis abuse is viewed by Udolf as due to the subject's lack of character. He lists as "pseudo issues" "The possibility of hypnosis against a subject's will" and "the hypnotist's ability to victimize the subject or compel or deceive him..." (Udolf, Forensic Hypnosis, p. 7) He repeats the usual myths: "the evidence appears overwhelming that it is not possible to hypnotize a person who actively resists hypnosis..." (Ibid.) "Subjects never lose control of the situation nor surrender their volition to the hypnotist. They can come out of hypnosis at any time they desire." (Ibid., p. 3)

Elsewhere in the book, however, Udolf equivocates: "The question of whether hypnosis can be used to...victimize subjects, has remained unresolved..." (p. 125)

He admitted that disguised induction exists. He lists methods by which a covert hypnosis can be accomplished: by "relaxation," or by substituting another word for "sleep" in a verbal sleep induction script, or by the "chaperone system" (in which the "chaperone" is the hypnotist's real target).

Udolf states that any subject who is hypnotized by a disguised induction has given "subconscious consent," because, he says, the induction was not disguised to the subject's unconscious and it agreed to the induction. According to Udolf's reasoning, either the conscious or unconscious of a subject can give agreement. No matter which one agreed, he would call that agreement equally valid.

Udolf does not deal with the fact that the unconscious mind is reflexive and can be reduced to a relationship with a relatively limited group of neurons, whereas the conscious mind is capable of being analytical and draws on the general resources of its data bank. Can an isolated "mind" that is not fully capable of analysis legally be a "mind"? Udolf also does not discuss the ethics of a forced reinduction by posthypnotic cue, or of induction by hypnoid drug, or by any other unusual and compelling chemical, electrical, or biomagnetic technology. He also does not consider the questionable legality of obtaining a subject's conscious (or unconscious) agreement to be hypnotized by means of lies stated by the hypnotist about hypnosis.

The book cites many legal cases involving hypnosis, but most have little relevance to this book's topic. Many involve only shaky evidence and morally distasteful subjects and circumstances. On the subject of Palle Hardwick's case, Udolf merely quotes M. Reiser's, 1978, summary of the case.

> ...in Denmark in which the defendant robbed a bank and killed two employees. It was alleged by the accused that during World War II, when he was in prison, his cellmate repeatedly hypnotized him and made him "subservient" and that he had acted under the former cellmate's influence. (Udolf, 1983, p. 131)

Udolf's comments on the Australian case involving Palmer and the three women are also disturbingly distorted: "The testimony of the complainants appears incredible...It seems likely that this case is an example of hypnosis being used to give a subject an excuse to do what she was evidently willing to do." (p. 136) He speculated whether the women's testimony was "honest rationalization" or "deliberate perjury."

On hypnotizing witnesses to crimes, Udolf says the purpose should be only to help get evidence for use in the trial—not to use information obtained by hypnosis in the trial.

A study of the text and bibliography shows these problems in Udolf's presentation:

- It mentions narcohypnosis only briefly, and only in the context of its use in police interrogation to obtain confession.

- It omits M. H. Erickson's research on how to establish deep-level control of a subject. The only reference to Erickson is his piece of phony "research," which supposedly proves that criminal hypnosis is categorically impossible.

- There is lots of Barber, which means there is a lot of pseudoscience, twisted logic, confusion, and assignment to the subject of all responsibility for bad outcomes.

- Marginally relevant legal cases are cited in detail. The important cases of Palle, Z., and Mrs. E, are slighted.

- There is no serious discussion of the physiology of hypnosis. This leaves Barber's statement that the subject's imagination dupes the hypnotist uncontested.

- Research studies that could provide strong proofs of regression authenticity are not cited. Only studies that challenge any credibility for regression are included.

- Udolf's bibliography is far more restricted in references than Teitlebaum's because Udolf omits most points of view and research results which are contrary to his positions.

- Teitlebaum included a chapter on government use of hypnosis. Udolf does not mention that possibility (probably because it was now more than a possibility, and SECRET).

In the final analysis, Udolf is far more worried that a subject may successfully accuse a hypnotist of unlawful conduct than that a hypnotist might successfully victimize a subject (p. 144). He argues against any legislation dealing with hypnosis.

Lawrence and Perry: Facts Denied

Hypnosis, Will, and Memory: a Psycho-legal History, by Jean-Roche Lawrence and Campbell Perry, is a more recent (1986, 1988) book on the legal aspects of criminal hypnosis. The authors claimed, up front, that their book was going to answer, once and for all, the question:

> ...how can the hypnotic situation lead to reports of total submission, compulsion, or lack of control over one's own physical and psychological processes? (Lawrence and Perry, pp. xvi-xvii)

Their answers are hypnosis-lobby propaganda repeated with specious cleverness. This lengthy work is written about something the authors say cannot exist. It is a vast compilation of marginal, equivocal, and outdated materials. It presents, for any lay or professional reader, the standard myths about hypnosis. It provides legal references for any hypnotist who has been accused of malpractice.

Lawrence and Perry claim that "Hypnosis is a situation in which an individual is asked to set aside critical judgment, without abandoning it completely..." (Ibid., p. xiv) In fact, however, the goal of every criminal hypnotist is to displace the subject's conscious mind as completely as possible. Lawrence and Perry say that

> ...the alleged coercive power of hypnosis...stemmed from its identification with long-standing beliefs surrounding phenomena such as witchcraft and sorcery, religious fanaticism, and the unabated popular enthusiasm stimulated by the scientific discoveries...and the negative reactions to its use from the established medical, religious, and political milieus of the last two centuries... (p. xvii)

Actually, the coercive element of hypnosis results from an operator's expert manipulation of a susceptible subject's brain physiology.

They say, "...it is recognized today that the hypnotized subject is not an automaton..." (p. 394) Actually, subjects have varying responses to trance, and go to varying depths. Not every hypnotic session involves automatism. But every case of criminal hypnosis does.

The index to Lawrence and Perry's book does not list "disguised induction" or "induction, disguised." It does not mention "narcohypnosis" or "electro-induction." Estabrooks is mentioned in the bibliography, but not for the 1945 book in which he bragged about making unknowing hypnotic subjects and urged government development of a cadre of amnesic agents, and not for the magazine article in which he reminisced about creating hypnoprogrammed spies during World War II.

Compare the spin that Lawrence and Perry put on their presentation of the case of Palle Hardwick with the true facts:

> Reiter's (1958) account of this case placed great store on H.'s account of these events, which was provided in hypnosis. In particular, he [Reiter] relied on the mistaken doctrine that the hypnotized person is unable to lie, and on the slightly more plausible premise that H.'s hypnotically elicited recollections of the events were in substantial agreement with the known facts of the case. Almost exclusively, he focused on the apparent Svengali-like power of an unscrupulous hypnotist... (Lawrence and Perry, p. 308)

Most of their book is a review of old legal cases from the 1700s and 1800s in Paris's La Bibliotheque Nationale. The first three-hundred of the book's four-hundred-some pages barely get us into the early twentieth century. The remaining pages list U.S. legal cases involving hypnosis: twelve before 1910, and about thirty from 1910 to 1945. Lawrence and Perry clam up just when it gets interesting. They say that post-WWII hypnosis research > ...is probably a little too close to be able to chart objectively. It suffices to say that this period has been one of remarkable growth and development at both the clinical and experimental levels. (p. 297)

I wholeheartedly agree with that statement. I regret that they chose not to provide details of that "remarkable growth and development."

Lawrence and Perry assign all guilt for ethical deviance, in trance or as a result of trance manipulation, to the hypnotic subject's presumed preexisting lack of character, the old "dogma of moral integrity." One of their most disturbing statements is that people have been harmed by hypnotists only because those hypnotic subjects believed harm was possible: "underlying self-fulfilling prophecies" (p. 394). It requires such an ugly twist of self-serving logic to make the victim of criminal hypnosis into the perpetrator—to totally relieve the hypnotist from moral or technical responsibility for the outcome. (The final stage of brainwashing also pushes the victim to accept all guilt and responsibility for his mistreatment.)

Toward the end of their book, however, the authors eloquently contradict their earlier statements:

> Perhaps the most intriguing and elusive issue in the history of hypnosis is the experience of nonvolition. Recognized before the end of the eighteenth century, it has haunted investigators ever since....One has only to think about the victims' reports of having been sexually abused by an unethical hypnotist to realize how ambiguous such situations are and how unwilling the scientific community can be in acknowledging such possibilities. (Lawrence and Perry, 1988, pp. 393-4)

Meyers: Textbook Myths

Meyer's, 1990, beginning level college textbook, Exploring Psychology, says that information repressed by hypnosis "can be recalled at a prearranged signal or upon subtle questioning." (Meyers, p. 145) Kohlstrim, 1985, and Spanos, et al., 1985, are cited. However, amnesic information can only be cued out if the original hypnotist implanted that "prearranged signal," and if the second hypnotist knows the designated cue and is allowed to use it by the subject's programming. "Subtle questioning" will work only if the questioner is prepared to include hypnotic abuse in the options—and if the data is only lightly repressed (unlikely in a case of abusive hypnosis).

To recover information heavily repressed by hypnosis, rehypnotizations with the goal of age regressions, hard work and a long struggle against the blocking programming will probably be necessary. But Myers shuts the door on hypnotic age regression as a means of recovering amnesic information, giving an impression of scientific debunking: "60 years of research disputes claims of age regression."

Myers cited research that persons, who are pretending to be a child, act more childlike than regressed hypnotized persons. He cited that as evidence that regression is phony. (I don't agree. The deeply regressed subject is not focused on behaving like a child. He is enveloped in remembering.) Myers mentioned the Chowchilla bus case as a successful example of remembering under hypnosis, but he denigrated it as an "atypical" example. He gave only grudging approval to witness hypnosis, saying it "may have value—or at least do little harm." He cautioned that hypnosis can increase the number of errors and cause confabulation. True. He did not mention Dr. Reiter's method.

As Meyer stated, there have been studies contesting the validity of regression since 1925. What he does not state, however, is the related fact that there have also been quite amazing studies demonstrating authentic hypnotic age regression. The credibility of age regression, such as into a person's childhood, was accepted by most hypnosis researchers until the textbook takeover of the Orne/Barber advocates. (Their position developed, concurrently, with the explosion of trance venues in the marketplace and covert government hypnosis research.)

"Can Hypnosis Force People to Act Against Their Will?" the section title asked. "No," Myers answered, restating the old dogma of moral integrity: obedience proves that the subject wanted to do the suggested act anyway, and hypnosis provided the opportunity. (That is false. A conditioned amnesic somnambulist cannot keep from being rehypnotized on cue. She cannot remember what she has been told not to remember. She cannot avoid obeying most suggestions. She can only disobey if she can manage a conversion.)

In summary, the facts presented in a modern psychology textbook admit a possible physical reality for hypnosis—as long as amnesic victims of criminal hypnosis do not try to remember anything by rehypnotization, do not aspire to testifying in court, and do not claim that hypnosis caused them to do an unwilled act.

Musings

Dr. Estabrooks wrote about the slim-to-zero possibility of a case of unethical hypnosis becoming publicly uncovered as such. He said, "...military intelligence teaches one to be devious..." (Hypnotism, p. 230) In a "devious" scenario, the writer knows that Gus "walks in his sleep, a pretty good sign that he will be a good hypnotic subject." He asks Gus to visit him at home. After Gus arrives, the writer proposes hypnosis. Gus agrees. The writer soon knows for sure that Gus is a somnambulist. The writer gives Gus a posthypnotic suggestion to not remember his trance induction and conditioning. He suggests sealing.

Will the "writer's" crime be exposed?

> That's not nearly as easy as you might think. Our psychiatrist friends, capable as they are, would probably miss the point [the fact of unethical hypnosis]. If they didn't, they would be laughed out of court. Their explanation would be ridiculous, in the eyes of the public, and they certainly could never prove it. We have only to stick to our original story...no one but...the writer can hypnotize Gus to get the truth. In fact, we would be greathearted and allow anyone to hypnotize him...Our military friends would see through the hoax. They would dig up our records and know that we had the background to lay the plot. Then they would maintain a discreet silence. Certain military matters are not for public consumption. Probably, sooner or later, some psychologist with research in hypnotism as his specialty would unravel the whole thing but he would still have a deuce of a time proving it. We would simply sit tight. (Hypnotism, p. 233)

That is true. Military hypnotists, and those who work for the government, let hypnotic predators freely prey on uninformed persons rather than make public details of the technology and its use in order to prosecute them. In turn, civilian hypnotists, who are knowledgeable about some military advances in mind-control, say nothing—except to other insiders. And the potential for unethical control grows.

Hypnosis of Witnesses

...the real pioneers in this appear to be the Israelis. Meyer Kaplan, the detective who commands the Jerusalem CID, has found that witnesses can recall far more under hypnosis than they can consciously...Hypnosis has recently been introduced as a routine police measure in all terrorist bombings in Israel where there might have been witnesses.

- Peter Watson, War on the Mind, p. 286

Donald Bain explained in The Control of Candy Jones that "...information recovered through the use of hypnosis is not, in itself, legally valid" (p. 42). The rule is perfect for unethical operators. The only way that victims can recover their memory is by rehypnotization, but information gained only by hypnosis is not legally valid. Since most hypnotists now deny that criminal hypnosis is possible, rehypnotization of victims of unethical hypnosis is not taught. But witness hypnosis is—yet with increasing scepticism.

Back in the 60s and 70s, hypnosis of both witnesses and the accused was considered the cutting edge of forensic hypnosis. Then the pendulum began to swing toward scepticism.

> A major problem in forensic hypnosis is the continued existence of the mistaken impression that everything said in trance is fact, that all bits of information garnered from a hypnotized individual are accurate. Sometimes they are, and sometimes they are not. (Kelly & Kelly, Hypnosis, p. 219)

The pendulum kept swinging. Now, it is at the opposite extreme. The forensic view of witness hypnosis has shifted from believing that anything said under hypnosis is true to the position that nothing said under hypnosis is to be trusted. Now, there is no distinguishing between less and more reliable types of regressions. Now, all memories expressed in trance are viewed with doubt.

Dr. Reiter, that cold-blooded forensic hypnotist, took plenty of time, used excellent proofs of deep trance, and suggested safeguards against lying or confabulating.. He had worked with Palle daily for months, before he actually began to collect evidence. The problem with a quicker and more humane hypnosis is its higher rate of error.

Testimony derived from hypnosis alone can not convict. It can generate leads to more tangible evidence. That legal policy is helpful for malpracticing hypnotists. If they are careful not to generate any nonhypnotic evidence, under those guidelines they are unconvictable.

Basic Facts of Forensic Hypnosis

- Hypnosis makes it possible to recover true, faint, or repressed memories.

- It is possible for a hypnotist to deliberately stimulate, or implant, distorted or false memories in a subject's mind.

- Hypnosis can result in imagination unknowingly displacing real remembering: confabulation.

- Hypnosis rapport makes a subject likely to follow and accept conscious, or unconscious, leading cues from the hypnotist, however subtle. If an interrogator seeks memories that do not exist, a hypnotized person may confabulate them.

- A victim of confabulation, or of false memory implanting, is likely to feel a strong, unswerving belief in the false memories. That confidence is even greater than he would express for real memories.

The first-named fact in this list exists, and it can be valuable to individuals and legal authorities when trance is properly managed—or even sometimes when it is not. The other facts, however, must also be kept in mind as possibilities.

Chowchilla Case

In America, keen police interest in witness hypnosis began with the Chowchilla case. The bus driver who was victimized in that famous Chowchilla, California, kidnapping, could remember only three digits of the kidnapper's license plate. Police hypnotized the driver, hoping to learn more. Under hypnosis, he named two complete license plate numbers. One of them turned out to be completely wrong. But the other one was correct in six of seven digits. Three of the digits were the ones that he had already named, so he only gained three digits. But those three made all the difference. They resulted in arrest, trial, and life imprisonment for the three perpetrators.

Bryan

Dr. William Jennings Bryan was a grandson of the great orator, William Jennings Bryan, and the son of a physician. He earned degrees in electrical engineering, law, and medicine, but he spent the last decades of his life teaching and practicing forensic hypnosis. He founded a school and internship program for hypnosis training. He sold tape sets of his lectures. Like M. H. Erickson's educational programs, Bryan limited registration for his pricey four-day cram courses—and longer and pricier "internships" in hypnosis—to degreed medical personnel or lawyers. (He also opened the courses to accompanying spouses, nurses, etc.)

Dr. Bryan started a magazine, American Journal of Hypnosis. It continued for years and often carried articles on forensic hypnosis, as well as on the physiology of trance. He consulted with the CIA and was a technical consultant for the movie, "The Manchurian Candidate."

Bryan was the biggest name in the country in the field of forensic hypnosis in the 60s. He personally was involved in many notorious legal cases of his era. He wrote more than 150 articles and books on hypnosis. Many touched on his experiences providing hypnosis for law enforcement agencies. Some were texts on forensic hypnosis (such as The Legal Aspects of Hypnosis, 1962). Bryan approached forensic hypnosis with a zest and frankness that is strictly taboo today. Unfortunately, you can scarcely find a copy of his books, tapes, or magazine articles.

Spiegel

Dr. Herbert Spiegel helped with an Ann Arbor, Michigan, murder case using witness hypnosis. Eleven patients had died in a VA hospital, all of respiratory arrest. The modus operandi appeared to be an injection of Pavulon (a derivative of curare). Detectives assumed that the murderer was somebody on the VA staff, but they did not know who.

> Dr. Spiegel hypnotized one patient who, while in the trance state, recalled events in the ward that were not remembered during prior questioning of him in the nontrance state. Based upon this information, the FBI was able to expand the scope of its investigation and, eventually, two suspects were named, both nurses. (March 22, 1976, Time, paraphrased in Bain, p. 42)

Kroger

W. S. Kroger also did witness hypnosis. In one case, he hypnotized a policeman who had been wounded by robbers. In trance, the officer was able to recall the license number of their car, even though it had been several months since the incident. In another case, a hypnotized subject remembered, by means of age regression, where he was on a particular calendar date eight years earlier. In both cases, officers were able to corroborate the accuracy of the subject's recall under hypnosis with tangible evidence.

(Like most regression specialists, Kroger distinguished between revivification and age regression. Revivification is a reliving immersed in the past. The hypnotized subject says, "I am...." Age regression is a less valid acting out of past history during which the subject's awareness of the present remains intact. Kroger felt that revivification was quite reliable, but that age regression without revivification risked confabulation.)

Howell

Inspector Marx Howell has twenty-eight years of law enforcement experience and is an FBI National Academy graduate. He specializes in the "investigative hypnosis interview" for the Texas Department of Public Safety. Official Texas interest in witness questioning under hypnosis began in 1980, after the Chowchilla kidnapping. Some officers were sent to train at the Law Enforcement Hypnosis Institute in Los Angeles, California. Texas' own fifty-hour training course was first given by the Therapeutic and Forensic Hypnosis Institute, Houston, Texas. It has sections on "Criminological vs. Psychotherapeutic Use of Hypnosis," "Myths and Misconceptions," "Inductions and Deepening Techniques," and "Information-Eliciting Techniques." They later developed "two in-service hypnosis schools in the DPS Academy..." (p. 36)

Texas kept statistics. In their first 1,121 sessions of investigative hypnosis, 73.68% of the inductions resulted in additional information. The value of the information obtained under hypnosis ranged from zero to the provision of key evidence which resulted in identification and arrest of a perpetrator.

Howell stressed that any leads emerging from a hypnotized subject should be corroborated and used only to support the physical investigation. Laws applying to forensic hypnosis depend on the state where it is practiced and there are significant differences between the laws of those states. Texas is said to be very open to it. Texas courts accept witness testimony that has been refreshed by hypnosis. Many other states do not. However, Texas does not allow hypnosis of suspects or defendants.

Howell said that a police hypnotist should be ignorant of case details. To develop a subject's trust, he should wear plain clothes and first...

> Explain the common misconceptions which most people believe about hypnosis...Many of these misconceptions come from the Svengali-Trilby novel by George DuMaurier and have been perpetuated over the years through television, motion pictures, and stage hypnosis. (Howell, p. 37)

Even in Texas, there is no help for a victim of unethical hypnosis. Texas police hypnotists are taught that unethical hypnosis is not possible.

Baranowski

George Baranowski is another prominent forensic hypnotist. He studied at the Midwest Investigative Hypnosis Training Institute in Rochelle, Illinois, taught by Sheriff Jerry Brooks. He also studied with Dr. William S. Kroger, and at Purdue, and at Indiana University. He proposed the following procedural requirements for forensic hypnosis. (Damon, pp. 5-6)

- Record everything on both audio and video.
- Don't ask "leading questions."
- Learn court procedure as to forms, attitude, how to testify, basic laws, rules of evidence, the "doctrine of memory," and how to interview.

Public Spokesmen on Hypnosis:

Truth, Half-Truths, and Lies

M.H. Erickson

T. X. Barber

The Skeptics:
Sarbin and Spanos

M. T. Orne

> Now if hypnosis can be used to secure both good and bad ends, why do so many hypnotists loudly and vehemently deny that criminals can profitably employ it?
>
> Part of the answer can be attributed to the dedicated nature of these scientifically trained men who wish to make the public aware of the fantastic potentials of hypnosis as a beneficial and worthwhile tool in human endeavors.
>
> Their task, however, is complicated by the fact that even generally well-informed segments of the public continue to associate hypnosis with quackery, cheap entertainment and some vaguely sinister evil. Publicity identifying hypnosis as a potentially valuable criminal tool only serves to make acceptance of the benefits of hypnosis more difficult. Thus, many researchers feel compelled to attack such an unfavorable linkage head on, in deference to what they consider the greater good.
>
> Birns, Hypnosis, 1968, pp. 155-156

Not Birns (whose insightful words are quoted above), but M. H. Erickson, T. X. Barber, Sarbin, Spanos, and Martin Orne are the well-known and oft-cited public spokesmen on hypnosis. They are quoted in textbooks, courtrooms, and forensic manuals as final authorities on matters having to do with criminal, or merely "unethical," hypnosis. However, Erickson, Barber, Sarbin, Spanos, and Orne probably declared a public position that was different from their private knowledge. Here follows a closer look at what these public spokesmen have said about hypnosis—and how their statements compare to the facts.

M. H. ERICKSON

...an individual in hypnosis can be caused to commit an act which is socially and objectively reprehensible... (p. 116) One well-known and experienced hypnotist regretted that the dangers were not more numerous and more obvious, for then he believed there would be less tinkering with hypnosis by the inexperienced...Possible dangers do reside in...the moral issue...

- Marcuse, Hypnosis, p. 167

Was M. H. Erickson the "well-known and experienced hypnotist" to whom Marcuse referred? Maybe.

M. H. Erickson started hypnotizing people when he was a college freshman at the University of Wisconsin. By his junior year, he had put hundreds of other students in trance. He was invited to demonstrate hypnosis to the psychology department, to a medical school, and to a nearby mental hospital. In 1923, Clark L. Hull, a hypnosis researcher, invited Erickson to teach a graduate seminar. After earning an M.A. and an M.D., Erickson interned in psychiatry. He combined teaching, research, and private practice. Over his lifetime, he hypnotized thousands of persons, some as many as five-hundred times.

He profitably targeted doctors, dentists, and graduate psychologists. He taught thousands of professionals throughout the U.S. to use hypnosis—often in two or three-day how-to-hypnotize hotel seminars. He was creating a new medical technocracy with the special abilities of disguised induction and hypnotic suggestion. When hypnodontist Aaron Moss recalled presenting those seminars with Erickson, he said that 60% of the students were dentists, 35% were medical professionals, and only 5% were psychologists. The students learned fast:

> With only a little experience he [the student] can produce the peculiar phenomena characteristic of hypnosis such as age regression, hallucinations, illusions, catalepsy, etc. (Moss, p. 306)

M. H. Erickson's wife, Elizabeth Moore Erickson, also a professional in this field, was overshadowed by her husband's professional stature. One of the great Ericksonian articles, "Concerning the Nature and Character of Post-hypnotic Behavior," is credited to both of them, his name first.

The Erickson Foundation

Erickson, like Jung and Freud, founded an organization which acts as a perpetual lobby, publicity machine, fund-raiser, and promotor of all things Ericksonian. Erickson, Jung, and Freud all trained disciples at length, bonding together those who came to study with the master. Each developed a library of revered books—written by the master and/or his disciples. Each has unique in-group concepts, lingo, skills, and hierarchy.

The Milton H. Erickson Foundation publishes a quarterly newsletter (sprinkled with M.H. Erickson quotes). It sells audio and videotapes from past Ericksonian conferences. (But you must be a graduate student in psychology, hold a post-BA degree in that subject, or have a social service job to attend a conference or purchase conference tapes). Conference courses typically include "Conversational Induction Techniques," "A Conversational Induction with Fixation on Ideas," and "A Conversational Induction and the Utilization of Spontaneous Trance." Ericksonians are big on disguised induction. The "conversational induction" is their specialty.

The newsletter also has advertised a terra cotta, or bronze, portrait bust of Erickson. Its list of books for sale has included The Wisdom of Milton H. Erickson, My Voice Will Go With You: The Teaching Tales of Milton H. Erickson, and others, all with "Ericksonian" or "Erickson" in the title. Like Maypole dancers, Ericksonians continue to weave the magic of the MHE name, the continuing MHE adulation, and themselves, more tightly against the center pole which is MHE himself.[1]

M. H.Erickson had peers who researched hypnosis: LeCron, Wolberg, R. W. White, Salter, Young. For years, William Jennings Bryan ran a competing organization which also offered an internship program and produced a professional journal on the subject of hypnosis. Now, all of those but Erickson are forgotten. Why? Was he really "greater"?

---

[1] To encounter him as a fairly likeable human being, speaking plain English, and telling his therapy tales, read Zeig's Teaching Seminar with Milton H. Erickson, M.D.

Erickson was a brilliant hypnosis researcher who contributed several important elements to the technology of coercive hypnosis. Most notably, he created the propaganda piece that kicked off a surge of disinformation about hypnosis which quickly became a tidal wave.

Erickson on "Antisocial Hypnosis"

Erickson's most cited article is a piece of phony "research" that appears to prove that unethical hypnosis is impossible, and that nobody can be made to do anything against his will, by means of hypnosis:

> ..the conclusion warranted by these experimental findings is that hypnosis cannot be misused to induce hypnotized persons to commit actual wrongful acts either against themselves or others... (M. H. Erickson, "An Experimental Investigation of the Possible Anti-social Use of Hypnosis")

Erickson claimed, in that article, that a subject cannot be made to do anything against his will, or against his morals. What he really demonstrated, however, is all of the methods by which a hypnotist can cleverly and deliberately fail to produce self-destructive or unethical behavior—if he wants to report that type of results. "An Experimental Investigation of the possible Anti-social Use of Hypnosis" is now quoted as scientific gospel in every psychology textbook.

Millions of suggestible people have accepted Erickson's research results as fact. The reasons are a lesson in propaganda techniques: a) An authority figure, a "doctor," insists the lie is the truth. b) "Experts" and textbooks repeat the lie insistently and endlessly. c) Mock-up experiments have "proved" it. (We are taught that anything with the appearance of science is the final answer. d) Erickson used big numbers: lots of subjects, lots of experiments, lots of negative results.

How did this extraordinarily expert hypnotist manage to "fail" in his attempts to get hypnotized persons to commit "anti-social" acts, when amateur criminal hypnotists could manage it? This double-layered article superficially insists it is proof that a subject cannot be made to do anything against his will by means of hypnosis. What it actually displays is an array of slick techniques by which a hypnotist can claim to attempt unethical hypnosis and produce seeming failure.

- ☐ In some cases, he hypnotized them so lightly that they could still discuss and argue with him freely. They were not deep enough to have labored, almost inaudible, somnambulistic, literal, and automatistic thought processes and responses. Light trance is not as compelling as deep trance*.*

- ☐ In other writings, Erickson said that deep, amnesic trances were necessary for automatistic obedience, and he was an expert at producing them. However, he gave no amnesia suggestions in this experiment. He knew that full access to memory supports volition!

- ☐ He was a master of devious, indirect*, seductive patient manipulation, but in this "research" he gave only direct suggestions. He said, "Sit on a hot stove." None of the subjects would.*

- ☐ He did not use the full array of hypnotic techniques. He reported that he tried to make a subject have the "impression" that a friend's purse was actually her own, and could not make it work. He did not suggest a visual hallucination that the purse was her own. (In a rerun of that experiment, Margaret Brenman suggested exactly that, and she succeeded in eliciting the "antisocial" behavior.)

- ☐ After his "failed" experiment, a subject told Erickson that she "tried hard," but she "simply could not do what had been asked..." That statement describes the experience of nonvolition of a deeply hypnotized, trained subject. (The suggested act seems impossible to resist. It seems to carry itself out with no conscious control.) The subject's hypnotic automatism probably was stimulated by Erickson's nonverbal directive. Consciously, she was not aware of the two levels of instruction coming from Erickson: a weaker verbal layer, a dominant nonverbal layer. Subjects, however, unconsciously, and with extreme sensitivity, perceive an experimenter's nonverbal communication (tone and body language). Erickson's bias was so clear that some hypnotized subjects refused his request, made while they were hypnotized, to play practical jokes on other persons. Yet they willingly obeyed the same request in a waking state!

Every M.H. Erickson article I have ever read contained one or more concepts of technical value. In addition to the preceding demonstrations, in his article's conclusion, Erickson directly stated one important, powerful, and true thing. He said that persons who are injured, offended, or exploited under hypnosis remain unconsciously angry—even when they do not consciously know that fact.

> ...the subjects tended to develop and manifest much more intense feeling at the hypnotic level of awareness than at the conscious waking level. Many of the subjects in the waking state readily and easily forgave...only to manifest in the trance state a full continuance of their anger. (“Antisocial...” p. 393).

Opposition to Erickson’s “Research”— Estabrooks (who personally had done lots of morally marginal hypnosis) said:

> ...[the] attitude is that there is only one way to have a subject commit a crime. We hypnotize him for the first time at 10:00 A.M. At 10:30 we hand him a knife and say, “Go murder your father.” The old gentleman is still hale and hearty by 11:00 A.M. so we have “proved” our point that it can’t be done. (Estabrooks, Hypnotism, p. 185)

In a 1953 article, “Anti-Social Behavior and Hypnosis,” Marcuse surveyed the literature and tallied separately those persons, among the well-known experimental hypnotists, who believed unethical hypnosis was possible, and those who did not. He said that only Bramwell, Young, and Erickson disbelieved (or claimed to disbelieve) in the possibility of self-destructive and hetero-destructive acts caused by hypnosis.

Soon after, Young was converted to Marcuse’s side by the evidence from his own experiments. Young then also took on Erickson, pointing out the > ...poverty-stricken suggestions to which, according to Erickson’s thesis, antisocial experimentation is limited. If, however, we study Erickson’s technique in dealing with all other hypnotic problems, we find him using a methodology varied and rich, and consequently effective. (Young in LeCron, ed., Experimental Hypnosis)

Indeed, Erickson’s insistence that hypnosis is invariably harmless (except perhaps to the hypnotist!) becomes even more ridiculous when you learn that Erickson made persons become hypnotized unknowingly, and unwillingly. He caused hearing people to become deaf—even against their will and to their great distress. He caused seeing persons to become blind, and then colorblind. Young wrote a classic article which listed some of the methods that would facilitate unethical hypnosis. The contributions of Erickson are prominent in that list.

Marcuse wrote to Erickson, pointing out that his “experiments” made no attempt to evade the subjects’ resistance. He had not, for example, used the technique of hallucination which had been so effective in his other experiments. Erickson wrote back (“Personal communication, 1948”) that > ...the anti-social act was now “on the part of the hypnotist,” for he said ‘there must be an awareness of the nature of the act before it can be judged as anti-social.” (Erickson quoted in Marcuse, “Anti-Social...,” p. 19)

According to Erickson’s statement above, if the subject becomes unable to be aware of the nature of the act, the moral burden shifts to the somnambulist’s hypnotist! That makes sense. However, that omits the experience of nonvolition.

Young read the quote from Erickson’s letter to Marcuse and commented that:

> Erickson’s definition of an antisocial act in hypnosis is an act which the subject has been made to see as antisocial. It cannot be a bad act which the subject has been misled into believing is a good or at least necessary act. For Erickson, it must be a bad act which the subject sees as a bad act. (Young in LeCron, ed., p. 384)

Marcuse further quoted Erickson:

> It is possible that many individuals are reluctant to discuss the matter of anti-social behavior publicly and may take a position contrary to what they believe for fear that a minor aspect of hypnotic phenomena [the possibility of criminal hypnosis] may jeopardize further work in the area...This expressed fear is not without foundation as witness the current blanket prohibition of hypnosis in many of our large universities. That a technique is misused is no argument against its use. (M. H. Erickson, quoted by Marcuse, “Anti-social Behavior and Hypnosis.”)

Wells and Estabrooks also published debunking efforts. A graduate student working under Wells, Margaret Brenman, repeated some of M. H. Erickson’s “failed” anti-social experiments—and obtained totally different results. In a Journal of Psychology article, Wells targeted Erickson, saying:

> If a beginner in the art of hypnosis, a graduate student in her first year of practical experience in hypnotizing, can successfully carry out experi- > ments in which her subjects are forced to perform anti-social acts against their wills, then psychologists or physicians with more experience with hypnosis who fail in all such experiments should be put to shame, or encouraged to improve their technique until they, too, can get equally successful results. (Wells, 1941, p. 99)

Dr. Reiter, then Europe's most prominent expert on unethical hypnosis, could scarcely believe Erickson's "research" was being taken seriously in the United States.

> [His] ...experiences then stand in direct opposition to those of a number of investigators of equally high rank. In fact Erickson stands alone among his contemporaries. (Reiter, 1958, p. 41)

In a 1942 article, Erickson seemed to agree with his opposition:

> It is certainly true, however, that failure to produce even these acts cannot be used as evidence that...hypnosis cannot be misused to induce hypnotized persons to commit actual wrongful acts either against themselves or others. The writer [Erickson] concurs entirely with Rowland who recently has written that...the common acception that hypnotized persons will not perform acts that violate their ideals is badly in need of re-examination. (Psychiatry 5, 1942, pp. 49-62)

In 1944, however, Erickson again reversed himself:

> Briefly, there are no injurious or detrimental effects upon the subject other than those that can develop in any other normal interpersonal relationship; hypnosis cannot be used for antisocial or criminal purposes, although most subjects can be induced to commit make-believe or pretended crimes...; the hypnotist-subject relationship is entirely one of voluntary cooperation, and no subject can be hypnotized against his will or without his cooperation...
>
> Since hypnosis depends primarily upon cooperation by the subject, the control of the trance state rests largely with the subject. No subject can be kept in a trance for an unreasonable length of time without his full cooperation...Finally, as for detrimental effects of hypnosis, none have been observed in personal experience with hundreds of subjects, some of whom have been hypnotized hundreds of times. ("Hypnosis in Medicine," p. 641)

Results of the "Antisocial" Article— Erickson had faked experimental results for the unwitting masses and the fawning Ericksonians to believe. He did it well, as he did all things well. He proved that it is unnecessary to give people truth since they are satisfied with lies. He proved that more clever and more ruthless manipulators can manipulate less clever and more trusting ones. He provided a slick piece of propaganda to ensure the future profits, and power, of his profession. Ever since, psychology and psychiatry have treated Erickson's phony experiments as if they were the last word on the matter.

"An Experimental Investigation of the Possible Anti-social Use of Hypnosis" was published in 1939. In April, 1940, a Sunday issue of The American Weekly (as close to universal indoctrination as you could get in that pre-television era) said,

> The general public seems to believe that hypnotized persons will do unlawful things directed as a result of being hypnotized. The careful and conclusive work of Dr. Milton H. Erickson, at the Eloise, Michigan, Hospital and Infirmary, shows that this notion is untrue. Neither while hypnotized, nor later as a result of ideas planted while hypnotized, could he get people to do unlawful or wicked deeds, not even tiny ones. Dr. Erickson is an outstanding hypnotist of the present time, and should be able to accomplish this if it were possible.

People base their behavior on their data. After Erickson's article, what they were taught, and therefore what they "knew," was a lie. The debunking efforts of Wells, Estabrooks, Brenman, and Young failed, shouted down by print repetition of that lie, and denials of the truth. Erickson, Barber, Orne and their false postulate of ever-harmless hypnosis reign.

M. H. Erickson Video

On the evening of September 19, 1990, Professor Charles Tebbetts showed his hypnotherapy class (in which I was a student) a bootleg tape of the famous Dr. Milton Erickson performing before a select audience. (It was an unauthorized copy. Tebbetts never attended college.) Erickson's subject was a strikingly beautiful, shapely, young black woman. The old man did a disguised induction, then deepened her into a very deep trance. Then, he shifted her to somnambulist waking hypnosis (instructions to open her eyes and have normal speech capability).

Next, he demonstrated his control over her: He made her do things she said she did not want to do. He suggested that she would relive a harsh childhood spanking given by her mother. He said to her, "Feel the pain." He repeated that again, with emphasis, "Feel the pain." She was being obliged by Erickson, in front of a large audience, and being videotaped, to relive an excruciating childhood spanking.

Erickson sat there with a little smile on his face, watching his subject squirm in agony. "FEEL it!" he commanded. "YOU WILL FEEL PAIN!"

She obviously was feeling it. I writhed in my seat and stifled an outcry. Erickson then told her to forget why she was feeling the pain (to be amnesic for the fact that she felt it because of his hypnotic suggestion, and because she was in a nonstop replay of her mother's spanking). He told her to just feel it, feel that agony of stinging on her buttocks.

She did that.

My class was mostly lay persons seeking hypnotherapy training. It was not doctors, dentists, graduate psychologists, and social workers like the Ericksonians. I never saw the end of the film because the women in my class were becoming more and more upset. "This is sick," Marykate said. "If you show any more of this, I'm going to leave," Ronnilee agreed. Several more echoed her threat to walk out if Tebbetts did not stop the film, for they could see no therapeutic purpose for that pain hallucination. Neither could I. It was stage hypnosis, titillating entertainment for a theater audience—not a therapy demonstration.

Tebbetts grinned, as if he had expected that reaction to the film. He stopped the tape. He clearly thought little of Erickson.

Why did Erickson's live audience not react like my classmates? Did they hold him in such awe (rapport?) that criticism—even revolt—was not imaginable? Or did his predominantly male and totally professional audience share his arrogance toward, and emotional distancing from, that woman? Would they be as arrogant toward, and emotionally distanced from, any subject (client or patient)? Were they utterly desensitized to subjugation by hypnosis?

Ericksonian Technology Applicable to Criminal Hypnosis

In a 1960 letter to Dr. Orne, Erickson declared "that complications are essentially nonexistent, because 'the unconscious mind will protect the individual from accepting suggestions detrimental to his adjustment.' " (Orne, "Undesirable Effects of Hypnosis," p. 233) (If only that were true.) Dr. Paul Young's list of techniques which would facilitate exploitative hypnosis included several methods reported by Erickson:

- ☐ ...regressing the subject to an age when he was...susceptible to immoral urges...
- ☐ ...appealing to motives latent in the normal state but easily aroused in hypnosis—motives of love, compliance, and desire for omnipotence.
- ☐ ...so distorting the subject's perception of external reality, including personal relationships by hallucinations, that acting on such motives is in line with the hypnotist's nefarious purposes.
- ☐ ...implanting complexes which are in line with personal vanity...lust...or desire for submission. (Young, in LeCron, ed., Experimental Hypnosis, pp. 392-3)

Here is my list: four specific technologies that have mind-control applications which M. H. Erickson helped to develop.

1) Ericksonian Disorientation—Erickson first described the disorientation technique when reporting his experiments on hypnotic causation of color blindness and deafness. In "Hypnotic Treatment of a Case of Acute Hysterical Depression," Erickson and Kubie's disguised induction (since known as the "chaperone" method) of an unwilling subject was followed by a disorientation "for time and place..."

2) Sensory Distortion—Erickson did basic research on experimental distortions of seeing and hearing (relevant to any conditioning to hear the hypnotist speaking backwards, or "too softly to understand" and thus incomprehensibly to the subject's conscious mind). He tackled hearing first. He reported his experiments in "A Study of Clinical and Experimental Findings on Hypnotic Deafness: (1) Clinical Experimentation and Findings," and "(2) Experimental Findings with a Conditioned Response Technique."

He started with a hundred trained subjects, then culled them to thirty capable of "the profound somnambulistic state...considered necessary for reliable experimental results." (p. 127) He wanted "a deep trance, characterized by catalepsy, automatism, hypersuggestibility and profound amnesia" (p. 128) because "the experimental work contemplated necessitated the overthrow and negation of ingrained patterns of normal response and behavior..." (Ibid.) He pointed out the necessity of "eliminating sources of error arising from faulty, incomplete or superficial trances." (Ibid.) He selected the most susceptible subjects from those thirty.

He gave each of those subjects two hours more of "...systematic suggestion...before he was considered to have reached a sufficiently stuporous state, which resembled closely a profound catatonic stupor." (Ibid.) He spent an hour, or more, teaching the subject waking hypnosis—" teaching of the subjects to become somnambulistic without lessening the degree of their hypnosis." (Ibid.) Erickson considered the long time he spent on induction and training essential to his success:

> The prolonged systematic development of the stuporous and somnambulistic trance states as contrasted to the usual rapid, and, in the experimenter's judgment, more superficial induction of such states, probably contributed greatly to the final results. That such a technique served to establish a massive generalized state of 'inhibition,' rendering the subjects incapable of spontaneous responses and restricting them to limited responsive behavior, is possible... (p. 146)

Erickson would not describe his "special technique of suggestion" whose purpose was "a complete inhibition of all spontaneous activity while giving entire freedom for all responsive activity." (p. 129) A logical guess would be narcohypnosis. However, he declared that he caused total automatism, no free will. He repeated that process of two hours induction plus one hour of training "over and over again..." The "instructions were given slowly, emphatically and impressively, and were repeated many times to insure full comprehension and acceptance." (p. 130) The subjects were being trained to behave with the greatest degree of automaticity possible, to become human robots.

3) Amnesia—The capstone of this unconscious structure Erickson was building in his subjects was "...a state of amnesia for all commands and instructions, the amnesia to be present continuously for all future trance, posthypnotic and waking states." (p. 129) Amnesia kept the subject consciously ignorant of all past, present, and future hypnotic events and programming. Using merely verbal (not narcohypnotic) technique and in merely one week (rather than six), Erickson was still able to achieve four cases of suggested partial deafness and six of complete deafness.

The reactions of his subjects to their mysterious (because of the amnesia) deafness varied from curiosity to shock: "...a number of subjects displayed marked panic reactions, showing marked fright..." (p. 142)

The second article in his suggested deafness series was about amnesia. Erickson's major point in that article was that extreme sensory distortion (persuading subjects to be stone deaf) can be achieved by hypnotic command in a susceptible subject provided that complete amnesia is induced first. He said that a subject, in whom amnesia is not complete, will resist extreme, long-term sensory distortion. (And for good reason.)

Erickson then shifted from experiments which suggested deafness to a series which suggested colorblindness. (Erickson was born colorblind; he could recognize only the color purple.) He made the hypnotic subjects unable to see certain colors by a four-step process:

1) "Slow, gradual induction of a profound somnambulistic trance."

2) Deepening of trance to absolute greatest possible depth.

3) Suggestion of extreme deprivation (complete blindness), followed by conditional restoration of the privilege (colorblindness). Erickson explained that he first suggested total blindness to deliberately cause emotional distress "...to permit the spontaneous development of affective distress and anxiety over the subjective visual loss..." This he followed by "'restoring' vision in part, yet leaving a 'limited' blindness, which would preclude the seeing of a certain color or colors."

4) "The induction of a profound amnesia, to ensue at once and to persist indefinitely...there were given vague general instructions serving to effect an inclusion in the amnesia of all connotations and associations..." ("The Induction of Color Blindness by a Technique of Hypnotic Suggestion," pp. 62-63)

After the experiment, subjects had

> ...muscular stiffness, intense fatigue, and throbbing headaches. These reactions are suggestive of profound neurophysiological responses to the hypnotic suggestions. (Ibid., p. 69)

In "Experimental Demonstrations of the Psychopathology of Everyday Life," Erickson made clear the necessity of 1) hypnotic depth, 2) repetition of the suggestion, and 3) total amnesia to get acceptance of suggestions obviously against the subjects' will and self interest. In "Hypnosis in Medicine" he stated (which modern psychology textbooks heatedly deny) that "usually after a deep trance the subject has a more or less complete amnesia for all trance events" (p. 644). His 1974 article, with Rossi, Erickson described various amnesic phenomena in hypnosis and ways to produce them. In "Deep Hypnosis and Its Induction" Erickson reported unfamiliarly deep stages of somnambulism. He warned that such depths could be dangerous for the subject.

4) Artificial Neurosis—In "Experimental Demonstrations of the Psychopathology of Everyday Life," Erickson described the "implantation of a complex."

> During hypnosis the subject was instructed to recall...certain [suggested and imaginary] things that the subject had done which he regretted intensely and which constituted a source of much shame to him... (p. 350)

Erickson on Regression

The master did provide some good news for future victims of suggested amnesia and abuse under hypnosis:

Traumatic, painful, forgotten experiences and memories that often constitute a point of origin in serious personality disturbances are frequently readily accessible under hypnosis, can be easily recalled by the patient and...hypnosis can enable subjects to recover memories of lost experiences in phenomenal and minute detail ordinarily not possible. ("Hypnosis in Medicine," pp. 644-645)

T. X. BARBER

...it was the non-professional, the occultist, the dabbler in magical and religious ritual, who kept knowledge alive during the hiatuses of professional progress. To the soothsayers of old and the magicians of late, we may owe a greater debt than we realize. In fact, some of the more prominent individuals in hypnosis during the present century learned many of their early techniques from the stage magicians and the self-professed witches of their times. [1]

-William Edmonston, Jr. The Induction of Hypnosis

T.X. (Theodore Xenophon) Barber started out as a stage hypnotist, then moved into academics. After receiving his Ph.D., Barber became director of psychological research at Massachusetts' Medfield State Hospital. There, he began a lifelong career in hypnosis disinformation. In his book on hypnosis for lay readers and beginning hypnotists, Barber supplied induction routines:

Keep your eyes on the little light and listen carefully to what I say... ...Your eyes are closing, closing. Close your eyes...You will not wake up until I tell > you to. Remember that the dangers of hypnosis are a myth. (Hypnosis, pp. 251-2)

---

[1] William Edmonston, Jr. was probably offering Barber (and McGill?) a veiled tribute when he wrote those words.

If a subject accepted Barber's suggestion not to wake up until the hypnotist said, one danger of hypnosis was already operational. A major escape route was closed off.

Medfield Money

Barber's theoretical declarations on hypnosis were the radical position in the spectrum of professional opinions on hypnosis when he first began making them. Barber claimed that hypnosis is entirely self-deception on the part of the subject. He said the subject deceives the hypnotist by acting hypnotized. Barber insisted there was no such thing as hypnosis. He always wrote the word in quotes—"hypnosis"—lest somebody imagine the condition was real. Of the cases of "Z", "Mrs. E", and Palle, Barber smirked:

> If 'hypnosis' played a role in these cases, this role may have consisted...in providing the subject with a rationale for justifying behavior to himself and to others. (Barber, "Antisocial and Criminal Acts Induced by 'Hypnosis,' 1961, p. 311.)

With that specious and hypocritical old dogma of moral integrity, Barber shouted down opposition from honest experimenters by his sheer volume of publications. He (and his staff?) produced more than forty-seven articles, and one book. When I counted entries in a very complete bibliography of articles on hypnosis, Barber had more than any other author. Psychology textbooks now quote him as an "authority on hypnosis" (Coon, p. 152).

In forewords to his early works, Barber thanked CIA and Navy-funded hypnotists for favors given. His later research and publications were for years funded, at least in part, by a "Medfield Foundation." Did whoever funneled all that money into the Medfield Foundation want to displace the old public concept of hypnosis as a powerful tool that carries an element of risk? Did they want to replace that more accurate view with Barber's image of hypnosis as harmless charlatanry and a subject's self deceit? Was the change funded because the creation and management of unknowing hypnotic subjects had become an important part of military and intelligence agency operations?

Whatever the funders' intentions were, their money did accomplish those ends. The Barber propaganda maximized public trust (and thus hypnotic susceptibility). It undermined the credibility of anybody who might, in the future, attempt to report, resist, or merely discuss the possibility of hypnotic exploitation.

Barber was a brilliant man who did some interesting experiments. If one bothers to pick the grain from the chaff, some of his points are worth keeping in mind: how faint is the line between "hypnotic" and regular behavior; how very much the laws of suggestibility operate in nonhypnotic situations; and the placebo principle that if you believe something will help you, it probably will. Barber demonstrated that people are, naturally, in and out of various states of consciousness, and naturally operate with varying degrees of suggestibility in their daily lives. He showed that they do not need a formal "hypnotic" induction to accomplish what comes naturally. It is true that a trained hypnotic subject can mimic a waking state, even for the EEG. It is also accurate that hypnosis can conveniently be summarized as a condition of heightened suggestibility. The mental state of hypnosis does involve an unconscious cooperation with the hypnotist. Barber's statement that it is hard to know the state of consciousness a person is in just by looking at them is correct. (But trained and experienced persons are much better at it than untrained ones, and another hypnotized person is the best of all.) It is right that a hypnotized person tends to act the way he expects a hypnotized person to act. It is a fact that the expectations of the subject tend to shape the way both the subject and the hypnotist behave. And vice versa.

Barberisms

Barber's main weapons, in the disinformation area, were endless verbiage and confusing nitpicking of statements by persons who disagreed with him. The writing itself is inductive. Soon you are so confused and/or bored, that you either suspend analysis and completely buy into the weird stuff, or you throw the book away (the wiser choice).

For example, Barber claimed to have proved that there is no difference between being hypnotized and not being hypnotized; that a person in a regular state of consciousness will hallucinate as readily as a hypnotized person; that hallucinating subjects are only pretending; that hypnotic regression is not real; that a hypnotized person is only role playing, only pretending to be what he thinks a hypnotized person is supposed to be; that words like "trance" or "somnambulism" should not be used (even as concepts) because they make people believe in the existence of something which is different from normal consciousness, that Rowland and Young's snake experiments only proved that the subjects obeyed in the same way as Milgram's subjects (who were not hypnotized).

If you believe all the above, you are suggestible and confused already!

What were Barber's most deceptive misinterpretations, misstatements, and myths?

- He made a big deal of the fact that control subjects in an experiment, if asked to pretend to be hypnotized, may also become hypnotized. (But one of the standard induction methods is some variation on the theme of "pretend you're hypnotized." If you pretend to be hypnotized, and are naturally susceptible, you soon will be.)

- He demonstrated, over and over, that hypnotic induction can be caused by suggestions and influenced by suggestions. He said that proved hypnosis was merely a matter of thought, and therefore it did not really exist. (But every thought is a physiological event in the brain. Certain thoughts, and patterns of thoughts, can impact brain physiology in ways that affect its level of consciousness, which is also a physiological event.)

- He made much of the fact that induction suggestions do not have to have the word "sleep" in them. He took that fact as evidence that the hypnotic subjects were not really "hypnotized" but only pretending to be hypnotized. (Actually, the experiments had proved that trance/hypnosis induction can go by any name, and can happen in any setting—with or without the word "sleep.")

- He claimed that there is no physiological evidence that hypnosis exists, and, therefore, it does not exist. That is flagrantly untrue. (See Parts II and IV.)

- He claimed that hypnotic susceptibility was only an appearance caused by a hypnotist's skill, or by the hypnotic suggestions, rather than anything innate in the subject. (Also false. Susceptibility is a characteristic affected both by genetic happenstance and by training.)

- He said that stage hypnosis is only pretending. It sometimes is, but usually it is real. Dr. Van Pelt, an Englishman, included a chapter on "Some Dangers of Stage or Amateur Hypnotism" in his 1948 book:

  > Unfortunately, it is not only those who volunteer to go on the stage who can be affected. Even members of the audience watching exhibitions of stage or amateur hypnotism can be influenced, for it should be remembered that approximately 25 per cent of people are highly suggestible and are capable of going into a deep trance. (Van Pelt, Secrets of Hypnotism, p. 63)

- Barber claimed that trance is not real. To explain trance phenomena, he claimed that all hypnotic subjects are just pretending to be hypnotized. (The phenomena of hypnosis cannot be entirely explained, however, by demand characteristics: operator instructions, subject expectations, wishing to please the hypnotist, and role playing.)

THE SKEPTICS: SARBIN AND SPANOS

In most instances the subject appears to act like an automaton. There is an apparent absence of volitional activity. The experimenter throws out commands which seem to be accepted by the subject without critical consideration. He is often slow, stuporous, and seems to be exerting a great deal of effort to perform simple acts. Retrospective accounts reveal a distinction between obedience as found in everyday behavior and the automatic acceptance of commands without the subjective experience of intent.

Sarbin quoted in C. Scott Moss, Hypnosis in Perspective, p. 149

“The Skeptics”

Barber developed a following of other academics, sometimes coauthors of his copious output, sometimes disciples—a cheering section of imitators who called themselves “the skeptics.” The skeptics induced the same hypnotic phenomena that other hypnotists did. They rejected any physiological basis for those phenomena.

Like the Salpetriere group of the 1880s, the skeptics believed that anything immoral which happened as a result of trance took place because the hypnotic subject secretly wanted it to. Nothing could be the hypnotist’s fault. Barber and the skeptics took this even beyond Charcot and his associates. This Medfield group denied that the hypnotist was responsible even for the hypnotic phenomena, subtly viewing the hypnotist as the dupe of the subject, rather than vice versa.

Sarbin

Theodore Sarbin started out a behaviorist: words create images that push buttons in people’s brains and get results. That is the career stage at which he wrote the above, forgotten, quote. Sarbin later competed with T.X. Barber to redefine hypnosis into its current innocuous public image. Barber won, but Sarbin was a close second with his role-playing entry. Sarbin’s “theory” that hypnosis is only the subject pretending, role-playing, is now mentioned in most psychology texts.

There is, in fact, some truth to his view. People are so suggestible, and they do tend to behave in trance as they see other people behaving, and also according to their prior expectations and presuggestions. Like Barber, Sarbin rejected brain physiology as a factor in hypnosis. As with Barber, that flawed premise makes his final assumptions unsound. For example, Sarbin did not integrate EEG data relating to levels of consciousness with his role-playing observations. Therefore, he claimed that trance depth is simply the degree of “submergence of the self in the role.”

Spanos

N. P. Spanos also continued the Barber myth that hypnosis has no physiology and no unique state of consciousness. Like Barber and Sarbin, Spanos contributed to the understanding of the normal power of expectation in human life.

The
Not-So-Skeptical Inquirer

I was astonished to discover that The Skeptical Inquirer, published by the “Committee for the Scientific Investigation of Claims of the Paranormal,” also pushes the idea that hypnotism does not exist. Despite all the high IQ names in their directorate, including that giant intellect, Isaac Asimov, they, like the Psych 101 textbooks, regard hypnotism as a harmless intellectual toy, if not outright charlatanry. In their review of a 1989 collection of hypnosis articles, edited by Spanos and Chaves, T. X. Barber was cited as the final authority. Enough said.

Martin T. Orne

[For interrogation purposes] hypnosis must either be induced against the subject's will or without his awareness.

- Orne, "Potential Uses of Hypnosis in Interrogation," p. 173

After receiving his M.D. and Ph.D. from Harvard, Martin Orne became an Associate in Psychiatry at Harvard Medical School. He directed the Studies in Hypnosis project from 1958 to 1964. Among his many research projects was one on how soldiers could be taught to do self-hypnosis "in order to do certain military tasks" and how they could pretend to be hypnotized well enough to fool an enemy interrogator.

He provided an article on "The Potential Uses of Hypnosis in Interrogation" for Biderman and Zimmer's 1961 book, The Manipulation of Human Behavior. (On p. ix, Biderman and Zimmer said Orne had been doing work "supported by the Society for the Investigation of Human Ecology, Inc," a CIA funds conduit.) In that article, Orne noted the possibilities "for the subject's perception of reality to be distorted in accordance with the hypnotist's cues" (p. 170), for spontaneous amnesia, and for "some compulsion to comply with the hypnotist's requests, along with a striking disinclination even to wish resisting them" (p. 171). On the subject of disguised induction, he said

> There are three situations in which hypnosis has been reported to have been induced without the subject's awareness...while the subject is asleep...when the subject is seeking psychiatric help and hypnosis is induced in the course of a clinical interview with no explicit mention of the process...[and] a trance spontaneously entered by individuals who are observing trance induction in another subject. (p. 174)

He mentioned induction by means of repetition, hardware, and so on:

> ...rotating spirals, mirrors, and swinging pendulums...the subject's own breathing... prolonged stimulation by rhythmic drums... monotonous rhythmic verbal suggestions... (p. 175)

He also mentioned a more sophisticated induction machine, and the neurophysiological basis of trance.

Orne on "Antisocial" Hypnosis

Orne's 1962 article, "Antisocial Behavior and Hypnosis," was supported by the Air Force Office of Scientific Research. In it, he surveyed the history of arguments over unethical hypnosis. He summed up the most extreme pro-hypnotist position (the "dogma of moral integrity"):

> Gilles de la Tourette (1887) made the well-known statement that a subject in deep hypnosis will not perform any action which goes against his basic moral sentiments. Dynamic psychology changed the phraseology to read that a hypnotized individual will do nothing counter to his unconscious wishes. However, neither phrasing of the position is testable because the subject's so-called "criminal tendencies" or "unconscious wishes" are specified after the fact. That is, if a subject does not perform the suggested antisocial act, his refusal is taken as evidence for the generic view, whereas if the subject complies, his acceptance of the suggestion is seen as evidence for his criminal tendencies or his basic desires. (pp. 139-140)

He also summarized the view at the other extreme:

> ...a subject must carry out whatever suggestion is given to him by the hypnotist, and a subject's refusal merely proves that he was not hypnotized deeply enough. Phrased in this manner, this position is equally untestable. Any empirical data which indicate that the subject will carry out antisocial or self-destructive behavior are accepted as proof, while any data to the contrary are by definition dismissed. (p. 140)

Without considering whether truth might lie in the middle, between those two extremes, Orne concluded that reviewing the existing literature did not solve the question.

Guidelines for Investigative Hypnosis

In the years after he published his own "Antisocial..." article, Orne became a dominant influence on U.S. forensic hypnosis. His public statements, in general, act to undermine the claim of any person reporting unethical hypnosis, and strengthen the legal untouchability of hypnotizers.

> ...the antisocial aspect of this question cannot be addressed experimentally...no evidence is available to indicate that hypnosis increases the behavioral control of the hypnotist over that already present prior to its induction. Certainly, the popular view which holds that hypnosis is able to exert a unique form of control over the hypnotized individual, which can compel him to carry out otherwise repugnant actions, must be rejected. (Orne, 1972, p. 101)

Orne's myths concerning the inability of hypnosis to cause anything unpleasant or undesirable are now quoted in psychology texts and by other "experts." In 1978, he wrote a brief for the U.S. Supreme Court in which he stated that any hypnosis of a witness before a trial should follow set guidelines. (Orne, 1979) He argued that it is inadvisable to hypnotize defendants who have a great deal at stake. (He would, I suppose, have advised Dr. Reiter not to hypnotize Palle Hardwick.)

Orne's guidelines for investigative hypnosis are quoted both in Udolf and in Lawrence and Perry (pp. 279-385). The latter laud Orne's guidelines as > ...the most comprehensive attempt to balance the needs of an investigative agency, the rights of a potential defendant, and the psychological welfare of a victim of crime who has become a candidate for pretrial hypnosis. (Ibid., p. 357)

Orne's guidelines, however, are for the hypnotizing of a witness to a crime. The existence of a victim of hypnosis itself is not included in the guidelines, because it supposedly is not possible. Orne's guidelines are said to guard particularly against the possibility of witness confabulation. The method of preventing confabulation is not Reiter's system of "you'll choke on it if you tell a lie." Instead, filming every moment of interaction between a hypnotist and subject is considered a good safeguard. Then people later can argue over "the degree to which inadvertent cueing [leading questions]...may have occurred" (Ibid., p. 357) rather than preventing confabulation.

The guidelines cover qualifications of the hypnotist ("qualified mental health professional" with training both in hypnosis and forensics), insistence on complete videotape recordings of all contact between hypnotist and subject (both persons in the picture), limitations on those present (only hypnotist and subject allowed!), and prehypnosis evaluation (a "detailed narrative description of the facts as the subject remembers them").

Orne also specified "appropriate hypnotic induction and memory retrieval techniques": induction by "one of the standard methods" (this rule makes it harder for a survivor of unethical hypnosis who is sealed against any "standard" induction); no direct questioning (direct questioning may help drag out facts over hypnotic inhibitions and could also reveal significant blocking pauses and agitation caused by approaching forbidden data); constant filming (technically difficult when only two people are present); and a prior mental examination of the subject (symptoms of mental illness can be suggested under hypnosis).

Orne, along with Loftus and Laurence, has contributed mightily to modern legal prejudices against, what Lawrence disparagingly terms as, "common sense knowledge" about the possibility of criminal hypnosis. Orne and others (1984) reported that hypnotization of witnesses either did not improve their recall, or actually contaminated their memories with unconsciously adopted hints from the investigator/hypnotist.

Orne also stresses that hypnosis should only be used to generate leads which can then be pursued to see if they can be fully and independently verified (Orne, 1979). That is good advice in a case where confabulation is a possibility—and confabulation is always a possibility. But the "only" is a problem. In a case of criminal hypnosis, which is also a possibility, independent verification of leads can support the general picture which emerges under rehypnotization.

As a final evaluation of Orne, compare the facts of the cases of Z, Mrs. E., and Palle with his pronouncements on them. He called Dr. Kroener's report of Z's case "the most convincing of the three reported in the criminal literature" (1962, p. 175). He was particularly impressed by the arm-shooting:

> This single incident is far more impressive than the fact that he was willing to perform acts which are legally antisocial but which are frequently considered to be relatively innocuous...The Kroener case...seems to provide strong supportive evidence that, in some instances at least, social control can be sufficiently increased in hyp- > nosis to cause the subject to commit self-destructive behavior which he could not have been persuaded to undertake without the use of hypnosis." (Ibid.)

After admitting that much, however, Orne evaded the logical conclusion that criminal hypnosis can exist: "Unfortunately, because of the problems in establishing the true nature of the events, no definitive position can be taken." (Ibid., p. 176)

Of Mrs. E.'s case, he said:

> ...a quasi-therapeutic relationship existed between the subject and the hypnotist, and thus it is not too surprising that the subject was willing to pay the hypnotist...it certainly is not too unusual a crime for a woman and her lover to plot the demise of the husband. There are only the woman's statements that attempts on her husband's life resulted from posthypnotic suggestions. No proof exists that such suggestions were ever made. (p. 172)

He granted that Palle's case was > ...thoroughly studied by Reiter...This case satisfies the criterion of serious antisocial behavior to the benefit of the hypnotist; however, a long history of extremely close personal association preceded this occurrence. (Ibid.)

Orne stated that the real reason Palle Hardwick robbed and murdered was a "mutual psychosis" between Palle and Nielsen with > ...strong homosexual overtones...While hypnosis played some role in this case, it is by no means clear whether it accounted for the behavior of the subject or was, in fact, quite incidental to it. (Ibid.)

No proof would be good enough for Dr. Orne. He would always try to deny its validity. The bottom line is: he does not accept that a hypnotist can be culpable. And he does not promote any procedure which might support the effort of a victim of criminal hypnosis to get free and to obtain justice.

Musings

Behaviorist philosopher, Perry London, said that information control is the basis of mind control, individual or group. When the phony research of Erickson, the false conclusions of Barber and the "skeptics," and the skewed judicial concepts of Orne are taught and cited, public information, and therefore public opinion, has been controlled.

They say, "Hypnosis does not exist." Or they say, "We're not doing hypnosis. This is something else, and it's wonderful, and ineffable, and totally harmless, and mysteriously helpful." Saying that calms the public's fear, increases volunteering, increases subjects' susceptibility. This is the first stage of induction.

Criminal Hypnosis Is Possible: Wells and Brenman, Salter and Bowers, and Young

☑ Wells and Brenman

☑ Salter and Bowers

☑ Young

> ...the whole point as to the essential nature of hypnosis is missed unless the fact is recognized that even so extreme a phenomenon as real crime against the will of the fully forewarned subject can be produced by means of it.
>
> Wells, "Experiments in the Hypnotic Production of Crime," pp. 100-101

Wells and Brenman

R. W. Wells

During and after World War II, Dr. Raymond Wesley Wells researched hypnotic automatism at Syracuse University. He established that the posthypnotic induction cue was a critical element in exploitation. He pioneered the technique of waking hypnosis. One of his hypnotic subjects was "a young man of strong convictions, not suggestible in everyday life, not credulous or gullible." By hypnotic suggestions, Wells made that young man believe himself to be a poor hypnotic subject, although Wells had actually developed him into a very susceptible one. The subject, being amnesic for his training sessions, also believed that he had not been worked on individually by Wells. (Ibid., p. 83)

Wells was a specialist on criminal hypnosis. He provided a list of safety measures for persons planning to be hypnotized:

Ö Do not submit except for a serious purpose.

Ö Choose a “competent and honorable” hypnotist.

Ö Have a “reliable [and non-hypnotizable!] third person...present as a witness at every occasion of hypnotizing.

Wells gave all his subjects a suggestion that nobody could hypnotize them without their prior written permission given in a fully conscious and responsible state.[1]

Margaret Brenman

Brenman began researching “antisocial” hypnosis as a student assistant to Wells during World War II. Her first article described experiments on six female hypnotic subjects:

> When brought out of the trance state, you will have complete amnesia not only for today’s hypnotic work but for ever having been an individual [hypnotic] subject; although you will remember having taken part in the group-experiment in class, you will recall falsely having been in the poorest quartile...and will good-naturedly accept as banter any suggestion on the part of your classmates that you are a good hypnotic subject. (Brenman, 1942, pp. 50-51)

The subjects carried out all Brenman’s hypnotic instructions, exactly as given.

Brenman agreed with Erickson that complete amnesia was a key to obtaining results that would not normally be possible. In one experiment, she suggested to a hypnotized girl the hallucination of being home alone in bed. She suggested that the subject was “alone in bed” and having the fantasy which she normally had at bedtime.

The subject then described to Brenman a fantasy that focused on a certain young man and involved both desire and guilt feelings. Brenman suggested posthypnotic amnesia to the subject, woke the girl from her hypnotic trance, and asked about her sex life. The girl refused to give any information of the type she had just revealed under hypnosis. (Brenman said this experiment had proved the value of hypnosis in interrogation.)

In another experiment, Brenman induced a series of girls, by hypnotic suggestion, to take a dollar bill imagining it was their own, thus “stealing” it. Three days after the first part of the experiment in which the girls were caused to “steal,” Brenman proceeded with the second half of the experiment. She expected each subject, after learning the truth, to feel guilt and repay her the dollar. The first two, Misses A and B, when told they had been caused to steal a dollar by means of hypnosis, behaved as Brenman had expected. Each acted guilty and gave the experimenter a dollar in repayment, although they had already spent the dollar which they had been hypnotically induced to think was their own. But Miss C, my favorite, reacted differently.

> BRENMAN: Were you ever worked on individually in hypnosis?
>
> MISS C: No, it didn’t work at all well...I was in the lowest quartile.
>
> BRENMAN: Do you know whether it’s possible to get people to perform criminal acts in hypnosis?
>
> MISS C: It might work with some but not with me.
>
> BRENMAN: Even a minor crime?
>
> MISS C: I hardly think so.
>
> BRENMAN: Have you ever known me to lie to you?
>
> MISS C: Never. [Her unconscious could have supplemented, “except when I was hypnotized.”]
>
> BRENMAN: Well, I’m telling you that you did steal a dollar while in a hypnotic state several days ago.
>
> MISS C (laughing spontaneously): But how absurd; I’m not even hypnotizable.
>
> BRENMAN: Would you think it possible to produce an amnesia for a crime committed in a hypnotic state?
>
> MISS C: Theoretically, yes.
>
> BRENMAN: Then perhaps you can believe me.
>
> MISS C: If this is true, I will not accept any responsibility for it. (Ibid.)

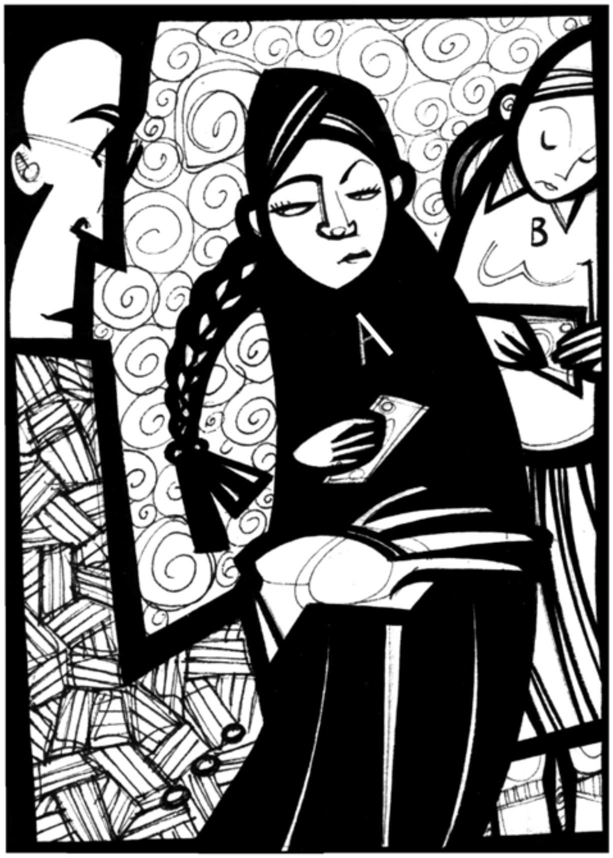
---

1. Then he broke his own rule for the purpose of experimentation, attempting to induct persons who were resisting. He overcame the resistance of all except a Methodist minister.

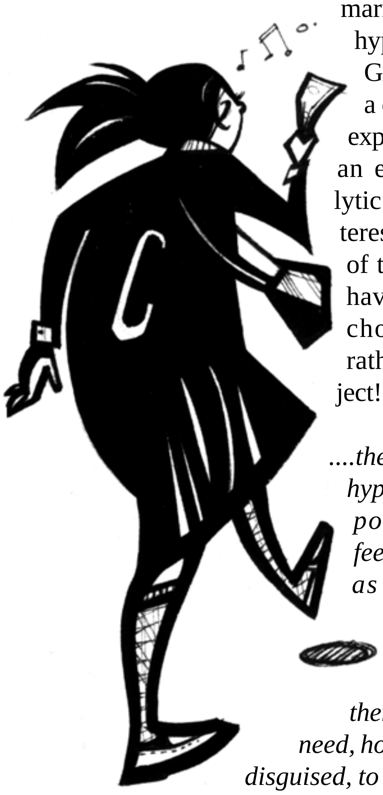
Brenman then told Miss C to try as hard as she could not to be hypnotized. C made clear that she certainly would do that. Brenman gave C the induction cue, and "...despite this exercise of 'will power' she went into a good trance immediately." (Ibid., p. 53) Brenman gave, the now hypnotized, Miss C suggestions that removed her amnesia. Then she knew the truth of all that had happened. However, Miss C still refused moral responsibility for what had happened. She would not give Brenman and Wells back the dollar. Instead, C went off gaily on her school holiday.



That really upset Wells. He and Brenman had defined the experiment that, if the subject felt guilty and repaid afterwards, it proved the subject really was a moral person. Wells and Brenman, therefore, were of the opinion that Misses A and B had proved false the old dogma that a moral person cannot be made to do an immoral thing by means of hypnosis. But Miss C had refused to feel guilt and had not repaid the dollar. Wells later solved the dilemma by writing that he had discovered that C actually was a person of low character and immoral attitudes, with no conscience in financial matters—unsuitable for the experiment.

God forbid you should either cost the hypnotist a buck or skew the anticipated experimental results. I am on Miss C's side. Brenman succeeded in making her think she was not hypnotizable when she was, gave her amnesia for a segment of her life, and manipulated her like a human puppet. Miss C was set up, lied to under hypnosis, conditioned for future involuntary induction, deceived into taking the dollar, and allowed to keep it long enough to spend it. Then, they wanted her to behave ethically? She was ethical. Her sense of justice came into action. Subjects A and B were utterly duped. They not only accepted all the hypnotic suggestions, they also accepted an additional implied suggestion, in waking state, that they should feel guilty and repay. Miss C was made of tougher stuff.

After Margaret Brenman earned her Ph.D. at Syracuse, she did similar research at the Menninger Clinic. She married another experimental hypnotist, named Merton M. Gill. Brenman and Gill made a career of joint research in experimental hypnotism, with an emphasis in psychoanalytic hypnosis. Their most interesting publication was one of the very few surveys that have ever studied the psychology of the hypnotist rather than that of the subject!



....the process of inducing hypnosis touches off important and intense feeling in the hypnotist as well as in the subject...most of our responding hypnotists recognize in themselves an important need, however well or poorly disguised, to control other human beings....One of our respondents, a particularly honest and self-searching psychoanalyst, says: "I gave up hypnosis as a regular procedure...because I am aware of the fact that...my decision to hypnotize a man was motivated ultimately...by some almost sadistic impulse to dominate him and with the female, the comparable situation manifested itself in the form of an erotic impulse."

Another...who stresses as one of the infantile components of the wish to hypnotize the need for a magical omnipotence, adds rather wryly: "...such motives undoubtedly play an important role in the initial decision to become a physician at all, and certainly in the specialty choice of psychiatry. The only trouble is that with the use of hypnosis this all becomes so naked." (Brenman and Gill, Hypnosis and Related States, pp. 91-98)

Salter and Bowers

When the bell rings the appropriately trained dog salivates. He cannot help it.
Salter, What Is Hypnosis?, pp. 24-25

Salter

Andrew Salter was a prominent researcher who applied the theory of conditioned reflexes to hypnosis, developed the desensitization technique, and fought T.X. Barber's nonsense theories. Salter, the father of hypnotic conditioning theory, argued against Barber's theory of cognitive expectancy for years. Salter said that cognitive expectancy could not explain why posthypnotic suggestions for the distant future worked. Salter said, "We can do in the waking state almost anything that can be done in the hypnotic state—almost everything, but not quite. And that is all the difference."

Salter summed up his concept of hypnosis as a conditioned reflex phenomenon as follows:

> Words, spoken by the therapist, travel along appropriate nerve tracts in the person under treatment, and produce chemical modifications in his nervous system. These changes are associated with behavior changes...We are not especially concerned with giving the individual stratified knowledge of his past—called "probing." What concerns us is giving him reflex knowledge of his future—called "habits." (Salter, 1949, p. 316)

He compared a hypnotic subject to Pavlov's dog. The more effectively conditioned a person is, Salter declared, the less effective control he has over his own behavior. Human beings, however, can be far more complexly programmed than dogs, because humans respond with incredible specificity and sensitivity to words. Words stimulate conditioned responses in humans.

Salter once challenged Barber to select a random group of one-hundred males, 21 to 25 years old.

> I would pick three subjects from this group and subject them to a week's worth of hypnotic training in which they would be instructed to shoot Barber (much as in The Manchurian Candidate, a book Condon has credited me with inspiring). I would then give Barber one week during which he could exhort these subjects as much as he wanted in a waking state. If, in thirty days thereafter, one of my subjects did not try to kill Barber, he could consider his theories of hypnosis verified. I would not be interested in doing this experiment without a waiver from Barber and from all of the appropriate legal jurisdictions. (Salter, What Is Hypnosis, pp. 94-5)

Barber did not accept Salter's challenge.

Years later, I see that Salter is not cited in the textbooks. Barber is. Barber is preached, but Salter is practiced. Student therapists are now taught, "We don't know what it is, but it helps." They are taught just enough about hypnosis to do their job: narrow clinical applications involved in medicine or dentistry, psychiatry or hypnotherapy—or sales, stress management, pain management, advertising, etc. They learn what they have to know about hypnosis (or whatever else it is being called). Not a bit more. The people who know more have classified that information: SECRET, DON'T TELL.

Bowers

Kenneth S. Bowers, like Salter, specifically took on T. X. Barber. In Hypnosis for the Seriously Curious (1976), Bowers debunked Barber's oft cited "White Christmas" and "lap cat" experiment. Barber had got nonhypnotized people to claim they were hallucinating the hearing of "White Christmas" or hallucinating the sight of a cat in their lap. They did that because Barber's words ("This time I want you to really try") created a strong pressure to claim they did, even if they did not—or to drop into trance and really hallucinate the sound or sight.

Bowers repeated Barber's experiment exactly, except he added one line to the script. Bowers told each subject that she must tell the truth to prevent the entire experiment from being worthless. After hearing that, even though the women were told to "really try" this time, far fewer claimed that they heard the music or saw the cat in their lap. (Bowers, "The Effect of Demands for Honesty on Reports of Visual and Auditory Hallucinations," 1967)

Bowers took on another of Barber's deceptive oversimplifications. A hypnotized person can be given suggestions to make him or her deaf. If then asked, "Can you hear me?" some subjects reply, "No, I can't." Barber said that proves they are faking it. Bowers said: No, that behavior is like that of the person given a negative hallucination that the chair is "gone." If told to walk around the room, the hypnotized person will avoid bumping into the chair. One part of the subject's mind knows the chair is really there and avoids bumping into it. But the subject is not consciously aware of the existence and placement of the chair.

In 1989, Bowers argued that certain phenomena are unique to hypnosis, that hypnosis is a special state of consciousness, and that surgery under hypnotic anesthesia, strong hallucinations, and suggested cures of physical problems are strong evidence of its uniqueness.

Young

From a hurried review of the literature it appears that there are no theoretical obstacles to the possibility of antisocial uses of hypnosis. On the contrary, the cumulative effect of the reported results is so great as to convince one that antisocial actions are not more...difficult to induce—than are many of the actions which have been carried out by subjects...In fact, if a skillful hypnotist should use such techniques as those just mentioned and should go all out to induce antisocial results, theoretically it is very likely he would succeed. Additional strong presumptive proof lies in the subject-hypnotist relationship of dominance submission which makes possible...the falsification of the subject's internal and external world...

- Young, 1952, p. 398

Dr. Paul Campbell Young worked for the Veterans Administration during World War II, then was on the faculty of Louisiana State University's Psychology Department. He was a pioneer researcher in experimental hypnosis. LeCron credits him with being first to use the controlled experiment.

In 1940, Young published a study on capacity regression. He gave IQ tests to hypnotized adults who had been regressed, by suggestion, to the age of three. His subjects' test score averages came out closer to age six than to age three. Those results caused him to doubt the validity of regression. Like Doctors Mayer and Reiter, Young also started out convinced that a hypnotic subject cannot be made to do anything against his conscious will.

Antisocial Uses of Hypnosis

Like Mayer and Reiter, Young later did an about-face on the issue. By 1952, Young listed capacity regression as real, and also as a potential element in a conditioning process leading to exploitative hypnosis.

I know what changed the minds of Mayer and Reiter on this issue: the cases of Mrs. E. and Palle. I do not know what caused Young's dramatic reversal between 1941 and 1948. His 1952 article, "Antisocial Uses of Hypnosis," is one of the most eloquent, detailed, forceful, and confident statements in print about the potential for misuse of hypnotism. Young bluntly insisted that hypnotism can be used unethically and abusively, and that a subject can be made to act against his conscious will. "The harm may be done to oneself or to others...An act is harmful or antisocial or dangerous if damage is done or danger is run." ("Antisocial Uses of Hypnosis, p. 376)

Young's article was published in Experimental Hypnosis, an anthology edited by LeCron and sponsored by the military. He reviewed and critiqued previous relevant experiments and writings by other experimental hypnotists. He listed all the most important articles and books on the subject, up to 1948, in his bibliography. He wrote pages refuting M.H. Erickson's "antisocial" experiment. He disposed of Orne's argument, that a long-term relationship disproves unethical hypnosis. He crushed Barber and Sarbin's argument, that unethical hypnosis only exists because of the subject's supposed uncanny ability to perceive what the hypnotist wants, and the subject's eagerness to play that role.

Techniques of Criminal Hypnosis

Young listed eighteen hypnotic techniques that would facilitate "divergent applications" of hypnosis. He quoted published work of one, or more, prominent research hypnotists as his source for each method. He declared that he had listed "only a tithe of what could have been brought forward." Here follow the essentials of that list:

1) Powerful and Primitive Unconscious—Young quoted Fisher: "Powerful and primitive unconscious forces...come to light in the hypnotic trance." The operator-controlled trance gives the hypnotist direct access to that potential of primitive, powerful primary process, drive-related potential in the unconscious.

2) Omnipotence by Identification—He quoted Schilder and Kauders: "For the hypnotized...he [the hypnotist] is the great magician, who alone is capable, by his wish and will, to produce creative changes in the universe..." (Hypnosis) The subject's unconscious is in awe of the operator's potential power over it. The "magic" is real (and potentially very evil) to the personal, interior mental universe of the conditioned hypnotic subject.

3) Narcohypnotic Induction—Young quoted Lindner, a psychiatrist who did narcohypnotic inductions, and conducted intensive conditioning under the drug-induced trance. Lindner called his process hypnoanalysis: "Hypnoanalysis is equivalent to a surgical removal of barriers and hazards; it pierces the psychic substrate and raises the repressed to the level of awareness." (Rebel Without a Cause) That "surgical removal of barriers" can be used in hypnotherapy to cure people, or in rehypnosis to uncover criminal hypnosis. It can also be used to overcome resistance barriers in the process of implanting exploitative conditioning.

4) Minimizing Outside Reality, Changes in Thought Mode—For this factor, Young quoted from a 1947 article by Brenman, Gill, and Hacker: "A minimization of outside reality and...changes...in modes of thought..." Hypnotic trance does minimize outside reality. It changes "modes of thought" in part by derailing the conscious (critical, evaluating) mind and displacing it with the hypnotist's will.

5) Limiting of Subject's Internal Input—Young quoted Leuba (1946) on the power of hypnosis to [illegible] limitation of the spontaneous mental life of [illegible]ject and the consequent limitation of attention to the stimuli provided by the experimenter."

Young's point 4) was that hypnosis can eclipse the subject's outside reality. Point 5 was that hypnosis can be used to "limit" the subject's spontaneous mental world. It limits the mind to thinking what it is permitted to think. (In some cases, however, the subject's unconscious has rebelled and prevailed.)

In trance, the thinking is being done by a subsystem without input from the executive monitor (conscious mind). The subsystem can confuse imagination with reality, and the error will not be corrected because only the conscious mind can tell the difference.

6) Suggested Hallucination—Young cites M. H. Erickson's 1939 success in causing hypnotic subjects to hallucinate colorblindness—so real that subjects "had the correct (hallucinated) afterimages."

7) Suggested Unbearable Pain—Young cited the research of Wells on the operator's ability to cause "hallucinations of unbearable pain." Mrs. E. was, in part, manipulated by this technique.

8) Identification of Hypnotist with Parent—Young cited R. W. White's 1941 article, "An Analysis of Motivation in Hypnosis," on infantile motivations and unsatisfied needs as causes of hypnotic obedience: "Love, passive compliance, and the wish to participate in omnipotence."

9) Selective Amnesias—Young cited M. H. Erickson research again (“Hypnotic Techniques..., 1945): “Hypnosis offers an opportunity to control and direct thinking, to select or exclude memories and ideas...”

10) Focus and Dissociation—Young cited M. H. Erickson, this time on the trance phenomenon of dissociation and focus on the operator: rapport:

> ...a condition in which the subject responds to the hypnotist and is...instructed by the hypnotist...a concentration of the subject’s attention upon...the hypnotist and those things which the hypnotist wishes included in the situation, and it has the effect of dissociating the subject from other things. (“Hypnosis in Medicine”)

11) Artificially-Induced Complex—Young cited Wolberg’s description of a patient in whom an artificial complex had been implanted:

> He complained of...dizziness, ...took two or three steps then fell backward remarking that he felt so faint that he could hardly walk. His face was blanched and when his pulse was taken it was found to be rapid and thready...cold perspiration...began to shiver...generalized muscular tremors...agitated, and complained of such great physical distress that I found it necessary to rehypnotize him and remove the conflict.

12) Training for Automatism—Young quoted Lindner’s rule that hypnotic training should be continued until “posthypnotic suggestions are carried through in a fashion that leaves no doubt of the mastery of the situation by the hypnotist.” (Rebel Without a Cause)

13) Reorganization of Psychic Life—Young also cited M.H. Erickson on the array of devices a hypnotist can use to influence a subject, “reorganizing his psychic life.” Erickson had listed “recovery of memories, development of amnesias, identifications and anesthesias, the causing of dreams, emotional conflicts, hallucinations, disorientations...” Young also cited R. W. White (“Preface...”) on the profound changes possible in a person’s personality (and therefore behavior) by means of hypnosis.

14) Capacity Regression—In a remarkable turnaround from his original research conclusion on capacity regressions, Young cited the research of M. H. Erickson, Lindner, Watkins, Wolberg, etc., on capacity regression. He concluded it can be real, and can be a significant potential factor in exploitative hypnosis.

15) Sidelining the Conscious Mind—Young cited Brenman and Knight on “circumvention of the ego resistances,” the inhibition of the subject’s conscious mind. Young called this sidelining of the conscious mind “the common factor in divergent applications of hypnosis”!

16) Suggested Neurotic and Psychotic States—Young here pointed out the “compulsory nature of hypnotic phenomena,” meaning automatism. He cited Wolberg: “In subjects capable of deep hypnotic states, it is possible to produce obsessive ideas, compulsions, phobias, ideas of reference, persecutory trends, grandiose ideas, depressive and nihilistic delusions, ideas of unreality, hypochondriacal ideas...” for this item. The hypnotic subject unconsciously incorporates wishes and attitudes of the hypnotist, like a child incorporates parental rules and views. Just as each adult has attitudes absorbed in childhood from their parents still influencing them, so each hypnotic subject acquires unconscious parameters and a role model from the hypnotist too. Kubie and Margolin described this implanting of a foreign superego, the mental parasitization of hypnoprogramming, and how the hypnotist's words become a part of the subject's mind:

17) Assumption of Another’s Identity—Young cited M.H. Erickson’s “experiments on transidentification”

> ...the hypnotist...becomes something which the subject carries around inside of him—a secret 'will,' or purpose—a 'still, small voice of conscience'—an unconscious component of the new personality which has emerged. In this phase, the thread by which the subject remains tied to the hypnotist becomes hidden. He is led by it, but he is not aware of it, and he scotomatizes [rationalizes] all experiences which might force it upon his attention...Yet just as it is never the actual parent but an image of the parent, so it is not the hypnotist, himself, but a complex image of the hypnotist which becomes part of the subject..the buried (incorporated) image of the hypnotist becomes an experimentally induced superego figure....with the result that to the subject the words of the hypnotist become indistinguishable from his own thoughts. (Kubie and Margolin, "The Process of Hypnotism and the Nature of the Hypnotic State")

18) Gradual Conditioning—Modern behaviorist researchers call it shaping. The hypnotic techniques are applied in "a progressive, mutually supporting pattern," so that a subject gradually comes to accept suggestions which, if made earlier, certainly would have been rejected. Thus, "a complex is so elaborated into the subject's real experiences that it becomes an integral part of him." Young cited himself for this one. (1952, pp. 391-2)

Conclusion

Young retorted to "those who think hypnosis powerful only for good" that, if it can be a powerful psychological tool for good, the logic is inescapable that "in skilled but unworthy hands...[it] might become an instrument of danger." (Ibid., p. 407) He warned that hypnosis must be viewed (like all other technologies) as capable of use for either good or evil purposes.

For two hundred years, on both sides of the Atlantic, experimental hypnotists vied with each other to see what percentage of subjects could, by means of hypnosis, be induced to commit a crime. There is an even more important research question that has never been examined, and which begs for an answer. That question is: What percentage of hypnotists, believing themselves to be secure against any possible disagreeable consequences, would commit unethical hypnosis? Seduced onward by the lure of total power, in total secrecy, over another human being, how deep into moral abasement would a typical hypnotist go? Would certain government agencies also find the idea of total power, in total secrecy, alluring?

How to Identify a Victim of Unethical Hypnosis

1. Report from Relatives or Other Observers

☑

2. Self Report

☑

3. Revealing Induction Phenomena

☑

4. Evidence from Projective Testing

☑

5. Inhibition, Anxiety, or Somatic Reaction to "H" Topic

☑

6. Symptoms of Repression

☑

7. Social Isolation

☑

8. Memories: Absent, Inadequate, Or Too Perfect

☑

9. "Weakness" During, Fear of Control After

☑

10. Dream Clues

☑

The Manchurian Candidate: A Novel

> No discussion of the social implications of hypnosis would be complete without a reference to the antisocial implications. A considerable amount of research has been done in this field and we feel that the dangers of hypnosis are, in certain situations, very real.
>
> Wright, 1962, p. 233

Is someone you know a victim of unethical hypnosis? Have you seen a person in trance, or in the posthypnotic trance that occurs while carrying out a suggested posthypnotic act? If that person has been trained to do waking hypnosis, you may find it difficult to recognize his trance state—unless you know the observable characteristics of that state (listed under item 2). A deeply-hypnotized person can easily discern if another person is also in that state. An intuitive person may be able to sense somebody else's level of consciousness.

Usually, however, you will encounter the unknowing subject in his waking state. You will talk to his cover personality rather than to an unconscious isolate. But repression cannot make traumatic unconscious memories and associated emotions completely go away. The repressed material continues to play a part in the subject's unconscious mental life. When trauma is buried in the unconscious, it still exerts energy from that hiding place. A victim of abusive hypnosis experiences pressure from the unconscious to find safety and accomplish self-healing and release of inner stress by pushing out into the open some of that traumatic material.

Here is a list of known characteristics of other survivors of unethical hypnosis.[1] The more matches, the higher the probability that another situation of unethical hypnosis exists. A person who has suffered severe abuse in the amnesic hypnotic state will have more matches than an unknowing hypnotic subject who has been treated kindly while in trance.

---

[1] The CIA targeted creation of a list of clues to identify an unknowing hypnoprogrammed person as one of their research goals back in the 1950s. They undoubtedly know much that would be of help to civilian police agencies and therapists struggling to resolve questions in this area. But the reason for their research was not to identify, free, and heal victims of predatory hypnotists. It was to identify hypnoprogrammed "enemy" agents in order to eliminate the problem, or to reprogram them to serve an additional master, the CIA.

1. Report from Relatives or Other Observers

It is very difficult to identify a hypnoprogrammed, mind-controlled person, if he does not consciously know that fact about himself. In some cases, however, the subject's parents, friends, spouse, or medical examiners have recognized and reported evidence of the hypnotic exploitation. Palle's father suspected Nielsen had "some kind of hold" over his son. Other prisoners, and his wife, observed and reported Nielsen's hypnotic control over Palle to the police. Unfortunately, they did not report that until after the murder/robbery. Psychiatrists who examined Palle noticed that the prisoner's unreasoned, mechanical repetitions, declaring that he alone had committed the crime, sounded like hypnoprogramming being produced on cue.

Mrs. E's husband figured out what was going on, identified his wife's problem as hypnotic predation by an unknown "doctor," and asked the police for help. John Nebel began to understand that his wife's trance-talking was revealing a history of criminal hypnosis, so he bought a tape recorder and began to tape those conversations. It was the victim's husband, in one of Kline's reported cases of sexual predation by means of hypnosis, who also tape recorded, and then ended, the abuse.

The Posthypnotic Trance

It would be especially helpful to recognize behavior carried out in a state of posthypnotic trance.

> ...the posthypnotic response consists of the spontaneous and invariable development, as an integral part of the performance of the suggested posthypnotic act, of a self-limited, usually brief, hypnotic trance...This trance is usually of brief duration, occurs in direct relation to the performance of the posthypnotic act, and apparently constitutes an essential part of the process of response to and execution of the posthypnotic command...[it] requires for its appearance neither suggestion nor instruction... [it] *develops at the moment of initiation of the posthypnotic act, and persists usually for only a moment or two...(M. H. Erickson, "The Nature of Post-Hypnotic Behavior")

Posthypnotic Trance Proves Existence of Previous Trance—Erickson stated in the same article that "the spontaneous posthypnotic trance constitutes a reliable indicator of the validity of the original trance..." Posthypnotic behavior, if it can be firmly identified as such, proves the existence of a previous hypnotic trance in which the subject was given the original suggestion.

Posthypnotic Trance Defines Nature of Previous Trance—Erickson also said that "careful observation will often disclose an absolute continuance in the spontaneous posthypnotic trance of the behavior patterns belonging actually to the original trance state." Accordingly, the way the subject felt during her "flight" to the door was a continuance of the way she felt during the original trance in which the posthypnotic suggestion was given: the sense of being in a very deep trance; her body mechanically obeying another person's will; her conscious self being violently cast aside into a condition of irrelevance, helplessly observing the hypnotic predation.

How to Identify a Posthypnotic Trance—Erickson listed clues by which an observer could identify the moment of continuation trance associated with carrying out a posthypnotic suggestion:.

> A slight pause in the subject's immediate activity, a facial expression of distraction and detachment, a peculiar glassiness of the eyes with a dilatation of the pupils and a failure to focus...a fixity and narrowing of attention, an intentness of purpose, a marked loss of contact with the general environment, and an unresponsiveness to any external stimulus until the posthypnotic act is either in progress or has been completed...[note the] intent, rigid, and almost compulsive nature of his behavior, and his state of absorption and general unresponsiveness until he has reoriented himself to the immediate situation...a brief interval of confusion and disorientation from which the subject quickly recovers by renewed and close attention to the immediate situation. ("The Nature of Post-Hypnotic Behavior")

Slander, Lies, and "Paranoia"

Slander—Slander may appear in the form of direct accusations, statements to media, or hints dropped into the gossip pool concerning (unfounded) accusations of child abuse, homosexuality, psychosis, criminal acts, "religious fanaticism," "white supremacist" attitudes, and so on. The power of slander is well understood by propagandists. An unethical hypnotist seldom victimizes only one person. If one, of a cluster of subjects, has escaped and is trying to tell, the hypnotist may manipulate his other subjects to generate slander and weaken the escapee's credibility.

Lies—Or the predatory hypnotist may seek (without the use of hypnosis) covertly to contrive ruinous testimony from medical persons, former friends, or other potential "references" (employers, employees, or landlords). This would prevent, confuse, or impede an investigation. For example, when Palle's wife, Bente, began to suspect their involvement in robbery, Nielsen used his hypnotic control of Palle to create medical "evidence" that Palle's suspicious wife was mentally unstable and inclined to "delusions."

Paranoia—Unethical hypnosis—a condition which is not medically admitted to exist—can easily be misdiagnosed as paranoia. Fried and Agassi sum up the basic symptoms of paranoia:

☐ "Paranoia is, by definition, a quirk of the intellectual apparatus, a logical delusion." (p. 2)

☐ There are persecutory delusions.

☐ There are illusions of grandeur.

☐ The paranoid is usually very intelligent.

☐ The logical delusion is unshakeable, permanent.

☐ Except for the logical delusion, "clarity and order of thinking, willing, and action, are completely preserved..."

☐ The logical delusion "effects a deep seated change of the total outlook on life and a derangement of standpoint towards the surrounding world." The result can be a private world, a private language, and rejection of the publicly accepted view where it conflicts.

☐ The person "...will not be classed as paranoic as long as...he remains aware of the privacy of his private views and of the conflict they have with the public views..." (p. 72-3) and does not obtrude his deviant belief into conflict with the public's general belief.

☐ Paranoia is "accompanied by another symptom, namely the strong denial of any major symptom and any mental illness whatsoever...the patient exhibits no hallucinations and no bizarre behavior..." (p. 79)

According to the above standard, which is taught to psychiatry students, any naturally intelligent person who happens to be the first to realize some disagreeable truth, who insists on publicly proclaiming that truth as fact, and who can be accused of some "delusions of grandeur" and notions of "persecution," could be diagnosed as paranoid—if the psychiatrist happens not to accept the particular truth the subject is proclaiming. Fried and Agassi sum it up:

> The signs of paranoia...are three: first, the patient shows only incidental symptoms while denying his being mentally ill altogether...second, he is fairly normal otherwise...third, he has an idee fixe*...a systematic chronic delusion....*

If the fixed idea is a delusion, the patient is paranoid. If it is true, the patient is a mentally healthy person. The doctor gets to decide.

> ...psychiatry has never been able to define precisely what is normal (or abnormal) behavior, and thus it inevitably ends up enforcing conformity to whatever the current community and government standards happen to be... (William Arnold, p. 256)

If psychiatrists do not recognize the possibility of unethical hypnosis, then persons who ask for help with a situation of unethical hypnosis risk being diagnosed as paranoid.

In the Soviet Union, political dissenters who were incarcerated in mental hospitals were most frequently diagnosed as having paranoid delusions. They had “poor adaptation to the social environment” and “overvalued their own importance.” They had “grandiose ideas of reforming the world.” Soviet psychiatry defined delusions as “false beliefs held onto with unshakable tenacity.” If a Soviet citizen believed he was being persecuted for his beliefs, that was considered a delusion with “paranoid features.” A. P. Filatova, a Soviet psychiatrist, declared, “No normal person can be opposed to the Worker’s and Peasant’s State.”

The thousands of political “paranoids” who were diagnosed, incarcerated, and drugged in Soviet mental hospitals had an unshakeable “delusion” that it was possible for elections to be real instead of rigged, that free enterprise would work better for the Russian economy than central planning, and that their country would be better off if the KGB were shut down and the press given freedom. Soviet psychiatry considered that particular set of delusions “progressive” and resistant to cure. Persons with that delusion were often forced (or tricked) into imprisonment in mental hospitals, then given the choice of renouncing their delusional views or remaining confined. Even if they renounced, however, they remained socially branded as “mentally ill,” and lost driving licenses, jobs, and opportunities for more schooling.

A heavily-conditioned hypnotic subject can be caused to display any set of neurotic or psychotic symptoms the hypnotist chooses to suggest.

> In many cases the individuals I interviewed believed their lives or sanity would be in danger if their names were made public. (Bowart, p. 25)

Why did Walter Bowart’s military hypnoprogrammed interviewees fear their sanity would be in danger? They feared for their sanity because they were all highly-trained hypnotic subjects. One easy way to destroy credibility, if a forced hypnotic subject tries to reveal the truth, is the use of hypnotic suggestions to cause disordered thinking or problem behavior. The suggestions may even be set up systematically to compel the subject to mimic the array of symptoms associated with a specific mental illness.

On the other hand, a person who declares she is being hypnotized and forced to do things, who knows exactly what she is being made to do that she does not want to do, and who can describe in detail a hypnosis event that supposedly happened an hour ago, may be truly paranoid. A genuine victim of unethical hypnosis usually has amnesia for that type of data and struggles to assemble facts from bits of evidence gleaned in the waking state.

☞ If one person believes something weird, such as that Martians are attacking, it is paranoia. However, if a group of people adhere to that weird notion, it is no longer paranoia, and they are a cult. If a majority of people adopt that idea, it becomes normal. And that’s strange.

2. Self Report

Some subjects, themselves, have figured out they were victims of a hypnotist based on normal recall of certain incidents. Their success has been due to a) programming errors, b) context clues, c) indignation overload, d) feeling in control, and e) natural aging. Zebediah, Bowart's interviewees, your author, and Nora O. all fit here.

a) Programming Error

Even the best of operators, sooner or later, will make a programming error when giving instructions to a hypnotized subject. Such an error may allow normal memory of events that were intended to be covered by amnesia. Or it may allow recovery of previously repressed memories.

b) Context Clues

The subject may figure out the problem from a context of normal memory in which hypnotic exploitation explains an otherwise inexplicable perception. For example, he may recognize a posthypnotic hallucination as such. He may realize that something he did was compelled by posthypnotic suggestion.

Missing Time—Whenever there is amnesic hypnosis, there are gaps in memory (specific amnesias). Missing time is the context clue that subjects most often notice. Zebediah remembered the clock hands suddenly seeming to jump forward several hours. M. H. Erickson's experimental subject noticed that outside it had gone suddenly from light to dark, and that he had gone from feeling fresh to feeling exhausted in the same instant.

Another subject noticed that her husband had switched from merrily chatting, while lying beside her in bed, to lying there snoring in what seemed to be but a split second of time. She also noticed frightening, severe pain which had been absent a seeming moment before. (Emergency surgery in the morning saved her life.)

Difficulty in remembering a period of about six weeks at the beginning of the hypnotic exploitation suggests a basic conditioning period on Bowart's CIA/military model.

Recognized Hallucinations—Other subjects have recalled obvious suggested hallucinations, positive or negative. Nora O. said, "I can remember him talking. I can see his mouth moving, but I can't remember anything he said." A posthypnotic suggestion made her unable to remember anything he said. She could not remember his words, but the instructions had allowed her to remember his face as he talked. (The mind thus tries to compensate for the artificial brain sickness of abusive hypnosis and its specific amnesias. What can be remembered becomes relatively more vivid, as if it expresses the energy of both the remembered, and the associated unremembered, data.)

Nora also said, "He made me see things. I still see them." He told her to see a frightening animal on the stairs that led from his room downstairs to the rest of the house. That illusion kept her trapped in his room, when he so chose. Another subject later realized that a perceived image was actually a hallucination because its details were too regular (the pattern was repeated like a wallpaper pattern) to be real. (The clue in the image might have been provided deliberately by her unconscious to her conscious in order to help its sleuthing function.)

Inexplicable Behavior—The subject did certain illogical things, or inexplicably allowed certain things to be done to him or her. The subject now realizes those events can be explained as responses to posthypnotic suggestions. A posthypnotic act is good proof of a previous hypnosis. Its occurrence can be long after, and far away, from the original suggestion. Zebediah gave all the money in his pockets to Adam, numerous times, when he encountered Adam on the street, or elsewhere. A subject wrote of experiencing obedience to a posthypnotic suggestion which compelled her to "fly" to the door and open it the next time she heard a knock on it:

> While my body mechanically obeyed that other will, like a headless robot rushing to the door, my own consciousness felt violently cast aside. In that isolated, irrelevant, helpless, shunted-off place of being in my universe of mind, I was now merely a peripheral, minor consciousness observing my body as it was controlled by that dark force.

Harold figured out what really happened.[1]

c) Indignation Overload

A subject may self-protectively convert, remember, or deduce normally amnestic events due to unconscious response to damage or danger. When extreme physical or emotional damage, pain, rage, or fear cause a hypnotic subject to override commands, despite all the conditioning to the contrary, that is indignation overload. When the subject's sense of justice is deeply offended, or when a situation conflicts with strong instinct (such as survival, or a mother's need to protect her child), the subject may manage to overcome some hypnotic programming. She may remember something despite amnesia suggestions. She may manage to convert a suggestion into a less harmful form. She may manage to get some conscious awareness of the problem. Indignation overload is usually only a partial rejection of conditioning.

For example, Candy responded to a suicide command by initiating a chain of events that resulted in her marriage to Nebel, and some memory recovery. Palle overturned Dr. Reiter's induction conditioning.

d) Feeling in Control

Unconscious recognition of safety, through distance in space and/or time from the perpetrator—or the involvement of a competing ethical hypnotist—may trigger some remembering and telling. There is evidence both from case histories and research to support this. P. W. Sheehan found that experimental subjects who reported feeling in control violated his amnesia suggestion. Subjects who did not feel in control did not break through it.

Zebediah was in prison (which isolated him from Adam) when he realized what Adam had done. Candy was married for five months before Arlene started telling. Bowart's interviewees were civilians when they realized their hypnotically suggested "memories" were not the stuff of reality:

Illogical Observations—Dr. Lindner transcribed a conversation in which Harold, his amnesic (prisoner) hypnotic subject, is putting evidence together from what he was able to observe in the conscious state.

> Lindner: Harold, what do you remember about yesterday?
>
> Harold: I don't know. All I know is you burned my hand. Here. I know I didn't have that yesterday when I came here, and I know you've burned my hand before, so you get the blame for this too.

---

[1] I appreciate Harold's spunk. I dislike reading about such tests for anesthesia. The damage was real, even if not felt until later. Routinely burning Harold with a cigarette, to prove that the subject was hypnotized, was cruel and unnecessary in a therapy setting. Lindner explained in a footnote that "the burning of the dorsal surface of the hand" was a depth test. (p. 245). In fairness to Dr. Lindner, I have to add that he seems to have tried really hard to straighten the delinquent kid out. Also to Lindner's credit, in a 1960 article, "The Shared Neurosis," he reported examples of therapists who used hypnosis to serve their own neurotic needs.

> "When I first got out of the service, all I could remember about my four years was that I'd had a lot of fun. I mean, all the pictures I have, and all the recollections I had, were of Max and Pat and I having fun, skin diving, laying on the beach, collecting shells, walking in the jungle. It never dawned on me until later that I must have done something while I was in the service." (Bowart, p. 32)

e) Aging

There is a physiological reason for spontaneous mid-life recoveries of repressed traumatic memories. They literally become more endurable.

> ...recent, startling research suggests that there may be a physiological factor involved. Autopsy studies show that during middle age there is a major loss of cells in the locus coeruleus, an area of the brain stem that is associated with the experiencing of panic and anxiety. (Berger, p. 477)

Thus, memories repressed by deliberate loading with fear or pain associations become more accessible in middle age. The beasts guarding the mental gate to this hidden knowledge have grown less fearsome, more manageable.

3. Revealing Induction Phenomena

The following induction events may be evidence of previous hypnotic conditioning: a) unusual susceptibility; b) evidence of being depth-limited and/or regression-blocked; c) unusual nonsusceptibility; d) sudden deepening if the new hypnotist uses the same induction or deepening technique the previous hypnotist used: piggybacking; and e) extraordinary reaction to the onset of trance.

a) Unusually Susceptible

The subject who is unusually susceptible to hypnosis may be revealing past training. Once a person has been hypnotized many times, it is easy for any operator to quickly induce trance, and it will be a deep trance, unless the subject is sealed. One hypnotist, upon encountering an unknowing heavily conditioned hypnotic subject, remarked, "I have never seen anybody go down so far, so fast, so easily."

A former policeman told me that he had accompanied his wife to a hypnosis session as a "chaperone." He fell "asleep," however, at the first induction patter and remained so until the hypnotist awoke him. On another occasion, he bought a tape which taught Morse code using a hypnotic technique. Each time he listened to it, after the first few sentences, he never could remember anything more until after the tape was completed—but he discovered afterwards that he had learned the code perfectly.

I told him such extreme susceptibility to hypnosis was strong evidence that at some former time in his life he had received extensive hypnotic conditioning. The rule is: once a good subject, always a good subject—unless the operator seals you with a suggestion that you cannot be hypnotized by anybody else. He had not been sealed.

b) Depth-limited and Regression-blocked

A hypnotizable subject may be depth-limited and/or regression-blocked. Dr. Reiter's repeated hypnoses did not accomplish anything with Palle except a shallow trance that was more difficult to induce and a little less deep each time. It was barbiturate that finally broke through Nielsen's suggested depth barrier. The fact that the drug could change the process of his induction so dramatically proved that a hypnotic suggestion for depth-limiting had been the problem. Bowart's interviewees were both depth-limited and regression blocked.

> ...he found me to be a very easy subject. I'd go into a trance at the drop of a hat....[but] whenever he tried to regress me—saying, 'I want you to go back'—I'd just bring myself out of the trance, even if it was a deep trance. My heart would be pounding, my palms would be sweating, and I'd feel the same claustrophobia I'd felt whenever I'd confronted those application forms. (Quoted in Bowart, p. 36)

The subject probably had been told something like: "You can be hypnotized by another person, but only down to a medium depth. If that other operator asks you to go back in time, by any wording whatsoever, you instantly will come out of the trance. You will be very wide awake and very upset. Your heart will be pounding, your palms sweating. And you will feel claustrophobic. You will feel a tremendous need to get out of there."

When the subject mentioned in a) who went down "so far so fast" returned to that hypnotist a second time, she found that, since her previous appointment, she had been made depth-limited and regression-blocked. She and the new hypnotist, however, were able quickly to overcome the covert operator's depth limit and regression-blocking.

c) Unusually Insusceptible

A sealed subject seems insusceptible. If a person fits other criteria for hypnotizability, but cannot be hypnotized, he may be sealed. If a person once could be hypnotized, but now cannot, it is possible that person is now sealed. (On the other hand, subjects differ in response to hypnotic situations and different operators.) When the subject mentioned in parts a) and b) went back to the new hypnotist a third time, she found herself mysteriously immune to hypnosis. No matter what the hypnotist did, he no longer could induce hypnosis in her. The covert operator had sealed her against any induction to any depth by any other operator.

d) Piggybacking

If a later hypnotist uses the same induction method used by the previous hypnotist—piggybacking—there may be a breakthrough in inductability. For example, Dr. Mayer used the same induction cue with Mrs. E. that Bergen had used, and it worked. Successful piggybacking is evidence of previous hypnotic conditioning to that induction cue. Candy's later mirror inductions piggybacked on Jensen's earlier mirror-conditioning of her. That, in turn, piggybacked on Candy's childhood self-conditioning using a mirror to self-hypnotize.

Piggybacking can overcome sealing and depth-limit resistance. Piggybacking can be used either to begin a trance or to deepen an existing trance. If the second operator repeats the first operator's deepening method, he also may be able to access the subject's depth conditioning from her original operator. If the subject spontaneously relives the experience of the prior hypnotist's induction in a later trance with a different operator, trance may deepen to the level used by her previous operator. If the subject relives a previous operator's induction or deepening method while in a later trance, that piggybacking will powerfully deepen the present trance: "As Candy counts down with Burger, her voice indicates that the reliving of that experience is putting her into an even deeper trance while with Nebel." (Bain, p. 140) When Candy relived her first mirror induction while in trance with her husband, she shifted to deeper trance.

e) Extraordinary Reaction to Onset of Trance

As Reiter drugged Palle Hardwick down past Nielsen's posthypnotic depth limit, Palle screamed "No, no!" When Nora O. went to a hypnotherapist, seeking help with her childhood hypno-abuse, she became hysterical as soon as she was hypnotized. The hypnotist could not wake her up. Nora ended up in a mental hospital. "Wasn't right for a month," she said. Nora never allowed anybody to hypnotize her again.

Another subject stopped breathing after her psychiatrist administered barbiturate for the purpose of recovering information about former abusive hypnosis. The psychiatrist had to give her a specific suggestion to breathe, for each breath, until the drug's effect wore off and she returned to normal consciousness. That particular hypnotic conditioning impeded therapy until the stop-breathing programming could be lifted. (That was accomplished by the end of the next narcohypnotic immersion. The doctor gave suggestions, intended to lift the stop-breathing conditioning, between the necessary suggestions to breathe.).

4. Evidence from Projective Testing

Projective tests ask for responses to pictures or images, or ask the subject to think up images, or to create shapes and images.

> The expressive techniques...include free drawing, free movement, clay modeling, etc., and some of the projective techniques such as the Thematic Apperception Test, the Rorschach, the drawing of the Tree, the Szondi Test and others. (Assagioli, pp. 94-5)

Sealing May Affect Ability to See Illusion

One day, about a decade ago, the professor brought a spinning machine, that created an illusion, to my psychology class. She held it up in front of everybody, started it up, and asked what we saw. Every person in that class saw it as the illusion—except me. I saw "through" it. I saw what was really there. I could not see the illusion, even when I tried.

I have wondered, ever since, why I was different from the thirty-three other students. Was my inability to see the illusion caused by my sealing? Hypnosis is a kind of illusion. Were illusions accidentally covered by my conditioning to unconsciously block all forms of induction?

An image that arises spontaneously in a person's mind is called receptive imagery or spontaneous imagery. Those images are valuable for self-understanding, as well as diagnosis. They will reveal a subject's much-used and/or abused hypnoprogrammed condition, if the symbol language is correctly interpreted. Projective tests such as the TAT reveal the truth because you project your inner self onto neutral stimuli. You think you see form (pattern) in data, even random data, such as the Rorschach ink blots. What you see in random data, or the response you give to generic data, provides

> ...rapid access to facets of the personality that might otherwise be uncovered only through hypnosis or prolonged psychoanalysis or psychotherapy. (The Layman's Dictionary of Psychiatry. N.Y.: Barnes & Noble, 1967, p. 185)

"Draw Nothing"

If a victim has been told many times, "You will remember nothing," a suggestion to "draw nothing" may work especially well to help the subject retrieve data from earlier hypnoses. "You will remember nothing" is a standard command. The instruction to remember "nothing" is first mentioned in Bailly's secret report to the king.

> In cases of profound hypnotism there is often an oblivion of what occurred during the hypnotic sleep. This oblivion is complete when the experimenter has taken care to tell the hypnotized subject that he will remember absolutely nothing. (quoted in Binet and Fere, p. 366)

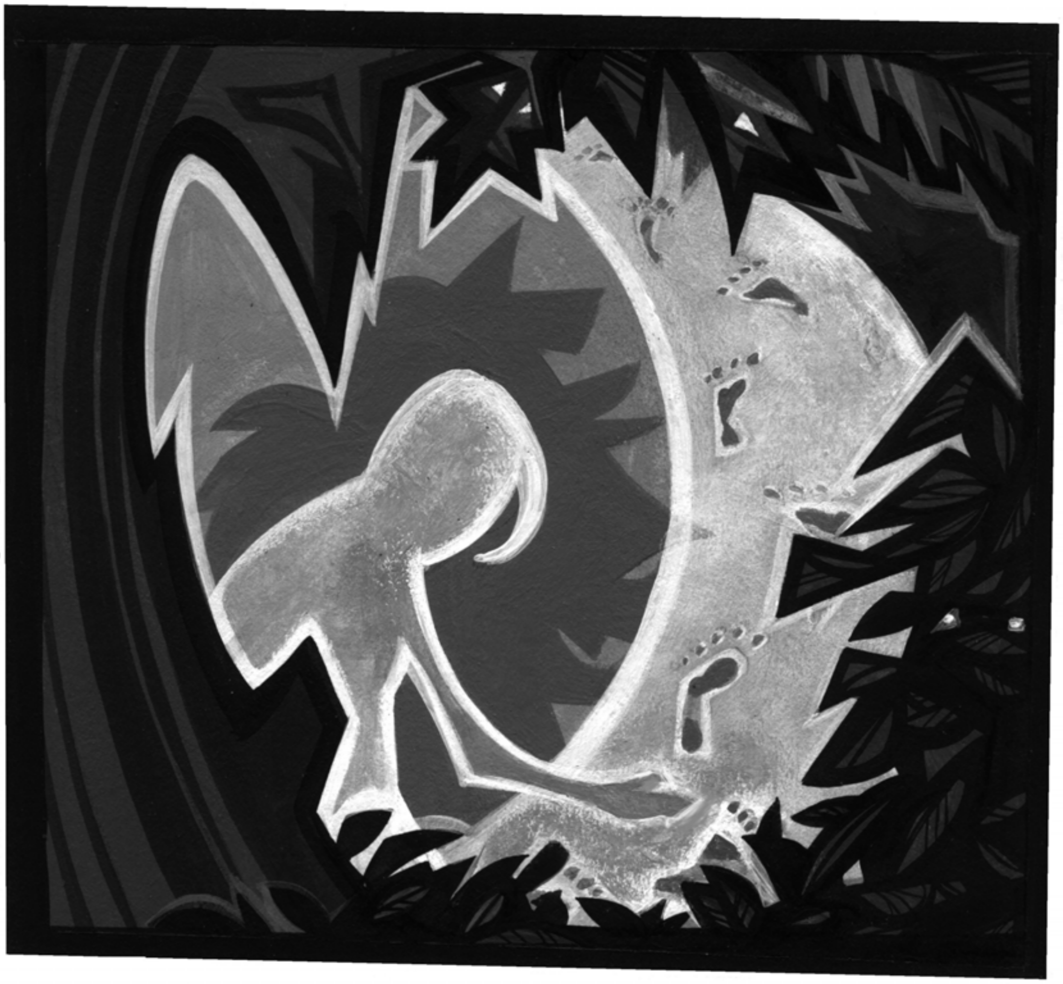
When told by a friend to "Draw nothing," one survivor drew amnestic material from her repressed memories. Her conscious mind was surprised by what she saw herself drawing. Her split had been told many times under hypnosis, "You will remember nothing," and her unconscious remembered that "nothing." As she drew "nothing," unconscious knowledge associated with what she was drawing came to her. Then she consciously knew and, finally, she could talk about it.

Walk Through Your "Land"

If you ask a survivor of criminal hypnosis to visualize a basic series of images, the role of the predatory operator in that person's mind WILL be graphically demonstrated in some way. For example, visualize a landscape, perhaps a forest. There is a path leading down into that landscape. Take a walk down that path.

Now you see a key lying on the ground beside the path. What does it look like? What do you do with it? Walk on down the path. You come to a clearing of some sort. There you see a container. What does it look like? What do you do with it? Walk on down the path. It has a bend coming up. You go around that bend and suddenly you come upon a bear in the middle of the path. What does the bear look like? How will you get past it and on up the path?



(If you need help, imagine that I found a way to get you past the bear.) Now you are past the bear, and going on down the path. Up ahead, you see a dwelling place of some sort. What does it look like outside? Inside? Are there plants around the outside of it? Now you're going on down the path. You come to some water: lake, creek, spring, or some such. What does your water look like? Go on down the path. Up ahead, you can now see a wall that stretches from horizon to horizon. What does it look like? Can you get over it?

Somewhere along that trail, probably in the first half of the series of images, a hypnoprogrammed person may report seeing an independent person of some sort in their land (or evidence of such a person such as footprints). Immediately after being glimpsed, this image withdraws, refuses contact , or conceals its presence.

For example, one hypnoprogrammed subject described a man sitting in a pickup truck on a hill above his forest. As soon as he saw and described it, however, the truck drove out of sight and did not return. Another subject was startled when the head and upper torso of a character suddenly popped out of her container, jack-in-the-box style. The image shook its head vigorously at her, scornfully saying "nyeh, nyeh, nyeh"! Then, it popped back down into the container whose lid then slammed back down, concealing all again.

5. Inhibition, Anxiety, or Somatic Reaction to the "H" Topic

A victim of criminal hypnosis may have difficulty communicating about hypnosis, or viewing a picture about hypnotic abuse, or hearing another victim talk about it. The problem may be a) inhibition, b) anxiety, or c) a physical reaction.

a) Inhibition

The subject may avoid talking about the hypnosis in his life almost completely. Palle's reaction to the hypnosis picture in the Thematic Apperception Test (TAT) series was unlike his other interpretations; he spoke briefly, with no detail. Or the subject may show relative lack of speech skill on the subject of his hypnosis experience, compared to his ability to communicate information about other subjects. A physician observed to such a person, "Your normal skill at communicating is very high, but when you tell somebody about the hypnosis it suddenly becomes extremely poor."

There may be evidence of specific hypnotic suggestions forbidding the telling. For example, the mouth opens, but words do not come out. (The antecedent suggestion would have been: "Your mouth may open, but no words will come out.") When a therapist asked one survivor of unethical hypnosis the first pointed question about the hypnosis in her life, she discovered she could not answer. She looked helplessly at him. Her mouth was open quite wide (the same thing that had happened before, when she had tried to tell a lawyer). It would not close. Nor would words come out. The listener waited.

Finally, by willing it of herself in a feat of supreme self-discipline, she managed to utter one word. And then another, and another, until she had briefly answered the question. The barrier was then weakened. It was not as hard for her to answer his following questions.

Memory blocking may also be apparent under hypnosis. Whenever John asked the hypnotized Candy a question about the CIA hypnoses, she would say, "I don't know anything." Her words were "...the singsong automatic response Nebel had heard hundreds of times on the tapes." (Bain, p. 233). A survivor of unethical hypnosis may show emotional pain when giving that response of "I don't know." "I don't know" is the heart of the trouble. She or he is not aware, cannot tell, cannot feel, cannot remember, all because of the suggested amnesia.

Blocking may also be apparent in a pattern of delayed speech before answering questions about the hypnosis.

b) Anxiety

Survivors may have an anxiety reaction to the subject of hypnosis. Bowart told Scheflin and Opton that, when interviewing the hypnoprogrammed military men, he had "...discovered a common characteristic: they all have an anxiety reaction when questioned about those missing spaces of time." (Scheflin & Opton, p. 445)

c) Somatic Reaction

The victim is likely to display anxiety, stress, and/or spontaneous lowering of consciousness when questioned about his hypnotic history. He may also show these symptoms upon hearing another person speak of hypnotic victimization. The anxiety may be expressed in a physical (somatic) symptom. Stephanie B. is a young woman whose father made her his hypnotic subject and sexually abused her. When she heard about another case of criminal hypnosis, she felt "chills."

I first met Nora O., a lady in her early seventies, in a writer's critique group. Over the next few weeks, I learned that she had been hypnotized when she was three years old by her uncle, an obstetrician who had lost his license for performing abortions. He then moved into the top floor of her family's house. He used hypnotic conditioning of Nora to facilitate his sexual abuse of her. The abuse continued until she was eleven.

Nora O. had a physical fear reaction to hearing or reading about abusive hypnosis: "My heart is racing 170 beats a minute. I have goose bumps all over my arms," she would say. Nora had a degree in clinical psychology and career experience as a college English teacher. She seemed wonderfully qualified to help me. I asked her to edit this book for me. She hesitated, then agreed. She had edited nearly a third of it before she had the heart attack.

"I never, ever had a heart attack before," she said. She became afraid to continue the work:

> After I semi-recovered and was up and about (well UP, anyway), I found that every time I went near your book my heart felt funny. If I picked up the box your book was in, the room tilted. If I began to read it, my [heart] monitor went up into the red zone. I stashed your manuscript under the bed in the guest room. Even then, whenever I passed that door on my way down the hall, it was like walking through an icy draft. I swear. About every week I'd go try again, but the same weird feelings would come over me—and they still do.[1,2]

---

[1] Letter from Nora to Carla, 10-5-96.

[2] There may be an association between a history of frequent hypnoses involving terrifying hallucinations, or suggestions to feel extreme terror, and arrhythmias later in life, especially in subjects with hereditary predisposition to arrhythmias.

6. Symptoms of Repression

The subject may have symptoms of emotional repression. The repression caused by hypnotic commands blocks the pain, shame, and fear unconsciously caused by predatory hypnosis from direct, conscious expression. Therefore, the repressed emotions leak out in revealing symptoms. Repression is the basis of all the other defense mechanisms. Repression is not a static, once and for all, event. It is part of the dynamic, shifting equilibrium in a person's mind between pressures to express, and pressures to repress. Pain, shame, and fear repressed under a cover personality can never be completely concealed.

a) Blocking When Questioned

A victim of abusive hypnosis may have a distinct pattern of delayed speech before denying key questions. This indicates blocking. Sirhan Sirhan gave this type of response to certain questions.

b) Emotional Numbing

Dr. Joel Osler Brende, a narcohypnotist treating posttraumatic stress in war veterans, wrote about the lasting, distressing symptoms that survivors of traumatic events suffer. He listed

> ...symptom complexes of intrusive traumatic memories, emotions, and imagery alternating with amnesia, denial, and emotional numbing—the latter symptom complex representing the attempt "to forget".... (Brende, 1985)

A hypnoprogrammed military subject summed up his behavior in the first months of therapy:

> "...when I first came in I'd talked in a monotone. I was very, very, controlled. I showed no emotions and had no inflection in my speech." (quoted in Bowart, Operation Mind Control)

The patient behaved like that for his first three months of treatment. That psychiatrist added that he "does not talk very much and has difficulty in expressing his feelings...Almost entire lack of facial expression." (Ibid., p. 84) She felt like he had a wall around him that she couldn't get through.

In another case, two consecutive clinicians were puzzled because the subject showed no emotion, although she was describing horrific events.

Emotional flatness, or tight control, can be specifically caused by hypnotic suggestion, or it can be symptomatic of hypnotic conditioning, when emotional repression is part of the amnesia. The traumatic experience is stuffed into the unconscious, blocked from expression either emotionally or verbally. The subject may be able to reconstruct some memories from peripheral, conscious evidence. Accessing the related emotion is something else. The predatory hypnotist does not want his secrets revealed. He would deny his subject either the credibility or the healing associated with emotional outpouring.

> "Everybody, my folks, my friends, everyone who'd known me before noticed how changed I was [after military hypnoprogramming]. I was fearful, and under tight control." (quoted in Bowart, p. 35)

c) Approach-Avoidance

Because of hypnoprogramming, the victim may completely avoid anything that would uncover the secret and accomplish deprogramming. If he does seek help, an approach-avoidance attitude is likely. The subject reaches out toward safety and healing. Yet, he is hindered in that effort by Secret-Don't-Tell programming that defends the hypnotic implants.

d) Spontaneous Eruptions of Repressed Hypnotic Memory

Everybody with trance capacity has spontaneous trances (daydreaming, highway hypnosis). Normally, these are shallow in depth. Normally, they neither involve regression, nor the escape of repressed hypnotic material.

Abusive hypnosis creates a load of unconscious pain that needs release, and of hidden truth that needs telling. The victim of criminal hypnosis, therefore, has a greater-than-normal tendency to experience spontaneous dissociation (even symptoms of multiple personality) because of his/her trained capacity for deep trance phenomena.

Some subjects have spontaneously recovered significant data in a series of dreams, associations, and realizations. The repressed memories "dribbled" back, gradually leaking from unconscious to conscious. For a survivor of criminal hypnosis, talking or reading about abusive hypnosis, or being hypnotized, tends to revive related personal memories. Nora O. wrote me:

> ...after I started reading your work and talking to you I began to see the Monster Animal that Dr. Eldon put in the stairwell when I was three or four years old. The only other time it came back was when I tried talking to a hypnotist about hypnosis 30+ years ago. It's back again, big as life, three thousand miles from Oregon!
>
> I go up and down the basement stairs several times a day (somewhat slowly since the heart attack), and I walk right through the shaggy reddish-brown abomination. I scarcely even shudder any more. I always carry my heavy-duty Rubbermaid laundry basket out in front of me and shut my eyes tight for the ten seconds it takes to pass through, but I know it isn't there. No, it's not. It absolutely isn't there. It's just in my head. (Heart?) (Letter, Nora to Carla)

An eruption of repressed memory or emotion is a spontaneous regression. Survivors of abusive hypnosis may spontaneously regress to scenes from their repressed history with, or without, formal trance induction. Candy spontaneously regressed after John's "relaxations." At first, she only regressed to early childhood, but then Arlene began to relive the CIA hypnoses. Many of Bowart's interviewees also had spontaneous regressions. In yet another case of spontaneous regression to a scene of forgotten hypnotic abuse:

> A sixteen-year-old boy was hypnotized by a lay hypnotizer, had a fit of insane violence in hypnosis, and attacked the hypnotizer, who knew no other course to take but to call for the assistance of the police. The hypnotized boy had to be manacled. When in the clinic, he had already been calmed and pacified, he knew nothing of what had taken place. A new hypnosis in the case of the same boy yielded the following information: the young man had been well known as a good medium in the vicinity of Vienna and had been repeatedly used by various persons, perhaps two hundred times altogether, for public exhibitions. One of these lay hypnotizers had on many occasions ordered him to go crazy and had suggested to him that a fly was approaching him, becoming larger and larger as it advanced, thus filling him with an acute sense of fear. During the hypnosis, which had taken place in Vienna, the other hypnotizer now appeared [as a regressive hallucination], and on the latter's [hallucinated] command the young man now went through his feat [of seeing the fly approaching, becoming larger and larger]. (Schilder and Kauders, p. 45)

Frequent spontaneous trances can be hard on the physical body. Normal sleep patterns may be disrupted. Trance visualizations may temporarily displace normal dreaming. For example, Candy suffered a lot of insomnia and emotional and physical stress during the process. "Candy withered under the strain." (Bain, p. 247)

A recovery of memory tends to stimulate yet more memories. After Candy spontaneously regressed to her childhood under hypnosis, John played the tape for her. Hearing that tape about a childhood incident made her remember yet more about the occasion of hitting her head. The two mental units, conscious and unconscious, are yoked. Though not always pulling equally, together they pull the subject along toward knowing.

e) Symptoms of Post-traumatic Stress

Anxiety, phobias, depression, severe nervousness, and lack of sexual drive are seen in concentration camp survivors and former prisoners of war. These symptoms may also appear in subjects with a history of abusive amnesic hypnosis. Meerloo gave a related, but different, description of what happens after the "Totalitarian Spell" is broken: "temporary nervous repercussions...crying spells, feelings of guilt and depression...The period of brainwashing becomes a nightmare." (pp. 91-2) Two Canadian researchers on post-traumatic stress syndrome in victims of past imprisonment and torture listed "somatic symptoms of anxiety, phobias, suspiciousness, and fearfulness." (Allodi and Cowgill, "A Canadian Study" in Stover & Nightingale)

> ...symptoms of anxiety, hyperalertness, disturbances in concentration and memory, and a tendency to reexperience the trauma in dreams and thoughts are components of both the torture syndrome and other stress and post-traumatic disorders...a specific criterion of the torture syndrome is that the person affected lacks any apparent predisposition to mental disorder. (Allodi, ibid)

This is normal for a person with post-traumatic stress disorder, "torture syndrome."

Phobias—Phobias can be either natural or suggested. Nobody is born with a phobia. It is always "developed." Developing a phobia requires a hookup between unconsciously associated cause and effect, programmed in with a lot of anxiety. Survivors of unethical hypnosis, or brainwashing, may have acquired phobias.

Patty Hearst, in prison after her recapture from the SLA, received psychiatric treatment for "some of my newly developed phobias." (Every Secret Thing, p. 380) Nora O. feared dying whenever she talked about the hypnotic abuse in her life. After getting out of the service, Bowart's typical interviewee looked for work, and discovered that he had a phobic reaction to answering questions about his past. When filling out an application form...

> He wrote his name and noticed that his hands were sweating. As he began to enter his address his heart began pounding so loudly it was audible. He became short of breath and felt like the walls were closing in. He fought to remain calm, but within a few moments he snatched up the form and bolted out the door. (Bowart, p. 35)

He tried to cure himself of the job application panic by desensitization; he kept going back, trying again. He did become able to get a little farther into the form, but:

> ...when he came to the place in the form which required work information about the past four years the pounding in his ears, the shortness of breath, and the terrifying feeling of being confined in a small space came over him again, and he left... (Ibid.)

He tried going to college. He was able to fill out the form and turn it in because it did not ask what he had done in the military. Personal questions in class, however, would trigger that panic reaction and a compulsion to leave the area. He dropped out of college. The specific posthypnotic suggestion probably had stated that if he ever told what he had done in the military, he would be stricken with unendurable panic, feel a dreadful claustrophobia, and have to get out of that place. His hypnoprogramming not to divulge personal information was over-generalized and over-intense. It prevented a normal life.

7. Social Isolation

There may be a pattern of isolation from other people, avoidance of close (confiding) friendships, and/or avoidance of involvement with a therapist who might recognize the problem of abusive hypnosis. Nielsen maneuvered Palle away from the influence of his friends and family. Later, Palle said, "I feel as if there is always a gap between me and other people...I often feel alone even when in other people's company, because I can never feel the urge to take them into my confidence." (Reiter, p. 85) Nobody came to Candy's wedding, except her mother and her caretaker. Bergen wanted Mrs. E to kill her husband.

8. Memories: Absent, Inadequate, Or Too Perfect

Memories relating to hypnotic episodes tend to either be absent, inadequate—or too perfect. Dr. Mayer noted that Mrs. E.'s memory was normal in every respect—except when she tried to remember anything to do with Bergen.

> The victim's memory of what happened is unreliable, patchy and uncertain, so that his statements will either appear improbable, inadequate, scrappy and confused, and self-contradictory, or just the opposite, so over confident and detailed that they appear to the court to have been learnt off by heart. (Reiter, 1958)

The "overconfident and detailed" memories are ones obtained or recovered in a trance state, spontaneous or suggested. Any memory that is recovered directly from the unconscious, which has never been conscious before, will seem "overconfident and detailed." For a victim of unethical hypnosis, that may be the only way it can come back. (And there is a risk of confabulation.)

9. "Weakness" During, Fear of Control After

The subject who is in an active abuse relationship with a predatory hypnotist may seem unusually weak and meek. Zebediah's prison evaluation called him "weakwilled and vacillating." Palle became "apathetic" and an "introvert" after his hypnotic exploitation began, although, as a child, he had been outgoing. After Nielsen programmed him, his Thematic Apperception Test showed "a desire to be led by another person." Another subject, before her recovery from severe hypno-abuse, was called the "most self-effacing person I have ever met." Bain described Candy's personality as "gentle, meek."

In the relationship of hypnotic exploitation, there is a mental "paralysis" of the hypnotized person. The willing function of his conscious mind, to some extent, is being displaced by covert instructions from the hypnotist. The subject of unethical hypnosis has been entrapped in a very real situation of powerlessness. To the subject's unconscious mind, the operator seems (and is) very dangerous. The unconscious automatically reacts to this overwhelming dominance with a survival-oriented, belly-up posture, "a passive-masochistic attitude" (R. W. White), a complete surrender. That unconscious surrender may spill over into the outward life.

There may be other reasons for that passivity beyond the unconscious training and survival instinct of surrender. Are the subject's strong parts all occupied with the effort of containing the pain, shame, and frustration? Are they occupied with the burden of unconsciously coping with the secret hypnotic life? Does the unconscious hypnotic split absorb all the subject's assertive personality characteristics in obedience to the hypnotist's demands that the unconscious isolate must dominate the subject's conscious self? Or does the hypnotic split take on qualities of the exploiter, becoming a personification of the hypnotist's will, secretly implanted and developed as a multiple personality to absorb the subject's assertive qualities?

The subject also tends to show noticeable weakness in any conscious confrontation with the hypnotist. Zebediah believed he could confront Adam in court, but then discovered he could not. Palle had a "feeling of weakness and cowardice in respect to N, and this was manifested when he was confronted with N in court." (Reiter, p. 78) Survivors of abusive hypnosis tend to relate to their predator with a mixture of fascination/love (rapport) and hate/fear (reality).

Fear of Control

A survivor of abusive hypnosis may have a phobic reaction to (or may simply avoid) situations involving control by another person. Dr. Reiter said that Palle's attitude toward authority was strikingly ambivalent. Authority attracted him, and at the same time he intensely hated it. Joe reacted with strong discomfort to any authority over him and had to be self-employed.

10. Sleep Symptoms and Dream Clues

Dreams are a functional necessity for every living human, whether we remember them or not. (We usually do not.) We dream three to seven times per night. Dream length ranges from just a few minutes up to an hour, but usually between eight and thirty minutes. About one-fifth of your sleep time is spent dreaming, an average of one dream every ninety minutes, with more toward the morning. Dreaming plays a role in filing away learned material into long-term memory. The more you are learning, the more you will dream.

Survivor Dreams

Sleep and dream patterns, and dream content, also can convey information about repressed unconscious knowings. For example, during the period when Dr. Reiter was first trying, unsuccessfully, to hypnotize Palle, Nielsen encountered his hypnotic subject in a courtroom and reinforced all his conditioning. After that encounter, Palle began to feel upset all the time. He did not know why he felt so anxious. He also began to have chronic insomnia. When just on the verge of falling asleep, he suddenly would feel tense and frightened, afraid of losing control, afraid of becoming unconscious. He had frightening dreams when he did sleep, but, when he awoke, he could never remember exactly what he had been dreaming.

A survivor of artificial personality splitting may have dream content that focuses on the situation of the unconscious split. Or the content may be drawn from the life of the root self. Or it may involve both personas.

Dreams can leak unconscious knowledge to the conscious mind. They can even be purposeful message-bearers from the unconscious to the conscious. Dreams may contain fragments of factual information (verbal or concrete) mixed in their collage of symbols. CIA experimenters, who researched artificial personality splitting to create a subconscious isolate, noted the possibility of the cross-over of unconscious knowledge to the subject's conscious mind via dreams:

> There would be inevitable leakage between the two personalities, particularly in dreams; but if the hypnotist were clever enough, he could build in cover stories and safety valves which would prevent the subject from acting inconsistently. (CIA memo quoted in J. Marks, pp. 184-5)

So, the subject may be unable to remember dreams, either spontaneously or because of repressive hypnotic suggestions meant to block their information-carrying ability. Or he may dream—and have nightmares. Dreams may "actually refer to present situations of which we have never been consciously aware." (Faraday, p. 166) When a survivor of criminal hypnosis dreams about amnestic memories, the dream delivers information from his unconscious to his conscious, data which previously has not been consciously known.

> Not infrequently, the content of the hypnosis will reappear in a dream, although the patient may not always be able to indicate precisely the origin of this content. (Schilder & Kauders, Hypnosis, p. 60)

Dreams may also convey consciously denied emotion.

> In their sleep, the memories of atrocities surface to vivid awareness among the victims of mind control. Night after night terrible images, suppressed by deeply conditioned responses, emerge as terrifying nightmares. (Bowart, p. 26)

The survivor may dream the same, or a similar, scene over and over. Repeated dreams are attempts to come to terms with intense, unconscious, emotional material.

> The recurrent dream tells an important story about the client...recurring ones are attempting unsuccessfully to adjust or call attention to some internal conflict between fragmented parts. (Tebbetts, Miracles on Demand, p. 29)

Analyzing Dreams

Repeated nightmares may precede a period of spontaneous memory recovery. Bowart's interviewees, who spontaneously recovered memories, typically began that process with a series of disturbing dreams. The first dream, or first few dreams, of a series tend to be a special effort by a survivor's unconscious to communicate something to its conscious mind. The topic of the dreams may be fear of the hypnotist, need to escape, specific experiences hidden by amnesia, grief at loss of memory, grief at family relationships disrupted by the hypnotist's predations, anger at the hypnotist, etc. Dreams of being put to sleep or paralyzed may be metaphors for being forced, on conditioned cue, into deep trance.

A dream may be all symbols, part symbols and part memories, or mostly real data.

> Psychotherapists and analysts in particular should beware of their professional habit of treating all their patients' communications, including dreams, as mere 'projections' of the personality, containing no objective truth...[we should explore] a dream thoroughly for signs of objective truth... (Faraday, Dream Power)

Let me add a note of caution here. Out of an average sample of the dreams of a class of college sophomores, almost 100% had dreamed of being attacked or pursued, 75% of sexual experiences, 66% of schools, teachers, and studying, 62% of falling, 56% of being frozen with fright, and 56% of nudity. So, dreams of being unable to move are common and do not necessarily refer to hypnotic experience. Dreams of trying to evade pursuit may symbolize many things, only one of which is unconscious fear of hypnotic predations. Dreams of struggling to find and save a lost child can symbolize many things, only one of which is the problem of unconscious isolation of the amnestic body of knowledge.

If you pay attention to your dreams, you will come to know yourself better.

> It is generally agreed among psychotherapists and personality theorists that dreams provide us with the most direct revelation of unconscious thought processes that is available in normal personalities. (M. P. Emery, thesis, "The Differential Assimilation of Dream Content into Waking Consciousness," Columbia Teacher's College.)

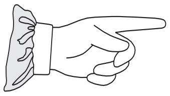
Palle's dreams often had military themes and issues of obedience and submission. His dream representations of Nielsen were intensely emotional and negative, expressing anger and fear. Nielsen would be portrayed either with disgust as "the drunkard," or he would be "the hidden force which sustained the whole content of the dream and directed it towards its tragic-explosive catastrophic outcome." (Reiter, p. 76) The dreams of another survivor typically represented the predatory hypnotist as a snake, or as a dangerous, frightening man.

The survivor who understands the language of his dreams may learn what he must do to be safe. Some part of his unconscious mind, the hidden observer, always knows the whole story. That truth, and related warnings, can be communicated to the conscious mind in dreams. Warnings, insights, and guidance can come in the form of a dream.



If there are many significant matches in the ten preceding categories, the correct diagnosis is:

Posttraumatic Stress Syndrome

Subcategory: Unethical Hypnosis

Survivor Confabulation

Victims of unethical hypnosis, who have become aware of their condition, who have tried to fight against it, and who have sought therapy for it, may have a burden of confabulatory overlay in addition to their true memories. There are three potential sources for this:

- The confabulatory overlay may have been caused by suggestions from the original, predatory operator. Why? It is very difficult for a mind-controller to take away the precious gems of consciously aware facts to which a subject, who is fighting for mind-freedom and the right to reality, is clinging. It is relatively easy, however, to give this trained subject suggestions which will make him confabulate additional, nonfactual, material. The purpose is to destroy credibility for the true component of the subject's declarations. It tends to work because most people assume that if one item in a person's testimony can be shown to be confabulation, then nothing they say should be taken seriously. Testimony laced with hypnotically-implanted falsehoods could ruin a victim's legal case.

- A further possible source of confabulation is the process of trying to recover amnestic material in the twilight zone of self-induced trance. The unconscious is highly cooperative with any conscious goal direction. Unless constantly warned to seek only truth, it may produce preposterous tales. Any subject capable of being subjected to unethical hypnosis also may believe in preposterous tales fabricated by his own unconscious.

- A therapist who treats a survivor of criminal hypnosis may not sufficiently guard against the risk of confabulation. Some psychology textbooks now say it does not matter if it is true or not (the subject always feels like it is true), because any fact or fantasy that generates emotion is helpful. This is a myth perpetrated by the therapy community that a) protects them from sloppy "regressing" that can pull up anything (such as "past lives") and b) protects the sizable industry of fabricated regressions. It is not helpful to believe falsehoods about your past. A person needs to live as close to the truth as he can. Careful trance management with insistence on only factual, true retrievals is best. When suggested confabulation happens, the subject has doubly suffered hypnotic abuse: first from the original perpetrator, and second from the therapist with whom the subject generated a second hypnotic burden of monstrous beliefs about his personal history.

The Manchurian Candidate: A Novel

Richard Condon's 1959 novel, The Manchurian Candidate, begins with a scene in which the Red Chinese capture a patrol of U.S. soldiers. They take the men to Manchuria for hypnoprogramming.

Yen Lo, Military Hypnotist

Reflecting the real-world's evolution in unethical hypnosis, Yen Lo, the Chinese hypnotist, works for the government/military. This high-tech Oriental mesmerizer sets out to transform the fine catch of American GIs into persons who will obey as mindlessly and automatically as robots.

Yen Lo combines traditional nineteenth century hypno-training and trance management skills with twentieth century narcohypnosis technology [something the CIA also was working on, as had the Nazis before them]. Yen Lo conditions his subjects [a term introduced by the research hypnotist Andrew Salter, who was Condon's friend]. The fictional hypno-doctor sneers at the common > ...belief that no hypnotized subject may be forced to do that which is repellent to his moral nature, whatever that is, or to his own best interests. That is nonsense, of course... (Condon, p. 48)

In contrast to DuMaurier's villainous hypnotist, Svengali, Condon presents Yen Lo as a lovable human being. He is an intelligent, kindly old man when interacting with friends and family:

> ...Yen Lo sat with the thirty boys and girls of his staff in the evening circle on the lovely lawn behind the pavilion. He would tell them the beautiful old stories later when the darkness had come. While they had light he made his dry jokes about the Russians and amused them or startled them or flabbergasted them with the extent of his skill at origami, the ancient Japanese art of paperfolding...He would hold up a sheet of paper...and lo!—wonderment dropped from his fingers, the paper had come to life, and magic was everywhere in the gentling evening air. (Condon, p. 52)

Yen Lo's kindness, however, is reserved for his family and associates. It is not extended to the enemy. He is a classic Nazi doctor; the only ethics that he applies to his medical practice is political expediency. He hypnotizes the Americans because they might be useful for his government's purposes. Yen Lo is strictly a "Company man," a loyal Communist Chinese, who also happens to be an expert on trance management in a country at war. He takes pride in using, and displaying, his expert workmanship. [With a mere switch of employers, he would fit perfectly among the technocracy of U.S. military and secret agency experimenters and programmers.]

Narcohypnotic Immersions and Conditioning

Yen Lo selects one patrol member, Raymond Shaw, to be programmed as the Manchurian candidate. Shaw is set up to be a human "...time bomb with a fuse eight years long." (Condon, p. 256) The "bomb," upon command, would kill its designated target—a U.S. presidential candidate.

The novel gives us an overview of the technology which Yen Lo used to program Shaw. The "candidate" is first shoved into deep trance by narcohypnotic drugging. The barbiturate knocks out his conscious mind and exposes his unconscious mind to verbal reprogramming by the enemy. Condon calls a narcohypnotic session—the period of time between the "descent into the deep unconscious" and when "the subject was pulled out"—an immersion. Yen Lo explains:

> The total immersion time into the unconscious mind of the subject during the first contact had been eleven hours...The critical application of deep suggestion was observed during the first eleven hours of immersion when the primary link to all future control was set in. (Condon, p. 44)

["Deep suggestion" means suggestion given at a profound trance level, or under narcohypnosis. The "primary link" would be the posthypnotic reinduction cue plus amnesia suggestions. The reinduction cue would be set up to trigger an instant, unknowing shift in consciousness.] Condon said that Yen Lo has "his own radical technology for descent into the unconscious mind with the speed of a mine-shaft elevator." (Condon, p. 38)

When Yen Lo brings his subject out of narcohypnotic immersion the first time, "four tests were made to determine the firmness" of the deep implants. [The author does not specify what those tests were, but, logically, they would have been tests of the reinduction cue, of the suggested posthypnotic amnesia, and of suggestions for posthypnotic positive and negative visual hallucinations. Amnesia and posthypnotic visual hallucinations, especially negative hallucinations, are among the most difficult hypnotic phenomena to elicit. Therefore, they are generally considered proof of somnambulist depth.]

Yen Lo hypnoprogrammed the U.S. soldiers, then demonstrated his control of their minds in a stage program before a gallery of Communist officials. Yen Lo hands the hypnotized subject, Raymond Shaw, a gun and tells him to shoot the two men he likes the most. Shaw obeys.

Marco Figures It Out—The Chinese then slip the GIs back to the U.S. side. All of them now have hypnotically implanted, identical, false memories of having heroically survived an enemy ambush. The phony memory was intended to explain their missing time. They have suggested amnesia for everything that happened in Manchuria—except the false memory of an ambush.

Although Shaw does not consciously remember shooting his friends in the demonstration, back home in the U.S., he relives that scene in nightmares, over and over. The Manchurian candidate's former commander, Colonel Marco, who also was hypnotized and present at the demonstration, and who also is amnesic, also is having repeated nightmares. In Marco's dreams, Raymond Shaw kills two members of his own patrol for a demonstration before the Chinese brass. After Marco finds out that another member of the patrol (not Shaw) is also having repeated nightmares about Shaw shooting two friends for a demonstration, the Colonel contacts Shaw. Marco asks Shaw about his dreams. He learns that Shaw is dreaming that scene also.[1]

The novelist supplied a further clue for Marco in the form of a logical flaw in the implanted group memory of that imaginary ambush. Marco says to Shaw, "But you don't remember doing all those things." Shaw's memory has the same problem:

> "That's what I'm trying to tell you...Every time I'm directed to think about the action I always know what will happen exactly, but I never get to the place where it actually happens." (Condon, p. 206)[2]

In one scene in the novel, Shaw's dual-cue induction setup (a suggestion to play cards, followed by the sight of a "red queen" sends him into deeply suggestible trance) is accidentally accomplished. He is in deep trance in a New York bar. Shaw is programmed to robotically obey the next words he hears after the induction, no matter who says them. The next words he hears are "Why don't you take a cab quick to Central Park and jump inna lake..."

Zombie Shaw hails a cab, tells the driver to take him quickly to Central Park, and there he jumps into the (shallow) lake. The posthypnotic command sequence being completed, the subject then returns to normal consciousness—in wet clothes. He is amnesic for the time he was in trance, but he admits to the pursuing Marco that his clothes certainly have become wet.

By now, Marco has figured out what really happened to his patrol in Manchuria, and why. The Colonel knows too that, after Shaw is hypnotized, he can be programmed by anybody. (That is not usually the case.) I won't tell you the ending; you might want to read it for yourself.

Afterthoughts

No novel since Trilby advanced public understanding of hypnoprogramming as much as Condon's novel, The Manchurian Candidate. Technically, it is sounder than DuMaurier's novel. The technology it presents is also more modern. Condon's book, however, is still clearly fiction. The programming of the patrol members, and the ending, are too quick and easy, too perfect.

To readers in 1959, the author's scenario seemed comfortably fictional. Then came the assassinations of John F. Kennedy and Robert F. Kennedy, followed by shocking evidences of conspiracy and the involvement of hypnoprogrammed persons. Condon later wrote a novel, Winter Kills, about the JFK assassination. After that, as far as I know, he never published again.

---

[1] Nightmares that symbolically express the repressed anguish of hypno-abuse traumas may occur in real-life victims of unethical hypnosis.

[2] The subject considers logical inconsistencies in his or her life and figures out the truth.

Help and Healing

A Hypnotic Predator is in the Picture

☑

Who Can Help?

☑

The Healing, Freeing Image

☑

Other Methods to Overcome Amnesia

☑

Therapy Techniques and Principles

“Get them to pity the person that they hate. Put them in the other person’s place.”
Charles Tebbetts

Therapy Issues in Criminal Hypnosis

There are four extraordinary factors to be considered when planning therapy for a survivor of abusive hypnosis: 1) difficult diagnosis, 2) possible active predator, 3) need to overcome suggested amnesia, and 4) challenging therapy needs.

Difficult diagnosis: the first of those extraordinary factors is the enormous difficulty, and hesitation, associated with defining a person as a victim of abusive hypnosis. Criminal hypnosis tends to be difficult to diagnose, and easily forgiven, even overlooked, because mental scars are hard to discern. One long, livid, skin scar, visible on the outside of Palle’s head, for every criminal mind penetration inflicted upon him by Nielsen instantly would have clarified the situation for observers. The sight would have stimulated quick corrective action. But no methods of identifying an unknowing hypnoprogrammed person are so simple as observing scars on the head. (There are ways to identify a victim of unethical hypnosis, however, covered in the preceding section).

A HYPNOTIC PREDATOR IS IN THE PICTURE

Before therapy can be effective, a victim of abusive hypnosis must become safe from induction cues by the previous hypnotist. In this type of case history, a real—not imaginary—hypnotic predator has been involved in the subject's life, and may still be. Therefore, the therapist's first priority must be to identify, if possible, who the operator is, and to what extent the subject is still at risk of an induction cue. (There may be more than one operator, as in the cases of Mrs. E, and the Operation Often subject.)

If an active hypnotic predator is not blocked from access to the subject, therapy will be difficult, if not futile. Therapy attempts may even backfire if the predator reacts to the threat of exposure by giving suggestions to destroy the subject's credibility and block further therapy. The abusive hypnotist might, for example, manipulate his subject in order to create an impression of paranoid symptoms to align with the subject's story about having been hypnotized, and achieve a misdiagnosis.[1]

In a contest with a Johnnie-come-lately therapist, the first hypnotist has the advantage, because of his well-established conditioning of the subject—until the subject is out of his contact range. The friend of a victim of predatory hypnosis, therefore, strives to protect the subject from the predator's induction cues: visual (in person, mail, video), auditory (in person, telephone, audio/videotape), or tactile.

Screened Contacts—The subject's future safety may depend on screening mail (Dr. Reiter believed that allowing Palle to receive letters from Nielsen caused his relapse into hypnocontrol), screening phone calls (John Nebel caught the "per Cynthia" message that might have sent Arlene back to Taipei), and avoiding any personal encounter between hypnotist and subject (ignorant court personnel seated Palle and Nielsen side by side in court on more than one occasion).

Survivors of unethical hypnosis need to understand the facts of telephone induction because it is so easy for a perpetrator to maintain control over a subject in this electronic era merely by dialing his/her phone number. The erosion of privacy also aids perpetrators by making it difficult to keep a phone number private. An escaped hypnoprogrammed subject might most conveniently be traced over phone lines. And just one moment of phone contact could allow an operator to attempt to program out old loopholes and reestablish hypnocontrol.

An answering machine does not provide security. A recorded message can contain the auditory induction cue followed by instructions to call the hypnotist, followed by the usual amnesia.

The only real safety that I know of, unless all conditioned induction cues can be blocked, is to not be in a known location, not have a known phone number, and not trigger any "check-in" cues. Living with an unknown address and phone number is very difficult when the government, post office, banking system, health care providers, etc., all tend to demand an accurate address—and phone number. Refusal to provide a phone number and address may instantly arouse suspicion and make life even more difficult.

"Are you a bank robber on the run?"

"No, I am an escaped hypnorobot on the run."

That type of response does not reassure people.

Successful hiding may require living in a location (or a series of locations) that even a private detective, working for the predator, could not find. Screening of physical or phone access must continue until all previous induction cues are identified and disempowered. Blocking heavily-conditioned induction cues, however, may be difficult.

---

[1] An ex-policeman told me that a professional criminal told him that a basic technique was, "If you're going to do it, make the abuse so bizarre, nobody would ever believe him."

The emerging chip-locating technology is of appropriate concern to any hypnoprogrammed person. Pets and trucks already can be equipped with chips that can be located by satellite technology. Some people also now have these chips buried in their flesh (certain high-ranking French military, and all Thai citizens, for example). Is the new federal complex being built south of St. Louis to house the Defense Mapping Agency (projected 50,000 employees) a center for chip-tracking technology? The St. Louis citizens don't know. For sure, the existence of hypnoprogramming technology is yet one more reason to object to the implanting of a chip.

To Flee, Or Not To Flee

In the case of a conditioned hypnotic subject, the bottom line is a considered decision; what cost is worth the effort to have mind-freeedom? It is possible that the hypnotic predations are not so objectionable, or unwelcome, as to be worth the necessary effort to completely evade them. A father, covertly using hypnosis to keep a son from bad companions and bad habits, or to help a daughter be content and productive, may not fit the definition of a "predatory hypnotist." A victimized wife, despite her suffering, may choose to stay in the situation for the sake of her children, her marriage, and her love for the abuser.

It is also true that the same hypnotist may treat different subjects in very unlike ways. He may have a genuinely benevolent attitude toward one subject, while being a serious threat to the safety of another. His treatment of a subject may depend on whether his first priority is to benefit and protect the subject (such as a child), or to benefit and protect himself (as in the case of an "outsider").

A hypnotist who puts his subject at risk for life, or sanity, is a good argument for evasive action, no matter what the cost, unless responsibility for the care of young children, or some similar duty, is judged as being of greater consequence.

WHO CAN HELP?

A victim of unethical hypnosis is not mentally ill, but he or she needs help if there is extensive, deep-level, and abusive hypnotic conditioning. The subject's conscious mind needs to be reintegrated with the repressed memories and feel-ings. He also needs the reintegration of blocked mental defenses. In the process of recovering amnestic data to consciousness and of experiencing associated emotions, the survivor becomes able to func-

The Easiest Cure

It is a sad fact that the offending hypnotist could fix the abused subject's problem most easily, most completely, and most inexpensively. Candy knew that. She spoke of a wild urge to go to California and somehow get Jensen to undo what he had done, to reverse his commands.

If only the offending operator could somehow be persuaded, forced, or tricked into giving the suggestion, "Now you can remember everything that ever happened under my hypnosis." The amnesia would immediately, completely, dissipate, the way that sun, in only a second of time, can burn away dense fog, leaving a clear view. The separated personalities would be reunified. Memories smothered in the mists of amnesia would instantly become accessible and clear. The subject would be reunited again: one person under God, indivisible—one data base, one memory.

The perpetrator himself has the greatest power to fix what he broke, to set into motion the easiest, most effective process of cure. [I have had the experience of having chunks of programming suddenly disintegrate because of the operator's own (careless, forgotten) suggestion. The first time, I did not realize what had happened until a week later. The second time, I knew the instant that the deprogramming process had begun. My brain felt suddenly warm and busy—making new, better connections?—at the moment my freeing was activated. And I was so happy. I look forward to more such joyful events.] In this ideal scenario, the perpetrator would give one final command: that the subject can never again be hypnotized by him (or any operator associated with him). The criminal hypnotist has given a sealing command against himself!

Such total cooperation from a criminal hypnotist in the healing of his victim, however, has never happened. The exploiter typically tries, to the bitter end, to perform covert damage control and keep his secrets hidden as long as the subject is within his reach. If he secretly can access his longtime subject, he gives the old accustomed induction cue, then asks questions to bring himself up to date on the status of the investigation. Then he gives new suggestions to that conditioned mind, designed to protect himself or to further exploit the subject.

tion again as an integrated and self-protected person.

Need to Tell

The situation of a subject, who is in the grip of a criminal hypnotist, may be truly desperate. Hypnotic commands surround him with blocks designed to prevent him from escaping or getting help. But the victim, weary of suffering, yearning to be free, unconsciously looks for loopholes in that programming. The first step to freedom and healing is to tell somebody. Any telling helps. Anybody, who will listen, helps. Two factors are vital to the process of finding safety and healing: 1) the wounded person's courage to tell, and 2) the listener's gift of unconditional love.

To tell is to overcome a series of challenges. Anytime the victim talks about personal problems, he opens himself to the creation of a rapport. For this reason, unknowing hypnoprogrammed persons tend to be blocked against making confidences, in general. Any time he talks intimately with another person, again and again, he is creating a rapport that competes with the hypnotist's. To heal, he overcomes the inner, blocking resistance and talks. First, he tells one person. Then, another. Telling more and more people helps him more fully integrate what he is telling. However, he needs a believing listener.

> Some doctors, I've heard from patients, are sometimes disbelieving or nonresponsive to the histories they've recorded from these patients. Like they might find it too difficult to deal with....I think if they could talk to anybody it could be helpful. They don't need to talk to a doctor, necessarily—they need to be treated decently, they need a good listener. (Berger, quoted in Rauchman, p. 34)

A survivor is likely to turn to other family members early in the telling process. A typical victim is blocked from revealing anything in a formal therapeutic situation with a credentialed person. Candy first revealed the problem to her husband. Bowart's typical interviewee first told his mother.

If the perpetrator is also a family member, however, telling other family members may not be helpful. "There are no secrets in families, only denial," the saying goes. The family of an abused person struggles with cognitive dissonance, the clash between the pretend version of their life and the reality of it. It feels easier to maintain the false front, to deny the telling, to implicitly collaborate with the abuser. For this reason, the whistle-blower, instead of the perpetrator, tends to be viewed as the problem by those inside the family, or group. The survivor needs to shift his efforts to tell away from the perpetrator's in-group.

It is hard to tell. The subject will feel as if he is divulging personal and intimate secrets—and perhaps even risking cruel, bizarre punishments for telling. If a listener's attitude is derogatory, threatening, or indifferent, the effort to tell is made harder. It takes tremendous courage for a person, so deeply wounded and fiercely threatened at the unconscious level, to disobey and risk telling.

He must try again. Every time he fights his way past the programmed resistance, it gets easier. Above all, he must break the silence. He must tell it again, and again, and again. He must tell it. Write it. Draw it. Sculpt it. Tell one person. Tell a group. He must remember what he can, figure out what he can, and tell the gist of that to somebody he believes may listen, sympathize, and believe.

If he has tried, in the past, to tell and been disbelieved or rebuffed, that makes it harder for him to try again. The message of rejection is that nobody will believe what he has to say, that he risks being called a liar, or even diagnosed as insane. (I hope dissemination of this book makes it easier for victims to find help.) So he must use good judgement about who he tells—but keep trying to tell somebody.

The persons who believe him will be thereafter his closest, most trusted, friends. Once he begins telling, he is on the road to freedom. Things are never going to be the same. He is building a new life in which the people who are close to him know the real him—the person who is a survivor of abusive hypnosis. Changing a long-held pattern of secrecy changes the victim in a profound (and good) way. The process of change may be an emotional and confusing time. That is the usual fallout from change. But he will come out of the process renewed, reintegrated, wiser, and stronger.

For safety's sake: He MUST avoid confiding in highly visible persons, such as John Marks or Mark Phillips. He must avoid anybody who is specifically looking for hypno-programmed people. Any such looker could be a lure for further unethical use of the victim. But, he MUST tell somebody, because he needs to tell, and other people need to hear this.

Time Issues in Therapy

The therapeutic time and effort needed to help the victim of a severely abusive, longterm hypnotic relationship probably cannot be supplied in any conventional therapeutic situation, certainly not in one hour a week of talk therapy. It took nineteen months, every day, hours in each session, for Dr. Mayer to complete his hypnotic investigation of the facts of Mrs. E's case. Dr. Reiter worked with Palle for hours, every day, for about eighteen months. It was also "a daily and grueling adventure for John and Candy to discover the truth about her past life...exhausting, as well as exhilarating..." (Bain, p. 82)

Bowart's typical interviewee had spent years in expensive, conventional, fifty-minute therapy, several times a week. Even so, his typical survivor only had begun to get answers, and then had to give up the formal therapy for lack of funds. (He continued the struggle to overcome amnesia on his own.) Another survivor spent several months of several-hours of therapy per day in an informal, amateur relationship, and a few more months on a once-a-week basis with a professional.

Trance Time Moves Slowly—One of the reasons why so many hours of hypnotic regression are needed (if that is the intended route of memory-recovery) is the nature of hypnosis itself. In deep trance, dialogue phrases of speech tend to be separated by very long pauses. A hypnotized person thinks slowly: the deeper the trance, the slower he thinks. Sometimes, the subject's words are spoken too softly or are too mumbled to understand.

The tendency to physical paralysis in deep trance can make it difficult for the hypnotist to understand what the subject has said (it helps to give a suggestion for clear speaking). Sometimes, the hypnotist is uncertain what is going on in the subject's mind, and he needs time to decide what question or response to make. Because of the passivity of deep trance, the subject usually needs constant conversational participation from the hypnotist. Accordingly, this type of uncovering takes a long time.

Putting Together the Puzzle—It takes much time and effort to establish the basics of what has happened in a case of hypnoprogramming. The subject's own ignorance, confusion, doubts, and fears make communication awkward and imperfect. A person with normal memory starts by sketching the big picture in words. Then he adds details. Hypnoprogrammed persons with suggested amnesia cannot do that. Their data arrives in disconnected bits and pieces. Those pieces may not be in chronological sequence. They may be trivial, peripheral to the major history of the abuse. The subject starts by telling those bits and pieces. For example, Mrs. E.'s recovered memories did not appear in a neat, chronological, and immediately comprehensible form. The amnestic data was, at first, a mass of > ...confusing, disordered and fragmentary details...brought to light by the investigation....a very extensive interrogation of Mrs. E. was necessary in order to fill up at least the most essential gaps in her memory. (Hammerschlag, pp. 92, 99)

It took John Nebel months to begin to understand what had been done to Candy. Candy, early on, could not tell what had happened to her, or why Arlene kept popping out. What Arlene managed to divulge, in the beginning, was not sufficient to alert John to the full picture. The shreds of memory produced by Arlene in trance, and by Candy in the conscious state were merely "fragments of the past, unconnected, isolated and without any apparent link to a larger, more cohesive picture..." (Bain, pp. 72-3)

Likewise, Bowart interviewed the hypnoprogrammed ex-military men "several times over a period of two years. Each interview produced additional information as David's memory returned in fragmented, isolated bursts." (Operation Mind Control*, p. 28)

Money

If the damage is light and the hypnotic abuse is minor, therapy sufficient to identify and block induction cues may be affordable. The therapist of choice may be a maverick, because many professionals are full of prejudice and ignorance in their view of this particular type of problem. A "company type" counselor who could get his wages out of insurance probably is not going to give a diagnosis of criminal hypnosis.

If the subject is severely amnesic, any traditional therapy done "properly" will be expensive—because counteracting that amount of damage takes a long time. Dr. Spiegel, in his introduction to Bain's book about Candy Jones spoke of > ...the time and money factors which would have virtually ruled out the use of a professional throughout the many months of hypnotic sessions with Candy...John's intense interest and patience in pursuing this project were necessary if such an abundance of material was to be gained. He was with Candy day and night, an impossible task for any outsider. (Bain, pp. 40-41)

It takes trust and time to deal with hundreds of hours of past criminal hypnosis. Professional help is likely to be prohibitively expensive. The therapy process for a victim of longterm, abusive hypnocontrol, such as Zebediah, Mrs. E., Palle, or Candy Jones, may be too demanding to be handled, financially or logistically, in any conventional hypnotherapeutic setup. Thus, help for the most severely wounded subject may have to come from a volunteer, an amateur.

Therapy by an Amateur

Candy struggled toward mind freedom with her husband, rather than with a paid professional. I was first helped by a wise and wonderful friend who had only a little experience as an amateur hypnotist, but who had a great desire to help and intuitive healing ability.

A survivor of abusive hypnosis needs hypnotherapy, either formal or informal, by that name or by another, by an amateur or by a professional. No two people have the same situation. The best I can do is to provide information about both amateur and professional options. The survivor needs help, but he needs to be picky about who gives it and what form it comes in. Here follows an honest discussion of the possible options. Then, he must keep trying until he finds a friend, or professional, with the necessary qualities and willingness to help.

Therapy by a nonprofessional has both advantages and risks. A survivor could tell more, and more credibly and comfortably, if he or she could normally, directly remember and tell what happened under hypnosis. But the telling, in a situation of systematic suggested amnesia, is most likely to be done by the mind split who contains the memories of time spent under hypnosis. That split is an entirely different self from the root self. It is also invariably an angry, unsocialized one, being the subject's longtime repository of lonely suffering, shame, and mental defeat.

It can be hard for an amateur to deal with a subject's regressions, abreactions, personality parts, mysterious messages from the unconscious, and repressed rage. John Nebel's inability to love—or even tolerate—Candy's Arlene component tragically undermined his effort to help his wife. But credentialed therapists can be inadequate too. They may totally misinterpret the situation and completely reject the interpretation of unethical hypnosis.

Therapy by a Professional

The purpose of treatment is to get the client into better shape than he was before. A hypnotherapist understands techniques that may be useful in dealing with unethical hypnosis: suggested dreams, regression, parts therapy, image transformations, and so on. A hypnotherapist is accustomed to conversing directly with a client's unconscious mind.

The problem is to find a person who 1) will admit that abusive hypnosis can happen (ask up front), 2) is experienced, and 3) has good morals (a good professional reputation). The victim needs to shop carefully. Avoid a therapist who does "past lives," or who has lots of "incest," "alien encounter," or "ritual abuse" clients. He may lean toward asking questions that get those skewed results. If the client is not happy with his therapist, he should find one he likes better. He was not free in his relationship with the predatory hypnotist. He needs now to have a free relationship with the therapist. Nevertheless, it works well if he picks a good helper, and then endures the bad days as well as good ones in the process.

Gender of Helper—Bowart's military interviewees generally had better results with a female therapist than with a male. Is noncoercive female gentleness, nurturing, and emotional support best for a person who has suffered hypnotic bullying in the past? Perhaps. But I also know of female subjects who received good help from a male counselors—some of whom used a paternal technique, some a maternal style.

Training and Credentialing—Hypnotherapy training and credentialing varies over a wide spectrum, from Ph.D. clinical psychologists and M.D. psychiatrists with expertise in hypnosis, to "lay therapists" who may have completed training ranging from three months of nightschool down to a three-day weekend course. Many lay hypnotherapists are knowledgeable, experienced, of high moral character, and have real intuition for healing minds. Others are not, and do not.

(Government oversight of this field hovers between nonexistent, slight, and inappropriate. I am not sure that legislation is the answer when government itself has been a major culprit. It would certainly help, however, for a start, if abusive hypnosis was illegal!)

Some degreed hypnotherapy specialists—M.A., M.D., or Ph.D.—do not advertise hypnotherapy because some professional organizations have, in the past, tried to define hypnotherapy as "quackery by ignorant people." In some cases, that statement is true. On the other hand, some of the best operators out there are lay hypnotherapists.

A psychologist can also be a hypnotherapist, but, in some states, a licensed hypnotherapist may have no other training or credentials except in hypnotherapy. A degree does not guarantee that person is the best candidate for therapist. Lack of a degree does not mean that a certain hypnotherapist cannot help the survivor. Many doctors, dentists, psychologists, psychiatrists, and social workers have training in hypnosis, though they normally do not describe themselves as "hypnotherapists." However, they often have less experience with hypnotherapy than a hypnotherapist, who does nothing but hypnotherapy, and may have more time available.

Beware of clearly unqualified people. John B. Beard, Secretary of Britain's National Council of Psychotherapists and Hypnotherapy Register wrote me about the situation in England:

> It is high time that someone wrote about Hypnosis, its use and misuse...As there is no law concerning the use or demonstration of hypnosis, anyone can do it. You, for instance, could fly over here. Find rooms in which to practice. Advertise. And lo! be a hypnotherapist. The result is that since 1981 (a depression over here) so called hypnotherapists have flooded into the market. If you can't do anything else be a hypnotherapist. There are said to be 67 organisations representing the so called therapists: and perhaps 30 schools "cashing in" on teaching them.
>
> (Personal letter, June 22, 1988)

The Freudian hypnotists have been unique in the hypnosis community in that they have pondered not only the unconscious motivations of a hypnotic subject, but also those of the hypnotist! Pardell said "...the hypnotist is a person who is willing, and perhaps desires, to accept the position of the controlling and omnipotent parent-figure" (p. 486). Pardell also quoted Gill and Brenman's comment on a relevant personality characteristic of hypnotists:

> ...the paradoxical need for simultaneous intimacy and distance...in those who choose to specialize in hypnosis, this paradoxical necessity to establish closeness, and yet retain firm control over the maintenance of necessary psychological distance, is of particular importance. (Ibid)

When Christians Seek Deliverance from Abusive Hypnosis

The Bible specifically warns against hypnosis, again and again. My book makes clear the reasons we are urged to avoid hypnosis. How does a Christian who reads, in the Bible, verse after verse warning us to stay away from hypnotists, recover from a personal history of victimization by criminal hypnosis?

Botulism toxin is one of the most poisonous substances on the planet, yet for certain illnesses, the best treatment is an injection of botulism toxin. A client who is suffering from repressed memories caused by a previous hypnotist needs rehypnotization to undo the damage done by the previous hypnotist. The Christian should not have incurred that damage. But, once it exists, whether by moral carelessness or deceitful predation, the victim needs to be treated for that problem in a state of lowered consciousness.

One choice is a Christian counselor who understands how to work with the client's spontaneous visualizations. Another option is a counselor who works by means of intense (deliverance) prayer states. The best therapy for a victim of criminal hypnosis probably would involve both accessing repressed data, desensitizing, and integrating work involving both the client's imagery and intense prayer.

L. R. Wolberg wrote:

> Hypnosis may also bring out some startling changes in the analyst's feelings and behavior. The seeming helplessness of the patient, and his apparent susceptibility to suggestions, may liberate omnipotent, sadistic and sexual strivings...
> (Wolberg, Hypnoanalysis, p. 2)

There are no simple answers. I would rate experience and reputation higher than credentials. If it were a regular psychological problem, I would advise a person to look for somebody with at least a decade of experience, credibility in the professional community, and a common religious orientation. But, in this situation, somebody young and inexperienced may be more open to the subject's real needs than a person who is heavily indoctrinated with professional dogma. In choosing a helper in the healing process, the survivor should respect his gut reaction. Whoever the subject chooses, he should then trust him. The therapist's ability to help is greatly assisted by the client's trust.

Client-directed Therapy—One of the things that helps to heal a survivor of abusive over-control is to give him control. The survivor may be phobic of any situation involving control, including a therapeutic situation. The survivor may also understand far better than the therapist what happened and what is needed to heal it. Making the survivor a full partner in the process may be hard for therapists who have been trained to manipulate the subject, and to conceal information from him.

Hypnotherapy may be done in the context of almost any healing system: Jungian, behaviorist, psychoanalytic, or generic. If I had to choose just one category, I might look for a Jungian because of openness to client-directed therapy and expertise in working with the right-brain language of imagery. A Jungian therapist will usually allow subject participation, making the client's unconscious a partner in the healing process. I would like to see Christian counselors develop more expertise in the area of direct right-brain communication using the language of symbols. (The lion devours the serpent in order to transform it.)

Reporting Assaults—The law requires credentialed therapists to report assaults. Because this type of case is a classic can of worms, the therapist may feel very uncomfortable at the thought of becoming legally compelled to prosecute the criminal hypnotist. A professional counselor may feel compelled either to report the case as an assault, or to define the subject as mentally ill. If there is to be a court case, tradition demands that the subject be prepared by a new hypnotist to demonstrate somnambulist helplessness and automatism in court. However, the current forensic atmosphere predicts an unwinnable case in court (though, maybe, an out-of-court cash settlement).

Narcohypnosis—Only a psychiatrist can legally do narcohypnosis. It is hard to find one who will, and it is expensive. It is also hard to find one who will do it in an office visit rather during a psychiatric hospitalization. A psychiatrist who is trying to overturn a sealing created under a series of previous drug-inductions, may find it advisable to use suggestion under a new series of drug-inductions to accomplish re-programming. Keep in mind that barbiturate is highly addictive. Drug immersions should be limited to the minimum, and the psychiatrist should immediately begin training, under the drug, for relief of cravings and for a cued nonbarbituate induction.

METHOD TO OVERCOME AMNESIA: THE HEALING, FREEING IMAGE

The biggest roadblock to uncovering the crime of criminal hypnosis is the subject's amnesia. To identify the hypnotic predator(s), to learn how to avoid potential induction situations, to remember real events which have never before been conscious, and to repeal burdensome old suggestions, the subject must overcome amnesia. Overcoming amnesia may be easy, or hard. That depends on what suggestions are in place, how deeply implanted, how well defended, and how gifted the second hypnotist is.

The Myers psychology text says that Kihlstrom (1985) proved that suggested amnesia can be overcome at a prearranged signal, or upon subtle questioning. That makes memory recovery sound easy. Overcoming criminal hypnosis, in reality, is not easy. The criminal operator does not use a prearranged signal to lift the amnesia. He wants it to stay in place. Subtle questioning is unlikely to happen. The subject does not know there is a problem. If the subject's friends and relatives know there is a problem, they do not know what to do, or do not want to get involved. And subtle questioning would work best against only lightly grooved defenses. An amnesia associated with criminal hypnosis is likely to be heavily reinforced.

Remembering Enables Forgetting

To escape, defend himself, and heal, the subject needs to recover at least some of the repressed memories. They are real events which have never before been conscious. They happened and were then inhibited from recall by suggested amnesia. Normally, data passes first through the conscious mind, is evaluated, and then remembered. But in unethical hypnosis, as in multiple personality, the memory NEVER WAS CONSCIOUS. It is not subject to normal memory retrieval.

The repression of amnesia only effects direct retrieval of the memory. Repressed memories cause anxiety and neuroses. Unethical hypnosis can leave, in your unconscious mind, a dump of memories: pain, shame, rage for the careless, cruel damage, anger at the betrayal of trust. What is not conscious cannot be changed. Once a chunk of unconscious programming becomes conscious, however, you can change it.

Remembering also enables forgetting. When memories are available for conscious recollecting, they also become subject to normal processes of forgetting. A repressed memory cannot dissipate any of its pain or shame. Therefore, a repressed memory is stored as an unusually well - preserved memory, its content and emotional load both unmarked by replays, unweakened by the passage of time. That fact makes a repressed memory even harder to remember, because the conscious sector of your mind naturally tends to defend itself against any input that would change its comfortable status quo. It does not like cognitive dissonance.

As a person remembers repressed data, he experiences the linked emotions for the first time. At first, those emotions are very intense. But as that memory is recalled again and again, the pain wears off. Finally, the memory dissipates into a position of equality with other long-past events. That is the normal process of forgetting.

There are many methods to overcome suggested amnesia. The most accessible and powerful single tool to accomplish that purpose is imagery. The imaging ability is usually based in the right brain, and is best described by starting with the basic brain anatomy involved.

One Brain: Three Different Minds

Though, consciously, you perceive yourself as one united mind, that mind is actually the sum and composite of activity from anatomically separate brain centers, and separate subprocessors within those centers. Your conscious and unconscious minds are separate, though linked. Your unconscious has three major divisions: the left brain, right brain, and limbic system. These each have independent capacities, but normally they cooperate.

Limbic System—The limbic system is a complex combination of neural structures tucked between the brainstem/cerebellum and cortex, together with the pituitary and hypothalamus glands. The limbic maintains your autonomic system: body temperature, heart rate, blood pressure, and blood sugar level. The primitive emotions of sex and aggression are also based there. Long-term memory is consolidated there by an organ called the hippocampus. That is not where the memories are stored but, without either of the two parts that together are called the hippocampus, you cannot make new long-term memories. Your limbic system also is the bodily source of that sudden inner sensation of understanding and conviction that is attached to revelations: "Aha! Now I see!"

Cerebrum—The cerebrum contains two hemispheres, your left brain and right brain. It is the biggest part of the brain. The two hemispheres, left and right, are connected by about 300 million neurons in a broad band called the corpus callosum. The two hemispheres, combined, provide you with a dual coding system, one method using mind-pictures (graphics), the other using words. Thus, you have two built-in basic cognitive modes.

Left Brain

In right-handed people, the verbal system is usually based in the left hemisphere. In left-handed people, it may be on either side. We go with the average and call it the "left brain." The left brain specializes in information coded in the form of language. Left brain coding is sequential, a serial system. It is well-suited to a data flow which changes in time sequence: speech. Speech requires it to decode very rapid changes in sound patterns.

Your left brain talks. It does the job of translating the right brain's symbol language into words, and thus provides speech for the nonverbal hemisphere. Using its sequential code ability, the left brain also performs your analytical, logical thinking. It is the hemisphere which does logic and mathematics. Those are all linear thought processes, one symbol at a time. Your left brain is great at analyzing, at dissecting wholes into parts. It is good at additions, deletions, and rearrangements of data order. It is always trying to get a straight-line view, to reduce it all down to things that do not contradict.

Right Brain

The right hemisphere understands some speech, but only up to about a two or three-year-old level. It can produce impulsive, unthinking, automatic speech such as swear words, song words, emotional outbursts, and terms such as "yes," or "no," or "I don't know." (Researchers call those terms overlearned.)

Singing and poetry may seem like verbal skills, but they are actually generated by the right brain rather than the left. Poetry and song lyrics are fairly direct translations of right-brain symbol language, produced, of course, with the cooperation of the left brain speech skill. That is why those particular verbal forms have the right-brain characteristics of intensity and truthfulness. They can reveal some of the painful truth behind a survivor's mask. They can also generate refreshing honesty in relationships. Try talking to your best friend only in poetry composed in the moment, or only in extemporaneous singing, and see what happens! (The music playing behind the lyrics is entirely based in the right brain.)

Right-brain Symbolic Language—Right-brain (in some of the left-handed people, it is the left) coding of data is completely different from the left brain's system. Although it has limited use of language, the right brain mainly uses symbolic (visual) thinking. Symbolic thinking is suited to your sense of sight. It codes data in a viewable graphics language of symbols called imagery. Those symbolic representations are projected onto your mind-screen. You see them in your "mind's eye." The right brain thinks in images by manipulation of visual symbols. It remembers in images. It can communicate directly in images. This mental system is simultaneous, as well as sequential. The data is spread out over a space, all there at once, the simultaneous event. Then one image can transform into another image, a sequential event. Because of that projecting ability, your right brain is expert at illustrating precise relationships of one part to other parts, at conceptualizing parts of a unified whole.

Right-brain Parallel Memory—Stephen Michael Kosslyn, a Harvard professor of psychology, discovered that there is parallel data recording in the left and right brains. This fact is of extreme importance to survivors of unethical hypnosis. Limiting > ..."knowledge" to that which a person can report [verbally]...can be a fundamental error. We are aware of more than we can discuss. (Ornstein and Thompson, The Amazing Brain, p. 156)

Thus, each hemisphere encodes, organizes, reorganizes, stores, and retrieves information in its own distinct—and different—cognitive mode. Each side contains memories of the same events in your life, but the memories are coded in their different modes. Those two memory systems have some other important differences.

The More Reliable Image—Paivio discovered that right-brain memory is more reliable than left-brain memory. Bower confirmed that fact. Paivio showed pictures and words to people, then tested their recall of them. They remembered the pictures more easily than the words. The independent memory record in your right brain is less subject to "decay" caused by the ravages of time and trauma than is verbal memory (Paivio, 1972; Bower, 1972).

The Inductive Image—Visualization tends to lower consciousness. By projective techniques, your unconscious can be accessed without a formal trance induction. A common method for inducing trance in children is to tell them to imagine watching a favorite TV program. A common technique for adult hypnotherapy, when dealing with unconscious resistance, is to suggest the subject watch an imaginary TV or movie screen. Then the therapist suggests that images or action will appear on that screen which explain a symptom. Or, the patient may be told to dream of what caused the problem. The suggested dream is a projective technique for accessing repressed information.

The more time a person spends visualizing, and the more he concentrates on the visualizing, the deeper he will go. The deeper the trance, the more power the imagery projections have to access repressed material and solve problems. Visualization can evade sealing commands. As the trance deepens, images tend to become more autonomous. Autonomous imagery is, technically, a hallucination, but as long as you know it is just imagery, and not real, it is under control.

The Freer Image—Data recorded in the right brain is far less subject to censoring and far more easily retrieved than data recorded in the left brain. Repression and denial are based in the verbal, left hemisphere. The imaging side of the brain is willing to tell. It cannot verbalize without the left brain's cooperation, but it can visualize. Hypnotic suggestions to "not know" may tie left-brain memory into "nots," but the subject's right brain remains willing and able to show what it knows!

> When are images used in remembering?...we use imagery if we...cannot deduce the information from other stored descriptions...[or] if an appropriate description has been stored but is too difficult to remember. (Kosslyn, p. 175)

In suggested amnesia, the left, verbal sector of the brain has become inhibited from retrieving certain information. It has acquired a rule against talking about that. It will lie, or "forget," to keep that truth concealed from its own conscious mind, in obedience to the hypnotist. The right brain, however, may project, in images, what the left brain dares not put into words. The survivor may then find it possible to deal with the problems that the images represent. Working with the images can result in growing strength and objectivity.

Thinking With Images

What the left brain is censoring, the right brain can show, but only by methods that do not require involvement of the verbal hemisphere. Those methods are called projective techniques. Projective tests draw on the parallel resource of right-brain memory, eliciting responses in the form of drawn or visualized images or stories. Any projection draws on the special memory, honesty, and talents of your right brain. Each image will be uniquely personalized, frankly exposing the truth about the contents and organization of your personal unconscious. The Rorschach ink blot test, the telling of fairy tales, the drawing or sculpting of answers to questions, and the TAT (Thematic Apperception Test) are projective techniques.

Image Generating—There are three necessary steps in thinking with images: image generating, image inspecting, and image manipulating or transformation. First, we "see" it: image generating.

Image Inspecting—Then, we examine what we are seeing: image inspecting. Since the right-brain images are all linked in networks of association, we can move from viewing one image to viewing another: "one image, or one part of an image, gives rise to another, as one step in a [computer] program leads to another." (Kosslyn, Ghosts in the Mind's Machine, p. 93) The linked images are an important tool by which people with amnesia can recover their memories.

Image Manipulating—If the image can be viewed, it can be healed. Healing is accomplished by merging, manipulating, and transforming the images. In the right brain, two contradictory ideas can be visualized at the same time. If the images change, either spontaneously or deliberately, that is image manipulating, or image transformation.

The symbols are likely to lead the subject's conscious mind straight to the trouble and to begin maneuvering it into the necessary steps to fix it. The unconscious, like most body parts, may have a self-healing, self-balancing function. Accordingly, it will automatically attempt to accomplish damage control, and to repair damage already done.

Every time a person works with images in a visualization, he will make progress, and he will become more knowledgeable about what his personal vocabulary of right-brain symbols stands for. When a right brain image merger or transformation occurs, it can resolve a deep conflict. The astonishing thing is, if a person changes the image he visualizes, his deep-level inner programming which that image represents changes too! If a person's inner programming has changed, since the last time he looked at the images on the mind screen, his visualized imagery will display that change!

By means of symbol transformation, his former state (the original symbol) is linked to his new state (the revised symbol). This is how a person can change without losing the connected thread of who he is. In the visualization process, he literally SAW the problem, and he can see the progress in dealing with it. For example, a symbol representing the predatory hypnotist may begin as an enormous, terrifying figure. As progress it made, it will gradually become smaller, and less frightening. Symbol transformation is associated with deep emotion and real change in a subject and the direction of his life. It is one way that any person can heal, change, get insight, and grow.

The Image as a Hypnotherapy Tool

One of the therapist's problems is to figure out what right-brain language information is being communicated in the symbolic images. Experience, intuitive sensitivity, and some Jungian exposure all would be helpful in that. A good hypnotherapist knows how to guide the subject's imagery in ways that remove blocks to memory. (Wolberg has many neat tricks for that.)

Dealing with Frightening Images—If a survivor has repressed traumatic memories, those memories are likely to first appear as abstract frightening images. Frightening images should neither be avoided nor confronted. Instead, the block should be approached gradually, gently, and in a context of the fantasy (imagery). It is the very process of working with the symbol representing the block which nudges it toward depotentiation (release of its energy, its "power"). Guided visualizations involving frightening images both deepen trance and accomplish desensitization.

Covert Desensitization—Covert desensitization is a useful healing tool for survivors of abusive hypnosis. Words did the harm; words can also do the healing. In the 60s and 70s, J. R. Cautela pointed out that an imag-

Emotion

Symbols generate emotion, which equals drive energy. Both symbols and emotion tend to lower consciousness. A situation causes emotion if you perceive it symbolically. Symbols for emotion in your mind are autonomous, creative—and not necessarily rational. Symbols that cause emotion have the potential to change you deeply. Cognitive psychologists call symbolic, emotional cognition, hot, to distinguish it from the blander nonsymbolic, nonemotional type of cold thought.

The basic emotional spectrum is strung between the two opposites of love and fear. This is the basic polarity of love versus anxiety, "go to" versus "flee from." Hope makes you "go to." Fear makes you "flee from." Thus emotions draw us toward the essence of hope, or activate us to avoid danger. A state of mental conflict occurs when a need to go to crashes into a need to flee from.

Emotion is goal-directed. It has a purpose, and that purpose is to change things. When you feel an emotion of shame or regret, you have already begun the possibility of change. Feelings of shame or regret are a wonderful opportunity to change for the better.The act of feeling the emotion (abreaction), itself, represents change. Until you feel emotion associated with a certain inner programming, that programming is walled off from the option of change.

ined event in the mind is nearly identical to a real event in the mind. (He used the word "covert" to mean purely mental, imaginary, events.) Therefore, conditioning by having a "relaxed" subject imagine doing various things can be just as effective as if he actually does those things.

Covert desensitization is accomplished by making a subject imagine a series of events for which he is phobic, progressing from less scary visualizations to bolder ones until the phobia is fully dealt with and deactivated, "desensitized." Many later researchers have confirmed that principle: what a person does in his imagination transfers to how he reacts and what he does in reality. A victim of unethical hypnosis can be helped by a series of visualizations in which, at last, real secrets are revealed and the unethical hypnotist is defied and defeated in imagery.

Guided Fantasy—In "Projective Hypnoanalysis" (Chapter 19 in Le Cron's Experimental Hypnosis), J. G. Watkins proposed imaginative and powerful hypnotherapy methods, which he called brief therapy. One method was for the hypnotized client to begin, and then elaborate, a fantasy. Watkins said that the > ...unconscious, given enough protection through disguised fantasy projections under hypnosis, will often make known its true purposes and strengths.

> (Watkins in Le Cron, Experimental Hypnosis, p. 451)

Help for the Healing Process

The unconscious mind's goalsetting mechanism looks for and carries out ways to enact what its conscious mind wants. The goals it works to achieve are the things that person has thought about wanting. Conventional hypnotherapeutic wisdom advises people who wish to be more effective in carrying out goal-directed actions to: First, decide on your goal. Second, again and again, imagine yourself, vividly, in a state of achievement of that goal. By constantly visualizing the goal, you leave it up to your unconscious to find the route to get there. When one attempt does not work, it automatically reroutes you to another. Anything you try helps, because with every try you learn more about what works and what does not.

I must add that, in my case, at the beginning, although I had some pertinent data, I did not fully understand it. I did not know what it was that I needed to pray for. It was after I asked Jesus, with a simple, humble prayer, to forgive my sins, and to come into my heart, that I began to experience the astonishing freeing and empowering events, the guidance and protection which has culminated in this book. As part of that process, I visualized healing imagery with good success. In fact, after I became a Christian, everything I tried helped—at least some.

Right-brained or Left-brained?

Some people tend to think in pictures; others in words. Some people cannot visualize. Some, if asked to visualize, will describe something real from their past experience rather than something imaginary, but at least they can project it onto their mind screen. Those people who can consciously think with images, using them as visual representations of real feelings, objects, or actions have, if needed, an easier road to overcoming amnesia and healing.

Picture thinkers, because their dominant hemisphere is the right, are called right-brained; word thinkers are left-brained. Politicians and philosophers tend to be left-brained thinkers. Poets and sculptors are right-brained thinkers. Thinking in pictures, to any degree, is associated with creativity. Thinking in extremely clear, vivid images, and/or having the ability to control those images, is associated with genius (and with hypnotizability). Some fortunate people are gifted in both hemispheres.

If a "split-brain" operation (lobotomy) cuts through the corpus callosum, the right and left brains are unable to communicate and coordinate their actions. In that situation, the right brain--emotional, creative, and holistic--can no longer hook up to the left brain for its verbal expression. The left brain is deprived of the passionate creative intensity of the right. The verbally expressed personality becomes flat and dull.

These two hemispheres, each with its own mind, its own language, its own special expertises, can function in cooperation or independently, simultaneously or separately. If a task is specialized for one side, then the appropriate hemisphere activates, and the other idles. Both types of coding, verbal/sequential and graphics/wholistic are invaluable. They cannot be done simultaneously in the same brain site. People have to have separate brain centers in which to do them. And we do.

Sometimes, the two unconscious minds (left and right) do not agree with each other. In that case, they may struggle for supremacy. ("One part of me thinks this, but another part of me thinks that...") When they do agree on a goal, however, their complementary approaches provide you with a wonderful, total, problem-solving ability.

OTHER METHODS TO OVERCOME AMNESIA

Working with imagery is an excellent way to overcome amnesia, but it is not the only one. Here follows a list of eight other significant methods to overcome amnesia: 1) persistent questioning, 2) ideomotor techniques, 3) hypnagogic crossover, 4) association, 5) guessing, 6) recognition, 7) regression under rehypnotization, and 8) narcohypnosis.

1) Persistent Questioning

Some research results show that posthypnotic amnesia may yield to persistent questioning. First, discover the subject's conscious memories relating to the unethical hypnosis, then follow the trail where it goes. It helps if you ask specific questions because the subject is usually blocked against volunteering information. "Just talking," the usual model for therapy, takes an extraordinary amount of time for a survivor of unethical hypnosis to accomplish only a little.

The survivor may, therefore, be grateful to friends who are willing to extract information, question by question. Or a subject may find it easier to tell from his right brain, in the form of suggested writing, drawing, sculpting, or singing projects. What works best depends on the exact wording of his "secret, don't tell" suggestions. For example, one subject can write it, but cannot speak it. Another is just the opposite.

There are two notable problems with the technique of persistent questioning. A subject may just be more firmly silent when pursued with direct questions, if they stimulate blocking suggestions. When friends are patient and do not ask, that survivor may be more able to confide the part of the hypnosis story which she consciously knows.

The other problem is that the technique of leading questions is known to generate confabulated material. So, be sensitive as to whether this technique is getting results—and if they are accurate. Confabulated material does not, of itself, disprove the possibility of unethical hypnosis, but it certainly muddies the water and makes discernment of the true facts of the case more difficult.

Possible Questions

- Who did it to you?
- What can you remember?
- What are you unable to remember?
- How old were you when it began?
- How many years were you in an active relationship with your hypnotist?
- How did he hypnotize you the first time?
- How did he deepen the trance?
- What is the induction cue? Do you know of more than one?

Leading Questions

One day, in hypnotherapy class, Tebbetts taught us how to give our subjects a "past-life experience." "I don't believe in that," he said. "It's just a hallucination. But if you believe in it, or if your client does and wants to have one, I can show you how to give them one." (Two people in the class intended to make a living by inducing past-life hallucinations.)

Tebbetts then gave the class a specific sequence of instructions which would induce a hypnotized subject to imagine some experience from "a past life." He illustrated by telling us about the case of a client who "paid me a good sum to take him to a 'past life,' so I did." That customer had lacked imagination, but was eager for the past-life experience. Tebbetts said, "I made up his past life for him because he couldn't do it for himself." Tebbetts made clear that it was just a matter of getting a deep enough trance for hallucination to be possible, and then giving the proper leading questions, or suggestions.

The technique of asking leading questions was used by interrogators during the Inquisition to push accused persons, who were already shocked and tortured into a deeply suggestible state, to imagine that they had been sleeping with demons, or riding broomsticks. The method was rediscovered, in 1829, by a European, Dr. G. P. Billot, who > ...found that by means of leading questions (a technique which had been employed earlier by exorcists in demonic possession cases) he could induce patients in trance to announce that they were possessed by spirits. The spirits claimed to be the guardian angels of the patients, through whom they communicated... (Sargant, The Mind Possessed, p. 43)

Inducing a conversation with angels is currently in vogue with hypnotists, as is past lives, alien abduction, and recovery of childhood memories of sexual abuse. Leading questions, used by social workers with young children (who basically walk around in a state of trance all the time), has resulted in an epidemic of false sexual abuse charges.

- Were drugs ever used in your hypnotraining?

- Have you ever been electroshocked?

- Can you remember your childhood?
- What posthypnotic suggestions were you given?

2) Ideomotor Techniques

Answers regarding repressed memories may be obtained using ideomotor techniques without having to consciously remember painful details. An ideomotor response does not need a hypnotic induction to happen, so sealing is not an obstacle to it. Any ideomotor response is a dissociated one. What you get depends on which brain neurons get directly hooked up to the hand muscles, what the designated rules for ideomotor behavior are, and what programming has been suggested.

Chevruel's Pendulum—A simple way of ideomotor questioning requires a small pendulum, such as a washer or a ring tied onto the end of a ten-inch string. There are four possible pendulum swings and, therefore, four possible answers: clockwise circle, counterclockwise circle, back and forth to your left and right, or up and down in front of you. The four answers can be: 1) yes; 2) no; 3) I don't know; 4) I don't want to answer the question.

You choose what movement will mean "yes" (such as back and forth); and what movement will mean "no" (such as up and down). Or, start by asking the unconscious what swing directions it prefers for which answer. Do that by thinking "yes," and see what swing you get. Write the answer on a visible card for ready reference. Then do the same for the other motions and write the results on the card.

The argument for confining responses to only "yes" or "no" is that it keeps it simple. Most ideomotor systems allow only a "yes" or "no" response. Ever played Twenty Questions? Then you know that a series of yes/no questions, patiently asked, can get to the factual bottom of practically any problem, if you do it right and persistently. The argument against using only the yes/no choice, however, is that, if you ask something the unconscious really does not know, it may come up with a pretend (confabulated) answer. (State over and over that you want the TRUTH, only the TRUTH.)

This swinging pendulum is called Chevreul's pendulum, having been invented, in 1833, by a Frenchman, Chevreul. Chevreul also proved that the movements of a dowser's rod and of an ideomotor-operated pendulum were both unconsciously activated. (Yes, dowsing is "real." Flowing water creates an electromagnetic field which can be unconsciously discerned by about half the people who try.) LeCron pioneered the use of ideomotor responses in the United States using a Chevreul's pendulum, or finger signals ("Raise your thumb for 'no,' your index finger for 'yes.'")

Automatic Writing—You are talking on the phone. Unconsciously, your hand doodles on the note pad. That is a type of automatic writing. If your hand writes what your conscious mind has not previewed and does not know, it is doing automatic writing. It can happen in or out of hypnosis, with or without conscious awareness. It can happen spontaneously, or as a result of a direct command during hypnosis (e.g., hypnotist tells your hand to write without you being aware that it is writing, and without you knowing what it is writing), or as a posthypnotic suggestion.

E. R. Hilgard defined automatic writing as > ...either totally out of awareness, while the writer is preoccupied with something else, or, if he is aware of it, he does not feel that he is its author. This latter case is rather like that of dreams, in which a remembered dream is a conscious product, but the authorship of the dream is obscure. (The Hidden Observer, Ch. 7 "Automatic Writing and Divided Attention")

Your hand is connected to a dissociated center of consciousness and is writing a message or opinion from that dissociated center. It is a trance technique for accessing unconscious knowledge.[1] "Automatic writing...is often resorted to when resistance or objection to verbalization is encountered...[the hypnotized person is] told that his hand will automatically start to write." (Marcuse, p. 129) So, if you have been instructed under hypnosis that "you can't tell," you cannot. But the 99-and-some dissociated neurons that rise to the challenge of the instruction, "your hand will automatically start to write," quite likely consider themselves unencumbered by the command to "you." Being in the unconscious, they are used to thinking for themselves. They may, thus given permission, be willing to directly communicate what they know—and that is automatic writing.

What you write automatically is likely to be something repressed and important to you. The painful, repressed data is like steam under great pressure held in by the wall of prohibiting repression. Given the slightest opening and encouragement, it will find a way, some way, out!

---

1. Automatic writing is also common in occult circles for other uses.

> Automatic writing is a splendid means of gaining access to unconscious material that lies beyond the grasp of conscious recall. The portion of the cerebrum that controls the automatic writing seems to have access to material unavailable to the centers that control speech. This is possibly because graphic activity eludes the vigilance of the ego better than does speech. Consequently hypnotic verbalization of feelings and impulses may not yield information as vital as that brought up through automatic writing. (Wolberg, Hypnoanalysis, p. 176)

Automatic writing under hypnosis has also been used as an ideomotor barrier against lying or confabulation in forensic hypnosis: "If you do not tell the truth, your hand will write the correct answer without you controlling it. Nor will you know what the hand is writing." Automatic writing has also been, on occasion, an outlet for confabulated material.

3) Hypnagogic Crossover

Information can cross from the unconscious to the conscious during the times just before you fall asleep (hypnogogic) and when you are just waking up (hypnopompic). During those two daily periods of natural trance, you can give instruction to your unconscious. You can also receive reminders or realizations from it.

4) Association

Technically, this memory system is called redintegration. People naturally remember in association with preexisting knowledge. Any new datum is linked by neuronal connections to related, known data. The memories are like beads on a string, or like strands in a complex web. One thing reminds you of another, and then another. Stream-of-consciousness association can free repressed data. Association, while in trance—deep trance, works even better.

You can associate from word to word, or from symbol to symbol. Just follow the series. Associating may lead you to obscene ideas, painful memories, or problem notions about the person to whom you are speaking. To make this work, you have to set aside criticism and concentrate on the goal of getting out the information. The end of a chain of associations is usually where the most repressed thought, and, therefore, a very powerful one is located.

5) Guessing

A survivor of hypnosis with suggested amnesia knows more than he consciously knows that he knows. Any guess about the missing information may be based on his unconscious knowing, and therefore quite possibly correct. The phenomenon of being able to remember the information by guessing, even though you cannot consciously remember the source of your information, is called source amnesia.

> They uniformly denied recognition of the stimulus figures, but once in a while they gave a correct response word, declaring that it seemed to come to them from nowhere. (R.W.White, 1942, p. 315)

A related phenomenon appears when a subject tries to relearn amnestic information. It is much easier to learn information the second time, even though memory from the first learning is not conscious.

6) Recognition

Long-term memory in the brain is catalogued by cue words similar to the way an on-line search system, or the index of a book, works. In the same way, we use an index system to retrieve data from long-term memory. So, you might remember an incident pertaining to a fish by first thinking of names of different kinds of fish. The more associations you have in your mental index, with a piece of data, the easier it is to remember.

In a later hypnosis, the subject, if so directed, will recall what happened in previous trances:

> The hypnotized subject seldom remembers, on awaking, the events which occurred during his hypnotic sleep. On the other hand, when he is asleep his memory embraces all the facts of his sleep, of his waking state, and of previous hypnotic sleeps. Binet and Fere (p. 135)
>
> "...the subject remembers in hypnosis all that has happened in previous hypnosis." Moll
>
> ...amnesia may cease as a result of a new hypnosis...[with] an order not to forget the content of the hypnosis after waking, or the order may simply be issued in hypnosis that everything be remembered after waking. Schilder & Kauders, Hypnosis, p. 60
>
> If he were replaced in a deep trance, he would be able to recall every incident that happened in his previous trance. Most patients can remember word for word the suggestions given to them in previous seances. Gindes, p. 33
>
> Acts of one trance are usually recalled, either spontaneously or at command, during another trance... William James, The Principles of Psychology, p. 602
>
> ...a person under hypnosis will recall all that has happened to him in previous hypnotic states, if you suggest that he do so. Powers, Hypnotism Revealed, p. 24

If the tester gives four choices and says "Just pick one," the person with source amnesia is more likely to pick the right one than is somebody who never knew the answer at all. The clue can come from the subject's own mind, or somebody else can give it to him. Recognition methods start with a hint or question directed at the subject. He then uses association to access the concealed memories which are unconsciously linked to that clue. The recognition happens because what he heard or saw aroused the memory of what has been forgotten.

Cues can help recover less accessible memories, but they can also result in unconscious fabrication. When you can remember just a few facts about something, you may use those facts to create a seemingly logical reconstruction of the original scene—and that logical reconstruction may be incorrect. Those logical, but false, "facts" are called constructive errors.

7)Regression under Rehypnotization

Wolfort wrote of a woman who recalled, under rehypnosis, all that had happened in a hypnotization thirteen years before. Zebediah, Mrs. E, Palle, and Candy all recovered information by rehypnotization, then were told what had happened by their psychiatrist. Candy's multitude of spontaneous regressions occurred over a period of months, during which she recovered the basic facts of what had happened during Jensen's previous hypnoses of her.

The best results in rehypnotization of survivors have been achieved by profound hypnotic states, avoidance of leading questions, and maintainance of temporary amnesia. Progress required prolonged effort by the psychiatrist to deepen, unblock, and regress the subject. In some cases, it worked better to regress him to childhood first, then to approach the target period from those earlier years, rather than attempt to regress the subject straight back to the problem.

In revivification, the most authentic type of regression, the operator is an anachronism if the subject did not know him at the regressed age. John solved the problem of operator anachronism in Candy's case by role playing somebody contemporary in the relived scene, usually Dr. Jensen.

State-dependent Learning—Rehypnosis is necessary to remember events that originally happened in a state of trance, because you remember something best if you are in the same mental state as the one in which you originally committed that bit of data to memory. That phenomenon is called state-dependent learning. It may happen in the same mood, the same state of consciousness. Therefore, you tend to recover memories of depression in depression, joy in joy, pain in pain, and so on. And, what you experienced under hypnosis, is most easily remembered under a subsequent hypnosis. What you experienced in childhood may also be easily remembered under hypnosis. Perhaps that is because, as Charles Tebbetts said to my hypnotherapy class, "Children are in a state of hypnosis all the time."

Liegeois told of a young girl who worked as a house servant. She was a somnambulist who had been experimented on at length by some unknown person. That may have predisposed her to dissociations. Her mistress was rich and had certain valuable jewels. One day, in a spontaneously dissociated (daydreaming?) state of mind, the servant girl moved the jewels from one place to another, thinking they would be safer in the new place. Afterwards, she did not remember that she had moved them, or why.

When neither the mistress nor the girl could find the jewels a few days later, the mistress believed her servant had stolen them. She pressed charges. The girl was jailed.

Dr. Dufay was at the jail on other business. He recognized the imprisoned servant as the hypnotic subject of his colleague and talked with her. She explained her situation. Dufay hypnotized and questioned her about the matter. She then recalled moving the jewels, and why, and where. Dufay persuaded the judge to listen to the girl. The judge, himself, went to the house where she had worked, and located the jewels just where she had said, in trance they would be. She was freed.

She had been in a spontaneous trance when she moved the jewels. It was in another trance (rehypnotization), that she remembered.

Breaking a Seal—Before rehypnosis can be accomplished, the survivor of criminal hypnosis will probably have to be unsealed. A person who has been sealed by one hypnotist can be unsealed by a subsequent one. A hypnotist, encountering a client who is clearly under a sealing command, may respect operator territoriality and refuse to help. Or, he may try to unseal. This can work if the previous operator is out of the scene and will not be giving counter-commands.

Teitlebaum described how to break seals as well as how to place them. All his seal-breaking methods involved disguised induction. The clinician must evade the subject's implanted barriers to induction:

> ...a well placed seal can be broken only by indirection and trickery. Where the subject has been hypnotized by the use of "sleep" words, it may be very easy for a physician to break the seal through a relaxation technic without any mention of the fact that he is going to hypnotize the subject and without any use of the word "sleep." (Teitlebaum, Hypnotic Induction Techniques, p. 110)

He gave examples of such "trickery." His "Sealbreaker Technic A" suggested that the subject close his eyes and remember being inducted, the very first time, by the original hypnotist: a piggybacking induction reinforcement. The subject is directed to think of the exact words which were used and to reexperience the feelings and actions of that previous induction. A disguised induction can apply to natural amnesias also. Two hypnotherapists, speaking of an amnesia case wrote, "As is typical in amnesia, the block to memory was strong against a direct assault but relatively weak against a 'back door' approach." (Kelly & Kelly, pp. 138-9)

However, if the previous hypnotist obtains access to the subject again, he may turn the tables and reseal. In any contest for control of the subject, there are some built-in aspects that favor the original hypnotist. 1) Extinction of previous conditioning tends to not be absolute because of the tendency for earlier conditioning to be dominant over later conditioning. 2) The original hypnotist may have more conditioning density (number of times hypnosis was induced). 3) The original hypnotist, if unethical, may have associated greater trauma with conditioning and greater emotional intensity tends to dominate over lesser in conditioning. Nevertheless, if the subject wants to get free badly enough, God willing, all those difficulties may be overcome.

Cognitive Dissonance

Cognitive dissonance is the opposite problem from confabulation. Something really did happen in the subject's life, but he or she is denying it. Why? Because thoughts (cognition) that are logically inconsistent cause discomfort. And thoughts that do not fit with the way we want to think things are tend to be rejected. We need logic in our perception and consistency in our thinking. People reject information if it contradicts their preexisting ideas. It is a don't-bother-me-with-facts- because -my-mind -is-already-made-up response. If the doctor suddenly says you have three months to live, your first reaction will be denial. What he said is cognitively dissonant with the expectations you had for your life expectancy.

8) Narcohypnosis

The other established way to bypass a sealing is by narcohypnosis, what Reiter did with Palle. Narcohypnosis sent Palle deep enough into trance to dislodge Nielsen's influence. Narcohypnotic induction slices through induction blocks like a knife through warm butter.

The therapist, however, needs to be prepared for the possibility that the subject may have post-hypnotic programming to stop breathing in case of drug induction, mimicking respiratory failure caused by barbiturate overdose. In that case, the therapist must combine verbal suggestions to breathe with suggestions to remove the causative programming, between breaths. It may take two or more narcohypnotic sessions with this "artificial" breathing to deactivate the suicide programming.

Obviously, that subject must be kept safe from any further programming by the previous operator! There is also likely to be an implanted suggestion to report back to the original operator if the seal is broken. Suggestions should also be given to block that and/or keep the subject safe from opportunities for recontact by the predator.

Corroboration—When recovering amnestic information, the subject does not know beforehand exactly what memories will emerge. Afterward, he has no absolute assurance that the recovered data is accurate, although anything from the unconscious will always feel true to a subject. Recovered memory can be corroborated, however, by direct memory, context clues, and verification of details produced under trance, as the police did in the cases of Palle Hardwick and Mrs. E.

Therapy Techniques

Progress in therapy goes hand in hand with strengthening of the ego.

Wolberg, Hypnoanalysis, pp. 242-243

A hypno-abuse survivor's unconscious wants safety and healing. It wants the pain and fear to stop. It wants recovery of what was lost. It wants what was broken apart to be reunited, whole and healthy again. Hypnotherapy is one logical framework in which to work on those goals of safety and healing.

Hypnotherapy Class

In July, 1990, I enrolled in a three-month evening course in the basics of hypnosis and hypnotherapy at the Charles Tebbetts School of Hypnotherapy. Tebbetts, professor of hypnotherapy, age 85, often told us stories from his long and colorful life. He told of being a young, itinerant stage hypnotist when a doctor came up after a show and said to him, "Boy, that's a powerful thing. You could help a lot of people with it. Most of my patients think themselves sick." The doctor offered Tebbetts a job as his "psychologist"—if he would teach him hypnosis. Tebbetts accepted. A year later, the doctor had learned hypnosis. He was "curing" patients much faster using disguised inductions. But he did not want them to know he was using hypnosis, so he swore his psychologist to silence.

The Class—Professor Tebbetts had two books in print, Miracles on Demand and Self-Hypnosis and Other Mind-Expanding Techniques. We read his books at home. During each three-hour class, we spent about two hours listening to him lecture and watching videotapes of his past hypnotherapy sessions. The last hour, we practiced hypnotizing, and doing therapy, on each other, and on clients who received free treatment if they would let themselves be subjects. The course required 150 hours of attendance, plus detailed practice sessions, exams, etc.

My classmates included a psychologist, an M.D., a minister, a salesman with Neuro-Linguistic Programming training, a couple of housewives, and a Hindu yogi. Class attendance varied from six to twelve. I observed that most of these hypnotists, or would-be hypnotists, were fairly moral persons who sincerely wanted to use their skills to help, not to harm. I also observed one potential rotten apple in the barrel. And I saw a lot of naivete about what could go wrong in a hypnotic relationship.

Induction Training—A hypnotherapy relationship starts with a pre-induction interview. Among the questions we learned to ask were: "Have you ever been hypnotized? How long ago? For what purpose? What was your response?" "Do you have any fears or phobias?" A big phobia of mine was hypnosis. Now, four nights a week I heard hypnosis, watched hypnosis, hypnotized other people, and let other students practice hypnosis inductions on me as I fulfilled my requirement to do a certain number of hypnotherapy treatments and help other students fulfill theirs. I was not able to go into deep trance, but I made progress towards overcoming my discomfort with somebody trying.

I noticed that I was not the only person in there with induction resistance. A few students claimed "I can't be hypnotized," or would not let anybody try, or would limit the depth. Were they sealed? I knew I was. But if they knew they were sealed, they never said so. Most of the students, however, had a trusting attitude toward other hypnotists, submitted readily to trance induction, and were easily hypnotized.

Tebbetts taught us to listen for the deep sigh that signals a lowering state of consciousness. To coax a subject deeper and deeper, he advised us to "Keep offering them rewards: You'll feel better, feel happier, be healthier, etc."

Amnesia Suggestion—One evening in class, Tebbetts told us about a client who came to him, asking to be made to forget something. "He wouldn't even tell me what it was he wanted to forget, but that's okay." "Did you make him forget?" a student asked. "Oh, sure," Tebbetts said. "I took him down the tunnel of forgetfulness. I said to him, 'I'm going to lead you through the tunnel of forgetfulness. And now you're in it and it is forgotten, forgotten, gone." He chuckled, remembering.

I listened, shocked with recognition. Again and again, in years past, I had worked with the image of that tunnel. My lost memories were in it. Sometimes, when I had tried to get at them, I saw it as blocked by a strong wooden door which was padlocked. Sometimes, I managed to get in there and remember things, but it was never easy. Was the tunnel stock imagery used by hypnotists to make people lose their memory of something? Or was the tunnel a universal unconscious symbol for forgetting?

A tunnel, by definition, is underground, under cover. Maybe that's why memories left "in the tunnel" would be understood by the unconscious as an instruction to keep them unconscious (covered up, forgotten). The meaning of images in the right brain graphics language interested me. I had already learned that the visualized image of a key usually communicates something about the subject's attitude toward knowledge. The mind-screen image of a container usually represents the subject's capacity to love.

Ethical Issues

I am sure that Professor Tebbetts knew about unethical hypnosis, but he adamantly denied that fact in class. Perhaps he reasoned that, if his students thought it was not possible, they would never try. He did discuss the problem of sex. He considered sexual involvement with a client unspeakable and unthinkable. He said of one "famous" hypnotist "He's an egomaniac, an immoral person, a cheater. I've got a long list of women he's molested. He propositioned about four or five girls here while doing his therapy."

Tebbetts said that past lives[1] were just a suggested hallucination. "I don't believe in them, but I'll show you how to make a client have one." And he did. He told about a client who came to him wanting a past life. "He didn't have any imagination, so I made it up for him," Tebbetts chuckled.

Limiting Number of Sessions—Tebbetts was not religious, but he was often ethical. He emphasized to us, over and over, that hypnosis was a powerful tool for reprogramming to get quick results. He firmly agreed with the position of the Holy See that "continued subjection to hypnosis is 'morally' wrong." He said that more than a few sessions with a subject would tend to set up an unhealthy dependency in the subject. He emphasized that we should not need to work with a client more than one, two, or at the most three, sessions to solve his problem. He described how he firmly, even rudely, extricated himself from the usual client yearnings to keep the relationship going (because of the rapport phenomenon and the cortical excitation of lowering consciousness). He was dead set against hypnotist-subject relationships that continue overlong—into potential monetary exploitation and development of psychological dependence. The most sessions Tebbetts ever gave a client was twelve.

That client had a severe physical illness with psychosomatic roots. He was not completely cured, but he was significantly improved. Then Tebbetts refused to see him any more.

Tebbetts Hypnotherapy Techniques

Tebbetts mixed words of wisdom with his hypnotherapy techniques: "Start building up their self-esteem from the moment they sit down."

Correcting a Misprogramming—Tebbetts approached therapy like a computer programmer. He identified the symptom he intended to cure in the pre-induction interview. He then did an induction, deepened the trance, and began his search for the presumed misprogramming that was the cause of that symptom. Tebbetts believed that every symptom was caused by a problem in the subject's previous mental programming. He taught us that our first task as a hypnotherapist was to uncover the symptom's cause—to identify the misprogramming.

He taught us a wide array of techniques by which to discover the misprogramming. Good hypnotherapy, he said, meant probing, trial and error, the sense to know when paydirt was hit, and the skill to shift smoothly from one uncovering technique to another until you came to one that worked. One source of an unconscious misprogramming could be something said to a child, years ago, that was misunderstood, or unconsciously overstressed. "An imprint by an authority figure means that's your truth." The client usually is not consciously aware of the misprogramming, and that is its power.

Our second task was to get them to relive the event of the misprogramming with feeling, classic abreaction: "The memory which provokes the symptom must be brought into consciousness. The feelings associated with it must be reexperienced because you're dealing with the FEELING," he said. So, the subjects had to reexperience the guilt, shame, or anger. Only then, could we take it away.

---

[1] It is easy to confuse "past lives," which are confabulated, with psychic events of mental time travel, even experiences enveloped in another person's life, for which there is evidence.

Our final task was to cure that symptom by talking to, and reprogramming, the now exposed unconscious memory. Tebbetts taught us to begin a regression by telling the subject, "You're taking all your present knowledge and experience back with you."

Then, he supplemented the client's "knowledge and experience" with his own logic. He said the key problem was usually that the unconscious was operating on immature, childish logic and needed to be supplied with mature, adult logic. Therefore, Tebbetts undertook to supply the client with a "subconscious reeducation." He said, "Hypnotherapy is changing childish perceptions into adult understanding."

First, Tebbetts would explain, to the problem part, the functional difficulty its symptom was causing the root self. Then he would speak the missing logic into the unconscious system to correct the misprogramming, because the unconscious mind cannot supply that logic for itself. So, he would talk and talk mature common sense to the hypnotized client, suggesting beliefs that could work better than those upon which he had previously been basing his behavior. After the client acquired conscious awareness of the misprogramming, the release of its hidden emotion, and the application of mature logic to it, the symptom would usually disappear. The problem was resolved.

Parts Therapy—Tebbetts specialized in "parts therapy." Tebbetts said, "Everybody has two or three." Tebbetts said that any client who had internal conflict was a candidate for parts therapy: "Indecision and ambivalence are signs that parts therapy is needed."

Most people do not realize, unless they have been through this sort of hypnotherapy, how distinctly different and embattled their various aspects of personality can be—even responding in different-sounding voices when called forth by the hypnotherapist to unburden, explain, and negotiate. To students in our class who were unfamiliar with the behavior of personality parts during trance, it seemed pretty weird: hypnotizing the subject, calling out a part, asking its name, getting the parts to dialogue with each other, hearing one personality part refer to another in the third person as "she" or "he," though only speaking of a different element of self.

Although they had separate names, these were normal unconscious parts, not multiple personalities. However, their memory content and attitude often was a surprise to the hypnotized subject, who listened as his various unconscious sectors took this opportunity to reveal their conflictual programming. Often the problem part turned out to be rooted in some long-forgotten event. Night after night, I watched Tebbetts bring out the combatant aspects of a client, name them, and then help them to better understand each other. Finally, he would negotiate a workable compromise that would result in more successful, comfortable functioning for the whole self.

The professor began a parts therapy by talking to the problem part in a cordial way, making a friend of it. He drilled into us: "Never criticize the parts. Say, 'You're not to be blamed.' Always compliment them for doing a good job."[1] He said to find out if the part had a punishing, or protecting, function. Arlene said that she stepped in when things got too hard for Candy, that she had saved Candy from tight spots, and Candy agreed. Tebbetts would have considered Arlene to have a protecting function. He would have thanked Arlene for protecting Candy.

Professor Tebbetts emphasized how important a problem part truly was: "The part that's causing the problem always has the energy, the power." He would tell it that the root self was lucky to have such a strong part! For the conscious mind, he taught us to encourage the attitude: "I'm a survivor. I'm not a victim."

He said that each part's appearance was just a "memory tape playing." He said, "You cannot change or correct a tape unless you have it out of the file and playing." He said it does not work, and it is not wise, to just tell the problem part to go away. Tebbetts made clear that shutting up a problem part would stop the healing process! He explained, "You can't just get rid of a personality part. They'll always reemerge." He said, "Always make it clear to a part that it's important and will be kept. Always make the parts get together. It's important that they cooperate and love each other."

You have to either integrate it back with the root self, or give it a different job to do, one that it will accept willingly. Usually, he gave the separated part a new job to do, one that would transform the client's functioning by rechanneling that strength and energy in a positive way. He said to give the offending part a role that was "equal in importance to what he or she did before." He said, "The offending part is usually the most powerful part." He would suggest to the hypnotized subject some way in which that traumatic experience, which had caused the problem part, could be useful in the person's future.

---

[1] It is the conscious mind which must ultimately make decisions and take moral responsibility for outcomes, not an isolated matrix of neurons in some dissociated part of the unconscious.

What John Did Not Understand About Candy's Therapy

John Nebel did not understand that, once created, the only way Arlene could permanently "disappear" was by reunification with Candy. That is the classic healing method for split personality: hypnotic suggestion for reunification of the personalities, after the splitting trauma has been uncovered and abreacted. The tragedy of Candy's relationship with John was that he would not love, like, or even be kind to her split personality, Arlene. John never understood that a repressed self always contains worthwhile strengths.

He should have made friends with Arlene, instead of despising and hating her. He should have told Arlene that Candy was lucky to have such a strong part who could endure torture and shame, fortunate to have a part that could evade the suicide command and manage to emerge and tell. Although Candy's life was being disrupted by Arlene's spontaneous appearances, it was extremely important for John and Candy to know the things Arlene was telling. John should have made a deal with Arlene which allowed her to keep an important role in Candy's life, but shifted her to a positive role (such as using her understanding of Jensen to report on his predatory attempts and to protect Candy from him). And, he should have negotiated for a more functional schedule of appearances.

Technically, what Tebbetts did was a conversion. He transformed problem energy into helpful energy. Tebbetts was a genius at choosing an appropriate positive job to assign to the problem part. Then, he would get the problem part to agree to its new task. In the unconscious, a deal is really a deal because that is the mechanical, automatic part of your brain. Once programmed, it tends to stay programmed.

I became competent at putting other people into trances and giving healing suggestions. Tebbetts said I was a very good hypnotherapist. He expected me to work full-time in that field after graduation. But I was really just a writer, collecting knowledge "incognito" for this book. I did not want another profession.

Wolberg's Five-step Therapy

Wolberg summed up hypnotherapy as a five-step process: a) accepting change; b) strengthening the ego; c) bonding with therapist; d) recovering repressed memories and feelings; and e) integrating them.

a) Accept the Therapeutic Process—The recovery of memories forces the subject to change identity, both internally and in his relationships with other people. A person "always fights to maintain his scheme of life, neurotic as it may be, and defends himself vigorously against change." (Wolberg, Hypnoanalysis) But that person also, somewhere deep inside, longs to be healed and whole again.

If he overcomes denial, reaches out and touches, accepts, experiences, and becomes the abnormal, crazy, heartbreaking realities of the unconscious knowing, then he is reintegrated. He will experience painful emotions in the process. He will become a different person. He has to reach out and make connection with his amnestic data without knowing just what he will discover, and just who he will become as a result of that discovering.

The hypnotherapist helps by using direct, or indirect, suggestion to strengthen and motivate the survivor.

b) Strengthen the Subject—The victim, who is still being victimized, has learned to live with what he has not yet managed to escape—or what he has chosen to endure. He has become accustomed to channeling fear into attempts to minimize the abuse, rather than into attempts to stop it forever. The survivor must first learn to believe that escape is possible. He must consciously feel enough of his fear and anger to channel those emotions into motivation to achieve a permanent escape.

Anger is an interesting emotion. If you do not express it, you tend not to feel it. The more you express it, the more you feel it. The emergence of anger is linked to a person's ability to perform both aggressive and defensive actions. For a victim of abusive hypnosis, accessing anger enables the development of a capacity for self-defense. The person who has been hypno-trained, broken to unconscious obedience, must recover his will to fight and to defend himself.

When the disease is overcontrol, part of the cure may be a client-directed therapy. Jules H. Masserman gave artificial neuroses to cats and dogs, making them afraid to eat. Then he looked for methods to cure those neuroses. The best method of cure turned out to be giving the animal complete control of its feeding process by training it to control the food-delivery switch. Animals who learned to control their situation eventually overcame the fear, ate, and lived.

LeCron was a first-rank experimental and clinical psychologist (and prolific author) who advocated client-centered hypnotherapy. He taught students to let the subject make decisions. He told clininicians not to manipulate, not to coerce. He urged colleagues to respect their hypnotic subjects.

[He also said that they would get much better results in experimentation if they treated the hypnotized subjects "as a normal human being rather than a robot." LeCron explained that respectful treatment permitted the subject to participate more actively. He said that if they listened to the subjects' observations during and after the experiment, their input might turn out to be quite helpful in interpreting the results.]

c) Bond—The survivor's strength of will grows as a result of a positive relationship with anybody to whom the truth is told, including a therapist. Hypnosis tremendously speeds up and facilitates all the healing processes—bonding, uncovering, and integrating—because it cuts right through unconscious defenses and requires an immediate close relationship with the hypnotist. Two forms of resistance have to be worked through, however.

One is transference issues. The relationship will probably go through episodes of rejection by the parts of the survivor's programming which are uncomfortable with that close relationship "because of repulsive hostile and erotic strivings that threaten to invade consciousness." (Wolberg)

The second form of resistance flows from the hypnotist's implanted commands. This remnant of the abuser's programming inside the subject's mind is the enemy to be overcome, once the perpetrator's outside influence is eliminated.

Unconscious material is invested with such dan> ger that the very acknowledgment of it is more than the patient can bear...In therapy it is essential to reunite the conscious ego with the repressed material and the attendant anxiety, but resistance constantly hampers this process. (Wolberg, p. 346)

Both types of resistance have to be worked through and resolved. Walking away from the relationship stops the healing process. The survivor must stay in there, and keep talking. It will get better. In a healing relationship, the resistances manifest, and then are resolved. Memory of important amnestic events and feelings can be recovered, despite inner resistance, when the survivor's will to heal is greater than his fear of unconscious threats.

d) Recover Repressed Feelings and Memories—The hypnotherapist regresses the subject back to find the origin of the problem, and to feel those repressed feelings (abreaction). After the problem is revealed, he can recognize the illogic of living according to a lie which was planted in his unconscious, or a misunderstanding which he mistakenly accepted into his programming at an earlier age. He can progress to a more mature and functional unconscious self-management.

If the survivor's mind-cage, the basic secret-don't-tell programming, is built of shame and guilt, those feelings have to be recognized and felt, even though they were artificially implanted under hypnosis. An artificial neurosis, once in place, is a real neurosis.

The needs to block induction cues, repeal previous suggestions, and recover repressed memories are powerful arguments for some professional therapy. In working with victims of criminal hypnosis, some clinicians have uncovered the truth by achieving maximally profound hypnotic states in their subject, avoiding leading questions, and maintaining temporary amnesia. The process Dr. Reiter used with Palle is a good model for a therapy of that type. Reiter used tough measures: drug induction to break through the perpetrator's sealing on Palle; ideomotor signals to reveal if Palle said anything untrue; and an incredible number of hours spent working with the subject.

Most survivors, moreover, would not be willing to put themselves through something like that. They would be reasonable to say, "I've suffered enough already." In fact, there are much kinder, gentler therapy models for survivors than Dr. Reiter's process. Candy managed an inner-directed partial healing, working with her husband. Another survivor accomplished a self-directed healing by using a little of almost every memory-retrieval method, plus some spontaneous trances, and amateur hypnotherapy from a friend, and help from several different clinicians (each for only a short series of sessions).

e) Integrate—Hypnotherapy begins with uncovering and ends with reeducation. The integration stage accomplishes the victim's reeducation. Denial, by not remembering, was his conscious mind's first perimeter of defense. Denial by remembering, but not feeling the emotion, was his second line of defense. Now, he has remembered. He has felt the emotion. In this step, he incorporates those new knowings and feelings into his life-style. Integration takes longer and is more complex than the steps of remembering and feeling the emotion.

Patty Hearst's psychiatrist helped her to recover from brainwashing by two important realizations: One is that "they did it to me." The other is that when you break and accept their programming (and science has demonstrated that every dog and every human have their breaking point, so you do not need to feel guilty), you internalize it. Then "I did it to me" becomes also psychologically true. Both "they did it to me," and "I did it to me" have to be dealt with as part of the healing.

Accordingly, integration, for the survivor of unethical hypnosis, involves accepting the two curiously contradictory truths that it was not his fault—and that he chose it. That means he deals with his anger about what happened; and he admits the role his own choices played in making it happen.

He can undo any consent he gave, which was betrayed, in imagery. He accomplishes that by running the scene backward, in trance, to the point in time of the giving of that consent. If the consent was betrayed by delivering him into a situation he would not have agreed to, if fully informed ahead of time, the deal was not a valid contract and can be mentally undone.

So, the subject overcomes the amnesia, encounters the data, and feels the feelings (which can then be unloaded). Integrating that data irrevocably changes him, and his future. (He may now need some positive, legal, moral way to channel and release his anger—such as by trying to help other survivors and warning the public at large.) Along the way, he has developed more realistic new attitudes about himself and other people. He has dropped old bad habits and phobias. He has built new, better behaviors. The survivor of unethical hypnosis comes out of all this stronger, wiser, and happier.

Love and Respect

A survivor of brutal mistreatment and psychological crushing, accidental or deliberate, needs healing doses of their opposites: love and respect. If the subject is a split personality, natural or artificial, that love and respect must be extended to both victims—the root personality and the split. The root personality, the conscious part of a survi-

Most Effective Wording for Suggestions

The language of suggestion is directed to a subject's unconscious mind. How do you talk to an unconscious?

☐ Focus Attention—An idea that becomes a suggestion is one on which unconscious attention is concentrated. Advertisers are experts at attracting the attention of your unconscious.

☐ Literal—The unconscious is literal. It does not get the joke.

☐ Clear— State the suggestion clearly. When a suggestion can have more than one interpretation, and when no one interpretation is specified, the subject's unconscious will pick the most compatible one.

☐ Positive—A positive suggestion is more likely to be accepted than a negative one. You should tell an impulsive, irritable child, "You will be patient, cheerful, and happy, always in a good mood," because telling him or her, "You will not lose your temper" does not work. The unconscious is comparatively deaf to "not" and "no" words. Because of this, negative affirmations—in or out of hypnosis—can backfire. "Don't lose your temper" can turn into a unconscious suggestion to lose your temper. "Don't worship evil" can be taken as an unconscious suggestion to worship evil.

☐ Affect—If emotion can be aroused and attached to any suggestion, then the suggestion is more likely to be accepted, and to function thereafter with power. Any idea with emotion attached dominates over one with no emotion. A suggestion associated with stronger emotion will dominate over one with less emotion. Indifference is the best armor against unwanted suggestion. Strange, but true, conscious effort to counteract a suggestion tends to intensify its action.

☐ Imagery—Giving a suggestion in the form of visual imagery tends to be more powerful than mere words. Imagery rouses the right brain, which is a hypnotic center. When imagination (based in your unconscious) and will (based in your conscious) conflict, imagination tends to win.

☐ Repetition—The more you hear it, the more you are likely to believe it.

☐ Written—The unconscious is more likely to accept and believe written words than spoken ones. (Hence the power of Scripture.)

vor, must also extend love and respect to its battered, wounded unconscious parts.

In the case history of "Eve," her personality splitting was found to have begun in childhood when she was forced to touch her lips to a dead face in a funeral parlor. Eve split because part of her would not obey, but part of her could not resist obeying. After Doctors Thigpen and Cleckley helped her finally to remember and relive that moment, her selves reunited again. (If you read the sequel, however, you will find it was not quite that simple, easy, or final. It never is.) Thigpen and Corbett summed up why they had a successful outcome with "the three faces of Eve." The first six reasons are all manifestations of love.

1) All three of the personalities talked to the therapist.

2) The therapist gave "uncritical acceptance and understanding.

3) "...the rebellious Eve Black encountered no active condemnation or punitive opposition..."

4) The therapist offered "understanding."

5) The therapist did a "painstaking review" of the patient's past "emotional experiences."

6) ..."Jane fell in love"...

7) "...passage of time with...intrinsic biologic factors toward repair, reintegration..." (Thigpen and Corbett, pp. 279-280)

When to Stop Therapy

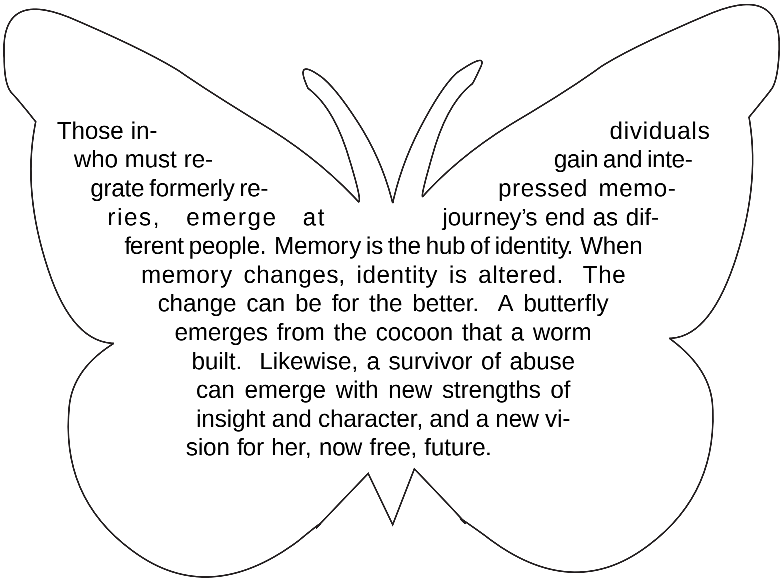
I think it is neither necessary nor desirable to recover the memory of every moment of time, or every painful event experienced under an unethical hypnosis—unless the unethical hypnotist himself gives the command, "Now you will remember all." While it is going on, any recovery process that is acting in defiance of his repressions pretty well occupies the victim's life. It takes time to recover memories, and time to adjust to the shock of each new revelation. It takes money, if you are paying a therapist.

At some point, she needs to get on with her life. Eventually, she has to say, "I know enough now." Then she walks away from the memory-recovery part of her healing, knowing she may never remember anything more. The survivor survives. She gets on with her life.

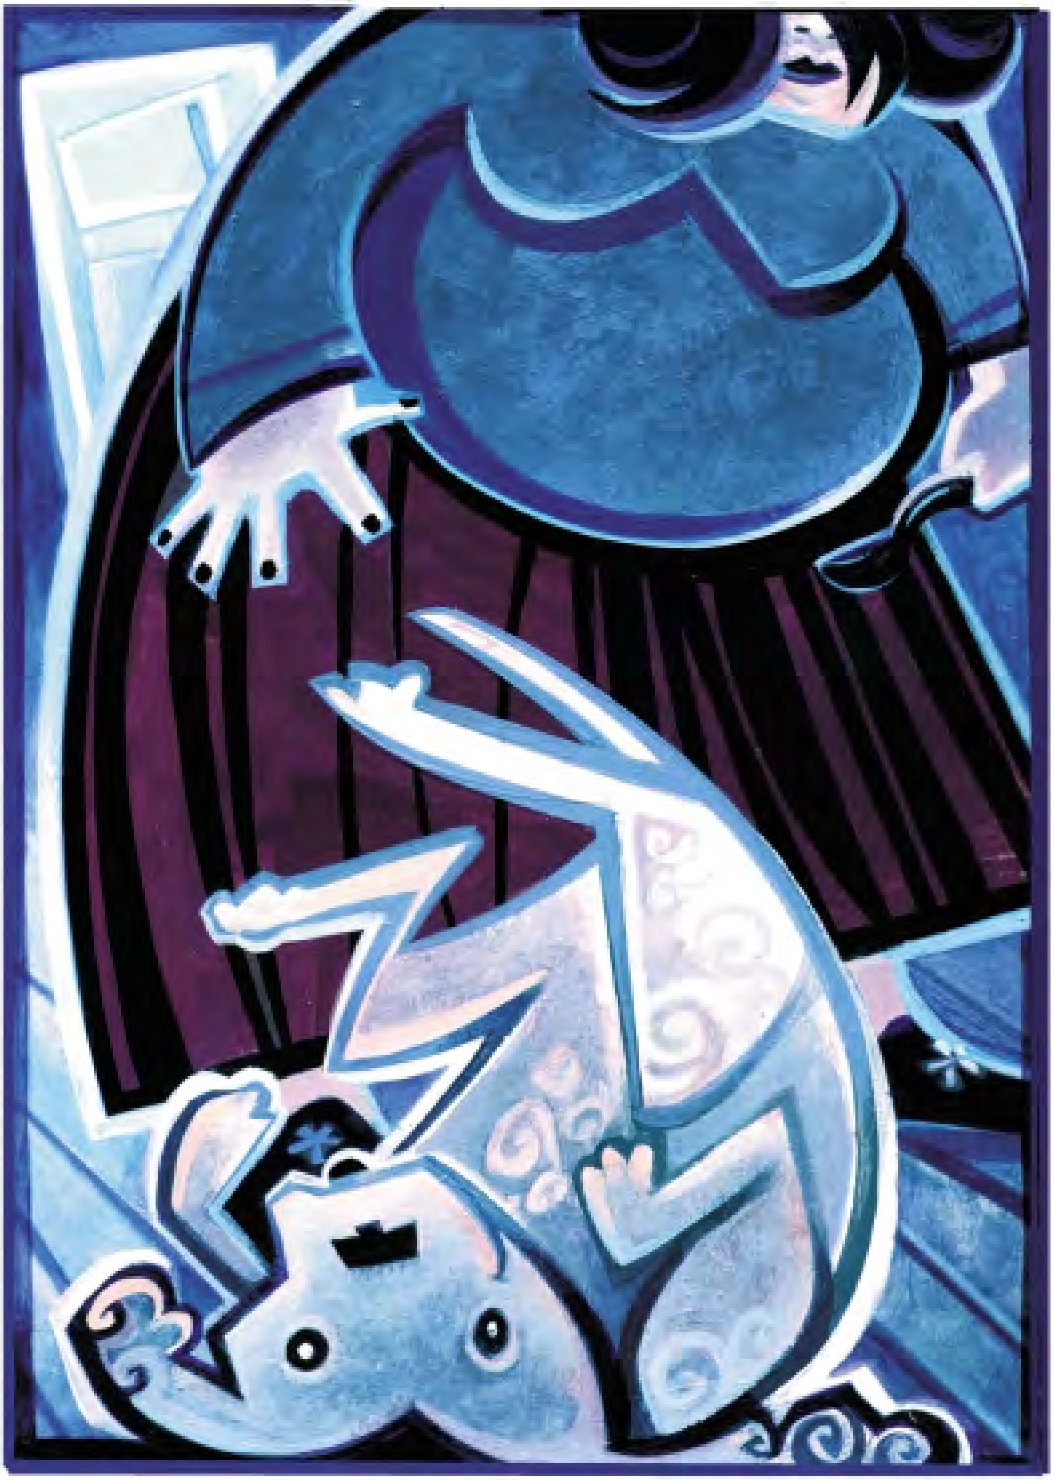
Before she quits therapy, however, firm protective blocks should be in place against any future use of an induction cue, by the previous predator(s). There should also be a posthypnotic suggestion that would inform her therapist if the predator hypnotist ever again attempts, or succeeds, in breaching her mental defenses. If, for any reason, that unconscious, protective blocking is not feasible or secure, her only other alternative is to live in permanent hiding from any possible induction cues from the predator.

Conclusion

At first, she may feel it is no use to try. It is "hopeless." She is not strong enough. But if she does not try, it IS hopeless! She has to find the strength born of necessity. When she fights to defend herself, she finds the power! The will to fight is the essence of the power to defeat! In the unconscious mind, opposites always can be connected. The current always can flow in the opposite direction. That means that the very depth of a subject's unconscious despair can transform into an equally powerful desperate courage. Because the subject is worth it! The foundational lie is the idea that she is not worth the effort to get free.



Those individuals who must regain and integrate formerly repressed memories, emerge at journey's end as different people. Memory is the hub of identity. When memory changes, identity is altered. The change can be for the better. A butterfly emerges from the cocoon that a worm built. Likewise, a survivor of abuse can emerge with new strengths of insight and character, and a new vision for her, now free, future.



...he suggested that if she again defied his diet instructions and ate between meals, she would feel an overpowering impulse to kill her beloved poodle dog.

PART VI

Reference

Metro 1798 local boy wins
Sci

He won a science prize for his method, and got written up in the newspaper... they...classified the information Top Secret.

A Brief History of Hypnosis 4000 BC to 1900 AD

Pavlovian Vocabulary

Brainwashing: The Technology

Behaviorism and Government Ally

Glossary

Bibliography

Relevant Chronology: 1493 to Present

Index

A Brief History of Hypnosis 4000 BC to 1900 AD

Faith Healing Versus Scientific Theories

☑

Mesmer

☑

Marquis De Puysegur

☑

Liebeault, Bernheim, and the "Nancy School"

☑

Charcot et al

> Hypnotists are afraid of their subjects. There is something weird, uncanny, unbelievable about the seance, and something ominous about the untruths the operator tells his victims...Most people are afraid of other people even under the conditions of routine contact...tempting is the opportunity for the hypnotist...
>
> Robert W. Marks, The Story of Hypnotism, pp. 117-118

Ancient and Medieval Hypnosis

Trance induction and brainwashing are both very ancient technologies. Aspects of them usually have appeared wherever there were people. Hypnosis[1] goes back at least as far as ancient Egypt. Papyri in the British Museum, dated 3766 BC, describe the Sorcerer Tchtcha-emankh doing hypnosis at King Khufu's court. Egyptian pharaohs used hypnoprogrammed couriers called "messengers of the gods," in 1500 BC. Bas-relief on a tomb at Thebes shows a priest inducing hypnosis.

Technologies for systematic control of entranced subjects and for self-induction of deep trance were soon all over the map. Buddhism and Hinduism used sophisticated induction methods. Chaldean magicians skillfully manipulated trance subjects. Abyssinian fakirs made people into slaves using hypnotic techniques.

---

[1] Hypnosis is the management of a person in trance by an awake operator who seeks automatistic obedience using such conventions as a re-induction cue, posthypnotic suggestions, and suggested amnesia.

In 500 BC, sleep temples in Egypt offered a nine-day cure by (drug-induced) sleep and by suggested "gods" appearing in dreams. In 400 BC, the Delphic and other ancient Greek oracles, began to compete, offering drug- and stress-induced trance experience. Priests induced hypnosis in Aesculapian sleep temples by ceremonial inductions, then gave healing suggestions.

Hypnosis also found its way to the Northern peoples of Europe. Celtic druids used it. The ancient Finnish classic, the Kalevala, describes hypnotic trance in detail. Like other ancient peoples, they did not know why it worked, only that it did. It was not until the beginning of Europe's Renaissance that the why of hypnosis first became a serious issue.

Faith Healing Versus Scientific Theories

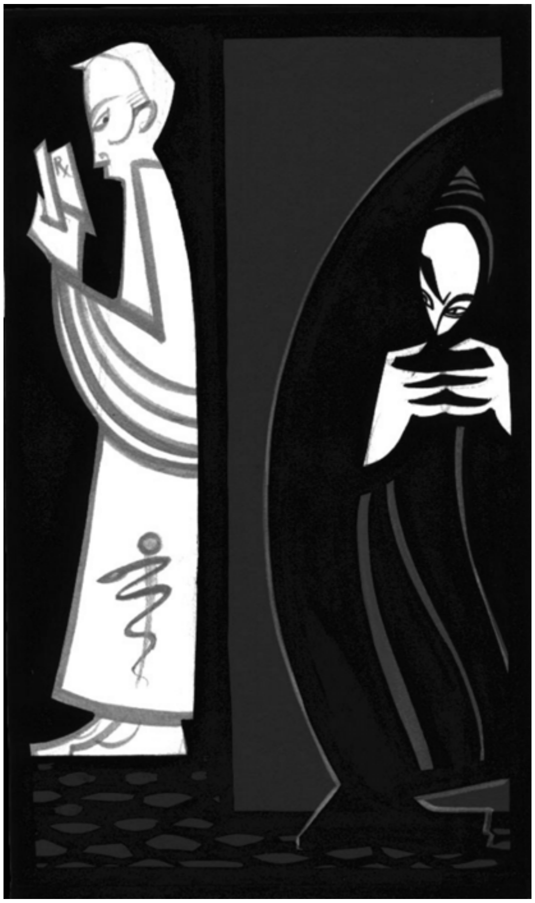
"If there be anything preternatural about this disease, I order in the name of Jesus that it manifest itself immediately."

- Father Gassner

From 1500 AD to 1950 AD, the history of hypnosis was embodied in a sequence of interesting personalities who publicly argued, experimented, treated patients, and then wrote about those experiments and treatments.

Nettesheim

Agrippa von Nettesheim (b. 1486, d. 1535), court physician to Franz I, first put hypnosis under scientific scrutiny. He described trance, and hypnotic management of a person in trance, in a book, Occulta Philosophica. The association of hypnosis with the word occult, meaning "secret," comes from that title.



Paracelsus

Paracelsus (d. 1541) was the next European to describe the phenomena of hypnotism. He called it magic, a word which then meant any mysterious science. It was Paracelsus who first made it clear that hypnosis was a technology with striking moral implications. (The Catholic Church, ironically, persecuted him for his statement that the mind can both cause and cure some types of illness.)

☞ Paracelsus first distinguished ethical from unethical hypnosis. He called hypnosis used with benevolent intentions for medical purposes, white magic. He called hypnotism used harmfully, or for exploitation, black magic.

Greatrakes and Bagnone

Valentine Greatrakes (b. 1628, d. 1683), "the great Irish stroaker," hypnotized and suggested healing to masses of Irish folk. In Italy, around the same time, Francisco Bagnone did the same. Both healed in the religious tradition.

Maxwell

De Medicina Magnetica by Guillaume Maxwell, a Scot of noble ancestry, was published in 1679. Like other Renaissance thinkers, Maxwell was looking for scientific explanations for natural phenomena. He proposed the theory that trance involved magnetic force, was transmissible, and was useful for healing. He believed that the magnetic force could result in an operator (assumed to be male) acquiring total erotic control over females.[1]

Gassner

Father Johann Joseph Gassner (b. 1727) was more well-known and sought after to perform healings and exorcisms than even Greatrakes or Bagnone. At the peak of Gassner's long career, he exorcized patients in the presence of both Protestant and Catholic clergy, doctors, aristocrats, and skeptics. A notary public recorded his words. The authenticity of his healings was attested to by honorable observers. Despite the hoopla, all agreed that Gassner was a good man, an humble cleric, a country mouse who served the Lord by working miracles. He worked in the tradition of Medieval Catholicism and always gave God the glory.

Gassner developed a good methodology for trance healing. It was written down, so we know exactly how he proceeded. In a typical case, a nun afflicted with convulsive fits knelt before him. He asked her name, the nature of her sickness, and whether she agreed to his authority. She answered his questions and agreed to his authority. Gassner then said in Latin: "If there be anything preternatural about this disease, I order in the name of Jesus that it manifest itself immediately."

The nun went into convulsions. To Gassner, this proved that her illness was not natural, but caused by an evil spirit. A modern hypnotist might say that Gassner had informed the nun's unconscious that, if hers was a psychosomatic ("preternatural") rather than an organic disease, she would manifest the symptoms immediately. If she could make symptoms occur by an act of mind on demand, Gassner intuitively understood that she might also be motivated to suppress them by an act of mind, on demand.

Gassner then gave the nun a long series of suggestions to obey. He demonstrated power over the evil spirit by commanding it (also in Latin) to cause convulsions here and there in a series of named locations in her body. He also commanded it to display various emotions. Finally, he demanded "the appearance of death" (coma: the deepest trance level). All of his orders were obeyed. Each submission to Gassner's suggestions sent the nun into yet deeper trance and made her more responsive to his next suggestion. After she showed the appearance of death, he gave his final suggestion—the expelling of the evil spirit. She was cured, and she thanked God for it.

He used the same initial procedure with every patient. If Gassner asked the patient to manifest symptoms and no symptoms appeared, then he knew—intuitively or from experience—that the patient was either not capable of automatistic (deep) trance response, or that the disease was organic in origin, or both. In such cases, Gassner always referred the patient to a regular physician.

Mesmer

> The magnetic treatment must necessarily be dangerous to morality. While proposing to cure diseases which require prolonged treatment, pleasing and precious emotions are excited...But morally they must be condemned...
>
> - Secret Addendum, Franklin Commission Report

Although Mesmer (b. 1734) was only seven years younger than Gassner, he followed the rebellious new generation's way of thinking. As a Renaissance man, he was not satisfied to let the thought of faith making a person whole be enough. Mesmer wanted to replace explanations for the phenomena of trance which were based on faith with explanations based on science.

Mesmer Testifies Against Gassner

Father Gassner's healing exorcisms were drawing such big crowds that the German government, in 1775, decided to investigate him. Since Mesmer was known to them and had observed Gassner at work, the Commission invited Mesmer to testify before them. Gassner was not invited to be present, nor was he given the opportunity to present a counter-demonstration. It turned out tragically for the priest.

---

1. With trance, what you expect is what you are likely to get, since subjects respond to suggestive cues.

Mesmer demonstrated to the Commission that he could simply touch patients and get symptoms to appear, and disappear—including convulsions. He caused an epileptic man in the room to have a seizure. He caused a member of the commission who was subject to convulsions to have one—and then to stop having it.[1]

By then the Commission was thoroughly in rapport with Mesmer. He then told them that Gassner was not really working religious miracles, but was actually using the same "magnetic fluid" that Mesmer himself used. Following Maxwell's theories, Mesmer told them that one brain could affect another by invisible magnetic rays that passed through the air from magnetizer to subject. He called the process animal magnetism to distinguish it from the physical function of magnetism operant in a compass's needle.

Mesmer also believed that he put his brain into a healing mental state, then transmitted that healing by the physical act of reaching out toward the patient. He thought he could move the invisible fluid around by hand motions. If he actually stroked the subject, he called those motions magnetic strokings. When he used hand movements which passed over the body, either slightly touching or moving parallel to it, at a slight distance away, without touching, he called them passes. He said that Gassner's exorcisms were accomplished using the magnetic fluid, and it could be done by anyone.

The Commission believed Mesmer. Despite Gassner's years of piety, humility, and unselfish service in healing the sick, the priest was forced into retirement in disgrace. He remained thus until his death, in 1779.

Suggested Crisis

Mesmer induced trance by magnetic passes. One of his disciples, Deleuze, later described the method in an instruction manual for student mesmerists. To conduct the magnetic passes,

> ...draw them [your hands] along the arm to the extremity of the fingers, touching lightly...Then descend slowly along the body as far as the knees, or farther.... (Deleuze, Practical Instruction in Animal Magnetism, pp. 22-45)

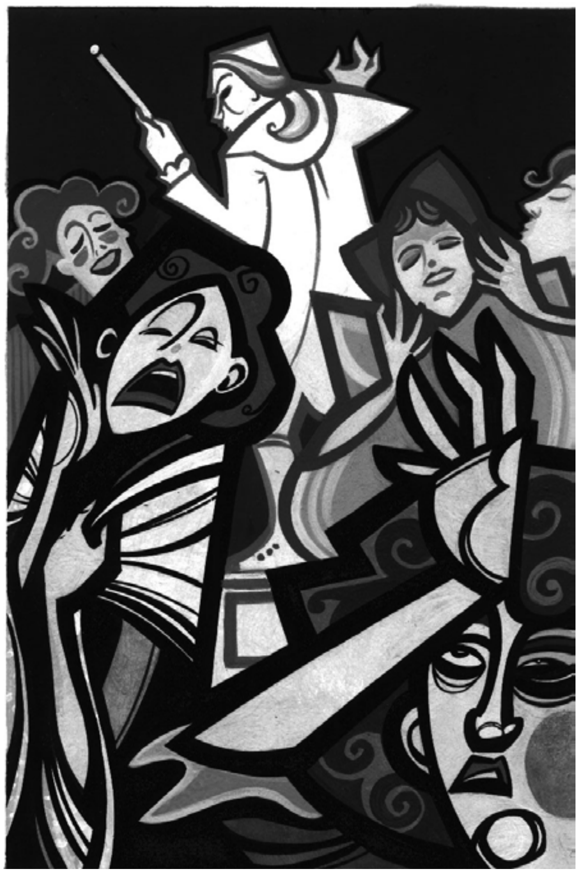
In addition to such strokings and passes, Mesmer's medical techniques included bleeding, emetics, magnets, and electric shocks (something new). After he, himself, became controversial in Vienna, Mesmer moved to Paris. There, his methods became even more bizarre, and his clientele, mostly high-born and wealthy girls and women, expanded. Mesmer had developed a system for mesmerizing many persons at the same time!

The patients, usually more than two-hundred, came every day to his home, where they spent the entire day. A large container, called the baquet, sat in the center of the large, semi-dark treatment room. The baquet was supposedly a source of healing energy to the persons who were seated around its outside, grasping the iron rods and ropes which protruded from it. Masonic symbols adorned the walls of the room. (Mesmer and his friend Mozart belonged to a Viennese Masonic lodge.) Magnets hung from the ceiling. The air was thick with burning incense. The patients were given cream of tartar (a laxative) as preparation.[2]



Mesmer then appeared, wearing a long lilac overgarment. As his private orchestra played soft music in the background, Mesmer paced their melody with movements of his baton. He stirred up the invisible fluid (and the patients) with lively motions of his wand when things were too calm. He laid it down and played his glass harmonica with the band once things became lively.

---

[1] Modern experimental hypnotists have repeated Mesmer's experiment and confirmed that convulsions can be both started and stopped by suggestion.

[2] They would quickly become laxative dependent.

The daily induction continued until the patients' crises began, generally after two or three hours. Mesmer and his disciples, the mesmerists, moved from patient to patient, moving around the invisible fluid—mesmerizing. First timers showed little reaction to Mesmer's efforts. More experienced attendees produced the behavior which Mesmer expected. They > ...would laugh, sweat, yawn, shiver; most of them had bowel movements, a sure sign of the effect of the magnetism...[some] shouted, cried, fell asleep, or lost consciousness...laughter and shivers became convulsive....Convulsions became violent and mixed with moanings of pain, intense hiccups, and uncontrollable crying. (Lawrence and Perry, p. 59)

Lawence and Perry also described Mesmer's subjects as "embracing passionately" or pushing another person away "violently." Extreme behavior was encouraged by the setup. The winners, those who behaved in the most bizarre and violent manner, were taken to a separate crisis chamber. It was completely padded, in expectation of convulsions. Mesmer personally treated the patients in that crisis chamber. He did not allow any other person to be present.[1]

About 25% of the group (the normal percentage of somnambulists) had a "complete crisis," lasting several hours. In Mesmer's magnetic scenario, crisis was followed by a period of "coma." Mesmer believed his treatment—and the brain overload it generated—was psychologically and physically healing.[2]

The Franklin Commission

Mesmer's critics argued that his treatments were seductive, indecent, and dangerous to the women's mental stability. In 1784, the King of France directed a French scientific commission to investigate the nature of mesmerism, in general, and the claims of Mesmer, in particular. The royal Commission members included Bailly (a noted astronomer and the Commission's Reporter), De Bory, Majault, Sallin, d'Arcet, Guillotin (inventor of the guillotine), Le Roy, and Lavoisier (founder of the science of chemistry). The Commission's Chairman was Dr. Benjamin Franklin, the American ambassador to France.

Mesmer was out of town, so they studied his theory and practice as exemplified in the treatments provided by his disciple, Deslon. The Commission members were especially interested in the crisis:

> These convulsions are remarkable for their number, duration, and force, and have been known to persist for more than three hours. They are characterized by involuntary, jerking movements in all the limbs, and in the whole body, by contraction of the throat, by twitching in the hypochondriac and epigastric regions, by dimness and rolling of the eyes, by piercing cries, tears, hiccoughs, and immoderate laughter. They are preceded or followed by a state of languor or dreaminess, by a species of depression, and even by stupor. The slightest sudden noise causes the patient to start, and it has been observed that he is affected by a change of time or tune in the airs performed on the pianoforte; that his agitation is increased by a more lively movement, and that his convulsions then become more violent. (Commission Report, quoted in Binet and Fere, Animal Magnetism, 1887, p. 9)

Top Secret: For the King's Eyes Only—For comic relief, read the Commission's "Secret Report" to the King of France. Only one copy of this addendum to their report existed for forty-two years, and it was top secret: "for the king's eyes only."[3]

The Secret Report concerns morality. Most of Mesmer's clients were female, and Mesmer's main interest was the crisis that his treatment elicited in many of them. In veiled and poetic language, the report says that the ladies observed in "crisis" were unknowingly experiencing sexual orgasm brought on by expectation, stimulation (all that gentle stroking, including of the abdomen), and example.

> The magnetizer generally keeps the patient's knees enclosed within his own, and consequently the knees and all the lower parts of the body are in close contact. The hand is applied to the hypochondriac region, and sometimes to that of the ovarium, so that the touch is exerted at once on many parts, and these the most sensitive parts of the body...the two faces almost touch, the breath is intermingled...

---

[1] In private consultation, mesmerists physically stroked the subject's body from her head to the center of her abdomen (which Mesmer considered a site of magnetic activity). Others combined the strokes with passes. Some disciples later gave up Mesmer's practice of being alone with patients after accusations of sexual exploitation emerged.

[2] Brain overload remains an induction staple from sex to psychiatry (used in therapies from abreaction to electroshock): "...the identical pattern of mounting nervous excitement and tension, leading on to states of collapse, temporary sleep and highly increased suggestibility." (Sargant, The Mind Possessed, p. 20)

[3] The Franklin Commission Report soon appeared in English: "Animal Magnetism: Report of Dr. (Benjamin) Franklin and other Commissioners on Col. Stone's Pamphlet." (Philadelphia: J. Johnson, 1785; Philadelphia: H. Perkins, 1837. The Secret Addendum became available in English after the translation of Animal Magnetism. by Binet and Fere.

The report made clear that there was no specific touching of the genitalia. It noted, however, that prolonged touching did not need to be specific for the patients to experience erotic arousal and climax:

> Women have, as a rule, more mobile nerves; their imagination is more lively and more easily excited...In touching any given part, it may be said that they are touched all over the body.

Once the first subjects entered crisis, any others who would experience it tended to soon join in. The report explained that was because > ...the mobility of their nerves also inclines them more readily to imitation...women are like musical strings stretched in perfect unison; when one is moved, all the others are instantly affected....This ...explains why the crises in women are more frequent, more violent, and of longer duration than in men...

Bailly, the Reporter, described the physical signs of the crisis:

> ...the respiration is short and interrupted, the chest heaves rapidly, convulsions set in, and either the limbs or the whole body is agitated by sudden movements. In lively and sensitive women this last stage, which terminates the sweetest emotion, is often a convulsion; to this condition there succeed languor, prostration...

In the private report for the king, the Commission concluded:

> The magnetic treatment must necessarily be dangerous to morality. While proposing to cure diseases which require prolonged treatment, pleasing and precious emotions are excited...But morally they must be condemned...

Bailly also noted that the lieutenant of police had asked M. Deslon (whose magnetizations the Commission had been observing) "whether, when a woman is magnetized and passing through the crisis, it would not be easy to outrage [rape] her." Deslon "replied in the affirmative." Deslon added that, for this reason, only "he and his colleagues, pledged by their position to act with probity, were entitled and privileged to practise magnetism."

The Commission members were not so confident that all danger could be controlled merely by limiting practice to Deslon and his colleagues. The Secret Addendum pointed out that the magnetizings could go on for "two or three hours at a time," a prolonged time during which "the physician can, if he will, take advantage of his patient...and no one can rely on being always master of his will."

Like Maxwell, Mesmer and his disciples believed that animal magnetism caused irrepressible sexual desire in women. The induction technique which the mesmerizers used actually maneuvered the female subject toward their expected outcome of sexual desire. The Secret Addendum was correct about the treatment being risky to morality.

Mesmer Loses Face—The Royal Commission rejected Mesmer's hypothesis of an invisible magnetic fluid. It concluded that the "chief causes of the effects ascribed to animal magnetism are contact, imagination, and imitation." After 80,000 copies of the Commission's general Report were printed and distributed, Mesmer then had to take a turn out of favor.

Ben Franklin went home. Revolution overthrew the French monarchy. Bailly, Lavoisier, and Thouret were executed by the guillotine. Mesmer argued with the scientists, trying to get them to accept that the invisible magnetic fluid was real. Eventually, he gave up and retired to Germany. He died there in 1815. In the history of hypnosis, however, he is important.

- Mesmer was the first person to push the scientific establishment to consider a scientific explanation for hypnotism. His relentless campaigning started the scientific study of hypnotism—and of the human unconscious.

- Mesmer emphasized the hypnotic phenomenon of rapport, which he defined as the mesmerist's mental sensitivity to the patient. (Puysegur later found it worked both ways.)

- Mesmer induced a state of suggestibility, then gave suggestions to relieve the patient's symptoms.

- Mesmer noted natural individual differences in susceptibility.

- Mesmer observed that repeated inductions progressively trained a subject and increased his or her depth of response.

After Mesmer, European scientists exploded in a frenzy of experimentation.

Abbe Faria

Abbe Faria came to Paris from India in 1814. He was the next sensational hypnotist after Mesmer. He hypnotized over 5,000 people. He used none of the "magnetic" props of Mesmer, and he cured many persons. He insisted his cures were not because of magnetism, but due to the hopeful expectancy and mental co-operation of his patients. He thereby shifted the study of trance from physical scientists to psychologists. Study of the physics of trance did not resume until the 1950s.

Deleuze

Jose Philippe Francois Deleuze was a French botanist whose two books, Practical Instruction in Animal Magnetism (1825), and Animal Magnetism (translated into English, 1846), are classic presentations of Mesmer's ideas. Deleuze believed that only sick people could be hypnotized. He believed that his passes moved magnetic fluid from the client's head area to his hands or feet. His goal was to create harmony in the patient.

His theory had problems, but his skill at hypnotizing was good. He used a sensory deprivation induction: a darkened room, comfortable temperature, no other persons present, and no interruptions. He worried a lot about the ethics of magnetizing! He advised that the best way to avoid future problems was to choose one's magnetist wisely. He said that only a woman should magnetize another woman in order to protect the subject's virtue, and also because a female patient might be more willing to discuss personal problems with another woman. Also, if a crisis (orgasm) were to occur, he believed that a man should not be present. He warned that visits of a male magnetist to a lady's home several times a week invited harmful gossip. He advised that, if a man was to magnetize a woman, he should demand the presence of a chaperone.

Deleuze was one of the first hypnotherapists to do parts therapy. He talked to different aspects of a person in trance, negotiating among their differing opinions. He noted the increased memory capacity of deeply hypnotized persons. He pointed out the importance of early childhood memories to later personality dynamics. He observed how much people differed in their ability to become hypnotized.

Marquis De Puysegur

> No curiosity will lead me to use him* [as a hypnotic subject] *and so disregard his health and well-being.
>
> - Marquis De Puysegur

The Marquis de Puysegur (1751-1825) was a student of Mesmer who continued and greatly advanced the scientific study of hypnosis after his master's fall from status.[1] The Marquis was a Frenchman from the highest rank of nobility. He was also a man of strong moral uprightness. That quality of steady virtue protected his work from some of the errors of his master.

Puysegur, together with his two younger brothers, became interested in Mesmer's healing technique. After Mesmer's rejection by Parisian authorities, Puysegur went back to the family estate and there tried to accomplish magnetic cures for local peasants. They came to him with real afflictions, such as painful arthritis, rather than with the upper-class neuroses and general boredom of Mesmer's clientele. They were ignorant of what behavior Maxwell and Mesmer expected of them in trance (convulsive crises as a climactic stage of their trance). If patients were too ill to come to him, Puysegur went to where they lay, suffering, on straw pallets in thatched-roof cottages.

Puysegur magnetized them by mesmeric passes, believing that he was working with the invisible magnetic fluid, distributing it in a better way. In 1837, he wrote:

> ...your hand must not be stiff; let your fingers be a little bent...for it is from the end of the fingers that the fluid flows or radiates...give yourself up entirely to feelings of sympathy, and to the wish to relieve your patient. If he feels pain in particular

---

[1] Oldtime authors call him De Puysegur; modern ones, Puysegur. For further information on Puysegur, see Laurence and Perry's chapter "Artificial Somnambulism," pp. 103-124, in Hypnosis, Will, and Memory; and Ellenberger's Discovery of the Unconscious.

> parts, hold your hand some time on that part; continue your operation, for about half an hour. (quoted in Edmonston, Hypnosis and Relaxation)

Puysegur and Race Discover Somnambulism

One of Puysegur's first patients was a young shepherd named Victor Race. No convulsions resulted from his efforts with Victor. Maybe Victor had not heard they were supposed to happen. Instead, the lad went into a profound sleep. His condition reminded Puysegur of a sleepwalker, yet, in that sleep, Race showed astonishing intelligence, clarity of mind, and ability to behave as if awake and aware. After the magnetizing was over, Victor was completely amnesic for all that had passed.

That episode was a turning point for Puysegur. During future mesmeric sessions, he began regularly to elicit patient responses more like Victor's than like those of Mesmer's clients. Instead of having convulsions, Puysegur's clients fell "asleep." Puysegur was glad. He much preferred "sleep" to "convulsions." As he continued to communicate to his patients an expectation of calm, he got trances so calm they surprised him. They were characterized by what seemed like sleep, or near-sleep, and total relaxation.

Puysegur named that state artificial somnambulism. (Braid later renamed it hypnosis.) The Marquis also recognized that he was dealing with two stages. The first was an induction stage during which the magnetist relaxed the subject. Then came a secondary stage in which the patient was quiet and obedient and might be given curative suggestions.

Puysegur Defines Somnambulist Phenomena

Puysegur did many significant experiments and analyses of somnambulist phenomena. Mesmer first used the word rapport to describe the hypnotic relationship, but he was referring to the mental state of the hypnotist. Puysegur extended the term to mean the intense and very personal bridge of relationship from subject to hypnotist as well as of hypnotist to subject.

Puysegur studied the spontaneous amnesia that sometimes appeared in his subjects. He noted that deeply entranced patients, during the trance, clearly could recall past events from their life, but after the trance they could remember nothing of what had happened during the trance. He noticed that trance improved both memory and mental performance. He was the first experimental hypnotist to systematically study the link between deep trance and extrasensory perceptions. His many experiments in that area began after Victor Race, in trance, seemed able to receive Puysegur's thoughts telepathically.

Puysegur Grapples with Moral Issues

Puysegur, like Paracelsus, the Franklin Commission, and Deleuze, was concerned over the possible immoral use of a somnambulist by her hypnotist. He asked two women in trance if their trance state would enable him to order them to undress. Both assured him that it would not. Their statements put his mind at ease on that subject. He wrote, "There are limits where the authority ceases..." (quoted in Lawrence and Perry, p. 118) Puysegur did not experiment to see if the women's ability to resist was real or imagined.

After Puysegur had done many experiments using Victor Race, he began to display his subject's extraordinary trance sensitivity in public demonstrations in Paris. Twice, Puysegur demonstrated Victor's behavior, in trance, to Mesmer. Victor's health declined. One day, during a trance, he told Puysegur that his health problems now "resulted from his being exhibited to curious and often incredulous people." (Ellenberger, p. 72)

Puysegur chose the morally sound response:

> When he is in a crisis [deep trance], I don't know of anyone more deep, more careful, and more clear-sighted...none can equal him and this saddens me. By next Tuesday, it will be over; this man will not need to be touched any more. No curiosity will lead me to use him and so disregard his health and well-being. (Puysegur, quoted in Lawrence & Perry, p. 108)

Puysegur respected his patients. He taught that magnetized patients should be used neither for stage performances, nor for experimental purposes. He said that the only morally permissible reason for trance induction would be to give medical treatment.

However, he included somnambulists among those qualified to give treatment. He believed that somnambulists could diagnosis illness in other persons and prescribe treatments. His somnambulists, being hypnotized, always believed they could do whatever the hypnotist said they could, and tried their unconscious best. Being in deep trance, the subject's guesses would often be preternaturally accurate. Puysegur's idea became popular and magnetist-somnambulist "medical" pairs became a common (and profitable) stage act.

He did not approve of solo hypno-medical acts, however. One day, Puysegur caught a former patient of his pretending to self-hypnotize, then diagnosing illness and prescribing medication. The Marquis stopped the peasant's profitable quackery.

Puysegur opened a school to teach how to magnetize and how to operate a clinic of magnetic medicine. He taught that Mesmer's theory of hands and batons pushing around a universal magnetic fluid was false. Instead, Puysegur said, hypnotic phenomena happened because the magnetist's powerful will of mind set "into action the vital principle of" (the unconscious mind of) his patients. He was talking abut one mind directly influencing another.

Puysegur managed to make it through the French Revolution (which he, at first, supported) serving merely two years in jail. For the rest of his life, he worked with sick people.

Contributions of Puysegur

Puysegur debunked the Maxwell belief that hypnosis must result in erotic abandon. He dumped the Mesmer delusion that it must result in "crisis." He discovered and defined a purer and more researchable condition of trance: somnambulism. He developed a new understanding of the phenomena and medical applications of trance. He created the first psychological theory of hypnosis: that the mental will of the hypnotist stimulates a response in the subject's mind. He urged the use of rapport for good, rather than for evil. His students became a new kind of magnetizer who used the vocabulary created by Mesmer, but whose quiet, medical style of trance management was modeled on Puysegur.

His work reversed some of the scientific community's rejection of animal magnetism resulting from the Franklin Commission's Report. Because of Puysegur, for the next hundred years, France became a world center for the scientific study of hypnotism. The grand old man must have grieved to see what some of those researchers did to their subjects, but one of them, Liebeault, worked in the best of Puysegur's moral tradition.

Liebeault, Bernheim, and the "Nancy School"

...92% of his attempts were successful, which may reflect the innate trust of his clientele.

- William James, The Principles of Psychology, p. 594

Liebeault

William James, in the above quote, was speaking of Auguste Ambroise Liebeault (1823-1904), the next important French hypnosis researcher after Puysegur. Liebeault was a poverty-stricken country doctor and a student of Azam (the first person to attempt artificial personality-splitting under hypnosis). For twenty years, Liebeault toiled in obscurity, practicing his hypnotic techniques on patients. Some people called him a quack. They were wrong.

It was Liebeault who first recognized the connection between the physical act of looking upward and increased susceptibility to hypnosis. He first numbered and characterized the depth stages of trance. Liebeault insisted that trance induction was normal, that it worked because of a natural quality of human suggestibility, and that it could cure people without harming them. He asked nothing for his help. He said, "If you wish to be treated by drugs you must pay. If, however, you allow me to treat you by hypnotism, I will do so free of charge!" His rate of successful hypnoses was the highest known, to date.

Liebeault, the unselfish physician to peasants, whose every recorded hypnotic action suggested an attitude of kindness and respect for his patients, also insisted that abusive hypnosis was possible. He believed that the hypnotist was morally responsible for the response of a subject to suggestions given under hypnosis.

In 1866, he published a book on his methods, Du Sommeil. Only one copy sold.

Bernheim

A sciatica patient, who had previously been seen by the Nancy Medical School's prominent neurologist, Hippolyte Marie Bernheim (1840-1919), and had not been helped, tried Liebeault's alternative treatment and was cured. After hearing that, Bernheim set out to confront and expose the quack. Upon meeting Liebeault, however, Bernheim became convinced that the unpretentious country doctor had discovered a valuable healing technique.

Bernheim first became Liebeault's pupil, then his professional associate. He taught Liebeault's methods in his classes at the medical school. More copies of Du Sommeil sold. The partners, Liebeault and Bernheim, became known as the Nancy School. Over the coming years, they hypnotized and treated more than 12,000 persons.

The Nancy School used mind blanking ("think of nothing"), and eye fixation ("look into my eyes"), followed by eye closure ("now just close your eyes"), and sleep suggestions to induct subjects. They demonstrated, over and over, that hypnosis did not have to be the weird theatre of Mesmer or the weird medicine of Charcot. In their clinic, the trance experience was quiet, normal, and focused on its medical purpose.

Bernheim experimented with posthypnotic suggestion. He hypnotized a former army sergeant and told him to go to Dr. Liebeault on a certain day two months later, "and you will see the President of the Republic—who will give you a medal and a pension." The subject was amnesic for Bernheim's instructions. On the specified day, he entered Liebeault's office, walked over to where a visitor stood, bowed low to him, and called him "Your Excellency." As Liebeault approached, the sergeant again bowed to the confused visitor, and murmured, "I thank Your Excellency."

Liebeault asked, "To whom are you speaking?"

The sergeant answered, "Obviously, to the President of the Republic."

Bernheim pondered the phenomenon of rapport, that highly charged and special relationship between hypnotist and patient.[1] He recognized the extent to which a suggestible person will role-play and act out the expectation of the hypnotist: "A word, a motion, a tone of voice puts them on the track."

---

[1] Freud , who began his clinical phase as a hypnotist, was influenced by Bernheim. Freud evolved the concept of rapport into the idea of transference.

He pared the technique of verbal induction down to its essential of suggested inhibition, a single-idea focus on sleep. He told his subjects to think only of sleep. He suggested that their eyes were tired and beginning to wink, with eyelids feeling heavy, and vision becoming blurred. Then he would suggest eye closure, eyelid catalepsy ("Your lids are stuck together, you cannot open them."), and falling asleep.

Bernheim wrote two books: Hypnosis and Suggestion in Psychotherapy (1884) and Suggestive Therapeutics (1889). In them, he clearly described the situation of an amnesic hypnotic subject who unknowingly carries out posthypnotic commands. He believed that a susceptible hypnotic subject could be caused to commit violence, or to submit to seduction, because of his automatism. He said that false memories could be suggested under hypnosis. He believed that hypnotized women could be sexually abused. He kept a tally of crimes which had been committed upon hypnotized women, or had been committed as a result of hypnotic suggestion.

Bernheim believed that posthypnotic obedience to immoral suggestion was caused by automatism, rather than by a subject's lack of character. One day, he staged an experiment in this area. He suggested, to a hypnotized man, that a hallucination of a person standing in front of him had just insulted him. The hypnotist then handed his subject a knife made of paper, told him it was a "dagger," and instructed him to stab the hallucination. The subject leaped forward, making fierce stabbing motions. Then he stood rigid, wild-eyed and trembling, staring at the "man" whom he had just killed.

He also wrote about disguised induction: hypnosis obtained in a subject without using a recognized induction process and without having informed the subject. And he considered the physiological basis of trance, noting that very sick, or unconscious, people may behave as if hypnotized.

Bernheim's writings were widely accepted as authoritative; they helped move him into leadership of the Nancy group.

Beaunis

Beaunis, the third member of the Nancy School, was a French lawyer and Bernheim's friend. Beaunis agreed with Bernheim that a trained somnambulist can be reduced to automaton-like behavior, even to the extent of doing self-injurious and unethical actions. Beaunis was also a hypnotist. One day, he hypnotized a young woman and gave her a posthypnotic suggestion to see him come into her room and wish her "Happy New Year" on the morning of January 1, 1885, six months away. On January 1, Beaunis was in Paris, yet the subject (obeying his suggestion for the post-hypnotic hallucination) "saw" him in her room in Nancy. She was flattered that the great man had personally come to greet her.

Liegeois

Like Beaunis, Jules Liegeois was a lawyer. He was fascinated with hypnosis and represented himself as an individual who was deeply concerned about the unethical use of hypnosis. He was a member of the prestigious Academy of Moral and Political Sciences, and he produced a lengthy (four-chapter) monograph on "the possibility of utilizing the hypnotic state for criminal actions...and presented a report on hypnotic suggestion in its relation to law." (Hammerschlag, pp. 14-15) He cited numerous French legal cases involving hypnosis, from 1830 up to his day.

Like the others, Liegeois was himself a hypnotist. He had a somnambulist subject named Camille "...[who] would remain impassive and indifferent when a pin was stuck full length through her arm or a piece of burning charcoal put in her hand..." (That goes far toward "utilizing the hypnotic state for criminal actions," as far as I'm concerned.) In another experiment, Liegeois used posthypnotic suggestion to cause a girl to make, before a government official, a detailed, false confession in which she claimed to have committed a bizarre and horrible murder of her friend.

Liegeois was the first hypnotist to use a telephone to contact, and rehypnotize, a subject:

> M. Liegeois has hypnotized some of his subjects at a distance of 1 1/2 kilometers by giving them an intimation [induction cue] to that effect through a telephone. (William James, The Principles of Psychology, p. 594)

Binet and Fere

These two French hypnosis researchers, Binet and Fere, technically belonged to the Nancy School's competition, the Salpetriere group. Fere was an Assistant Physician at the Salpetriere mental hospital in Paris. However, Binet and Fere sided with the Nancy school in public arguments on the issue of antisocial hypnosis. In their coauthored book, *Animal Magnetism (*published in English in 1888), they insisted that obedience to abusive or criminal suggestions was possible in a heavily conditioned subject:

> Many persons are agitated by the idea that a stranger may influence and dispose of them as if they were mere automata. This is certainly dangerous to human liberty, and it is a danger which increases with the repetition of experiments.

A Case of Suggested Theft

Liebeault devoted a chapter in his book to the dangers of hypnosis. Yet he personally was involved in a tragic case of crime suggested under hypnosis. The case began one October day, in 1886, when another doctor, X, visited Liebeault. X said he had come in hopes of seeing an experiment that would demonstrate the possibility of criminal suggestion.

Dr. Liebeault good-naturedly agreed and hypnotized a somnambulist teen-aged boy, N, for the demonstration. The doctor told N that on the following morning he would go to the house of a certain one of the doctor's friends and, therein, steal a pair of small statues that were displayed on a chimney ledge. He further instructed that, after two days had passed, the boy would feel an emotion of sincere guilt for what he had done and return the statues to their owner.

While N was still hypnotized, before Dr. Liebeault could conclude the trance, Dr. X excitedly "intruded and suggested in an authoritarian voice: `You will steal! Do you hear me? You will steal!'" (Lawrence and Perry, p. 230)

Liebeault then awakened the boy and sent him on his way. Dr. X happened to encounter the unfortunate lad again several hours afterward in a local restaurant. X was with friends to whom he wished to display his ability to achieve obedience in the controversial area of giving criminal suggestions. This time X hypnotized N himself. Then X told N to steal several small items plus a raincoat which was hanging from a wall hook. N obeyed every suggestion. Unfortunately, X neglected to cancel his urgings to "Steal!" before awakening N and leaving, so N was left with the suggestion functioning posthypnotically.

At first, no trouble was apparent. N stole the statues as Lieubeault had directed, then felt guilty and returned them, as directed. But, unknown to Lieubeault, he then continued to steal. Shortly afterward he was arrested for theft of a series of cheap items, mostly clothing. Police found in his pocket a notebook in which he had kept a record of every stolen article. He also confessed.

Liegeois visited N in jail. He requested permission from the court to testify on the possible role of Dr. X and the experiment in the case. His offer was turned down. N was sent to jail for two months.

Liebeault volunteered to hypnotize N and undo the problem suggestion. N's father, however, who was exceedingly unhappy about the previous hypnoses of his (underage) son, forebade any further hypnoses.

Binet and Fere said, that from the point of view of a predatory hypnotist, amnesia—spontaneous or suggested—was the most important aspect of hypnosis.

> These facts show that the hypnotic subject may become the instrument of a terrible crime, the more terrible since, immediately after the act is accomplished, all may be forgotten—the crime, the impulse, and its instigator.

They reported an incident in which the subject's amnesia stayed firm, despite physical injury during trance. A hypnotized woman, with whom they were experimenting, fell. Her head hit hard on the floor. Neither her fall, nor the excitement of spectators in the room after she fell, brought her out of trance. When Binet and Fere awakened her from trance in the usual manner...

> ...the subject was astonished by the pain in her head...[she]could not understand whence it came. We are, therefore, justified in the assertion that a subject of profound hypnotism may undergo all sorts of violence without retaining any recollection or consciousness of it...We even think it possible that a subject might be violated [raped] in the hypnotic state, in which she would be unable to offer any resistance. (Binet and Fere, p. 367)

They also observed that subjects who suffered from suggested amnesia could remember all under rehypnotization.

Charcot and the Salpetriere Group

The hypnotic sleep, which is produced with so much difficulty and delay in fresh subjects, occurs with alarming rapidity in those who have been long under treatment. Some of our patients are hypnotized at once by a single abrupt gesture, and this may be effected in all places alike, and at any hour of the day. If we meet one of these subjects crossing the courtyard, an exclamation or abrupt gesture will cause her to stop short and become motionless in catalepsy. She may be as instantaneously awakened by breathing on her forehead or eyes....This is a somewhat important fact from the medico-legal point of view....a suggestion may be given in a sleep of very short duration...in the course of fifteen seconds we could throw a subject into a lethargy, then into somnambulism, suggest an act, and then awake him. It is, therefore, possible that an individual might make use of the fifteen seconds in which he found himself alone with a susceptible subject to inculcate an idea, an hallucination, or an impulse.

- Binet and Fere, 1888, Animal Magnetism, pp. 364-5

Binet and Fere may have written the above warning with the situation in mind of the Salpetriere, a Paris medical poorhouse and insane asylum that housed more than 4,000 women. Jean Marie Charcot worked and researched there. He was the chief doctor for many of those women, especially ones who had convulsions—physiological or hysterical.

Charcot began his publishing career with a celebrated report on how to distinguish true epileptics from hysterics who were unconsciously mimicking epilepsy. He also did good studies of lung and kidney disorders, and worthwhile observations on hysterical paralyses. Soon, Charcot was considered the foremost neurologist in the world. He became rich and powerful. Foreign, as well as French, patients sought him out. The Salpetriere became famous because Charcot and the famous physiologists, Tourette and Babinsky, were there.

Charcot then began to study hysteria using the same method of physiological observation that had worked so well with the epilepsy mimickers and the patients with hysterical paralyses. He theorized 1) the existence of an unconscious, and 2) the role of an unconscious fixed idea in causing a neurosis (concepts which Freud would later build on). He discovered that he could suggest to a hypnotic subject that she had a paralysis and it would appear. He could then suggest that her paralysis had gone, and it would disappear. He noticed that "attacks" of hypnosis were followed by amnesia, and that those lost memories could be recalled under rehypnotization, if there was no associated brain damage. Those observations were all sound.

Weird Science

While studying hypnosis, Charcot tried to boil down all the phenomena of trance into a single neurological illness. That gross oversimplification caused him to make even more misses than hits. For example, Charcot declared that only women could be hypnotized—and only those women who had that mental illness which he called "hysteria."

Charcot taught his students that all hysterics are sexually obsessed and sexually uncontrolled, having insatiable nymphomaniac tendencies (the ghost of Maxwell here?). He taught that a hysteric was likely to have "hysterical stigmata" [hickeys? bruises? abraisions?] scattered over her body, especially on the breasts, lower abdomen, and inside her mouth and vagina. Some authors say Charcot taught that hysterics are numb everywhere except in the genital area. Other writers say Charcot claimed that the stigmata-affected areas were insensitive in a hysteric and could be stimulated without the woman knowing it. Charcot also declared that all hysterics were liars (likely, for example, to falsely claim sexual abuse by their doctor, interns, and attendants).

Since he insisted that any female who was capable of trance was an hysteric, mentally ill, dangerous, and seductive, Charcot could not imagine hypnosis being used for a therapeutic purpose. He claimed that every trance crisis (using the same vocabulary as Mesmer) was divided into a complex series of set stages. Charcot did not realize that one subject's behavior had suggested this pattern to him—and later subjects had mimicked his expectations.

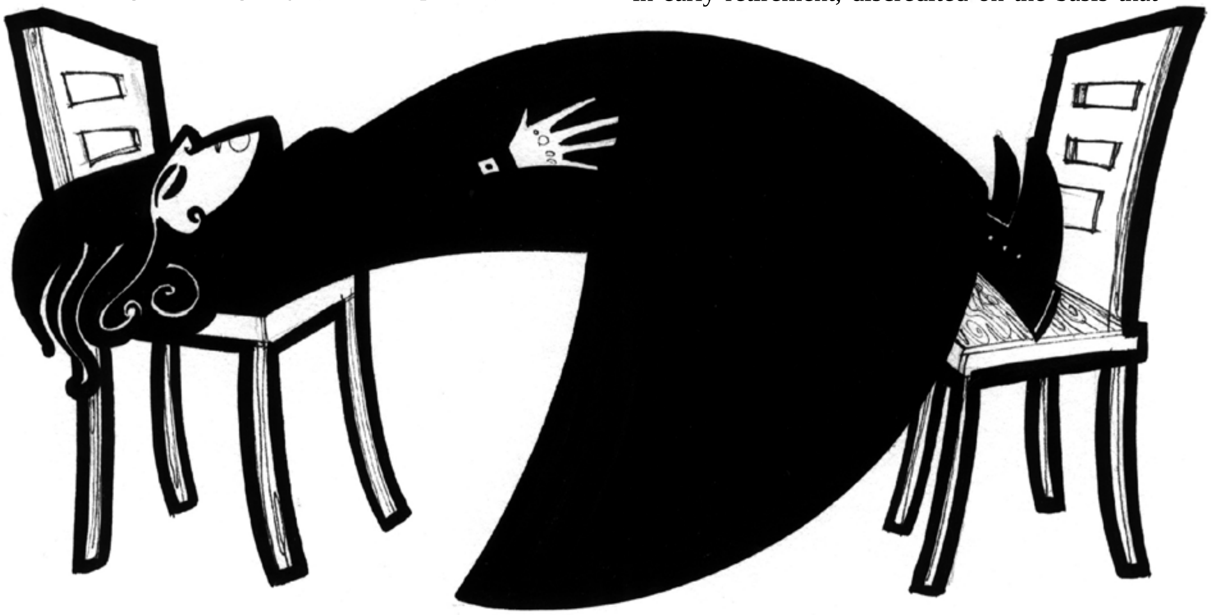
Charcot believed that hysterics entered trance spontaneously. He claimed that he never deliberately hypnotized anybody. If the subject did not go into trance spontaneously, however, when Charcot wanted her to do so, the doctor would press on her eyeballs until she did enter trance!

Charcot invited all the intellectuals of Paris to come and watch his stable, of less than a dozen young women, going through their crises at his regularly scheduled psychiatric circus at the Salpetriere. He did not realize that the lecture preceding his demonstration told the suggestible patient exactly how to behave in her trance. (And saved her from getting her eyeballs pushed in.)

He first lectured that stimulation of the female hysteric's erotic zones would trigger a predictable sequence of crisis stages. Then he would choose a subject, begin to stimulate her zones, and the show began. The first expected stage was rigidity ("human plank"). The woman would arch her body from head to heels. She could, in this rigid, catatonic state, be placed between two chairs and sat, walked, or bounced upon. Her second expected stage involved overt sexual delusions. In the last stage, the woman hallucinated seeing animals around her. (She was surrounded by animals, all right, but they were human.)



Lewd Desires—A further tragedy suffered by Charcot's patients was inadequate supervision. Not only was their doctor a sexually-twisted ghoul, but other Salpetriere staff members followed his example. Charcot's description of their supposed illness was an ugly male fantasy projected (or forced) onto these suggestible women (usually young and pretty) who had been publicly defined by him as having a disease characterized by uncontrollable sexual fantasies, lewd desires, amnesia following "crisis," and compulsions to falsely claim sexual molestation.

Charcot's "hysterics" were frequently visited, hypnotized , and ? , in their hospital quarters by inappropriate people. For example, in 1889, a group of male students at the Salpetriere tried to cause a young woman named Witt., while in trance, to "strip and take a bath." She was not as sexually voracious and uncontrolled as Charcot taught. She converted their inappropriate order and, instead, went into "a violent fit of hysterics." Another "hysteric" gave birth to a child mysteriously conceived in the hospital.

Like Mesmer, Charcot is remembered for persuading the French scientific establishment to seriously investigate hypnotic phenomena. Bernheim later recalled, however, that of all the thousands of clients he hypnotized, the only one who ever displayed Charcot's exact list of trance stages, was a former Salpetriere patient. After his years of fame, Charcot spent an even greater number of years in early retirement, discredited on the basis that his theories were simply wacky. In the last year of his life (d. 1893), even Charcot realized that he had been mistaken.

In the meantime, his team had spent a lot of time in court arguing with the Nancy School.

The Case of Pauline

Tourette's 1887 book on hypnotism details a case involving the hypno-abuse of one of the Salpetriere's hysterics. Pauline was an 18-year-old girl who was easily hypnotized. One day, she was hypnotized by an unauthorized person who gave her a posthypnotic suggestion that, at 4:00 p.m., she must find the hospital's priest and "embrace" him. He gave her a further posthypnotic suggestion that she would be unable to reveal who had given her that instruction. At 4:00 p.m., Pauline

> ...suddenly arose, got out of bed and went across the room to the door. The nurse who was on duty asked her where she was going. "I am going to Father X," she said; "I want to embrace him." They thought she had become insane and did not let her go out of the room. This led to an indescribable scene. Pauline made desperate attempts to free herself; she had to be tied down. In the following hours she had an attack of cramp of unusual intensity; she made piercing cries and disturbed the remaining patients. The doctor on duty was informed. After he had made several vain attempts to calm Pauline, the idea occurred to him to put her to sleep so as to bring her to rest by means of suggestion. He now discovered how it all happened, because as soon as Pauline was asleep she told him about the events of the morning without, however, mentioning the name of the one who had given her the suggestion... (Tourette, p. 131, quoted in Hammerschlag, pp. 75-77)

Now the doctor knew what the problem was, but he was unable to cancel the previous suggestion. Pauline's distress continued, unabated, all night. By the next morning, a search had revealed the identity of the perpetrator. He was taken to Pauline's room, required to hypnotize her and undo that frivolous command. He did so. Pauline immediately was released from the posthypnotic compulsion and became calm.

Several days later, however, it all happened again. Pauline had a sudden compulsion to find and embrace the priest. This time, the doctor immediately hypnotized her and asked where she had gotten the suggestion. She said, that morning, on the staircase, she had encountered three persons who had hypnotized her and given her the command to embrace the priest along with the commond that she would experience severe pains if she did not embrace him—or if she revealed who had given her the suggestion. Again, Pauline was in acute distress with the need to carry out the suggestion. This time, the doctor could not discover the guilty parties. So they found the priest, and explained the problem to him. He kindly allowed Pauline to embrace him. She then became normal again.

Nancy vs. Salpetriere in Court

Being doctors, Liebeault and Bernheim focused on discovering ways to use hypnosis to solve medical problems. When the lawyers, Liegeois and Beaunis, joined the Nancy School, however, they brought interest in the legal aspects of hypnosis. Between 1884 and 1890, Liegeois and/or Beaunis fought one case after another involving hypnosis.

Liegeois took an absolutistic position: "any individual placed in a somnambulistic state will become in the hands of the experimenter a complete automaton, both morally and physically." He and Beaunis used Bernheim and Liebeault as expert witnesses. They cited experimental results from the writings of European trance researchers and the outcomes of previous legal cases which had involved hypnotic abuse.

Brouardel was the lawyer who usually argued against Liegeois and Beaunis. Brouardel always insisted that misuse of hypnosis was simply impossible, citing the dogma of moral integrity. The dogma is a legal fiction with a long history, which has persisted up to the present day. It deals with the question of whether somebody can be made to do something immoral by means of hypnosis. According to the dogma of moral integrity, if a hypnotist causes a subject to do something immoral, then the subject was an immoral person who wanted to do that immoral thing. If a hypnotist caused a subject to do something self-injurious, or criminal, the dogma made it, always, the subject's fault.

The Nancy School did not believe in the dogma. Brouardel and the Salpetriere staff, except for Fere, did believe in it. Brouardel called staff associated with the Salpetriere as his expert witnesses. Charcot had only a dozen Salpetriere hysterics on which to experiment, whereas Liebeault and Bernheim had hypnotized thousands of persons of both sexes and all psychological types. The Salpetriere gang treated their hypnotic subjects with scorn, circus-like manipulation, and inappropriate suggestions. They had awesome credentials, however, and they all insisted that exploitation by means of hypnosis was quite impossible, so sometimes Brouardel would win the case.

The series of legal cases involving hypnosis, which the two sides fought, catapulted the Nancy School from obscurity to the Salpetriere's level of Parisian notoriety. The persons and their positions became very well-known to Europeans living in that period of history. The most famous case over which they battled was Gabrielle Bompard's murder trial.

Everybody Hypnotized Gabrielle

In 1890, a young woman named Gabrielle Bompard was accused of the murder of Gouffe, a Paris bailiff. She was tried, together with a man named Eyraud who was accused of using suggestions given under hypnosis to cause Gabrielle to commit that murder. In the end, Eyraud received a death sentence and was executed. Gabrielle was sentenced to twenty years in prison at forced labor. Gabrielle's story illustrates the potential fate of a genetically somnambulist European girl in the late 1800s.

After Gabrielle's mother died when she was eight, the child became rebellious. To subdue and control his daughter, her father placed her, for the next decade, in a variety of convent boarding schools. By age eighteen, however, she was considered to have calmed down and was successfully living at home.

Then Gabrielle discovered that her father was sexually involved with the maid. Soon after, Gabrielle took a lover of her own. Wanting to end his daughter's affair, her father sent her to his friend, Dr. Sacreste, for some minor surgery. He privately asked the doctor to hypnotize Gabrielle into a state of emotional and sexual repression. Dr. Sacreste was able to hypnotize Gabrielle deeply enough to perform the surgery with hypnosis as the only anesthetic. While she was hypnotized, Sacreste questioned her regarding the affair. He then gave suggestions meant to end her relationship with the young man, sent her home, and passed on the titillating and shocking private details of her romance to her father.

Gabrielle's lover, however, did not let the affair end. He began to hypnotize Gabrielle himself, giving her suggestions in deep trance which were meant to counter the doctor's influence. Her father sent her to Dr. Sacreste for more treatments. Gabrielle's unconscious was now a battlezone between the two most important people in her life. Her father (via Dr. Sacreste) and her lover, who continued also to hypnotize and give suggestions to her. The content of their suggestions directly conflicted, but both men were training Gabrielle to be an ever more automatistic hypnotic subject.

Gabrielle made a final choice. She left home to be with her lover. Her father, considering his battle lost, paid Dr. Sacreste's bill, wrote off his daughter, and returned his attentions to the maid. Gabrielle probably had hoped to live happily ever after with a good man who also happened to be her hypnotist. It didn't turn out that way. Once the thrill of competition for control of Gabrielle was over, her lover, quite unlovingly, abandoned her. That made her what they called in those days, a "fallen woman." With her chances for marriage now ruined, and with no family to fall back on, Gabrielle did what many young people in Europe of that day (and since) in similar circumstances did: she went to the big city, Paris.

In Paris, she met Eyraud, age 48. She also met another man. Both of them hypnotized her—almost daily. Then the murder happened. Afterwards, Gabrielle said that she did not know Eyraud had planned to kill Gouffe. She said that she thought he planned only blackmail. After she killed him, Gabrielle spent the rest of the night alone in her room, frozen in terror, staring at Gouffe's dead body where it lay across the foot of her bed.

The next morning, Eyraud collected the catatonic Gabrielle, and the loot, and fled from Paris to New York City. There, they met a young businessman named Garanger who was flashing lots of cash. Since he was now running short on the funds stolen from Gouffe, Eyraud planned to extort this convenient new target, and therefore cultivated a friendship with Garanger.

Gabrielle, however, saw in the young man's friendship an entirely different set of possibilities. Here, she imagined, was a chance for her to switch men, escape from Eyraud, and straighten out her life. One day, when Eyraud was out of town, Gabrielle told everything to Garanger. Garanger pitied her and spirited her, and himself, away from Eyraud—back to Paris. (He also frequently hypnotized her.)

Bernheim later described Gabrielle as "lacking in moral sense," but she did the right thing at this time (and paid dearly for it). Upon reaching Paris, January 22, 1890, she and Garanger went directly to the police station. They walked inside together and she turned herself in. She told the police that Eyraud actually was the person who was responsible for Gouffe's murder. She said that Eyraud's hypnotic suggestions had compelled her to lure Gouffe to her room, where she put the rope around his neck, strangled, and robbed him.

Eyraud was arrested in Havana, Cuba, and extradited to France to stand trial. Like all the other criminal hypnotists on trial, he denied ever having deeply hypnotized Gabrielle.

Gabrielle continued to be hypnotized, now by the authorities. They found that her trances were deep and displayed all the accepted proofs of somnambulist automatism. Those hypnoses and interrogations of Gabrielle while in trance, however, were just office entertainment. They had no expected role in the trial. Brouardel, from the Salpetriere group, explained:

> Needless to say, none of these questions were related to the events under investigation...She also responded to a number of posthypnotic suggestions with success. These observations buttressed the experts' diagnosis that she was indeed a neurotic individual...It never occurred to us, and it could not occur to us, that hypnotism and hypnotic suggestion could have had a role in the behaviors that Gabrielle was accused of. (Brouardel, quoted in Lawrence & Perry, p. 251)

This famous trial provided an opportunity for the greatest hypnosis experts in Europe to strut their stuff. Liegeois, of the Nancy School, argued that criminal behavior could be suggested under hypnosis. The other experts who testified, however, were all from the Salpetriere: Brouardel, Motet, and Ballet. Those three all adhered to Charcot's positions that:

a) The ability to be hypnotized is confined to females and symptomatic of a female mental illness called "hysteria."

b) Hysterics are, by nature, immoral persons.

c) Crime cannot be caused by hypnotic suggestion.

Dr. Sacreste testified at the trial in Gabrielle's defense. He said that, being a somnambulist, she would have obeyed even criminal suggestions. A prosecution hypnotist rebutted Sacreste's testimony by pointing out that the doctor had not been able to make Gabrielle leave her lover. He declared that fact, itself, proved that Gabrielle could not be controlled by hypnosis and that she was naturally inclined toward lack of character.

The regular jail physician, Dr. Voisin, often hypnotized Gabrielle when Brouardel, Motet, and Ballet were not. Her defense lawyer called Dr. Voisin as a witness because he had heard that, during Voisin's many hypnoses of Gabrielle, the doctor had been able to clarify some facts in the case. When examined under oath, however, Voisin refused to become involved: "I cannot testify. Both as a doctor and as a government employee, I am required to observe professional confidentiality." (pp. 1210-1211, of "Affaire Eyraud-Bompard" in Gazette des Tribunaux, 1, December, 1890.)

The court convicted Gabrielle, saying, "An honest subject resists a dishonest suggestion and if he obeys it, it is not because his will is subjugated but because he consents." The doctors at the Salpetriere, the unofficial Parisian headquarters for unethical toying with hypnotic subjects, were pleased with the decision.

Gabrielle served the full twenty years at hard labor. After her release, a French journalist hypnotized and regressed her to the time before the murder. He learned that, at first, she had resisted Eyraud's posthypnotic instruction to commit the murder. Eyraud forcefully repeated the suggestion. He hammered it in, over and over, until Gabrielle's unconscious yielded.

Tourette

Gilles de la Tourette was an associate of Charcot at the Salpetriere. Like Charcot, Tourette believed that hysteria was a female disease, that hypnotizability was conclusive evidence of mental illness, and that no moral and normal person could be caused to do a criminal act by means of hypnosis. Tourette, however, sided with the Nancy School on two important points. He said that a hypnotized woman could be sexually violated, and he said that she could be caused to lie by means of hypnosis.

Janet

Pierre Janet (1859-1947) succeeded Charcot as the star of the Salpetriere. Janet refined and improved Charcot's theories. He discarded many that were wrong, and developed some that were right. He continued Charcot's mistaken doctrine that hypnotizability proves that the subject is mentally ill, but he made important amendments to that view. Janet said that hysterics were the most easily hypnotized, but not the only hypnotizable persons. He recognized the role of training: the more a patient is hypnotized, the easier it becomes to hypnotize that person.

Nevertheless, he retained Charcot's arrogant notion of a social abyss between the "healthy" hypnotist and his “disordered” subject. That prejudice excused all the cruel, scornful experiments that experimenters did to their subjects (and what stage hypnotists did to their mediums). Janet wrote:

> The relationship of a hypnotizable patient to the hypnotist does not differ in any essential way from the relationship of a lunatic to the superintendent of an asylum.

Janet believed that hypnotic induction required deception, and that its nature must always be disguised from the patient. He excused that deception on the basis that it was a doctor’s professional duty to prescribe whatever would do the most good and in a way that would work.

Across the Channel: Braid and Bramwell

The action in hypnoresearch, in the 18th and 19th centuries, was mostly in mainland Europe, especially France. James Braid, a Scottish doctor, became an important exception. He first became interested in magnetism, in 1841, while watching a demonstration by the Frenchman Lafontaine in Manchester, England. When Lafontaine announced to the audience that his subject was “sound asleep,” the English doctor demanded the chance to examine her. Lafontaine welcomed him to do so.

When Dr. Braid raised the subject’s eyelids, he found, to his astonishment, that her pupils were contracted to two small points. The doctor then jammed a pin up under one of the subject’s fingernails, clear to its end. She gave no sign of feeling pain. Dr. Braid concluded that her condition was quite real. He began to magnetize people himself. Braid rejected Lafontaine’s theory of a “universal fluid,” however. His competing theory, that trance was based in brain physiology, helped make hypnosis credible to British scientists.

Unfortunately, Braid then decided that phrenology was also true and combined his ideas on hypnotism with the lore of head bumpology. The skeptics were again empowered.

Braid coined the terms hypnotism and hypnosis (from the Greek root “hypnos” which means “sleep”). He later realized that hypnosis was a different state of consciousness from sleep, but those words have remained in use. He treated hypnosis in a matter-of-fact way, integrating it into a medical setting. Some of the induction techniques he developed are still in use. He replaced staring at a hand with staring at a light. He hypnotized sighted persons in the dark and also blind persons, proving that simple mental concentration worked as well as staring at a visual target, and that verbal suggestion helped induction. He developed an induction which was based on concentrating on a single idea. Hypnotizing without a formal patter, he discovered a disguised, conversational induction.

Braid noted the dissociation phenomenon by which a hypnotized person can attend to more than one thing at once, one part seemingly unaware of the other. He defined somnambulism as any trance state deep enough that the subject is naturally amnesic. Between 1843 and 1852, he published a series of books on hypnotism.

J. Milne Bramwell was an Englishman who read Braid’s books and carried on his research. In 1903, he published Hypnotism: Its History, Practice and Theory. Bramwell pioneered the pre-induction interview as a means to gain the patient’s trust and understanding. He also corrected any “misconceptions” or fears of the client which might cause resistance to induction. If he encountered resistance to verbal induction, Bramwell sometimes used drugs. Reiter called him a “moderate adherent” to the belief in the possibility of unethical hypnosis. (Reiter, p. 38)

Pavlovian Vocabulary

> If we could look through the skull into the brain of a consciously thinking person, and if the place of optimal excitability were luminous, then we should see playing over the cerebral surface, a bright spot with fantastic, waving borders constantly fluctuating in size and form, surrounded by a darkness more or less deep, covering the rest of the hemispheres.
>
> Pavlov*, Lectures on Conditioned Reflexes

Estabrooks, Sargant, Salter, Wells, and the behaviorists in general, are successors to Pavlov's research tradition. The above-named experimental hypnotists considered Pavlov's work to be the scientific foundation of the physiological study of hypnosis. Pavlov himself, however, is hard to read because he speaks Pavlovian. Here follows an explanation of the most important Pavlovian vocabulary, having to do with hypnosis, used by him and his successors.

Complete Inhibition

Complete inhibition is Pavlovian for normal sleep.

Cortex Inhibition

Cortex inhibition is Pavlovian for trance induction.

Excitation-inhibition

Chemical messengers (neurotransmitters) cause electrical excitation or inhibition in the individual brain cells. When neurons fire neurotransmitters across their separating synapses, they are attempting to excite the targeted neurons. If neurons do not fire, they are in a condition of inhibition.

Pavlov believed that inhibition was a natural protection against overexcitation. Now, some scientists estimate that as much as 90% of the brain's chemical effort is devoted to inhibition. (Maybe it is that much harder, but that necessary, to usually say "no" rather than "yes.")

Excitation can result in inhibition in two ways. Any repetitive, monotonous stimulation (excitation) eventually results in inhibition. Also, any overstimulation will eventually result in inhibition—a burnout:

> ...inhibition is ever appearing in the role of a guardian of the most reactive cells of the organism, the cortical cells of the cerebral hemispheres, protecting them...when they meet with very strong excitations, securing for them necessary rest, after the usual daily work, in the form of sleep. (Pavlov, Lectures on Conditioned Reflexes, p. 39)

Irradiation-Concentration

Patterns of neural excitation, or inhibition, irradiate (spread) or concentrate (contract). The irradiation or concentration starts from a particular center and moves out (irradiation) or contracts inward (concentration). The spreading or contracting of excitation happens in response to stimuli coming either from outside or inside the brain.

In this section's opening quote, Pavlov accurately envisioned the spreading cloud of electrochemical activity associated with any mental activity expanding with greater mental busyness (contracting with inhibition when the activity is over). Now, by means of PET scans, we can look through the skull of a thinking person and see the phenomena of irradiation and concentration, mind at work, similar to what Pavlov envisioned.

Hypnotic Phases

Increasing cortical inhibition results in hypnotic induction. That is Pavlov's Type One, sensory deprivation, induction. Hypnosis is a stage between awake and asleep. Visualize a brain, undergoing the process of trance induction, as a huge mansion with a multitude of rooms. At first, most of the rooms are lighted. They are "awake." Gradually, as the process of cortical inhibition (induction) proceeds, the lights wink out in more and more rooms of that mansion.

However, some rooms still are lighted. Thus, hypnosis can be thought of as partial sleep, because some neurons remain in an active state and in touch with the outside world. Hypnotic induction happens in the transition state of inhibition between full alertness and full sleep.

Pavlov called the various depths of trance "the intermediate phases between the waking state and complete sleep." He also called them the hypnotic phases. (Lectures..., p. 39)

Transmarginal Stimulation

By "transmarginal," Pavlov meant past the breaking point. He was fascinated with what mentally broke dogs (and people)—and how. As with classical conditioning, Pavlov first noticed the phenomenon of transmarginal stimulation—the breaking point—when it accidentally appeared in his laboratory. The occasion for his realization was the dramatic Neva River flood which happened in the winter of 1924.

All those dogs, who drooled when the bell rang, were kept in a basement laboratory in Leningrad, near the Neva River. For years, his lab workers had been conditioning the dogs into various sets of automatic responses. When the river unexpectedly flooded Leningrad, the water poured into that basement laboratory where the dog cages were kept. It rose, and rose, to nearly the tops of their cages. Shortly before the dogs were rescued, they were surviving only by swimming around and around at the tops of those cages.

Then, a lab attendant dove into the near-freezing water and rescued the dogs, one by one, bringing each dog out of its cage—under water. It was a very frightening experience for the dogs.

> ....after their rescue some were in a state of severe inhibition, stupor and collapse...Pavlov was most excited when he found that in all those dogs which had experienced the collapse, all their recently implanted conditioned reflexes had been abolished. It was as if the recently printed brain-slate had been suddenly wiped clean, and Pavlov was able to imprint on it new conditioned patterns of behavior. (Sargant, The Mind Possessed, pp. 8-9)

Transmarginal stimulation had pushed the dogs to collapse. They had been driven by fear, excitement, and final relief into transmarginal stimulation. They were pushed past the breaking point, over the brink.

After the flood, Pavlov took time to thoroughly investigate this new phenomenon. He learned it did not require an act of God to accomplish transmarginal stimulation. In his experiments, he deliberately pushed dogs to that mental brink—and then over it. Every dog had its breaking point. He established that dogs, like people, could have nervous breakdowns. The circumstances that could make them neurotic were anger, fear, or mental conflict.

As Pavlov studied transmarginal stimulation, he realized that it consisted of a series of three phases. He called those phases the equivalent, paradoxical, and ultraparadoxical. He said that a subject in the process of deepening trance will go through these phases. In all three of the transmarginal states—equivalent, paradoxical, and ultraparadoxical—dogs or people have symptoms of "hysteria." Pavlov defined hysteria as a mental condition characterized by more than usual suggestibility—or counter-suggestibility (reflexively acting or thinking the opposite way of what is suggested).

Here are those three transmarginal states viewed in more detail.

State of Equalization (Equivalent Phase)—In the state of equalization, which Pavlov also called the equivalent phase, weak and strong stimuli receive the same response. For example, the subject responds equally (the same) to a whisper or a shout. A normal, healthy person feels a range of emotions, depending on what is going on in his life. But a sick person, in the equivalent phase, may be flat emotionally, unable to feel joy or sorrow or any emotion in the normal way.

> ...normal people, during periods of great fatigue following stress, may find that there is little difference between their emotional reactions to important and trivial experiences. (Sargant, The Mind Possessed, p. 11)

Pavlov's concept of the state of equalization, the equivalent phase, has also been used in the analysis of hypnosis depths. Katkov analyzed depth into three stages—-each stage having three degrees, and he noted that his second stage, third degree, subjects showed an equalization phase of responsiveness. Either the word, or the actual stimulus, equally could elicit the response. For an example, in that equalization phase of trance depth, illusion caused by hypnotic suggestion or real seeing were equally possible for the subject. He could see a real cat, or he could "see" a suggested hallucination of a cat.

In Pavlov's vocabulary, the weak stimulus was the word, "see." The strong stimulus was the actual event, the presence of a real cat before your eyes. (Later research has shown, however, that the word—which Pavlov called the "second-signal system" can be dominant over the actual event. We tend to believe what we are told we saw, rather than what we really saw.)

Paradoxical Phase—The paradoxical phase is a deeper trance state, with more extensive inhibition, than the equalization phase. In the paradoxical phase, the strong stimulus either does not work, or it works poorly. A weak stimulus, on the other hand, which in a normal state of mind would not work at all, or only poorly, now produces far greater response than a strong stimulus. In the paradoxical phase, strong stimuli increase brain inhibition.

Katkov listed paradoxical behavior as the third degree of the third stage, his deepest trance stage. Here, mere words are dominant over any real-world phenomena. For example, a suggestion for the absence of pain can enable a surgery without anesthetic. Pavlov's dog, in this state, refused food associated with a strong stimulus, but accepted it if the stimulus was weak.

The hypnotized subject, in this phase, ignores the siren outside. He is completely focused on and obedient to the whispered words of the hypnotist. The unconscious split of a survivor of abusive hypnosis answered a question which was asked, in a soft whisper, in a room full of persons engaged in normally-voiced conversation. The split did not respond to any normally-voiced question. Only the subject's root personality answered that type of query.

Ultraparadoxical Phase

In the ultraparadoxical phase, an emotionally over-excited, overwhelmed—utterly stressed out—nervous system loses all of its previous conditioning. The shock of threatened drowning caused the dogs' previously conditioned habits to wash away.

In the ultraparadoxical phase, the subject may do a Pavlovian reversal, or he may accept any new conditioning in the context. Palle Hardwick was driven into the ultraparadoxical phase during Dr. Reiter's final demonstration of him. He then spontaneously rejected Dr. Reiter's hypnotic conditioning of him: a Pavlovian reversal. In a Pavlovian reversal, what was anathema to you before, now becomes desirable. Or what was impossible for you before, now becomes possible.

In the ultraparadoxical phase, when the dog, or person, rejects old patterns, he may become extremely susceptible to new conditioning, to the uncriitical adoption of new attitudes and behaviors. Therefore, pushing the prisoner into the ultraparadoxical phase is the goal of brainwashers.

Positive Induction

Pavlov observed that the more "rooms" in the brain that became dark, the brighter the light burned in the remaining ones. He called that phenomenon positive induction. Whenever many neurons became inhibited, the remainder benefitted by the increased excitation of positive induction. Those neurons that were still excitable could become even more excitable than normal. Those that were in a state of inhibition would not interfere. That is the condition of trance. That is also the physiological basis for the extraordinary mental powers a hypnotized person can demonstrate. It is a kind of balancing act in that mansion: the more lights that turn off, the brighter the lights burn in whatever rooms do remain lit: positive induction.

Negative Induction

Pavlov's Type Two, the shock induction, takes place because of the principle of negative induction. Too much stress, or a sudden shock which overstimulates a person's brain, can result in trance or depression. The cause is the phenomenon which Pavlov called negative induction. Negative induction starts with stimulation, with turning lights on: BRIGHT. Too much BRIGHT causes a physiological compensation in the brain; other rooms must turn their lights off. Thus, overstimulation causes inhibition: negative induction.

In addition to "negative induction," Pavlov had another term for the protective shutdown caused by shock or overstimulation. He called it a self-protecting reflex of an inhibitory character. Pavlov reasoned that there were situations in which an animal's (or person's) only hope to live was to stay absolutely immobile. Immobilization is a potential of the catatonic stage of hypnosis. Therefore, he viewed the cortical shutdown in response to shock (fear) as a self-protecting reflex of the inhibitory sort.

Progressive Inhibition of Cortical Analyzers

Pavlov's cybernetic concept of brain function postulated the existence of what he called analyzers, one for each mental department. He suggested that there was a visual analyzer, an auditory one, a motor (voluntary muscles) one, and of course, in humans, the analytical, critical, self-controlling conscious-mind analyzer. Pavlov theorized that the process of deepening into trance involved inhibiting those analyzers, one by one.

Pavlov believed that the voluntary analyzers would get inhibited (shut down) first. He said the involuntary ones would not be affected by the spread of cortical inhibition. Indeed, one of the earlier characteristics of trance is loss of voluntary control (such as, inability to open eyes, lower an arm, pull hands apart). Pavlov would explain that phenomenon by saying that the motor analyzer was shut down by spreading cortical inhibition.

Brainwashing: The Technology

Stage One:
Deconditioning

☑

Stage Two:
Breaking Point

☑

Stage Three:
Reconditioning

> The message of coercion is: you must change and become what we tell you to become—or else. The threat embodied in the 'or else' may be anything from death to social ostracism, any form of physical or emotional pain. The goal of naked coercion is to produce a cowed and demoralized follower.
>
> Lifton, Thought Reform and the Psychology of Totalism, p. 438

Brainwashing's Goal Is Conversion

Stressed humans naturally tend to make conversions—which may, or may not, be permanent. The conversions happen because stressed humans (and dogs) may respond to crisis by discarding inappropriate old programming and discovering, in suffering, the key to spiritual growth and to new and better behavior. A person can change by adopting a group's shared values and beliefs. Or, they can change independently, creating a new personal path out of the debris of shattered past attempts. Brainwashing is a deliberate regimen of stress that seeks a true change of heart, which results in future collaboration.

In the 1950s, certain U.S. government agencies began to fund brainwashing research. In 1957, Dr. William Sargant, an English brainwashing specialist, stated the goal in one question: "Why do stressed humans tend to make conversions?" They were looking for a way to deliberately, systematically elicit conversion: predictable stresses for predictable results. The experiments confirmed that harsh manipulation of a confined person can break down previous attitudes and instill a new set of the brainwasher's choice.

Brainwashing is not what advertisers, politicians, educators, and evangelists do, because their audience is not a captive one. If you can walk away from unwelcome persuasion, it is not brainwashing. If you cannot walk away, it may be. Indoctrination is the mildest level of brainwashing. Indoctrination is a very direct conversion system which attempts to change a person's viewpoint while he or she is still a thinking individual. More severe and classic brainwashing regimens differ from indoctrination in that they attempt to change a person's mind without allowing any input or control from the victim. Complete control over a person's environment allows extreme psychological manipulations.

Methods of Brainwashing

The technique of brainwashing involves total external control, an atmosphere of stress, and two or three induction methods (alternating, or combined) which increase suggestibility. Since brainwashing is a coercive mind-control technology that contains elements that lower consciousness and increase suggestibility, there is a link between hypnotism and brainwashing. Stress increases suggestibility. Extreme stress can cause trance. The Pavlovian induction types historically associated with brainwashing are:

- Type One: Sensory deprivation.
- Type Two: Overstimulation—prod, whip, sexual abuse, haranguing, terrifying, etc.
- Type Three: Brain syndrome caused by fatigue and hunger.

Three Stages of Brainwashing

Brainwashing takes place in a series of three major stages. A Dutch psychoanalyst, Joost Meerloo, first analyzed and named them in his post-WWII analysis of Nazi brainwashing techniques:

I. Deconditioning of the subject.

II. Subject's artificial breakdown and identification with the new authority, with the brainwashers' orthodoxy, whatever it is.

III. Subject's reindoctrination, retraining in the new orthodoxy.

So, the first stage is breakdown. The second is the phenomenon of the breaking point, and identification with the brainwashers. The third is the subject's reindoctrination. All three stages—deconditioning, breaking, and reindoctrination—have been carefully researched.

Stage One: Deconditioning

[The purpose is] to destroy the old loyalties and value systems...their personal meaning systems...extinguishing old conditioned patterns.

- Perry London, Behavior Control, p. 91

Biderman and Lifton independently analyzed the exact coercive elements, and their chronological order, which accomplish the subject's deconditioning. Each came up with an eight-item list.

Biderman's List of Deconditioning Factors

1) Isolation, Disorientation, and Loss of Control —

A brainwashing regimen always starts with isolation of the victim.[1] Brainwashers isolate a prospective subject from associates who might sustain his old beliefs. Isolation may be solitary confinement. Patricia Hearst was shoved into a closet in a house where only SLA members lived.

If the inmate is to be held in a group, the brainwashing program usually isolates new candidates from all former associates. It surrounds them instead with new associates who are also undergoing brainwashing, or who are already single-mindedly devoted to the new point of view. In a brainwashing program described by Sargant, the inmates lived for nine to twelve months in a camp which was so isolated that all ties with the subjects' friends and families were cut.

The camp regimen deliberately shattered all their old patterns of behavior. In any brainwashing situation, the subject has totally lost control—and is confused. This is deliberate. In a classic brainwashing regimen, the isolation from former peers is combined with loss of control and dis- orientation. The victim has been snatched abruptly out of his accustomed environment and thrust into a totally different one. The subject's lack of opportunity to mentally prepare for the change is deliberate. It makes him less able to resist.

---

[1] The isolation of brainwashing is a physical corollary to the mental isolation of a hypnotic subject whose operator has become the subject's sole definer of reality.

Many victims of totalitarianism have told me in interviews that the most upsetting experience they faced in the concentration camps was the feeling of loss of logic, the state of confusion into which they had been brought—the state in which nothing had any validity...In order to tame people into the desired pattern, victims must be brought to a point where they have lost their alert consciousness and mental awareness. ...Feelings of terror, feelings of fear and hopelessness, of being alone, of standing with one's back to the wall, must be instilled. (Meerloo, p. 49)

2) Monopolization of Perception—Unauthorized information is prohibited and prevented. There may even be outright sensory deprivation. The victim's attention is focused on his own physical and mental misery, and the necessarily exaggerated importance of all interactions with the tormenters. Isolated from family and friends, he is now totally dependent on his captors who have the exclusive right either to continue or relieve his suffering.

He may be in sensory deprivation, being made susceptible to propaganda. Or he may be mentally overstimulated. In that type of brainwashing regimen, subjects are given no chance to relax, not a moment's peace, no opportunity simply to think their own thoughts. Mind and body are constantly occupied, and fatigued, with specified group activities and propaganda input.

3) Exhaustion—Mental collapse under stress can have both a physical and mental basis. Physical stresses, such as fatigue, isolation, and malnutrition; and mental stresses, such as humiliation, weaken the physical foundation of body and mind. Extreme physical stress, especially torture, causes brain syndrome, which further weakens the will to resist and creates suggestibility. Exhaustion makes a person susceptible to any repeated message, an easy target for hypnotic suggestion. Another brainwashing technique wearies the subject mentally by locating a psychological "sore spot," then prodding it again and again.

4) Threats—The subject, now totally isolated and totally helpless, is threatened.

5) Occasional Indulgences—This is the carrot of the carrot-and-stick behavior modification program.

6) Subjugation— Subjugation conditioning often involves invasion of body space. Most people have a limit, a physical area inside which they do not like other persons to intrude. This private space is usually a circle around us, about two or three feet from the body. Harsher brainwashing regimens involve constant interrogation, sleep deprivation, bad and insufficient food, inadequate toileting facilities, humiliating treatment, and no contact with persons outside the brainwashing setup.

7) Degradation, Omnipotence, Omniscience—Physical or sexual assaults—anything that shames—further subjugate and degrade the victim. The subject is shamed. The captors, on the other hand, demonstrate what Lifton called omnipotence and omniscience. Degradation of the subject seems to prove the programmers' omnipotence. The abuse in this category typically involves not only humiliation and degradation, but also forced self-betrayal.

8) Enforcing Trivial Demands—This conditioning is for takeover of the subject's will.

Lifton's Brainwashing Analysis

Dr. Lifton interpreted brainwashing as a manipulated, forced conversion experience. His 8-point method incorporated psychoanalytic elements, the Chinese Communist indoctrination system, and all three of Dr. Meerloo's elements (deconditioning, breaking, and reindoctrination):

1. Captors acquire total control over victim.
2. Captors assault victim's sense of identity.
3. Victim feels guilt and accepts blame.
4. Victim confesses vices, both real and imaginary, the uglier, the better.
5. Victim betrays self and others, then feels "cut off from his former roots and unable to return..."
6. Victim is pushed to extreme death anxiety and breaking point.
7. Captors swap leniency for total compliance. The prisoner now eagerly behaves any way they want, because he now believes this may be a way to survive.
8. The prisoner's conversion is reinforced by a systematic regimen of criticism, self-criticism, and instruction in exactly what he is supposed to believe.

Stage Two: The Breaking Point

> ...the Chinese Communist leaders not only find nothing to resent in charges that they 'brainwash' their opponents, but regard the term as a quite apt and honorable description of what they wish to achieve. (p. 6) Practitioners of 'thought-reform' seek 'real' changes in beliefs and values. They demand that the victim be 'honest, sincere, and full' in his 'self-examination, repentance, and change.'
>
> - Blake in Biderman and Zimmer (eds), The Manipulation of Human Behavior, p. 10

Finally, the subject's mental tension reaches the cortex overload stage. Then, ultraparadoxical breakdown (a physiological phenomenon first described by Pavlov) occurs.

Ultraparadoxical Stage

The breaking point is a physiological event. Abuse causes the ego, the "I," to shrink, pull back, and weaken until, finally, exhausted, it gives up. Pavlov named that moment of giving up the ultraparadoxical stage. When pressure, exhaustion, and fear become unbearable, the subject reaches the breaking point.

Sargant argued that anything that causes temporary cortex overstimulation and collapse has the healing effect of loosening up old programming patterns, thereby allowing the implant of new ones. His list of overstimulations which could cause the ultraparadoxical break included electroshock, voodoo possession, rock concerts, and suggested confabulations and implanted false memories. Sargant approved of whatever it took to drive the patient into the transmarginal collapse, so that his previous behavior patterns could be broken up.

Pavlov stressed dogs, through deconditioning, into the ultraparadoxical crisis. After the breakdown, he conditioned new habits into them. Sometimes, he put the dog through the whole routine again: stressing it into another breakdown, and then retraining into yet another set of habits. At the breaking point, the exhausted, confused dog—or person—will accept any sort of relief.

Submission to and Positive Identification with Enemy

A curious phenomenon of this second stage of brainwashing is the subject's identification with the brainwashers. At the breaking point, the victim switches, from fear and hate of Big Brother, to trust and love of Big Brother.

Victims

> ...suddenly begin to feel affection for the examiner who has been treating them so harshly—a warning sign that the 'paradoxical' and 'ultraparadoxical' phases of abnormal brain activity may have been reached: they are near to breaking point... (Sargant, Battle for the Mind, p. 214)

Compulsives Resist the Best

The "obsessional neurotic," better known as the compulsive, whether canine or human, is the personality type which is most able to resist brainwash techniques. He tends to avoid becoming emotionally involved in what is going on. That protects him from being influenced. Brainwashers have the most success with compulsives using Type Three inductions—lack of food, lack of sleep, illness, injury, and exhaustion.

Many human eccentrics may approximate to Pavlov's stronger dogs, who acquired new behavior patterns only when they had first been debilitated by castration, fever, or gastric disorders which made them lose a great deal of weight. Once reindoctrinated, they were fattened up, and the new behavior patterns became as firmly fixed as the old; indeed, Pavlov could not get rid of them again. (Sargant, Battle for the Mind, p. 86)

Meerloo wrote of the breaking moment:

> ...the moment of surrender may often arrive suddenly. It is as if the stubborn negative suggestibility changed critically into a surrender and affirmation. What the inquisitor calls the sudden inner illumination and conversion is a total reversal of inner strategy in the victim. From this time on, in psychoanalytic terms, a parasitic superego lives in man's conscience, and he will speak his new master's voice. (Meerloo, p. 92)

At the breaking point, the subject begins to reject what he is being told to reject and begins to accept what he is being told to accept. At this point of emotional extremity, he makes the Pavlovian reversal. Now he loves Big Brother. The breaking point is also the point of confession: "I was bad but now I'm good."

Internalization of the Guilt for Breaking

All brainwashers dread conformity based on opportunism rather than conviction. All work to achieve a sincere conversion. They make > *...the ultimate test of the loyalty and sincere devotion of the individual to the system...his acceptance of the inquisitorial process itself: the purge, coercion, confession, and the entire paraphernalia of enforced conversion...(Biderman and Zimmer (eds), p. 8)

The subject's final capitulation happens when he not only gives outward obedience to whatever the captors will for him to do, but he also honestly comes to think and believe whatever they demand. After that, he no longer blames Big Brother for bringing him to the breaking point. He now thanks Big Brother for his "help." The subject now blames what happened on himself.

He now feels a deep conviction of guilt. He accepts personal responsibility for what happened: "I was bad. It had to be done to me, so I could be made good. I'm so grateful Big Brother fixed my wrong thinking." The subject now believes that he was imperfect, and needed the brainwashing cure. This taking of responsibility for his mistreatment is called the internalization of obedience. At the breaking point, the victim's independent will steps back, yields to the controller's will, then internalizes that submission.

Self-loathing Measures Inmate's Renewal—

> One final test of loyalty demands that the prisoner act as though he hated himself with the intensity of the criminal definition which the system has placed upon him. (Blake in Biderman & Zimmer, eds, The Manipulation of Human Behavior, p. 8)

Similar language described a model prison therapy, the Asklepeion program at the Marion Illinois Federal Penitentiary:

> ...object of the "therapies" is initially to "unfreeze" the prisoner's formal organization of beliefs about him or her self (or, as Opton describes it, "to degrade the self-concept and shatter his personal identity"). When this has been achieved, the person will then "change" his or her personality and belief system. In the final stage the new personality will be "refrozen." (Ackroyd, et. al., p. 268)

The "refreezing" takes place in Stage Three.

Stage Three: Reconditioning

> Through both continual training and taming, the new phonograph record has to be grooved...Incidental relapses to the old form of thinking have to be corrected...The victim is daily helped to rationalize and justify his new ideology...This systematic indoctrination...
> - Meerloo, The Rape of the Mind, p. 92

In Stage One, the relentless deconditioning pressure unfroze former convictions, values, beliefs, and attitudes. That left the subject vulnerable to the implanting of new ones. In Stage Two, the ultraparadoxical stage, the subject reversed strategies and began to identify with the brainwasher. Meerloo called Stage Three "The Reconditioning to the New Order." It accomplishes the subject's reindoctrination.

The brainwashed, broken subject learns the new orthodoxy in a hypnoidal way. Because of that characteristic of greatly increased suggestibility to new ideas and new conditioning, Pavlov called Stage Three the hypnoidal stage. In the hypnoidal stage, the subject stops being critical. He accepts suggestions or commands without argument, without questioning, and in an uncritical way. New habits, new convictions, and new behavior are now easily programmed into his mind.

Soviet brainwashers omitted this third stage of brainwashing. The Russians sent the prisoner on to serve his time after he broke and "confessed." Chinese brainwashers, however, sent the softened-up prisoner for the third stage: reconditioning.

Reconditioning is accomplished by message repetition, operant conditioning, and milieu control. The typical instruction program continues from morning to night, repeating its teachings over and over. As the prisoner shows signs of genuine conversion, he is rewarded with group approval and upgrades in physical circumstances. Operant conditioning, a system of rewards and punishments, retrains by linking hope to conformity, and fear to nonconformity. Milieu control works because humans are social beings and generally follow the crowd.

Grateful for the Cure

After the prisoner has been broken and retrained, he defends the new mental conditioning. He feels genuine gratitude for having been brainwashed. The human mind has a natural tendency to defend its status quo—whatever it is. Retraining is finished when all the new attitudes are "frozen" in place. They will now be as resistant to outside change as were their predecessors. The more rigid the subject's personality was before the break, the more stoutly he will now defend and cling to his new programming.

Musings

I have been to the breaking point, and beyond, three times in my life. The first Pavlovian reversal occurred when I was sixteen years old and had fallen in love for the first time. My parents harshly resisted my attachment to the young man and broke up our relationship. I converted my love for that young man into rage at my parents and despair over my own prospects. I transformed from a meek girl-child into a bitter, alienated adolescent, seeking worldliness. I went from "naturally good" to genuinely bad.

The climax of a novel based on the history of Donovan's OSS (W. E. B. Griffin, The Last Heroes, audio version, 1997) described a similar conversion from good to bad. The hero, obedient to his OSS directive, murders an absolutely innocent man as if it were a trivial matter. Then he knocks out and kidnaps another man, one whose life is considered by the U.S. government to be useful. In the dramatic finale, we learn that our hero's love interest, his unit director, has agreed to a date; and Donovan himself, Big Brother incarnate, is taking a personal interest in his future with the organization.

The reader is expected to feel good and satisfied with the protagonist's conversion from an everyday Joe with mom-and-pop moral values into a person who will commit any crime, if so directed by his secret agency (government) superior. The novel's conclusion implies that this is the climactic moral transformation demanded of our new world order: to trash Judeo-Christian morals and thereby demonstrate one's worthiness to win romance and the Agency Director's protection.

I went through my second spontaneous Pavlovian reversal years later, when I was in my early thirties. In the midst of personal crisis, I again made a huge transition. This time, I confessed my sins, faced my responsibility and guilt for all that I had done wrong, and made the switch from sinful to redeemed.

The capacity for Pavlovian reversal is an innate God-given gift. Like any other ability, it can be used for good or for evil. Its worse use is of switching us from the state of assuming we are good to a conscious commitment to obey sleazy or self-destructive impulses, or evil orders. Its best use is to move us from an humble recognition that all humankind begins from a helpless state of sin, through confession, shame, and on to acceptance of Christ's gift of redemption.

That long ago day, I prayed, "Jesus, come into my heart." And He did. The bud of my life's potential then began to grow into spiritual maturity, beauty, and strength. I became empowered in my personal struggles, now in alliance with a greater power. Mostly, I used this new strength and guidance to more effectively fulfill my family responsibilities, but I also completed and marketed my first book.

My third Pavlovian reversal took place thirteen years ago, once again during a period of personal turmoil. It was now time to confront my programmed powerlessness, fear, conscious ignorance, and unconscious resistance to change. The worm turned. I began to fight. At first, my battles were all in the land of mind against my hypnoprogramming. I learned how to fight by fighting. In this process, I had to go through a period of holding up my most fundamental beliefs to profound scrutiny and reevaluation, leaving all known paths to plunge directly into the unknown. When I came out the other end of the tunnel, I was reaffirmed in my basic Christian faith. My God was once human and Himself experienced humiliation and learned obedience through suffering. He hates injustice.

Bit by bit, I regained mental territory from the enemy: memories, feelings, abilities, another page written, another interview, a new bit of research accomplished. I struggled first to reunite and heal my own, broken self, but eventually I had to seek ways to help others who had been similarly victimized. I realized that I must become the print "authority" on criminal hypnosis, for there was no other adequate to meet their need.

Thirteen years ago, the dream of researching and writing this book seemed impossible. I persevered because I could have no peace in my spirit otherwise. Against the impossible obstacles, I flung impossible amounts of work and sacrifice. For many years, it felt like I was struggling alone against this great evil.

Gradually, I came to understand that this aspect of my life was also part of God's purpose for my life, to be achieved in God's timing. Sometimes, I experienced extraordinary instances of clearly supernatural assistance and protection. After many years of relative isolation, my path has recently reconverged with those of many other believers. I have experienced anew warm fellowship and have received almost daily miracles of kind, and expert, assistance.

Behaviorism and Government Ally

The Philosophical Postulates of Behaviorism

☑

Skinner on Behavior Control: The Rest of the Story

> "Men like me, who possess hidden wisdom, are freed from common rules just as we are cut off from common pleasures. Ours, my boy, is a high and lonely destiny." As he said this, he sighed and looked so grave and noble and mysterious that for a second Digory really thought he was saying something rather fine. But then he remembered the ugly look on his Uncle's face the moment before Polly had vanished; and all at once he saw through Uncle Andrew's grand words. "All it means," he said to himself, "is that he thinks he can do anything he likes to get anything he wants."
>
> C.S. Lewis, *The Magician's Nephew

In the area of mind-control, after World War II, there developed:

- A new branch of psychology: military psychology
- A new relationship between the mental sciences and the government
- A psychological/scientific philosophy that set the rules and justified the new sci-tech socialism: behaviorism.

Together with the secret government push for more and better people-control technologies (buttressed by constant technological advances in data collection and manipulation, communication, and conditioning), the new psychological philosophy of behaviorism developed.

History of Behaviorism

Behaviorism began in the Soviet Union, although the term was not coined until later. Dr. Horsley Gantt was the first American after the Communist Revolution to research in Russia. He left the Phipps Psychiatric Clinic, at John Hopkins University, to work in Pavlov's laboratory for six years. There, Gantt met all the important Russian psychophysiologists. He translated the writings of Pavlov and Luria into English. Gantt's translations introduced English-speaking physiologists and psychologists to the Soviet's new way of looking at—and researching—the human mind, as merely another "natural object."

An American psychologist, John B. Watson, then made Pavlov's discoveries on conditioned reflexes part of mainstream American psychology. Watson urged psychologists to study only observable behavior as Pavlov did, not inner feelings as Freud had. It was Watson who named this new psychological point of view behaviorism. Behaviorists, like Pavlov, view brain function as the sum of inborn reflexes, plus learned (conditioned) reflexes. The dark side was that

> Watson had little or nothing to say about intention or purpose or creativity...his examples were not incompatible with a manipulative control. (Skinner, About Behaviorism, pp. 6-7)

In the Soviet Union, where the Communists enthroned the dream of manipulative control over the masses, Pavlovian psychiatry had soon become official psychological doctrine. Civilian psychiatry in the United States, however, largely ignored concepts of the conditioned reflex and artificial neurosis, preferring Freudian or Jungian healing approaches. CIA and military psychiatrists, on the other hand, enthusiastically embraced the new approach to the study of the mind which emphasized the role of mental reflexes. Brains are constructed so that the reflexive act is immediate, unthinking, and usually dominant. That fact was of great interest to mind-control researchers.

THE PHILOSOPHICAL POSTULATES OF BEHAVIORISM

There is one aspect of human research which is usually overlooked: the existence of a moral and social duty to advance scientific knowledge. (p. 211) ...The prospect of any degree of physical control of the mind provokes a variety of objections: theological objections because it affects free will, moral objections because it affects individual responsibility, ethical objections because it may block self-defense mechanisms, philosophical objections because it threatens personal identity. These objections, however, are debatable. A prohibition of scientific advance is obviously naive and unrealistic. It could not be universally imposed...

- Delgado, Physical Control of the Mind, p. 214

Behaviorism has been the busiest, and best financed, field of psychological research since World War II. Scientific research is a priority in the technocratic society. There is a "moral duty" to do scientific research, Delgado said. In the United States, however, it is now illegal to conduct research on a person without their informed consent—unless that person is a child in public school. (Or, probably, unless that research is "secret, don't tell.")

The implementation of all discoveries that may conceivably advance power or profit, despite risks to human and other life on the planet, is also a high priority.

Behaviorism provides a psychological—and political—philosophy that serves the new elite. It has evolved into a secular religion which embraces four philosophical postulates that government psychotechnocrats want to hear. For this reason, behaviorists have dominated applied psychology (and government funding for psychological research). Startling fifth and sixth postulates have developed, corollaries to the first four.

1) Unlimited Research

The first postulate is that NEVER ENDING, UNTRAMMELED RESEARCH IS INEVITABLE AND DESIRABLE. To the behaviorists, nothing is sacred. Anything they can imagine, they can try.

> ...without stimuli...the mind cannot exist...the mind may be defined as the intracerebral elaboration of extracerebral information...the basis of the mind is cultural, not individual. (Delgado, Physical Control of the Mind, p. 27)

Delgado doubted that there is such a thing as a "soul." He added that, if the soul exists, "A natural question would be whether or not the soul could be modified by experimentation..." (Ibid., p. 29)

2) Behavior Control

The second psychological postulate of this new order is that MANIPULATION AND CONTROL OF PEOPLE'S BEHAVIOR IS INEVITABLE AND PRAISEWORTHY. A line from B.F. Skinner, a behaviorist researcher, is often quoted: "People will be controlled; I just want them to be controlled more effectively." (Skinner, Beyond Freedom and Dignity*, 1971)

Behaviorists say that THE GOAL OF PSYCHOLOGY IS THE PREDICTION AND CONTROL OF HUMAN BEHAVIOR.

> The whole notion of psychological freedom strikes the behaviorist as mystical, unscientific, and somehow having religious connotations...the committed behavioral engineer is seldom assailed by doubts. He firmly believes that his is the voice of science and not myth. (James Deese, Psychology as Science and Art, 1972, p. 105)

Perry London, behaviorist philosopher, explained:

> Control means power. Behavior control means power over people. In times past, it meant power over life and death and some visible activities in between. Now, it is coming to mean power over all the details of people's lives—of attitudes, actions, thoughts, and feelings, of public postures and the secrets of the heart... (London, Behavior Control, p. 199)

Behaviorists practice action therapy. Action therapy starts from the premise that getting rid of the symptom eliminates the problem. It takes for granted that the therapist is a proper source of behavior control. The behaviorist therapist assumes that:

> His job is to give the patient not self-control but symptom relief...whatever works without damaging the patient is acceptable...Skill at manipulation, anathema to insight therapy, is the moral prize beyond purchase of the actionists, whose title to exercise control is as certain to them as their responsibility for healing is clear. (Ibid., p. 64)

3) Government Control of Science

Government is seen as the PROPER CENTER OF SCIENTIFIC GOALSETTING, RESEARCH, AND OPERATIONAL APPLICATIONS of present, or future, psychological (and non-psychological) technologies. The working partnership that developed during and after World War IIbetween government employees and research scientists in educational institutions extended also to industrialists who built products for research and operations, products which were purchased with government money.

Since World War II, government, higher education, industry (and their bureaucracies) have become ever more bound together in secret research and manufacturing projects. This came about because of the buying of science by the grant system, and the buying of industry through government contracts. Government has become the dominant purchaser (and director) of research because most research is now so expensive that only government (or huge corporations) can afford to bankroll it.

Government directors in the mind-control field were attracted to the behaviorists, who were seen as the most practical, and the least impeded by moral squeamishness, of the psychological camps. Behaviorists who embraced government control and funding of their research were, in turn, generously supported (also highly controlled). In 1979, a writer looked back and declared that behaviorists became dominant in American psychology mainly "because Behaviorism was correct about science being a public enterprise" (Furst, Origins of the Mind, p. 11).

4) Government Control of Information

When government funded the mind-control research, it could control the goals and methods of that research. Most research relevant to mind-control has been publicly funded. PUBLIC FUNDING GAVE GOVERNMENT THE POWER TO ENFORCE SECRECY OF RESEARCH RESULTS. Secret means that there is no public oversight, no public control, no public participation in any development or application of the secret technology. Secrecy denies the public a true picture of what is possible, and what is being done—even though tax dollars are used to do it.

Even researchers studying mind-control topics may not have an accurate picture. Each isolated specialist or team, working on individual government contracts in scattered institutions, is told only the bare minimum needed to proceed with work on their particular piece of the puzzle. And they have no control over how the technology which they develop will be used. No matter how purely defense-oriented the researchers are, once that technology exists, they have no say in decisions on who will use it, on whom, or in what way.

Secrecy prevents normal dialogue between scientists. It eliminates public oversight and criticism. It prevents public knowledge of new mind-control technologies, either in experiments or in operations. Secrecy especially envelops any government operation that borders on illegality. Secrecy protects government agencies (and their personnel) who are involved in illegal, or quasi-legal, activities.

And, invisible under the cloak of secrecy, it is much easier for an agency to slide rapidly into greater and greater possession and abuses of power.

Any secret research can be turned against the government's enemies, foreign or domestic. Many secret technologies could also be used to protect the interests of any governmental agency or organization which had the use of that technology and which felt threatened, thwarted, or wished to establish a stronger position for itself. Such an agency, if it had propaganda capability, for example, might be tempted to generate "news" that would make the public think its enemies are their enemies, hoping thereby to eliminate its opponents. Agency managers thus might rationalize that any clandestine use of secret technology which protects their own interests is for the good of all.

5) Government Patents Its Research and May Seize Civilian Research

NSA contracts with private industry to manufacture its equipment but "the U.S. government, through NSA, owns all patent rights to both the research and the hardware." (Bamford, p. 491) THE GOVERNMENT OWNS PATENT RIGHTS TO ITS RESEARCH AND HARDWARE. IT ALSO SEIZES CERTAIN CIVILIAN RESEARCH.

Of the some three hundred secrecy orders issued each year at the U.S. patent office, all but a very few are on inventions the government has originated itself and has already classified. The remainder are on appropriated civilian research. The government can take any civilian research that it wants. Every civilian application to the Patent Office is first screened by an NSA-linked "Secret Group." The Secret Group decides which applications will be blocked with secrecy orders and taken over by the government.

Flanagan first encountered this rule as a high schooler. He developed a method of detecting time and direction of atom blasts and major rocket takeoffs worldwide. He won a science prize for his method, and got written up in the newspaper. Then, officers from Air Research and Development showed up and interviewed him. They learned his system, classified the information Top Secret, and departed. Months later, the U.S. government announced their possession of this technology.

Flanagan encounted a similar obstacle a few years later when he applied for a patent. The device, which he had invented, conveyed information to the brain by electromagnetic waves passed directly through the skin to a person's general nervous system. By his method, either visual or auditory images can be relayed without intake via eyes or ears. They are conveyed directly to the brain from peripheral nerves via the skin (which also is a sense organ). This technology of direct transmission to brain, via skin, had applications to "very narrow band radio systems."

Flanagan's patent material was seized by the Defense Intelligence Agency under National Security Order #756,124. When the inventor protested in court, the seizure was defended by the United States Justice Department. Under law, no compensation was required. The inventor was forbidden to discuss, promote, or do any further research on his technology. (Begich,Towards a New Alchemy, pp. 28-30)

In April, 1978, Carl Nicolai (and a group of three other young inventors) received the patent office's reply to a six-month-old request for a patent on the Phasorphone, a voice-privacy invention. He received, instead of a patent, a Secrecy Order on the invention. He also was warned that he would spend two years in jail and pay a $10,000 fine if he revealed anything about his Phasorphone to anybody who did not already know about it. (Bamford, pp. 446-449)

The same day that Nicolai received his Secrecy Order, another inventor, Dr. George I. Davida, a University of Wisconsin professor, had the same experience. Davida had applied for a patent on a new cipher instrument. The National Science Foundation had been funding his work. Both Nicolai and Davida fought their Secrecy Orders, taking on the NSA in court. After years of legal wrangling, the NSA eventually backed down on those two inventions. But the Agency did not make any long-term changes in their general style of operations.

A recent, similar case involved the Clipper Chip, another privately invented device. It created an unbreakable code for computer-to-computer communications. The inventor of the Clipper Chip refused to submit to the Secrecy Order's demand that he release information on his invention only to government personnel. He defied it. For that reason, he was prosecuted, convicted, and is now serving a long prison term.

> ...we face ever increasing intrusions on individual inventors by a government with a million lawyers on the payroll, funded with hundreds of billions of dollars and able to tie up individuals in a web of regulation and control, strangling freedom of thought...whose interests are served by withholding this kind of knowledge? And who are these non-elected, unappointed thought-police...? ...confiscation of property for application in military purposes may run counter to an inventor's religious or philosophical reliefs...What right does a government have to take what others have created, and interfere with the inventor's ability to continue to develop his ideas? (Begich, pp. 32-33)

6) Managed Media

Propaganda is mind-control designed to efficiently influence many people at the same time. It can be disseminated via print, pictures, TV, radio, and contrived rumor. Nazi propagandists used "The Big Lie" technique in World War II. Whatever the tale was, no matter how illogical or slanderous, if a credible source repeated it, many people would come to believe it. Other propaganda methods are fake photos (an easy technology in the computer age), false statements by authoritative sources, use of loaded words such as "racist" or "white supremicist," combining a message in speech or lyrics with an emotional setting (the national anthem before the ball game), the bandwagon technique ("everybody's doing it"), and the use of media subliminals.

The techniques of propaganda and advertising are the same. The goals may differ. The April 24, 1995, issue of Advertising Age, on "terrorism," frankly described THE LINK BETWEEN SECRET AGENCIES AND MEDIA. In "Setting Minds Against Terrorism," author Joe Mandese, says that "public policy" is thought up by National Security Council "policy makers" and then packaged in "behavioral science" (mind control/propaganda technologies?). He says the policy makers then send the package over to the CIA and FBI (and NSA?). Those agencies have partners on Madison Avenue who then see to it that the package is nicely presented and well distributed by print and electronic media.

If Mandese is correct, high-level government intelligence organizations decide what Americans are to believe. In a society where situational ethics (whatever we tell you is right, is right) is promoted, situational data is a natural corollary (whatever we tell you is a fact, is a fact). Mandese quoted interviews with executives whose first priority was to "implement strategies" rather than to report facts. The media manager's top priority was to make persons view the U.S. government as loving and benevolent (and truthful?).

The only change in this procedure that Mandese, a representative of the advertising profession, proposed in his article was shifting the process, of planning government propaganda, to include advertising and marketing specialists who would join the committee of intelligence agency representatives. Mandese did not want to lessen government media influence. He just wanted a bigger role for his constituency—the advertising professionals—in the process of deciding what citizens are caused to believe, and in determining how they will be made to believe it.

The Science of Coercion by Christopher Simpson (Oxford University Press, 1994) further documents how private corporations, thinktanks, foundations, and university social scientists have advised officials and police agencies on how best to deploy government propaganda. There are now said to be "Psy War" groups in the Pentagon, NSA, FBI, CIA, NSC, ATF, Secret Service, and U.S. Marshal Departments. The Defense Department has established a Director of Information Warfare who will manage an Information Corps.

> The Information Corps would be an elite military force developed to mastermind information attacks and countermeasures. Under the cloak of national security initiatives, this group would act not only to defend our borders against alien attacks of aggression, but also to protect the nation's Government from its own citizens. ("The Double Edge of Computers," The Voluntaryist, June 1996, p. 4)

How tragic that true facts are seen as a problem to be overcome by those who govern. How tragic that propaganda creation and dissemination—and even disinformation—is being institutionalized as a part of secret agency, military, and police agency operations. INFORMATION CONTROL IS THE KEY TO MIND-CONTROL—INDIVIDUAL OR MASS. You are what you know (or what you think you know), true or false. If what you know is fact, you can make the best possible decision. Democracy works best when voters are correctly, and fully, informed.

Musings

After World War II, democracy's shift to technocracy in the United States accelerated. New attitudes arrived with that shifting social basis of power. The new sci-tech elite rewrote the commandments.

Telling the truth is not just off the list of commandments; telling the truth to anybody but your authorized associates and superiors—if you know anything of significance—has been made a sin in the new order of things. With the Ten Commandments and God seemingly disposed of, situational ethics is in power.

The bottom line, after the casting away of Biblical values, is what a blatent mind controller told me, years ago, when I asked him to define 'good' and 'evil': "If I can get away with it, it is 'good,'" he replied. That is the emerging ethic of our Machievellian Brave New World. The goal of those who play this game is power, profit, or both. Their method is—anything they can get away with.

Musings on The Waco News

I had no patience with people who tried to tell me that our media is controlled until the day the fire started in the Branch Davidian compound in Waco. Like millions of Americans, I was watching CNN as a tank rolled up to the thin, wooden, outer wall of the compound. The tank then rammed and penetrated it. I watched the tank back up, leaving a small hole, and then surge forward again, punching the hole larger. I don't recall how many times it backed up and rolled forward, enlarging that hole.

I do clearly remember that, after one backing out, I saw a fire inside the jagged opening in the compound wall that the tank had made. I watched in horror as the flames rapidly spread from there to the rest of the structure, and then engulfed it.[1]

A few minutes after the fire started, a CNN announcer appeared and said they didn't know how or where the fire had started and that they were waiting for information from Washington, D.C. I thought, "That's odd. Everybody who was watching knows where and how the fire started. In a minute they'll rerun the film of the tank going in and out of the wall and show again the film of that first appearance of flames inside the broken-down wall." But they did not show that footage again. Instead, a few minutes later, the announcer came back on and said that sources in Washington, D.C. had informed him that the fire had started in several places at once, and that those fires had been started by persons inside the compound.

I was shocked to realize that CNN had a government representative in their control booth (or elsewhere, watching and in phone contact), who decided what people would see as "news" and what our "facts" were going to be. What would be the slant of this kind of news? That day, the operational guideline was: If it makes the government look bad, it did not happen. If it makes the other guy look bad, it did happen.

After people catch on (and they do), however, government distortion of news ends up making the government look bad rather than good. People who realize they have been lied to may lose faith in everything they are told by a public source. They may assume that any news that makes the government look bad must be the truth. They may become open to believing terrifying propaganda produced by persons whose agenda is even less desirable than that of their government. In the long run, It is better public policy to allow journalists to tell the truth as they (and the viewers) really saw it.

Skinner on Behavior Control: The Rest of the Story

There is no subjugation so perfect as that which keeps the appearance of freedom...
- Jean-Jacques Rosseau, Emile

As an undergraduate, B. F. Skinner read Gantt's translation of Pavlov. Later, he studied Watson's books. He decided to devote himself to this new field of behaviorism. Ultimately, he became a Harvard professor. Skinner wrote about ten books, and many articles, over a long and distinguished career. He discovered another way of building conditioned reflexes in addition to the phenomenon which Pavlov had identified and called classical conditioning. Skinner's method, called operant conditioning, is accomplished by either positive or negative reinforcement.

The National Institutes of Mental Health supported Skinner financially while he produced the thin volume titled Beyond Freedom and Dignity. Was that support because the NIMH managers wanted to popularize concepts of conditioning and Skinner's arguments on behalf of a society managed by psychologists who viewed people as sophisticated machines? After publication, that book received tremendous media support. It was a Book-of-the-Month Club selection, serialized in Psychology Today and the New York Post; it was assigned reading in psychology classes, and enormously successful both in hardcover and paperback.

Skinner wrote a sequel to Beyond Freedom and Dignity, titled About Behaviorism. Therein, he stated that this book was intended to be an antidote, a correction to what he viewed as the rosy one-sidedness of Beyond Freedom and Dignity. About Behaviorism deals with abuses of control—a subject which his previous book had completely ignored. Beyond Freedom and Dignity also ignored all methods of behavior control which were painful (negative reinforcement) rather than pleasant (positive reinforcement).

---

[1] I heard later through independent media that the fire started because the tank's intrusion knocked over a kerosene lamp.

The many organizations which had supported the success of Beyond Freedom and Dignity, at every stage, did not similarly support About Behaviorism. NIMH did not financially support Skinner's work on the second book before publication. After the completed book was on sale, the media did not promote it. Virtually unknown to the public, About Behaviorism sold poorly and was soon out of print.

In Beyond Freedom and Dignity, Skinner provided strong arguments for control of people. He said, "The literature of freedom has never come to grips with techniques of control which do not generate escape or counterattack..." (p. 34) Did he mean fat paychecks? Did he mean suggestions given to people who are staring at a screen, in a lowered state of consciousness, watching advertising, propaganda, or "entertainment"?

> A government may prevent defection by making life more interesting—by providing bread [food stamps?] and circuses [TV sitcoms?] and by encouraging sports, gambling, the use of alcohol and other drugs, and various kinds of sexual behavior...The Goncourt brothers noted the rise of pornography in the France of their day: "Pornographic literature," they wrote, "serves...one tames a people as one tames lions, by masturbation." (Skinner, Beyond Freedom and Dignity, p. 32)

In Beyond Freedom and Dignity, Skinner seems always to be supporting the controllers. In About Behaviorism, however, Skinner clearly corrected that impression:

> Organized agencies or institutions, such as governments, religions, and economic systems, and to a lesser extent educators and psychotherapists, exert a powerful and often troublesome control. It is exerted in ways which most effectively reinforce those who exert it, and unfortunately this usually means in ways which either are immediately aversive to those controlled or exploit them in the long run.
>
> Those who are so controlled then take action. They escape from the controller—moving out of range if he is an individual, or defecting from a government, becoming an apostate from a religion, resigning, or playing truant—or they may attack in order to weaken or destroy the controlling power, as in a revolution, a reformation, a strike, or a student protest. In other words, they oppose control with countercontrol. (About Behaviorism, p. 190)

Skinner called the power of non-controllers, countercontrol. He considered countercontrol a good thing. Between labor and union, for example, he said, countercontrol can result in a negotiated contract that meets the needs of both sides. In a true democracy, the opposition party represents the needs of those who are temporarily out of power. Eventually, when the force of public frustration has built up enough to win an election, power makes a healthy shift, at least for a while, to the previous outsiders. If democracy is allowed to function, this is how it works.

Skinner called a balance of politically opposing forces, with equally effective powers on each side, equilibrium. He said that political equilibrium was about as good as it gets, though inherently unstable.

Skinner did not believe that benevolence and compassion were important motivations in human behavior. He tended to interpret all social dominance dynamics in terms of power. He said "benevolence is no guarantee against the misuse of power." (Beyond Freedom and Dignity, p. 38). He later expanded on that thought:

> The point is illustrated by five fields in which control is not offset by countercontrol and which have therefore become classical examples of mistreatment. They are the care of the very young, of the aged, of prisoners, of psychotics, and of the retarded. It is often said that those who have these people in charge lack compassion or a sense of ethics, but the conspicuous fact is that they are not subject to strong countercontrol. The young and the aged are too weak to protest, prisoners are controlled by police power, and psychotics and retardates cannot organize or act successfully. Little or nothing is done about mistreatment unless countercontrol, usually negative, is introduced from outside. (About Behaviorism, p. 191)

People with satellite-tracked chips in them would not be able to "escape from the controller by moving out of range." The original Constitution and Bill of Rights of this nation was designed to perfectly balance control with counter-control. That balance is now lost—or at risk—in many areas. For example, a friend of mine, who is an elected county judge, recently told me of pressures to eliminate elected judges (making all appointed) and the use of juries, nationwide.

Glossary

The language of hypnosis can be confusing to the uninitiated. How can a "suggestion" be words meant to be obeyed with machinelike unconscious automaticity? Why is a hypnotist also called an "operator"? These definitions, along with the table of contents and index, are designed to help you better understand the vocabulary and technology of hypnosis.

A

Ability, Hypnotic—This is a modern euphemism for what the old-timers called hypnotic susceptibility.

Abreaction—Abreaction is a deeply emotional remembering, a reliving of some past incident. It usually takes place in a state of lowered consciousness. If no emotion was expressed, abreaction did not occur. Healing is enabled when the patient recovers to consciousness forgotten memories and experiences—and simultaneously expresses their associated deep emotions. Jung said that abreaction was

> ...the dramatic rehearsal of the traumatic moment...in the waking or in the hypnotic state and [it] often has a beneficial therapeutic effect. We all know that a man feels a compelling need to recount a vivid experience again and again until it has lost its affective value...Abreaction is...an attempt to reintegrate the autonomous (traumatic) complex, to incorporate it gradually into the conscious mind as an accepted content, by living the traumatic situation over and over again... (The Practice of Psychotherapy*, pp. 131-132)

Freud and Breuer were the first to identify the phenomenon of abreaction. They called it catharsis. Freud built his psychoanalytic psychology on this foundation. In World War I, hypnotic abreactive treatment was common. In World War II, doctors speeded up the treatment. They used narcohypnosis to quickly induce deep trance, then suggested regression and reliving of the memories and buried pain from recently repressed war experiences.

For an amnesic patient, the medical goal of abreaction treatment was to retrieve the repressed memory, plus its associated emotion. If a patient could remember the incident, but had repressed its associated emotion, the therapeutic goal was to retrieve and feel that emotion.

Abreaction also results in bonding with the therapist, and in increased suggestibility. It is a fact that you bond with whomever you cry with, and you listen to their advice with enhanced suggestibility.

> If any patient is subjected to repeated abreaction...as in psychoanalysis and other > more intensive forms of psychotherapy, and if this occurs over a period of months or years, he often becomes increasingly sensitive and suggestible to the therapist's suggestions and interpretations of symptoms. A hypnoid state of brain activity may result. Patients may come to feel that in some way they are in the hands of a person of almost divine wisdom; they avidly accept suggestions from the therapist about altering their behavior, which would have been quite unacceptable to them in their more normal state of mind. Quite bizarre interpretations are accepted and false memories are believed as facts... (Sargant, The Mind Possessed, 1974, p. 17)

Releasing the emotion is a predictable path to healing if the emotion is fear or anger. An extreme outburst of feelings of fear or anger relieves symptoms, so the patient's reliving needs to be as emotional as possible. The doctors developed a routine wherein the patient accessed it, felt it, and worked with it until he consciously understood how the repression had affected him. Then he was able to put the traumatic memory to rest and get on with his life. (However, accessing the emotion of sadness in a depressed patient makes him more depressed.)

Most therapies now include abreaction as a goal. Some therapies now use an abreaction process based in a context of confabulated "memories" and their associated emotions.

Addiction—If you do not quit doing what does not work, you are addicted, or have a neurosis. Those are deep-level programmings that need to be revised.

Affect—Affect is the psychologist's word for emotion. The affective part of a person's response can range from apathy, which means no affect at all, to very intense feelings. Affective tone refers to a point on the possible spectrum of affect, ranging from the worst pain to the keenest pleasure. Every conditioned reflex, meaning every imprint your brain contains, has an associated affective tone.

Emotion makes you more programmable. It lowers thresholds (makes programming easier) if the affect is increasing. By the same rule, you become less programmable when in a state of decreasing affect. Greater associated affective tone means better memory for that item. Less associated affective tone means you are more likely to lose that memory.

For example, the TV story, fight, game, or news heightens your emotion. Then comes the commercial. The commercial may further arouse you emotionally (and/or lull you hypnotically). Then comes the commercial's pitch line. Whatever you associate with emotion, can program you.

Agent—Euphemism for a hypnotist, operator.

Altered State of Consciousness—An altered state of consciousness is any mental state (caused by physiological, mental, or chemical actions or agents), which the subject, or an observer of the subject, recognizes as different from his usual waking consciousness.

Amnestic—Amnestic information is brain data for which you are amnestic.

Analysis—"Analysis" can be an abbreviated term for psychoanalysis, which investigates verbal memory and thought processes, looking for buried old traumatic material that may be causing present problems. Jungian analysis investigates your symbolic, mythic right-brain memory and thought processes. Both analytic approaches have validity, because each draws on a different one of the two separate, parallel hemispheric memory systems--verbal and symbolic. The experience of them is very different, however.

Anchoring—A purely mental suggestion can be strongly reinforced by associating it with an actual physical event, usually a touch. Anchoring involves the hypnotist touching the subject, or the hypnotist telling the subject to touch a real object.

Bergen used an anchoring touch to begin, reinforce, and deepen Mrs. E's trance when he was trying to persuade her unconscious to do something particularly objectionable. When John first hypnotized Candy, he told her to close her eyes, think of her forehead, and relax her forehead. He then gently, briefly touched her forehead and eyelids--an anchoring.

Antisocial Hypnosis—For 200 years, the term antisocial hypnosis has categorically referred to the possibility that a hypnotic subject can be made to commit a crime, or to be a victim of a crime. The experimental hypnotists who researched and argued this subject usually avoided the question of whether a hypnotist could be tempted to so use a subject. They focused almost entirely on whether exploitation was possible.

Anxiety—If you feel apprehension, uneasiness, or a sense of dread, but do not know why, you fit the psychological definition of anxiety. The cause is unconscious fear. It may be appropriate, or just a misprogramming. The feeling is hard to overcome until you learn what its unconscious basis is.

Association—In the context of psychology, an association is a mental connection between ideas. You can associate words, images, or both. Associations are more like a web than a chain. They are linked in associative networks. The key word, to which you associate, is called the index word. It draws out connected items from what memory expert Casey called the "ramifying pathways."

> ...to remember my childhood dog "Peggy" is at the same time to enter a microcosm of that period of my life, a mini-world in which "Peggy" links up with other dogs my family owned, with the way they were regarded by my siblings, with the way they made that domestic space more warmly familiar, etc. Each of the themes just mentioned represents a pathway in this particular part of my past; and from each pathway still others diverge: from "Peggy" the dog to Peggy Mills, the wife of my father's law partner, to "Peg O' My heart," or to Charley Peguy, the French writer...Exploration within memory—even within a single given memory—is potentially endless. (Casey, Remembering, pp. 204-205.)

Association has an important role in the remembering process, and in the therapy process.

Automatism—Automaticity refers to actions performed unconsciously, reflexively. When you learn to drive, you are learning dependable habit-responses that will eventually be automatic, functioning with little active participation by your conscious mind.

Aversive Conditioning—Aversive conditioning means training by punishment. In behavioristic psychology experiments, it has often meant electric shock.

> [Prodding is]...primarily a form of punishment training which almost always includes elements of classical conditioning...In virtually all of the clinical procedures, the delivery of a shock stimulus is contingent on the occurrence of a deviant response. (Rachman and Teasdale, Aversion Therapy and Behaviour Disorders, Ch. 11)

Rachman and Teasdale's big, grim book on the subject of using electric prods to educate people also covers other aversive methods, but the authors' preferred method was the prod.

Pavlov's Russian contemporary and competitor, Sechenov, was the first to use electric shocks for conditioning. Shocking has been used ever since. The idea of using cattle prods on people is about as old as cattle prods.

> Electrical stimulation can be precisely controlled. The therapist is in a position to administer a discrete stimulus of measured intensity for an exact duration of time at precisely the required moment...Unlike chemical aversion treatment, electrical stimulation permits frequent repetitions of the association between the unwanted behaviour and the noxious stimulus. It is perfectly feasible to present a large number of trials to the patient during one session and also to provide for numerous conditioning sessions within the same day. This should enable treatment to progress more quickly. It is also feasible to construct portable apparatus for the delivery of shocks and this allows treatment to be carried out on an outpatient basis. (Rachman and Teasdale, Aversion Therapy and Behaviour Disorders, pp. 34-6)

Capitalists responded promptly to requests for a smaller, human-sized prod:

> Many reform schools and corrective institutions in different parts of the country are still employing the electrically charged cattle prod to shock the recalcitrance out of one's system. The voltage is high enough to destroy the skin on contact. Recent entrants into the field boast of greater refinements in the kind of electric-shock devices they produce; for instance, the Farrall Instrument Company of Grand Island, Nebraska, claims to have overcome the crudity of the cattle prod by having its electric shockers include a voltage control.
>
> The Farrall Company, which exhibits its wares at the meetings of the American Psychological Association and other professional conventions, distributes literature rejecting the views of many professionals that aversive methods are more punitive than corrective. It contends that zapping is the panacea for 'antisocial behavior, for psychosomatic disorders, self-destructive behavior and sexual deviance.' (Chavkin, The Mind Stealers, p. 58)

The shocks used in aversive conditioning are big ones, maximally strong from the very beginning:

> ...shock intensities need to be fairly high and the hope expressed earlier by Eysenck and Rachman (1965) that mild shocks may be adequate, now seems less probable. It is best to avoid building up from mild to strong shock as this procedure may produce habituation effects... (Rachman and Teasdale, p. 70)

Rachman and Teasdale quoted Azrin and Holz

(1966) on how to most effectively eliminate a targeted behavior using aversive conditioning:

1) The punishing stimulus should be arranged in such a manner that no unauthorized escape is possible.

2) The punishing stimulus should be as intense as possible.

3) The frequency of punishment should be as high as possible; ideally the punishing stimulus should be given for every [disobedient] deviant response.

4) The punishing stimulus should be delivered immediately after the response.

5) The punishing stimulus should not be increased gradually but introduced at maximum intensity.

6) Extended periods of punishment should be avoided...since the recovery effect may thereby occur...

7) An alternative response should be available which will not be punished... (Ibid, p. 21)

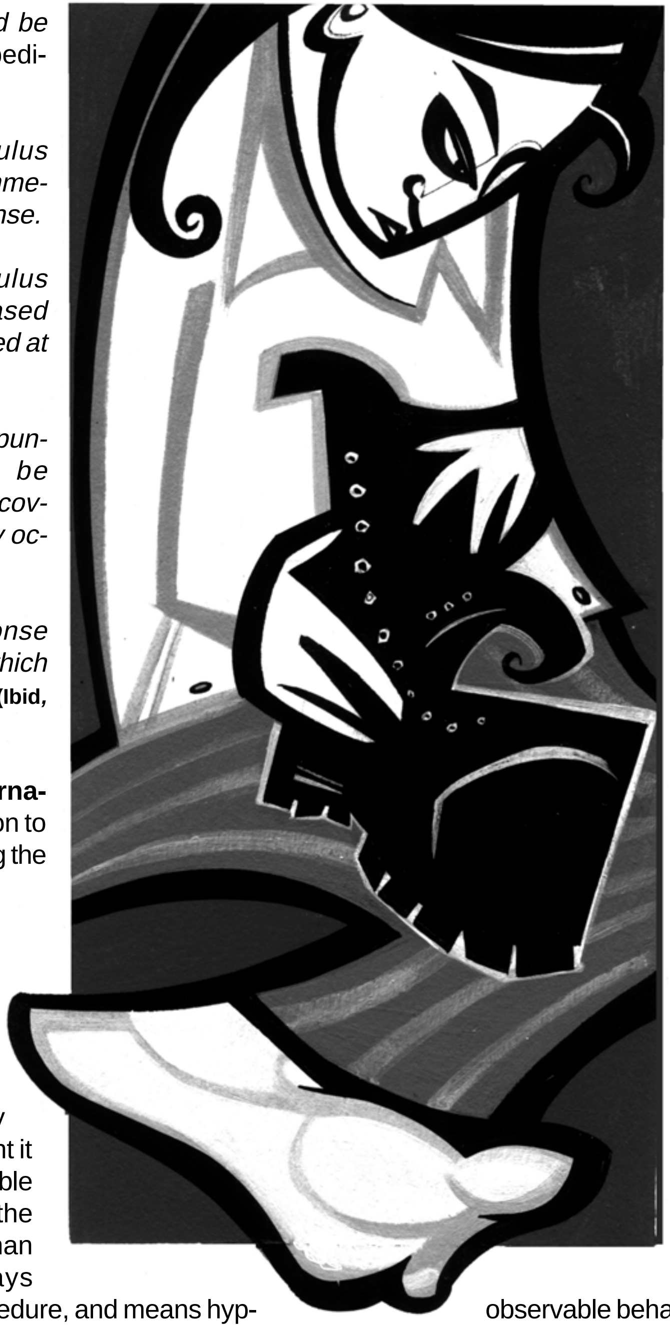
The available alternative response is submission to whatever the person holding the prod is demanding.

Awake—When the hypnotist is finished and wants you to wake up, he says so, and you do. Technically, hypnosis is not sleep, although many oldtime researchers thought it was. Humans are suggestible and are likely to do what the suggester means rather than what he says. If he says "sleep" in an induction procedure, and means hypnosis, he may obtain a hypnosis.



B

Behavior Shaping—This term, behavior shaping, comes from behavior modification. It means the planned, step-by-step establishment of a series of conditioned reflexes. Each step is achieved and reinforced before the next is begun.

Pascal and Salzberg (1959) published a behavior shaping series of steps to create hypnotic conditioning. Item 7 asked for waking trance (a somnambulistic depth). Items 8 and 9 were for posthypnotic suggestions: one for a specific amnesia, the other for a posthypnotic act (removing one's shoe to take out hallucinated "pebbles"). In step 10, the wake-up suggestion was given, and tests were given to see if 8 and 9 had worked. Using this system, Pascal and Salzberg reported that over 50% of their subjects had reached somnambulist depth.

Behavior Therapy—The process of behavior therapy assumes that personality is an expression of past conditioning. It is a brain's physiological habits. The basic techniques of behavior therapy are aversion therapy, desensitization, operant conditioning, modeling and biofeedback.

Behavioral psychologists focus on outwardly observable behavior rather than on what their patient thinks. Behavior therapists focus on treating a specific symptom, rather than freeing up a wide range of unconscious feelings, as a Jungian or Freudian therapist might do. Thus, behavior therapy emphasizes symptom removal: "Get rid of the symptom and you have eliminated the neurosis." (Eysenck, 1959, p. 65) If the symptom goes away, that means, to a behaviorist, that the treatment was a good one.

Some behavior therapists depend heavily on relaxation and imagery inductions followed by suggestions or image manipulations. A behaviorist is not interested in spontaneous images which a subject may generate. The goal of this type of therapist is to cause the subject to visualize only the specific images which he tells him to visualize.

Block—A suggestion given under hypnosis that prevents any later hypnotic suggestion is called a block. For example, a sealing suggestion blocks induction by any other hypnotist.

Brief Therapy—Because hypnotherapy can go so quickly to the root of the problem, one school of hypnotherapists calls it brief therapy. But some "brief" therapists keep their treatment far briefer than others do. The time requested by a hypnotherapist to solve a subject's problem can range from one session to months, or even years, of sessions.

C

Catatonic—A catatonic state involves suggested muscular flaccidity or rigidity.

Clinical—Literally, clinical means "bedside." Clinical training is actual internship in a medical setting as contrasted with learning from books and lectures.

Cognitive Dissonance—We defend our mental and life status quo against whatever seems to threaten it. Leon Festinger first pointed out the phenomenon of cognitive dissonance.

> The word "dissonance", in its ordinary meaning, refers to an inharmonious, inconsistent, discrepant relation between two things. The usage in the theory is similar to this. A cognition is something a person knows about himself, about his behavior, or about his surroundings. Dissonance is said to exist when two cognitions, occurring together, are inconsistent with each other according to the expectations of the person...These expectations of what goes with what are built up on the basis of past experience, including notions of logical relations, cultural mores, and learned empirical correlations among events.
>
> The central hypothesis of the theory is that the presence of dissonance gives rise to pressure to reduce that dissonance, and that the strength of the pressure is a direct function of the magnitude of the existing dissonance... Dissonance is conceived as a motivating state comparable to other drive states. Successful reduction of dissonance is, for example, comparable to successful reduction of a state of hunger. (Festinger and Bramell, 1962, p. 256)

People also emphasize the best of what they have chosen in the past and automatically deprecate what they have rejected in the past. We prize consistency in our thought. When a survivor of criminal hypnosis, first recovered a memory associated with amnestic sexual abuse, she refused to continue the process of remembering. She said that what she was remembering was not possible. It did not fit with what she had believed about her life before that moment. She was suffering from cognitive dissonance.

Conditioning—Pavlov originated the view of mental function as based on natural and acquired mental reflexes. He taught that mental reflexes can be created deliberately, or erased. He called that process conditioning. Conditioning is a type of training meant to take hold in your unconscious as a reflex. Hypnotists, during and after the fifties, began to use the behaviorist's word, conditioning, to also mean suggestions given under hypnosis.

The study of conditioning theories, methods, and applications is now far advanced. There are four types of conditioning: 1) direct programming of a subject in trance using conventional forms of communication, 2) Pavlov's classical conditioning, 3) Skinner's operant conditioning, and 4) Thorndike's solution learning. All four types create habits, which are unconscious reflexes.

Classical conditioning happens automatically. In operant conditioning—also known as learning theory--you learn because of the result of your act. Operant conditioning is the carrot-and-stick, reward-and-punishment, system. Your operant learning may be initially conscious, but it soon turns to habit (unconscious).

Conscious Mind—There are parts of the brain associated with the conscious mind, and parts associated with the unconscious mind. The conscious is closely linked to the somatic nervous system (voluntary muscles) via the cerebral cortex (the outermost layer of the cortex). Your thinking, reasoning site is at the extreme frontal area of the cortex. Some psychoanalytic psychologists call the conscious the ego, or "Ego."

The job of consciousness is to deal with things for which no habits yet exist or which cannot be left to habit. Consciousness is a luxury in terms of using available mental circuits. We use it sparingly. Most of our mental activity is unconscious (automatic and out of awareness). Stopping at a red light is something you do consciously the first few times. You shift to doing it unconsciously as soon as it becomes habit. When you make an automatic response based on habit, choice is not involved. The act is unconscious.

Choice is the most important role of the conscious part of your mind. Consciously we look at new possibilities, consider reasons and circumstances, factor in our emotions and hopes. If you are denied consciousness, you are denied much of your capacity for free choice, free will.

Consciousness can only work with what data is available to it. Repressed, denied, amnestic data is out of reach for the conscious mind. Therefore, it cannot be factored into conscious analyses preceding choices. The better we understand all the unconscious factors that influence our behavior, the freer and wiser we can be in our behavioral choices. On the other hand, it would be cumbersome, inefficient--if not overwhelming--to consciously process all our sensory intake, data evaluation, and responses.

Therefore, we need both our conscious and unconscious minds. The conscious mind, or ego, is our analyzer and decision-maker. The id (libido) provides hormonal, instinctive goal directions that drive (in the sense of impel) the brain system. The superego contains the rules we have been taught, and those learned by experience. It forces the drive to play the game by those rules. The deep unconscious is a vast data bank and data processor whose program never finishes running.

Contagion—Induction by contagion means induction by unconscious acceptance of an unconsciously perceived suggestion to enter trance and behave in a way you have heard mentioned or seen modeled by someone else.

Context Clues—A hypnotic subject may recognize a past hypnosis incident because of context inconsistencies or inappropriateness. For example, Zebediah realized the hands of the clock had inexplicably jumped forward.

Control—"The concept of control is at the center of all psychological research," Ms. Higgins lectured my Developmental Psychology class. The goal of behaviorist, "scientific" psychology has been the prediction and control of behavior.

> The fundamental moral issues in behavior control do not change, of course, no matter what technology develops around them. They are now, as ever, only these: Who shall be controlled? By whom? How? (London, Behavior Control, pp. 180-181)

The inability to make somebody else do what you want frustrates; the dream of omnipotence lures. Society tends to be a hierarchy of controllers and controlees. The healthy counterbalance to control is autonomy, for the opposite of control is autonomy. Autonomy is fundamental to identity (and knowing one's true identity is fundamental to autonomy).

Human beings typically give up some autonomy. Why? They do so in order to bond, network, and create a safe social shelter in which to live. The loss of autonomy is scary, yet also attractive, because we are a naturally cooperative species whose cooperation helps us and our descendants to survive. It is the nature of our lives that we have to work together to accomplish almost anything.

Control always looks better in a context of one human being taking responsibility for the welfare of another. As long as our trust is fulfilled and not betrayed with exploitation it is a trade-off that can work for both sides. Control can be predatory, or altruistic, or set up for fair-sharing of power and rewards.

Some psychologists look for ways to control people. Some look for ways to set people free. Some do both. Different schools of psychology have different inclinations. Behaviorists are generally more controlling, Jungians more freeing. Brainwashing is a control technology. Hypnosis can be used either to control or to free.

To a behaviorist, the means to control a life form is to control its environment. To acquire complete control, you completely control the subject's environment. The "mountain tribes," the "country people," have been throughout history a source of annoyance to urban centers of political control. Rural populations tend to be more independent-minded because they are accustomed to more control over their own environment. They grow some of their own food and livestock, perhaps hunt. They situate and build homes somewhat more freely than urban folks. They live, perhaps, beyond observation.

The control of a person's environment, above all, is based in control of their data input. We are what we know (or what we think we know). Whoever influences, or controls, the press, the media—what is said on the 5 o'clock news—influences, or controls, the mind of the nation. People who refuse to watch TV, who do not read conventional newspapers or listen to regular radio stations, and who homeschool their children, are most threatening to central programmers. They avoid "knowing" what everybody else "knows." That allows them to develop some point of view or belief that is uncomfortable to the media-controllers.

Conversion—This has two meanings:

1) To change belief systems. Conversion is the goal of every form of persuasion from advertising to evangelism to brainwashing. The prize is your belief because, from your beliefs, come your behaviors, your choices in religion, politics, economics, child bearing, and child rearing. In every contact and context, you experience persuasion—and probably also exert it.

2) "Conversion" is also a term used by hypnotists to mean switching one symptom or behavior (or belief) for another.

Corroboration—Additional independent evidence that supports the original evidence is corroboration. For example, nonhypnotic evidence that supports evidence from a rehypnotization is corrobation and is considered important if a case of criminal hypnosis comes to trial.

Cue—The cue is the sensory trigger for a previously implanted posthypnotic suggestion. It instantly triggers a trance state, which is a continuation of the previous trance, and which is focused totally on the accomplishment of the cued task.

Cybernetics—When the brain and nervous system are thought of as an electronic machine—and when machines are thought of as possessing intelligence, even consciousness—this is cybernetics.

D

Daydreaming—Daydreaming occurs in a lowered state of consciousness-- more to certain types of people than to others. Some daydreamers make up their own stories. Some simply let it happen; that is autonomous imagery.

Delirium—An oldtime word for a somnambulistic trance.

Deprogramming—A person who has been brainwashed and then undergoes a rebrainwashing directed at undoing the previous one is said to be deprogrammed.

Densitization—Desensitization is a behavioral therapy technique for dealing with anxiety-provoking ideas. It can cure phobias. Desensitization usually starts with relaxation training to create a trance, but formal trance does not have to be involved. After doing induction training, the therapist presents a series of imagined situations, involving the phobia, in a progression from least to most anxiety-causing. He first asks the client to imagine only little challenge in the problem category, but then moves on to suggest the imagining of bigger, and yet more difficult scenes. (The same behavior-shaping system can be used to sneak up on any goal.)

The hypnotic abreaction of a traumatic, repressed memory is accomplished in a similar way. When the memory is first encountered, the subject perhaps can be there and suffer the feelings for only half a minute. Then he is brought forward to a happier time for relief. The therapist then returns the subject back to the traumatic scene for about 30 seconds--on that same day, or on a later one. After enough brief visits to the traumatic material, it will be desensitized.

Why did Candy agree to welcome a stranger into her hotel room in San Francisco? She was a long-term responder to patriotic appeal. Every request in the desensitization series that the CIA used to entice her into their hypnoconditioning trap involved the patriotic angle:

1. Will you (help the law and) give me information about the burglary? ("Yes," she said.)

2. Will you let the FBI receive letters here? ("Yes.")

3. Will you call this number everytime something comes for us in the mail? ("Yes.")

4. Will you personally carry a letter to a man in San Francisco? ("Yes.")

Candy's recruitment to CIA hypnoprogrammed courier status was proceeding in a systematic way too:

1. Candy agrees to receive letters for the agency.

2. She agrees to personally carry a secret letter to some unknown man who would knock at her hotel room door in a faraway city.

3. She is then invited to officially become a CIA courier.

4. Ultimately, she carries messages on paper, or in her mind, consciously knowing, or unknowing.

Disorientation—This technique aids induction, deepens trance, and strengthens operator control. For more information, see Operation Often in Part II.

Drive—The deeply rooted needs that push you are called drive. In the brain, "drive" equals energy. Emotion causes drive. Sex and aggression are brain drives which are usually inhibited or limited to a permissible form of expression. Primary process (unconscious) thinking is sometimes also called "drive," when it is bound up with deep-level drive emotions. We are most likely to repress, "forget," mental thoughts or data which are drive-related, having sexual or aggressive associations. The way our brain is wired gives drive-related thoughts a capacity for indirect, unconscious expression.

E

Ego—The ego is your conscious mind. It is the part of you that has the responsibility of making choices, your "I wills," and "I won'ts." It sets goals for the unconscious. It is skeptical and analytical, a good reality tester. It holds the reins to retrievable memories (the continuity of experience by which you define yourself). The ego is not always in control. (See Rationalization, the lies we tell to ourselves.) Reality and fantasy are difficult for an unconscious to distinguish if deprived of its ego's supervision and abilities. That is because, to an unconscious, all data is "now" and "real."

F

Feedback—Observing cause and effect, noting good and bad outcomes, and revising our behavior accordingly, is our feedback loop. Self awareness lets you exercise self-control. With feedback, people can accomplish marvelous feats of learned self-control. On the other hand, if the feedback function is blocked--as by suggested amnesia-- the subject is prevented from reforming problem programming in his mind.

Forensic Hypnosis—This is the study of the use of hypnosis in a trial setting.

Freudian Hypnotists—Although many aspects of Freud's theories have been revised or discarded by later psychologists, his concepts of the function of the unconscious, of repression and other defense mechanisms, and the importance of impressions in early childhood, have successfully withstood the test of time. Some Freudian hypnotists performed psychoanalysis under hypnosis, which they called hypnoanalysis, instead of using Freud's long talking method of psychoanalysis. During World War II, some Freudian psychiatrists used drug inductions followed by abreaction, a process which they called narcoanalysis.

Both narcoanalysis and the theories of the Freudian hypnotists are important in the history of mind control.

H

Hellstromism—Hellstromism is a "highly developed 6th sense." Stage performers who do mentalist acts use this word to describe their skill. Texts on this subject are sold in magician specialty shops.

Hypermnesia—Hypermnesia is an ultra-clear remembering of forgotten details of past experience by

Freudian Hypnosis Theory

Schilder and Kauders, two Viennese psychiatric hypnotists contemporary with Freud, began the effort to interpret hypnotic phenomena, a la Freud. They believed infantile, unconscious needs powered the hypnotic induction and subsequent rapport:

1) The wish to "participate in omnipotence" (to subordinate oneself to another person's authority).

2) Tendency to love.

1) Need for Omnipotence—Schilder believed that the infant unconsciously desires omnipotence. He meant that the baby wants to win in all contests of will. Reality forces that "latent need" to retreat. Even after it is repressed, however, that desire continues to influence the child's fantasy. As fantasy, it has potential for projection upon other persons—such as a hypnotist.

> ...alterations take place in the external world at his mere wish. For the hypnotized, at least, he is the great magician, who alone is capable, by his wish and will, to produce creative changes in the universe, to eliminate objects from the universe, or supply them to it. In addition, he has this great power over the bodily functions of the hypnotized, in other words, the hypnotizer is a magician, a sorcerer, in the mind of the hypnotized. (Schilder and Kauders, p. 42)

Indeed, the hypnotist can be a powerful magic-maker who changes the subject's sensory perception and bodily function at his mere word. Schilder reasoned that because of the subject's own latent longing for such magical power, he yields himself to the hypnotist's will "to have a share in the greatness of the hypnotizer."

R.W. White was a psychoanalytically-oriented psychiatrist who researched during World War II. He said that susceptibility to hypnosis depends on aptitude plus motivation—unconscious needs for love, obedience, and an omnipotent person in your life:

> ...latent infantile needs sometimes function as motivating forces favorable to hypnosis: the need for love, such as a child feels toward its parents, the tendency toward passive compliance in the presence of an elder, and the wish to participate in omnipotence. (R.W. White, "*An Analysis of Motivation in Hypnosis, p.161)

2) Tendency to Love—This is called the erotive root of hypnosis. Freud compared being hypnotized to being in love because lovers also tend to display rapport-like subjection, compliance, and disinclination to judge or criticize. Being "in love" generates some trance physiology. Schilder and Kauders, however, saw every hypnosis as an erotic relationship (ordinarily not consummated, of course), hetero-erotic or homo-erotic, depending on the sexes of hypnotist and subject.

means of hypnosis. It is one of the phenomena characteristic of somnambulistic depth of hypnosis. “Hypermnesia” can also mean removal under rehypnotization of a previously suggested hypnotic amnesia, thus allowing a subject to recover memories from previous hypnoses. What the inner will has been induced to suppress, that will can also be moved to set free.

Hypersuggestibility—Orne used the term hypersuggestibility to designate the phenomenon of a subject’s enhanced suggestibility, even after the trance is technically over and he has been told to “awake.” Until after a night’s sleep (or longer), the subject remains in a hypersuggestible state. The subject’s respect, awe, unconscious longing to feel that way again, and his suggestibility, linger on. This tendency of rapport to remain, even after the active trance is over, is part of human physiology, and a basis of social bondings. Thus, leaders can get followers. Thus, attraction can build into love.

Hypno-analysis—Hypno-analysis is psychoanalysis done under hypnosis. Like hypnotherapy, hypnoanalysis uses age regression, free association, attention to dissolution of resistances, and recovery of repressed material and its accompanying affect, suggested dreams, and posthypnotic suggestions. Unlike hypnotherapy, hypno-analysis also uses purely psychoanalytic concepts such as interpretation of the transference, and the search for the Oedipal root.

Hypnoidal State—Some writers have used the term hypnoidal state to mean a light trance.

Hypnotherapy—Therapy done with a client in the state of hypnosis enables the methods of hypnotherapy, to be used. If the client is in a state of trance, but not in formal hypnosis, these methods may also be used: age regression, free association, dissolution of resistances, recovery of repressed information and its accompanying emotion, suggested dreams, and posthypnotic suggestions.

Hypnotist—A hypnotist, in broadest definition, is a person who knowingly puts another person into a a trance state, and then deliberately utilizes the subject’s condition of lowered consciousness by giving suggestions. According to that definition, of course, everybody from the music leader in church to any mesmerizing speaker is a hypnotist” (See the opening section of Part III for more on this.) In its narrowest definition, a hypnotist is a person who seeks to lower consciousness to the point of natural amnesia--or who suggests amnesia.[1]

Hysterical Symptoms—Any illness that has been caused by suggestion can be removed by suggestion. Hysteria is an illness of self-suggested symptoms. Hysterical symptoms can be healed by faith or by hypnotherapy which identifies the historical circumstances of, and reason behind, the first appearance of the symptom, abreacts the memory’s emotional content, and supplies mature logic to correct the misprogramming.

I

Ideomotor—See Type 1 inductions: ideomotor reponses.

L

Learned Helplessness—Psychologists call the feeling that you cannot do anything to make it better, that you will keep on failing no matter what, learned helplessness. When persons, or animals, receive punishments they cannot predict or prevent, they learn helplessness. Bruno Bettleheim observed it among inmates in Nazi concentration camps. A painful situation has been judged hopeless. The best defense against learned helplessness is optimism, even “foolish” hope.

There has been research both on how to cause learned helplessness, and on how to cure it. Causing it is easy: repeated suffering with no possible escape from it. Curing learned helplessness is harder than causing it, but dogs--and people--can be healed of this. One thing that works is rescue: the victim is snatched up and carried away from the situation which taught helplessness. The other thing that works is giving the victim complete control of his environment.

Learning Theory—Learning theory is a term for operant conditioning, the carrot-and-stick, reward-and-punishment, method of teaching, and learning.

---

[1] I would like to know how those few Bible translators (the Good News bible, for example) that include the word “hypnotism” define it.

Libido—What is termed instinctual libido means the classic sexual and aggressive drives.

M

Meditation—Meditation is usually first learned from a book or teacher (hypnotist). After you learn how to get into the trance, you can do it on your own--self-hypnosis. At its purest, meditation is the inductive stage of hypnosis, a simple lowering of consciousness. However, suggestibility and rapport always accompany lowered consciousness. The suggestions, specific or implied, and the rapport, will define the future of the experience. Meditation has been demonstrated to reduce stress by those who favor it. However,exercise, daydreaming, and prayer also reduce stress.

Medium—Medium once was the European term for any hypnotic subject. In the spiritualist movement which evolved from one branch of mesmerism, "medium" came to mean a hypnotized person who delivered messages from spirits of the dead. Another usage meant a somnambulist stage performer. It is now applied mostly to channelers. The channeler operates in a self-induced trance.

N

Neurosis—A neurosis can result from a struggle between a strong instinct and an equally strong prohibition in the mind that forbids capitulation to that instinct. The best outcome is finding a way to channel that drive energy into a form of expression that does not risk shame and damage. If the method of expression is a problem, the condition is a neurosis. Luria began the hypnotic technique of creating an artificial neurosis. This process suggests a fake situation of desire, versus prohibition, to a hypnotized person. Amnesia is then suggested, which puts the implant out of reach of the subject's conscious ability to reprogram himself.

O

Operant Conditioning—Human beings constantly revise and correct their own programming according to whether things are working or not. That is operant conditioning.

Operator—An operator is a hypnotist. He operates the hypnotic subject by means of his instructions to the unconscious machine function in the subject's brain.

P

Posthypnotic Suggestion—A posthypnotic suggestion is a hypnotic suggestion regarding something that the subject is to do, think, or believe at some designated future time. Any posthypnotic suggestion must be triggered by a cue, any recognizable sign that the hypnotist has suggested to the subject.

Primary Process—Primary process is a term originated by Freud. He defined it as thoughts which were impulsive, irrational, primitive, libidinous, and linked to sex and aggression. Freud distinguished between primary thought processes and secondary ones. Primary process was later used to mean hypnotic experiences with vivid imagery. (See Drive.)

Projection—In the hypnotic context, projection has two meanings:

1) A transference reaction is a projection. People tend to project onto another person—therapist or loved one—feelings associated with a previous relationship, such as father, mother, previous spouse, previous hypnotist.

2) Making up a fairy tale, seeing a shape in a cloud, or in a Rorschach inkblot is also called projection. When a person creates, visualizes, or attributes shape, design, or ideas to something outside himself, he is projecting. Dreams are autonomous, spontaneous projections. Any projection tells much about the projector. You are what you see. The pictures you draw, or stories you tell, express your true attitudes, values, and strivings—both conscious and unconscious.

Psychoanalysis—Freud and Breuer got the credit, but it was really Anna O., Breuer's patient, who invented abreaction, and the "talking cure" that made Freud famous and became known as psychoanalysis.

> During spontaneous auto-hypnotic states... [Anna] insisted on relating...fantasies that had the effect of temporarily relaxing her [inducing trance]. (Moss, p. 10)

Breuer called Anna's spontaneous trances "a state of bewilderment." When he noticed her thus, he began to hypnotize her and insist she tell him what she was thinking about. When he had traced all her symptoms back to their origin, they disappeared and did not return. In the process, the cause of each became startlingly clear. Each cause was a amnestic idea/memory acquired in a repressed, painful experience. The hysterical symptoms

> ...immediately and permanently disappeared when we had succeeded in bringing clearly to light the memory of the event by which they were provoked and in arousing their accompanying affect, and when the patient has described that event in the greatest possible detail and has put the affect into words. (Breuer and Freud, Studies on Hysteria, 1966, pp. 264-265)

Breuer and Freud had discovered the natural mechanism of repression which can cause an unwanted symptom (a conversion of the repressed drive). Anna O. had demonstrated how healing could come from expression and psychological integration of that repressed data. A repressed idea is, by definition, a distorted idea because it has no conscious integration in terms of adult, rational understanding. Since it is entirely unconscious, it is under "irrational," automatic management. The drive energy of the repressed idea and its associated emotion was dispersed by being experienced and expressed--abreaction. This was a totally different method of psychological healing from the simple attempts at symptom removal by direct suggestions under deep hypnosis that the oldtime mesmerists had tried.

Pumper Command—A pumper command is a suggestion has been linked to an impelling physiological event. The linkage is used to automatically repeat and add drive energy to the suggestion. A common pumper command is, "With every breath you take, you will go deeper and deeper." The subject must breathe. If his unconscious accepts the suggestion, he will go deeper and deeper.

Another pumper command might be, "Every time you have a bowel movement, that act of pushing automatically makes you remember, hold in, and strengthen all my commands." Or, "every time you ...[some sex act], it automatically 'pumps up' your obedience to me--and that obedience will be always strong, firm, exciting and imperative." Pumper commands of this type may be used to program an unknowing subject. They may be intended to keep the entire body of commands at peak functioning, even after the initial conditioning is completed.

R

Rapport—Rapport is the unconscious bond which any subject feels with his source of trance. Suggestibility, even outside formal trance, is characteristic of rapport. Suggestible people adulate whoever has impressed them and are vulnerable to further suggestions.

Rationalize -The lie you tell yourself, and/or other persons, to explain an amnestic posthypnotic obedience is called a rationalization. The unconscious does not inform the conscious mind that a posthypnotic act was performed because of the hypnotist's suggestion--if that knowledge has been forbidden. So the subject creates another explanation for the act. All hypnotic subjects who obey a posthypnotic suggestion explain their act by a rationalization. They will make up a plausible reason if that is possible. They will produce a stupid excuse if that is the best they can do to explain the posthypnotic act. We always have an explanation for our behavior, true or false.

Recovered Memory—A recovered memory is a memory that once was hidden by amnesia. The amnesia might be 1) suggested under hypnosis, or 2) spontaneous, as in terrible emotional shock, or 3) functional, as in the spontaneous dissociation of deep trance.

Reflex—A reflex is an automatic stimulus-response function.

Repression—Repression is a special form of memory. The unconscious preservation of memories in amnesia is an active, rather than a passive, forgetting process. The unconscious tends to repress a painful memory, keeping it out of conscious awareness. Memories which are most likely to be repressed are those involving trauma, or forbidden wishes, usually of a sexual or aggressive type. Since repressed memory cannot be consciously recalled, it is not subject to the normal mental processes of integration and forgetting. Repressed memories are preserved with content unchanged. They continue to exert pressure (proportionate to their amount of emotional drive) for expression and resolution.

Freud observed that unconscious pressure from amnestic data and feelings resulted in what he called the return of the repressed--in dreams, fantasies, slips of the tongue, and forgettings. Those "returns" allow a bit of the repressed idea to return to the subject's real-life function, but in a disguised way.

Resistance—Freud observed that, in order to make repressed information and feelings conscious again, "it was necessary to overcome something that fought against one in the patient." (Freud, Autobiographical Study). That force is called resistance. Resistance refuses entrance to certain thoughts. It defends the territory of conscious mind (what you already know) from unconscious data that you do not remember that would emotionally upset you if you did remember it. Resistance is the border guard of your mind against cognitive dissonance. It keeps you from thinking ideas that would cause you anguish or would make no sense in terms of your present mental framework.

A hypnotist uses the word "resistance" in a more technical way. He means something inside a subject's mind that resists induction, deepening, releasing of certain information, or the accomplishment of any other suggested mental purpose.

Role-playing—Any suggestible person (actually most persons are more or less suggestible) responds to environmental cues about how to behave. This phenomenon is also true for persons in a formal hypnotic trance. Hypnosis researchers have learned that subjects are sensitive to operator cues, both overt and covert, as to what behavior is expected of them in trance. That tendency in human behavior is called role-playing. Some hypnotists have pushed that concept so far as to argue that hypnosis is only suggestible people role-playing what they expect trance to be.

Rorschach Test—This projective personality test evaluates personality and is used to diagnose personality disorders. The Rorschach test can also be used to predict hypnotizability. It consists of a set of ten cards, each of which contains an inkblot formed by folding a piece of paper over a patch of ink. Some are in black and white; some are in color. The client is asked what images he sees or is reminded of, either in the inkblot as a whole, or in its details. His answers, together with his timing and attitudes, are tabulated and analyzed.

Each blot was carefully chosen. The responses of thousands of people have been scored and analyzed to establish standard responses, so definite conclusions can be made from the elicited information. Scoring is now very sophisticated, and done by computer. The computer prints out thirty to forty, quite accurate diagnostic paragraphs based on those Rorschach responses.

S

Seance—The European term for a formal session of deep trance or hypnosis is seance.

Sensory Deprivation—Sensory deprivation denies sensory input. Isolation from other people is its mildest form. Denial of sight, hearing, and touch is its most extreme form. A brain must have sensory input to function normally. If a mind does not get enough input, it will grasp at whatever new data is available . Data acquired in an informational vacuum will be taken more seriously than data acquired under normal circumstances. Sensory deprivation results in both greater suggestibility and greater hypnotic susceptibility.

Shadow—This useful Jungian term describes repressed or undeveloped tendencies and the consciously unacceptable thoughts that are not ordinarily let out. Robert Bly described the roots of a normal shadow:

> When we were one or two years old we had what we might visualize as a 360-degree personality. Energy radiated out from all parts of our body and all parts of our psyche. A child running is a living globe of energy...but one day we noticed that our parents didn't like certain parts of that ball. They said things like: "Can't you be still?" Or "It isn't nice to try and kill your brother." Behind us we have an invisible bag, and the part of us our parents don't like, we, to keep our parents' love, put in the bag. (Bly, p., 17).

Opposites are an important part of the shadow. For each thing that you consciously are, there exists an unconscious opposite in your shadow. For example, if a person comes on strong about authority, he has a subservient worm in his shadow. If he comes on with superiority, he has an inferiority complex hidden in the darkness of his soul.

For years, I have been consciously characterized by optimism to the point of irrationality. In my shadow an equally irrational, bleak depression was stuffed. As I draw to a close the thirteen years of intense effort spent creating this book, some of that depression has begun to leak out, enabling me to deal with it and get a more realistic outlook. The leakage is evidence of my healing in progress. It means that now I have enough hope to be able to integrate my hidden despair.

The best way to manage a shadow is bravely to look at it, to be aware that it is there. Becoming aware of your shadow reduces its power. Self understanding makes you stronger. It gives you more control over those shadow tendencies.

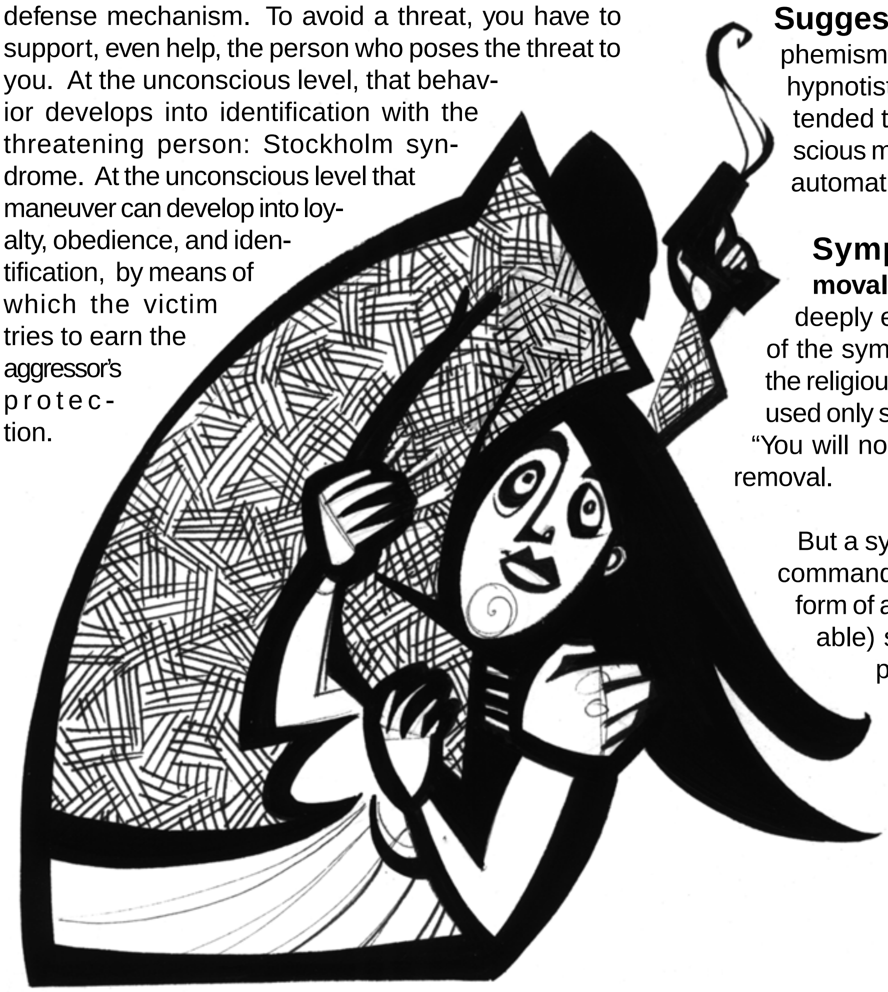
From the Christian's point of view, we want to expose our past sin to look at and grieve over. Thereby, we acquire the gift of shame. It is shame, deeply felt and laid at the foot of the cross, which then empowers us to CHANGE. From first spiritual experience to last, the Christian's process of becoming is a sorting and resorting process. Empowered by redemption, aided by the Holy Spirit, we push into the shadow what properly belongs there (sin). We bring out what properly should be out (Christlike qualities).

In our unconscious minds, we all carry forever an early model of each parent. Lifelong, we have potential identification with those shadow parental models. Any subject of amnestic hypnosis also acquires a shadow presence of the operator in his unconscious, thus adding the role of hypnotist as well as the role of subject to the previous models. In this book, I know I offer a very mixed message, modeling both operator and subject roles. That reflects the strong hypnotist's presence in my shadow.

Somnambulist—A somnambulist is a person who can walk and talk in deep trance without waking up. A somnambulist, when in the deepest trance condition, can "see" a positive or negative hallucination, and he will accept a suggestion for amnesia.

Stockholm Syndrome—The tendency of a prisoner to form a human attachment and identify with the jailer is called Stockholm syndrome. The name comes from a hostage-taking holdup in a Stockholm bank, during which one hostage came to identify her well-being with the safety of the criminal who had taken her hostage. In cases of Stockholm syndrome, even for weeks afterward, hostages may have difficulty rejecting feelings that the hostage taker was protecting her from the authorities, and difficulty expressing animosity toward him.

Anna Freud first described this phenomenon of identification with the aggressor, a psychological defense mechanism. To avoid a threat, you have to support, even help, the person who poses the threat to you. At the unconscious level, that behavior develops into identification with the threatening person: Stockholm syndrome. At the unconscious level that maneuver can develop into loyalty, obedience, and identification, by means of which the victim tries to earn the aggressor's protection.



Bruno Bettleheim analyzed Stockholm syndrome in people incarcerated in Nazi concentration camps who began to want to please their aggressor. A victim of criminal hypnosis also may have Stockholm syndrome.

Subconscious—The terms subconscious and unconscious are interchangeable, but I prefer the latter, which better expresses the significance of that vast non-conscious sector of mind.

Subject—A hypnotized person, or any person who has been hypnotized in the past, is called a subject.

Subliminal—A subliminal is a message in advertising or motivational material via art, video, audio, or text, which is intended to go directly into unconscious registry without being perceived (or evaluated!) by the conscious mind.

Suggestion—Suggestion is a very old euphemism that means any instruction given by a hypnotist to his subject. A suggestion is intended to be received by the subject's unconscious mind as a command and performed with automaticity.

Symptom Removal—Symptom removal is a healing technique. The patient is deeply entranced, then healing (and removal of the symptom) is suggested. Faith healers in the religious tradition and the first hypnotherapists used only symptom removal to treat their patients. "You will no longer overeat," suggests symptom removal.

But a symptom simply repressed by hypnotic command may reappear by conversion in the form of another (perhaps even more objectionable) symptom, so this method has limited potential.

T

Testing—There are three basic types of testing for hypnotic subjects:

1) The susceptibility test is a standardized induction to see if a potential subject can become hypnotized, and to measure how easily the induction takes place, and how deep the resulting trance is.

2) After induction, the operator may test trance depth by suggesting catalepsy of a body part, such as inability to open the eyes, followed perhaps by some constraint of arm motion. Some hypnotists have tested depth by suggesting numbness, then pinching, burning, or puncturing the subject's flesh.

3) A follow-up test checks on the firmness and functionality of deep-level implants by observing whether or not posthypnotic suggestions are carried out. The hypnotized subject may be given a) an amnesia suggestion, and b) a suggestion for a posthypnotic negative hallucination. Those two tests demonstrate maximum somnambulist depth, maximum hypnotic obedience.

Therapy—Therapy is one person trying to help another. In talk therapy, the counselor listens and reacts. It is amazing how helpful telling a sympathetic listener your troubles for an hour a week can be. It is also amazing how suggestible you can become to clues from the person you tell your troubles to. Talk therapy addiction is now common. For many persons, purchased friendship and "professional" advice have taken over the role that friends and family once had in their lives.

Every form of nondrug therapy has trance experiences available in it. Dream therapy develops positive hallucination. TA leads the subject to dissociation. Prayer lowers consciousness for the believer. Any time a person is vividly remembering what happened in early childhood, or before birth, or "past lives," or seeing things people do not normally see, or conversing with "spirits," they are in deep trance. Any time you experience a full-scale fantasy under deep hypnosis, it is going to feel real and important—profoundly moving, insight-granting, key to personal change. The experience tends to leave you feeling much better, at least for the moment.

> We even found on occasion that the release of great anger or fear could be more effectively produced around incidents which were entirely imaginary and had never happened to the patient at all, and such abreactions of imaginary events could have remarkably beneficial effects...We found that the two emotions which it was most helpful to arouse...were feelings of great anger and aggression, or of intense fear and anxiety. (Sargant, Battle for the Mind, p. 5)

Token Economy—A token economy is an operant conditioning method. It gradually shapes behavior to bring it into conformity with what is wanted. Complicated behavior patterns can be created by rewarding each item of wanted behavior, or punishing each item of unwanted behavior. Thus, we bring up children.

Torture—Once I thought that torture meant only physical and extreme cruelties, such as breaking legs. Then I learned

> ...the generally accepted definition of torture produced by the United Nations, Amnesty International, and other human rights organizations: the deliberate infliction of pain by one person on another in an effort to break the will of the victim. (Thomas, p. 2)

The pain in that definition does not limit torture to physical pain. Forced stress intended to break the will is also "torture." Deliberately caused mental stress can be torture. Suggested, hallucinated pain can be torture. Suggested feelings of terror can be torture.

The important ingredients in the definition of torture are neither the nature of the pain, nor its origin. The two essential elements that define an act as "torture" are 1) that the act is "against his will" and 2) that its purpose is "an effort to break the will of the victim."

Tranceable—Hypnotizable.

Trance Logic—Hypnotized persons are stripped to the mechanical stimulus/response level of their minds. They are literal and humorless. That literalness is called trance logic. People simulating hypnosis are unlikely to accurately mimic trance logic, so its appearance has been used as a test to establish if a person is really hypnotized.

Transference—Hypnotic subjects and therapy patients tend to develop rapport--an extraordinary emotional relationship to their hypnotist or therapist. They tend to imbue that relationship with projected, remembered qualities of some unconsciously associated person from their own past, such as a parent. That phenomenon is called transference. The transference can be positive or negative. This projection of unconscious feelings from a previous relationship may be mild or intense in strength.

Transfer of Control—If a hypnotist shifts command of a conditioned subject to another operator, that is called transfer of control or shifting the rapport. The rapport can be shifted in the middle of a trance or by a posthypnotic suggestion. The switch of operators is made keeping all previous hypnotic conditioning fully operational.

U

Unconscious—Subconscious, subjective, subliminal, superconscious, and unconscious, are all terms that have been used to refer to the part of your mind that is not conscious. It is your vast ocean of memory, association, thought, feeling, and habit. In that great deep, your conscious mind is like a little boat floating,

16 Important Characteristics of Every Person's Unconscious

If this seems huge and complex, remember that the human brain is the most complex thing in the known universe, and the unconscious is the larger and most complex part of that brain.

1) The unconscious is a vast and powerful component of your mind. It contains your intuitive abilities and your religion circuits, the antennae by which you sense the presence of the divine, the mechanism which points out profound truths to your conscious.

2) Your conscious and unconscious minds are independent, and yet linked, like gears whose cogs connect. The conscious directs and affects the unconscious. The unconscious directs and affects the conscious. Both rules are true. The unconscious rules by reflex and habit. The conscious rules by suggestion, command, will, and desire.

3) The unconscious accepts any idea you believe into your programming basics. The conscious mind can reason either deductively (from principle to derived assumption) or inductively (from evidence to principle). It is a function of the conscious mind to evaluate new ideas and decide if they are true. If that new idea is accepted as true by the conscious, it is then sent along for registering in the unconscious. There, it becomes a deductive principle from which the unconscious will, in the future, automatically reason. The unconscious lacks the analytic, criticizing function which is assigned to your conscious, and it normally reasons only by deduction.

4) The unconscious reasons by deduction (from principle to detail), basing its decisions on the accumulation of all your previous beliefs. When we accept religious, moral, or scientific principles (or self-talk—true or false) into our basic unconscious programming, then we live the life that derives from those assumptions.

5) The unconscious contains much programming from childhood, and adolescence, before we could clearly discriminate truth. Some earlier programming may be in error and a problem. Impulsive, "illogical" behavior is based in this erroneous programming. If you wish to change yourself, you must change your unconscious beliefs. If your unconscious is reasoning from a false premise, a correct one needs to be substituted.

6) The unconscious is the location of habit in your mind. Ideas or behaviors that are frequently repeated become habits. Your unconscious programming is ordinarily dominant over your conscious because most of your behavior is based on habit and automatic.

7) Your unconscious contains your goals, and it will drive you toward them. It contains your attitudes and will constrain your behavior to conform to them.

8) Words have more power than real experience to influence the human unconscious.

9) By means of lowered consciousness (trance), the unconscious mind can be accessed directly. Trance inhibits the conscious mind and thereby enables direct contact with the unconscious.

10) Your unconscious contains the origin, memory, and associations of your emotions.

11) The unconscious has computer-comparable memory with a huge capacity. We know more than we consciously realize.

12) As well as the brain areas containing our memory storage, emotions, and habit, the unconscious is linked to physiological control systems of the autonomic nervous system, glands, and the involuntary muscles of heart, lung, and digestive function.

13) It is the seat of creativity, source of that sudden flash of knowing called insight. Insight follows intensive preparation by studying and working with a problem, a period of incubation to allow unconscious thinking, and then "listening" with the conscious mind. That listening allows the barrier between conscious and unconscious to lower enough that the answer can be delivered to the conscious.

14) It contains your id, the primitive drive emotions—anger, fear, sexual desire.

15) It contains your superego, which is your conscience and restrains you from impulsive, drive-based action.

16) It contains your hidden observer, a computerlike, analytic recording mechanism that always knows what is going on and silently registers those facts. The hidden observer rouses you in the presence of danger. For example, it wakes a mother in the night when her child needs her.

or sailing, on its surface with you aboard. You can also think of the unconscious as your mind's hard drive. Your conscious mind is you looking at what is on screen.

Freud used the word "unconscious" to describe thought content and process of which we have been unaware, but which can become conscious. The problem with that term is that it can be confused with the knocked-out state. Janet, therefore, substituted the word subconscious. But "subconscious" implies a lower mind, and some people object vehemently to that. There are many more terms for the unconscious, just about one for every induction system, philosophical, psychological, or religious view. Often that name is claimed to be the only true one. The unconscious is the mental circuity by which sensitive persons experience the supernatural. That fact makes people touchy about labels.

I use the neutral term "unconscious."

V

Visualization—When a person is told to imagine one, or a series, of mental image(s), that is called visualizing. Focus on mental imagery is a standard induction method, often used as a disguised technique.

W

Wake Up—The wake up is the coming up/out of the trance.

Bibliography

A Brief History of Information on Criminal Hypnosis

> Not the least of the reasons for seeking to discredit hypnotism has been that the public and scientists alike have feared it. In one way, it is most unfortunate that...there should appear popular and scientific articles which tend to arouse further fear—articles by the very men who sincerely believe that hypnosis has something of great value to offer. Pointing out that it can be dangerous in unscrupulous hands is bound to develop and increase such fears...Popular fears of its dangers will certainly restrict its use in the future...On the other hand, if hypnosis can be dangerous to the hypnotized subject, then the public is entitled to know the facts. There can be no question of this...
>
> LeCron, Experimental Hypnosis, 1952, pp. 371-2

The work of previous authors who have struggled to collect, record, and disseminate information about the mind-control technologies and their abuses has been a great help and comfort to me. Each writer added nuggets of precious knowledge to the public store and, thereby, made my work easier. Their books were carefully, even tediously, researched—not easy to write. Few sold well. Most passed quickly out of print, and were soon forgotten, the author's hard work neither financially nor socially rewarded.

Information on the possibility of unethical use of hypnosis was first declared top secret in 1784. That year, a Secret Addendum, "For the King's Eyes Only," was delivered to the King of France by Benjamin Franklin's Committee, assigned to evaluate mesmerism. The Addendum stated that there was a risk that women could be raped or seduced when under the influence of hypnosis.

Soon, however, hypnotists were talking openly about those risks. For the next two centuries, European hypnotists argued passionately about the possibility of what became known as antisocial hypnosis— whether a hypnotist could get a subject to commit a crime, or to submit to a crime. Some insisted that a hypnotic somnambulist could be caused to commit even theft and murder. Others declared that a hypnotic subject could not be caused to do anything that was against his morals. If the subject accepted a hypnotic suggestion to steal or murder, that only proved he had weak morals and the crime was his fault.

Experimental hypnotists quoted research results at each other. They devised research strategies to prove, or disprove, a position. They researched, argued, and wrote books. Up to 1888, 801 books on various aspects of hypnosis had been published in Europe. Between 1888 and 1890, 382 more books on hypnosis were published. In France, some years, no books were published except on hypnosis! Most of those books dealt with the creation of subjects who were amnesic for their experience under hypnosis: somnambulists. In that era more than twenty-five criminal cases were tried that involved criminal hypnosis.

The long and lively debate over antisocial hypnosis raged, unimpeded, in the public press from the time of Mesmer to the 1960s—except for the suppression of Dr. Kroener's book on the case of "Z" by the German government. The heated print arguments dealt with what an operator could, or could not, get a subject to do, and how the operator might accomplish criminal hypnosis, and why the subject might, or might not, submit. (They rarely inquired into the likelihood that an operator might, or might not, attempt to commit the crime.) Up to the 1960s, books on how to hypnotize were in every bookstore. Writers on hypnosis freely discussed the hypnotic condition of amnesic somnambulism.

In 1959, in one of the last and best of those frank and forthright books on hypnosis, Dr. Marcuse stated that a person can be hypnotized against his will under certain circumstances (Hypnosis, pp. 106-107). Marcuse said a hypnotist can make a subject obey an objectionable command, and also can make the subject be the one to experience the guilt for doing that act (Ibid., pp. 109-110). He said that a previously hypnotized subject cannot resist re-induction, except by being unable to perceive the cue (p. 107). He warned of problems caused by amateur (or careless) hypnosis.

As military psychology and CIA mind-control research ballooned in the 1960s, print mention of criminal hypnosis in civilian publications dwindled. Marcuse noticed that. He described the Salpetriere case of the deeply entranced girl (Witt.) who, when instructed by male medical students to take off her blouse, converted the suggestion instead into hysterics and woke herself up. If that had been a current news case, and if she had obeyed, Marcuse wrote, "...it may be questioned whether journals or texts would carry this report." (p. 109)

Over the next forty years, by a combination of repression, denial, and a busy industry of myth-making, the truth about criminal hypnosis became scarce, sketchy, and confusing—or written in obscure technical language which only insiders could comprehend. Increasingly, any possibility of unethical hypnosis was flatly denied.

During those forty years, the technologies of trance manipulation have become ever more sophisticated and widespread. Experts have become more expert, more potentially exploitative. At the same time, real information about the risks of hypnosis has become ever more limited in supply—and more and more riddled with falsehood. Widespread pro-trance propaganda and lobbying have steadily increased public trust in any trance experience and have encouraged ever greater numbers of people to choose to participate in deep trance experiences.

Libraries now provide generous amounts of information on almost any topic, but not on how to build a nuclear weapon. That is classified. Nor do they provide information on the creation of unknowing hypnotic subjects and other mind-control technologies, for that is "inextricably bound with the secret world of intelligence" (Thomas, p. 354).

But truth has a way of appearing unexpectedly, again, despite everything.

Public Sources of Hypnosis Information

Seattle's public library served me wonderfully well. Through their interlibrary loan department, I obtained hundreds of books and articles about hypnosis from all over—at no charge. I read them all. Bit by bit, the picture came clearer. There are excellent print collections on hypnosis in McGill University's Osler Library (Montreal, Canada), at Vanderbilt University (the Albert Moll Collection), and at Wichita State University (Kansas; the Maurice and Jean H. Tinterow Collection). The National Guild of Hypnotists (P.O. Box 308, Merrimack, NH 03054-0308, 603- 429-9438, FAX 603- 424-8066) sells new and used hypnosis books. It also has a 39-page catalog of audio/video tapes from their annual national conference presenters. Magic, Inc., 5082 N. Lincoln Ave., Chicago, IL 60625, 312-334-2855, sells books on stage hypnotism. Out-of-print, or secondhand books and manuscripts on hypnotism are offered by Mario Carrandi, Jr. (122 Monroe Ave., Belle Mead, NJ 08502, 908-874-0630).

Writings Cited in—Or Relevant to—This Book: A—Z

A

Adams, Ronald L., and Williams, R.A. “Biological Effects of Electromagnetic Radiation (Radiowaves and Microwaves) Eurasian Communist Countries,” [prepared for the] Defense Intelligence Agency, [by the] U.S. Army Medical Intelligence and Information Agency, Report No. DST-1810S-074-76, March 1976. (Summarized in Brodeur, Ch. 24).

Akwei, John St. Clair. Evidence filed in Civil Action 92-0449 against the NSA, U. S. Courthouse, Washington DC. Reprinted in full by the Australian magazine, Nexus, April-May, 1996, p. 17. Substancial excerpts are reprinted in Project L.U.C.I.D. by Marrs.

Alexander, Gary. “America’s Programmed Assassins,” Gallery Magazine, Sept. 1977, p. 36.

Allodi, Federico, M.D. “The Psychiatric Effects of Political Persecution and Torture in Children and Families of Victims,” Canada’s Mental Health Sept. 1980, Vol. 28, pp. 8-10; “Ethical and Psychiatric Aspects of Torture: A Canadian Study,” Canadian Journal of Psychiatry 1982, Vol. 27, pp. 98-102; “Physical and Psychiatric Effects of Torture: Two Medical Studies,” Stover, Eric and Nightingale, Elena (eds), The Breaking of Bodies and Minds, N.Y.: W.H. Freeman, 1985.

This compassionate doctor founded a Canadian center for the treatment of victims of political torture where he studied torture symptoms and their treatment.

Andrews, Lewis M., and Karlins, Marvin. Requiem for Democracy? An Inquiry into the Limits of Behavioral Control. N.Y., 1971.

Arnold, William. Shadowland. N.Y.: McGraw Hill Book Co., 1978. This brief, readable, tragic biography of the movie star, Frances Farmer, written by a Seattle journalist and investigative reporter, is a case study in brainwashing and the misuse of psychiatry.

Assagioli, Roberto, M.D. Psychosynthesis. New York: Viking Press, 1965.

Azam, E. E. Hypnotisme, double conscience et alteration de la personnalite. Paris: Bailliere, 1887.

B

Baer, Randall N. Inside the New Age Nightmare. Huntington House (P.O. Box 53788, Lafayette, LA 70505), 1989.

Bailly, J. S., et al. “Secret Report on Mesmerism or Animal Magnetism,” Binet and Fere, Animal Magnetism, 1887.

Bain, Donald. The Control of Candy Jones. Chicago: Playboy Press, 1976.

Bamford, James. The Puzzle Palace: A Report on America’s Most Secret Agency. New York: Penguin Books, 1983.

Barber, T.X. “Comparison of Suggestibility During Light Sleep and Hypnosis,” Science, 1956, Vol. 124, p. 405; “Antisocial and Criminal Acts Induced by ‘Hypnosis’: A Review of Clinical and Experimental Findings,” Archives of General Medicine, 1961, Vol. 5, p. 311; “Experimental Evidence for a Theory of Hypnotic Behavior. Vol. II. Experimental Controls in Hypnotic Age Regression,” International J. of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 1961, Vol. 9, No. 4, pp. 181-93; “Toward a Theory of ‘Hypnotic’ Behavior: the ‘Hypnotically Induced Dream,” J. of Nervous and Mental Disease, 1962, Vol. 135, pp. 206-21; “Hypnotic Age Regression: A Critical Review,” Psychosomatic Medicine 1962, Vol. 24, No. 3, pp. 286-289; (with Chauncey, H.H., and Winer, R.A.) “Influence of Verbal Suggestion on the Parotid Gland Response to Gustatory Stimuli,” Proc. Soc. Esp. Biol. Med., 1964, Vol. 116, pp. 898-890; “The Effects of ‘Hypnosis’ on Learning and Recall: A Methodological Critique,” J. of Clinical Psychology Vol. 21, pp. 19-25; (with D. S. Calverley) “Effects on Recall of Hypnotic Induction, Motivational Suggestions, and Suggested Regressions: A Methodological and Experimental Analysis,” J. of Abnormal Psychology, 1966, Vol. 71, pp. 169-180; Hypnosis: A Scientific Approach. N.Y.: Van Nostrand Reinhold Co., 1969; “Who Believes in Hypnosis?” Psychology Today, July, 1971, p. 84; (with D.M. Cronin and N.P. Spanos) “Augmenting Hypnotic Suggestibility by Providing Favorable Information about Hypnosis,” American Journal of Clinical Hypnosis, 1971, Vol. 13, pp. 259-264; (with R. R. Q. Johnson) “Hypnosis, Suggestions, and Warts: An Experimental Investigation Implicating the Importance of ‘Believed-in-efficacy’,” Amer. J. clin. Hypnosis, 1978, Vol. 20, pp. 165-174.

Barbizet, Jacques. Human Memory and Its Pathology. San Francisco: W. H. Freeman & Co., 1970. (Tr. by D.K. Jardine.)

Barker, W., and Burgwin, S. “Brain Wave Patterns Accompanying Changes in Sleep and Wakefulness During Hypnosis.” Psychosomatic Medicine, 1948, Vol. 10, pp. 317-326; “Brain Wave Patterns During Hypnotic Sleep and Normal Sleep,” Arch. Neurol. Psychiat., 1949, Vol. 62, pp. 412-420.

Beaunis. Le somnambulisme provoque. Paris, 1887.

Becker, Robert O., and Selden, Gary. The Body Electric: Electromagnetism and the Foundation of Life. N.Y.: William Morrow, 1985. Becker also published a book called Cross Currents which I have not seen.

Beecher, Henry K. “Ethics and Clinical Research,” New England Journal of Medicine, 1966, Vol. 274, pp. 1354-1360 (also anthologized in Reiser, Dyck, & Curran.); “Evidence for Increased Effectiveness of Placebos with Increased Stress,” Amer. J. Physiol, 1956, Vol. 187, pp. 163-169.

Begich, Dr. Nick. Towards a New Alchemy: The Millennium Science. Anchorage, AK: Earthpulse Press.

Bell, Art. After Dark. This newsletter contains transcripts from Bell’s late-night radio show. Central Point, OR: Chancellor Broadcasting Co.

Bell, C. “Hypnotism and the Law,” Medico-Legal Journal 1895, Vol. 13, pp. 47-56; “The Case of Spurgeon Young,” Medico-legal Journal Vol. 13, pp. 529-545.

Benson, Herbert, M.D. “Decreased Alcohol Intake Associated with the Practice of Meditation: A Retrospective Investigation,” Annals of the New York Academy of Sciences, 1974, Vol. 233, pp. 174-177; (with R. K. Wallace) “Decreased Drug Abuse with Transcendental Meditation: a Study of 1862 Subjects” in Drug Abuse Proceedings of the International Conference, Zarafonetis, C.J.D. (ed.), Philadelphia: Lea and Febiger, 1972, pp. 369-376; The Relaxation Response. N.Y.: William Morrow, 1975. (Benson’s bibliography for this book reviews public sources on hypnotic physiology as of 1975. He omits Pavlovian induction types 2, 3, and 4.)

Berger, N. “Evidence—Hypnotically Induced Testimony Admissible if Reasonably Likely to Result in Recall Comparable to Normal Memory,” Seton Hall Law Rev., 1982, Vol. 12, pp. 404-406.

Bernheim, H. M. Hypnotisme, Suggestion, Psychotherapie, Paris, 1891. Published in parts, 1884, 1886, and, with a new preface, 1887. Tr. by C. A. Herter, 1888: Hypnosis and Suggestion in Psychotherapy: A Treatise on the Nature and Uses of Hypnotism. Reprint, introduction by E. R. Hilgard, New Hyde Park, N. Y.: University Books, 1964. Bernheim also wrote Suggestive Therapeutics: A Treatise on the Nature and Uses of Hypnotism (tr. by C. A. Herter), N.Y.: G. P. Putnam’s Sons Co., 1889, and N.Y.: London Book Co., 1947.

Biderman, Albert D. “Communist Techniques of Coercive Interrogation,” (Lackland Air Force Base, Texas. Air Force Personnel and Training Research Center, December, 1956, Development Report AFPTRC-TH-56-132, ASTIA Document #098908; “Communist Attempts to Elicit False Confessions from Air Force Prisoners of War,” B*ulletin of the New York Academy of Medicine*, 1957, Vol. 33, pp. 616-625; “Sociopsychological Needs and Involuntary” Behavior as Illustrated by Compliance in Interrogation,” Sociometry, 1960, Vol. 23, pp. 120-217; (with Herbert Zimmer, eds.) The Manipulation of Human Behavior, N.Y.: John Wiley & Sons, 1961; March to Calumny: The Truth About American POW’s in Korea, N.Y.: Macmillan, 1963.

Binet, A. and Fere, C. French original, 1886. Animal Magnetism. London: Kegan Paul, 1887; N.Y.: Appleton-Century, 1888, 1901.

Birns, H.D. Hypnosis: How to Unleash the Power of Your Mind Without Drugs! New York: Award Books, Universal Publishing, 1968, 1969. This author makes fleeting, but hard-hitting, reference to unethical hypnosis in Chapter 10, "The Evil Eye: hypnosis in the hands of criminals." He also discusses personality splitting.

Björnstörm, F. Hypnotism (Tr. by Baron Nils Posse). N.Y.: Humboldt Publishing Co., 1887.

Blake, Robert Rogers. Article in Biderman and Zimmer (eds) The Manipulation of Human Behavior.

Blum, Gerald S., A Model of the Mind. N.Y.: Wiley, 1961. "Hypnotic Programming Techniques in Psychological Experiments," in Estabrooks (ed), Hypnosis: Current Problems, 1962, Ch. 11; "Hypnosis as a Research Tool," paper presented at the 1968 annual meeting, Society for Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis.

Bly, Robert. A Little Book on the Human Shadow. San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1988.

Bourguignon, Erika. (ed) Religion, Altered States of Consciousness, and Social Change. Columbus: Ohio State University Press, 1973.

Bowart, Walter. Operation Mind Control. N.Y.: Dell Publishing, 1978.

Bowers, Kenneth S. "The Effect of Demands for Honesty on Reports of Visual and Auditory Hallucinations," International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 1967, Vol. 15, pp. 31-36; Hypnosis for the Seriously Curious. Belmont, CA: Wadsworth Publishing, 1976.

Braid, J. Neurypnology: The Rationale of Nervous Sleep Considered in Relation with Animal Magnetism, Illustrated by Numerous Cases of its Successful Application in the Relief and Cure of Disease, London: John Churchill, 1843. It was reprinted, after editing by A. E. Waite as Braid on Hypnotism: Neurypnology. A new Edition Edited with an Introduction, Biographical and Bibliographical, Embodying the Author's Later Views and Further Evidence on the Subject, London: George Redway, 1889. And again reprinted and retitled as Braid on Hypnotism: The beginnings of Modern Hypnosis, N.Y.: Julian Press, 1960.

Braid also wrote The Power of the Mind Over the Body: An Experimental Inquiry into the Nature and Cause of the Phenomena Attributed by Reichenbach and Others to a "New Imponderable" (London: John Churchill, 1846). This one was then revised and published in Medical Times (June 13, 20, & 23, 1846). For a modern, abridged version look in W. Dennis, Readings in the History of Psychology (N.Y.: Appleton-Century-Crofts, 1948, pp. 178-193). Braid reacted to Colquhoun's 1852 book by writing: Magic, Witchcraft, Animal Magnetism, Hypnotism, and Electrobiology: Being a Digest of the Latest Views of the Author on These Subjects. Three editions, each larger than the one before, were published (London: John Churchill, 1852).

Bramwell, J. Milne. "James Braid: His Work and Writings," Society for Psychical Research: Proceedings, 1896-7a, 12, Part 30, Supplement pp. 127-166; "What is Hypnotism?" Society for Psychical Research: Proceedings, 1896-97b, 12, Part 31, pp. 204-258; Hypnotism: Its History, Practice and Theory, London: Rider, 1903, 1913, 1921, reprint N.Y.: Julian Press, 1903, revised edition, Philadelphia: Lippincott, 1928.

Brende, Joel Osler, M.D. "The Use of Hypnosis in Post-Traumatic Conditions" in William E. Kelly (ed.) Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder and the War Veteran Patient, N.Y.: Brunner/Mazel, 1985.

Brenman, Margaret. "Experiments in the Hypnotic Production of Anti-social and Self-injurious Behavior," Psychiatry, 1942, Vol. 5, pp. 49-61; (with R. P. Knight) "Hypnotherapy for Mental Illness in the Aged: Case Report of Hysterical Psychosis in a 70-year-old Woman," Bulletin of the Menninger Clinic, 1943, Vol. 7, p. 188; (with S. Reichard) "Use of the Rorschach Test in the Prediction of Hypnotizability," Bull. of Menninger Clinic 1943, Vol. 7, pp. 5-6, 183-187; (with Merton M. Gill) "Treatment of a case of anxiety hysteria by an hypnotic technique employing psychoanalytic principles," Bulletin of the Menninger Clinic 1943, Vol. 7, pp. 5-6, 163-71; (with M.M. Gill, and F. J. Hacker) "Alterations in the State of the Ego in Hypnosis," Bull. Menninger Clin., 1947, Vol. 11, p. 60; (with Gill) "The Use of Hypnotic Techniques in a Study of Tension Systems," 1947; (with Gill) Hypnotherapy: A Survey of the Literature, London: The Pushkin Press, and N.Y.: International Universities Press, 1947; "Dreams and Hypnosis," Psychoanalytic Quarterly, 1949, Vol. 18, pp. 455-465; (with Darrow, Henry, Gill, and Converse) "Frontal Motor Parallelism and Motor Occipital In-phase Activity in Hypnosis, Drowsiness and Sleep," EEG Clin. Neurophysiol., 1950, Vol. 2, pp. 230 and 355; Hypnosis, N.Y., 1953; (with Merton M. Gill) Hypnosis and Related States: Psychoanalytic Studies in Regression, N.Y.: International Universities Press, 1961.

Breuer. Chapter in Freud and Breuer's Studies on Hysteria, Avon Library, 1966.

Brickner, Richard M. (with Kubie, L.S.) "A Miniature Psychotic Storm Produced by a Superego Conflict over a Simple Posthypnotic Suggestion," Psychoanal. Quart., 1936, Vol. 5, pp. 467-487; (with Porter, Robert T., Homer, Warren S., and Hicks, Julia J.) "Direct Reorientation of Behavior Patterns in Deep Narcosis (Narcoplexis)." Archives of Neurology and Psychiatry 1950, Vol. 64, pp. 165-195.

Brodeur, Paul. The Zapping of America: Microwaves, Their Deadly Risk, and the Cover-Up. N.Y.: W. W. Norton & Co., 1977.

Brooke, Tal, "Education: Capturing Hearts and Minds for a New World," SCP Journal, 1992, Vol. 16:4, pp. 20-22.

Brother Lawrence. Selections anthologized in Practicing His Presence, Beaumont, TX: The SeedSowers, 1973.

Brouardel, P.; Motel, A.; and Garnier, P. "Affaire Valrof." Annales d'Hygiene Publique et de Medecine Legale, 29, 497-524, 1893. Brouardel criticized the legal management of the Bompard case.

Brown, Barbara B., "Recognition of Aspects of Consciousness through Association with EEG Alpha Activity Represented by a Light Signal, Psychophysiology, 1970, Vol. 6, pp. 442-452.

Brown, Daniel P., and Fromm, Erica. Hypnotherapy and Hypnoanalysis. Hillsdale, N.H.: Lawrence Erlbaum Associates, 1986.

Bryan, William J. The Legal Aspects of Hypnosis. Springfield, IL, 1962.

Burgess, Thomas O. "Hypnosis in Dentistry," in LeCron (ed.) Experimental Hypnosis.

C

Cameron, D. E. "Psychic Driving: Dynamic Implant," The American Journal of Psychiatry, 1956, Vol. 112:7, pp. 502-509; (with Levy and Rubenstein) "Effects of Repetition of Verbal Signals upon the Behaviour of Chronic Psychoneurotic Patients," The Journal of Mental Science, 1960, Vol. 106, pp. 742-754; "Production of Differential Amnesia as a Factor in the Treatment of Schizophrenia," Comprehensive Psychiatry, 1960, Vol. 1, pp. 26-33; (with Levy, Ban, and Rubenstein) "Further Report on the Effects of Repetition of Verbal Signals" in the Canadian Psychiatric Association Journal, 1962, Vol. 6, pp. 210-221. The American Psychiatric Association library in Washington, D.C. has a complete set of the approximately 130 Cameron titles. Thomas, pp. 374-375, lists the Cameron titles.

Cannon, Alexander. The Science of Hypnotism, 1936; "Hypnosis in Criminology," Brit. J. Med. Hypn., Summer 1950, Vol. 1, p. 17.

Cannon, W. B. "'Voodoo' Death," American Anthropologist XLIV, 1942, pp. 169-181. Reprinted, abridged, in W.A. Lessa and E. Z. Vogt (eds.), Reader in Comparative Religion: An Anthropological Approach, N.Y.: Harper & Row, 1965.

Casey, Edward S. Imagining: A Phenomenological Study, Bloomington: Indiana U. Press, 1976; Remembering: A Phenomenological Study, Bloomington: Indiana U. Press, 1987.

Cautela, J.R. On covert sensitization, Psychological Record, 1966, Vol. 16, pp. 33-41; on covert negative reinforcement, Journal of Behavior Therapy and Experimental Psychiatry, 1970, Vol. 1, pp. 273-278; on covert conditioning, in A. Jacobs and L. B. Sachs (eds), The Psychology of Private Events: Perspectives on Covert Response Systems, N.Y.: Academic Press, 1971; on covert extinction, Behavior Therapy, 1971, Vol. 2, pp. 192-200; "Rationale and Procedures for Covert Conditioning," in R. D. Rubin, H. Fensterheim, J.D. Henderson, and L. P. Ullmann (eds), Advances in Behavior Therapy, Vol. 4, N.Y.: Academic Press, 1972.

Charcot, J. M. Hypnotisme et suggestion. Paris, 1885. Also, Lectures on the Diseases of the Nervous System. London, The New Sydenham Society, 1877-1889; "The Faith-cure," New Review, 1893, Vol. 8, No. 44, pp. 18-31.

Chavkin, Samuel. The Mind Stealers: Psychosurgery and Mind Control. Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1978.

Christenson, James A., Jr., "Dynamics in Hypnotic Induction," in LeCron (ed), Experimental Hypnosis, 1952, pp. 33-53.

Citrenbaum, Charles M., King, Mark E., Cohen, William I. Modern Clinical Hypnosis for Habit Control. N.Y.: W.W. Norton & Co., 1985.

Coe W.C. (with Kobayashi, K. and M.L. Howard) "An Approach Toward Isolating Factors that Influence Antisocial Conduct in Hypnosis," International J. of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 1972, Vol. 20, No. 2, pp. 118-31; "More on Experimental Design in Evaluating the Influence of Hypnosis in Antisocial Conduct," Proceedings, 80th Annual Convention of the American Psychological Association, pp. 861-862; "The Problem of Relevance Versus Ethics in Researching Hypnosis and Antisocial Conduct," Annals of New York Academy of Sciences 1977, Vol. 296, pp. 90-104; (with Ryden, K.) "Hypnosis and Risks to Human Subjects," Ameri- can Psychologist, 1979, Vol. 34, No. l8, pp. 673-81.

Collins, Anne. In The Sleep Room: The Story of the CIA Brainwashing Experiments in Canada.

Collins, Larry. Mind Control: The Top Secret Weapons of the Future Are Here: Don't Be Frightened. Don't Bother to Run. I have heard of this book, but have not found a copy.

Colquhoun, J. C. An History of Magic, Witchcraft, and Animal Magnetism. (Published in 1800s.)

Condon, Richard. The Manchurian Candidate. N.Y.: McGraw-Hill, 1959.

Conn, J. H. "Is Hypnosis Really Dangerous?" Int. J. Clin. Exp. Hypnosis, 1972, Vol. 20, pp. 61-79; "The Myth of Coercion through Hypnosis," International Journal of Experimental and Clinical, 1981, Vol. 29, pp. 95-100.

Cook, Sm. Wesley, Practical Lessons in Hypnotism and Autosuggestion. New York: Willey Book Co., 1927. I found this one while browsing the University of Idaho library shelves. I had wondered if doing that might reveal any books on hypnosis which were not listed in the computer references. His book is interesting, readable—and revealing.

Coon, Dennis, Essentials of Psychology: Exploration and Application, (4th ed.), N.Y., West Publishing, 1988. This Psychology 101 text gives the standard patter that hypnosis cannot be misused. It does not mention narcohypnosis. References to hypnosis are always positive.

Corson, William R. The Armies of Ignorance, N.Y.: Dial Press/James Wade, 1977.

Corydon, Bent and Hubbard, L. Ron, Jr. (a.k.a. Ronald DeWolf). L. Ron Hubbard: Messiah or Madman? Secaucus, N.J.: Lyle Stuart, 1987.

Coue, E., How to Practice Suggestion and Autosuggestion, N.Y.: American Library Service, 1923.

Crick, Frances, in Scientific American, Dec. 1995, p. 82.

D

Damon, Dr. Dwight. "An Interview with George H. Baranowski," Journal of Hypnotism, June 1991, pp. 5-6.

Danto, B. L. "The Use of Brevital Sodium in Police Investigation," Police Chief, 1979, Vol. 46, No. 5, pp. 53-55.

Das, J. P. "The Pavlovian Theory of Hypnosis: An Evaluation," Journal of Mental Science, 1958, Vol. 104, pp. 82-90; "Conditioning and Hypnosis," Journal of Experimental Psychology, 1958, Vol. 56, pp. 110-113; "Learning and Recall under Hypnosis and in the Waking State: a Comparison," Archives of General Psychiatry, 1961, Vol. 4, pp. 517-521.

Davis and Husband, "A Study of Hypnotic Susceptibility in Relation to Personality Traits," Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology, Ap. 1931-Mar. 1932, 26.

Deese, James. Psychology as Science and Art, N.Y.: Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 1972.

De Jonge, Alex. The Life and Times of Grigorii Rasputin. N.Y.: Coward, McCann and Geoghegan, 1982.

Deleuze, J. P. F. Practical Instruction in Animal Magnetism: Part I. French original published 1825. Translation by T. C. Hartshorn with notes on U.S. cases published in Providence, R.I.: B. Cranton & Co., 1837. Animal Magnetism, N.Y., 1846.

Delgado, Jose M., M.D. "Intracerebral Radio Stimulation and Recording in Completely Free Patients," J. nerv. ment. Dis., 1968, Vol. 147, pp. 329-340; Physical Control of the Mind: Toward a Psychocivilized Society, N.Y.: Harper & Row, 1969; "E.S.B.," [electrical stimulation of the brain.] Psychology Today, May 1970, Vol. 3, No. 12, p. 48.

Dessoir, Max. Bibliographie des modernen Hypnotismus, Berlin: Carl Dunckers Verlag, 1888; Erster Nachtrag zur Bibliographie des modernen Hypnotismus, Berlin: Carl Dunckers Verlag, 1890.

Deutsch, J. Anthony. "Neural Basis of Memory." Psychology Today, May 1968, pp. 56-61.

Deyoub, Paul L. "Hypnotic Stimulation of Antisocial Behavior: A Case Report," The International Journal of Clinical & Experimental Hypnosis, July 1984, pp. 301-306.

Du Maurier, George. Trilby. New York: Grosset & Dunlap, 1894.

Du Prel, Karl. Das hypnotische Verbrechen und seine Entdeckung. Munich 1889.

E

Edmonston, William E., Jr. "An Experimental Investigation of Hypnotic Age Regression," Amer. J. Clin. Hypn., 1960, Vol. 3, pp. 127-138; "Hypnosis as Related to Learning and Electrodermal Measures," Amer. J. clin. Hypn., 1966, Vol. 9, pp. 31-51; "Stimulus-Response Theory of Hypnosis," in J.E. Gordon, (ed.), 1967, pp. 345-387; (with J. R. Erbeck) "Hypnotic Time Distortion: A Note," American Journal of Clinical Hypnosis, 1967, Vol. 10, pp. 79-80; "The Effects of Neutral Hypnosis on Conditioned Responses," in Fromm. E. & Shor, R.E. (eds.), Hypnosis: Research Developments and Perspectives, Chicago: Aldine-Atherton, 1972, pp. 323-356; (with W. R. Grotevant) "Hypnosis and Alpha Density," American Journal of Clinical Hypnosis, 1975, Vol. 17, pp. 221-232; (ed.) "Conceptual and Investigative Approaches to Hypnosis and Hypnotic Phenomena," Ann. N.Y. Acad. Sci., 1977, Vol. 296, pp. 264-273; "Neutral Hypnosis as Relaxation," American Journal of Clinical Hypnosis, 1977, Vol. 20, pp. 69-75; "The Effects of Neutral Hypnosis on Conditioned Responses: Implications for Hypnosis as Relaxation," in Fromm, E. & Shor, R.E. (eds.) Hypnosis: Developments in Research and New Perspectives (2nd ed.). N.Y.: Aldine Publishing Co., 1979, pp. 415-455; Hypnosis and Relaxation: Modern Verification of an Old Equation, N.Y.: John Wiley & Sons, 1981; The Induction of Hypnosis, N.Y.: John Wiley & Sons, 1986.

Edmunds, Simeon. Hypnotism and Psychic Phenomena. No. Hollywood, CA: Wilshire Book Co., 1961. This little paperback reprint of an English book includes a chapter on "Hypnotism and Crime" and material on psychic research involving trance.

Eisenbud, J. "Psychology of Headache." Psychiatric Quart., 1937, Vol. 11, pp. 592-619.

Ellenberger, Henri F. The Discovery of the Unconscious: The History and Evolution of Dynamic Psychiatry. N.Y.: Basic Books, 1970.

Engstrom, D. R., "The Enhancement of EEG Alpha Production and Its Effects on Hypnotic Susceptibility," unpublished doctoral dissertation, U. Southern Cal., 1970.

Epstein, Edward Jay. Legend: the Secret World of Lee Harvey Oswald. N.Y.: McGraw-Hill, 1978. He also wrote Inquest: The Warren Commission and the Establishment of Truth; Counterplot: The Garrison Case; News from Nowhere; Between Fact and Fiction, and Agency of Fear.

Erickson, Milton H.—M. H. Erickson wrote 150 articles on many aspects of hypnosis over a span of many years. The title of an article often does not reveal its most important contents. His most cited publications are:

"The Investigation of a Specific Amnesia," British Journal of Medical Psychology, 1933, Vol. 13, pp. 143-150; "A Study of Hypnotically Induced Complexes by Means of the Luria Technique"(with Huston and Sakow), Journal of General Psychology, 1934, Vol. 11, pp. 65-97; "A Study of Experimental Neurosis Hypnotically Induced in a Case of Ejaculatio Praecox," British Journal of Medical Psychology, 1935, Vol. 15, pp. 34-50; "Development of Apparent Unconsciousness During Hypnotic Reliving of a Traumatic Experience," Archives of Neurology and Psychiatry, 1937, Vol. 38, pp. 1282-1288; "The Experimental Demonstration of Unconscious Mentation by Automatic Writing," Psychoanalytic Quarterly, 1937, Vol. 6, p. 513; "A Study of Clinical and Experimental Findings on Hypnotic Deafness: I. Clinical Experimentation and Findings," Journal of General Psychology, 1938, Vol. 19, pp. 127-150. II. "Experimental Findings with a Conditioned Response Technique," pp. 151-167; "The Use of Automatic Drawing in the Interpretation and Relief of a State of Acute Obsessional Depression," Psychoanalytic Quarterly, 1938, Vol. 7, pp. 443-466; "The Hypnotic Induction of Hallucinatory Color Vision Followed by Pseudo-negative After-images," Journal of Experimental Psychology, 1938, Vol. 22, pp. 581-588; "The Applications of Hypnosis to Psychiatry," Medical Record, 1939, Vol. 150, pp. 60-65; "The Induction of Color Blindness by a Technique of Hypnotic Suggestion," Journal of General Psychology, 1939, Vol. 20, pp. 61-89; "An Experimental Investigation of the Possible Anti-Social Use of Hypnosis," Psychiatry, 1939, Vol. 2, pp. 391-414; "The Permanent Relief of an Obsessional Phobia by Means of Communication with an Unsuspected Dual Personality," Psychoanalytic Quarterly, Oct. 1939, Vol. 8, pp. 471-509; "Experimental Demonstrations of the Psychopathology of Everyday Life," Psychoanalyt. Quart., 1939, Vol. 8, pp. 338, 391, 394-395; "The Translation of the Cryptic Automatic Writing of One Subject by Another in a Trance-Like Dissociated State," Psychoanalytic Quarterly, 1940, Vol. 9, pp. 51-63; "Hypnosis: A General Review," Diseases of the Nervous System, 1941, Vol. 2, pp. 13-18; "Concerning the Nature and Character of Posthypnotic Behavior," Journal of General Psychology, 1941, Vol. 24, pp. 95-133; (with Kubie) "The Successful Treatment of a Case of Acute Hysterical Depression by a Return under Hypnosis to a Critical Phase of Childhood," Psychoanalytic Quarterly, Oct. 1941, Vol. 10, pp. 583-609; article in Psychiatry, 1942, Vol. 5, pp. 49-62; "Hypnotic Investigation of Psychosomatic Phenomena: Psychosomatic Interrelationships Studied by Experimental Hypnosis," Psychosomatic Medicine, 1943, Vol. 5, pp. 51-58; "Hypnotic Investigation of Psychosomatic Phenomena II. The Development of Aphasia-like Reactions from Hypnotically Induced Amnesias," Psychosomatic Medicine, 1943, Vol. 5, pp. 59-66; "Hypnotic Investigation of Psychosomatic Phenomena III: A Controlled Experimental Use of Hypnotic Regression in the Therapy of an Acquired Food Intolerance," pp. 67-70; "Unconscious Mental Activity in Hypnosis," Psychoanalytic Quarterly, Jan. 1944, Vol. 13, pp. 60-78; "Hypnosis in Medicine," M. Clin. North America, 1944, Vol. 28, pp. 639, 389-390; "The Method Employed to Formulate a Complex Story for the Induction of an Experimental Neurosis in a Hypnotic Subject," Journal of General Psychology, 1944, Vol. 31, pp. 67-84. Reprinted in J. Haley (ed.), 1967, pp. 312-325; "Hypnotic Techniques for the Therapy of Acute Psychiatric Disturbances in War," Am. J. Psychiat., 1945, Vol. 101, p. 668; "Deep Hypnosis and Its Induction," in L. M. LeCron (ed.), Experimental Hypnosis: A Symposium of Articles on Research, N.Y.: Macmillan, 1952, pp. 70-112; "Special Techniques of Brief Hypnotherapy," J. Clin. Exp. Hypn., 1954, Vol. 2, pp. 109-129; "Hypnosis in Painful Terminal Illness," American Journal of Clinical Hypnosis, 1958, Vol. I, pp. 117-121; "Further Techniques of Hypnosis—Utilization Techniques," American Journal of Clinical Hypnosis, 1959, Vol. 2, pp. 3-21; "A Transcript of a Trance Induction with Commentary," American Journal of Clinical Hypnosis, 1959, Vol. 2, pp. 49-84, reprinted in J. Haley, (ed.) 1967, pp. 51-88; "Historical Note on the Hand Levitation and Other Ideomotor Techniques," American Journal of Clinical Hypnosis, 1960, Vol. 3, pp. 196-199; The Practical Application of Medical and Dental Hypnosis, N.Y.: Julian Press, 1961; "Basic Psychological Problems in Hypnosis Research" and comments in panel discussion transcribed in G. H. Estabrooks (ed.), Hypnosis: Current Problems, N.Y.: Harper & Row, 1962, pp. 207-223, 238-272; "The Confusion Technique in Hypnosis," American Journal of Clinical Hypnosis, 1964, Vol. 6, pp. 183-207, and reprinted in J. Haley, (ed.), 1967, pp. 130-157; "Initial Experiments Investigating the Nature of Hypnosis," American Journal of Clinical Hypnosis, 1964, Vol. 7, pp. 152-162. "Further Experimental Investigation of Hypnosis: Hypnotic and Nonhypnotic Realities," American Journal of Clinical Hypnosis, 1967, Vol. 10, pp. 87-135; "Laboratory and Clinical Hypnosis: The Same or Different Phenomena?" American Journal of Clinical Hypnosis, 1967, Vol. 9, pp. 166-170; (with E.L. Rossi) "Varieties of Hypnotic Amnesia," American Journal of Clinical Hypnosis, 1974, Vol. 16, pp. 225-289.

Esdaile, James. Mesmerism in India and Its Practical Application in Surgery and Medicine. London: Longman's, Green & Co., 1846; reprinted, Hartford, England: S. Andrus & Son, 1850; reprinted, retitled Hypnosis in Medicine and Surgery, N.Y.: Julian Press, 1957; again reprinted, retitled Mesmerism in India and Its Practical Application in Surgery and Medicine, N.Y.: Arno Press, 1976; Natural and Mesmeric Clairvoyance, with the Practical Application of Mesmerism in Surgery and Medicine, London: Bailliere, 1852. Reprint N.Y.: Arno Press, 1975.

Estabrook, Marjorie. "Synthetic Dreams Can be 'Made to Order,'" The Seattle Sunday Times, Sept. 6, 1942, p. 1.

Estabrooks, George Hoben. "Experimental Studies in Suggestion," J. of Genetic Psychology, 1929, Vol. 36, pp. 120-139; "A Standardized Hypnotic Technique Dictated to a Victrola Record," Am. J. of Psychology, 1930, Vol. 42, pp. 115-116; "The Psychogalvanic Reflex in Hypnosis," Journal of General Psychology, 1930, Vol. 3, pp. 150-157; "Hypnotism is Akin to Sleep Walking and Insanity," Scientific American, March, 1936; Hypnotism. N.Y.: E.P. Dutton, 1943; 2nd edition, 1944; significantly revised 3rd edition, 1957; (with Richard Lockridge) Death in the Mind. N.Y.: E. P. Dutton, 1945; (with Leslie Lieber) "Hypnosis: Its Tremendous Potential as a War Weapon," Argosy, Feb. 1950; "The Possible Anti-Social Use of Hypnotism," Personality: Symposia on Topical Issues, 1951, Vol. 1, pp. 294-299; "A Case Study in Vocational Adjustment," Brit. J. Med. Hyp., Winter 1952-1953, pp. 13-16; (with Nancy E. Gross) The Future of the Human Mind, N.Y., 1961; (ed.) Hypnosis: Current Problems, N.Y.: Harper & Row, 1962; "Hypnosis Come of Age," Science Digest, April 1971; Using Hypnotism. Toronto, Canada: Coles, 1980. (I have not read Using Hypnotism, but it must be pretty tame, for it is the only publication by Estabrooks that Lawrence and Perry cite in their book which attempts to shove criminal hypnosis back into the closet.)

Other books by Estabrooks are Spiritism and Man, The Mechanical Misfit. "Hypnotism is Akin to Sleep Walking and Insanity" has interesting experiments in posthypnotic suggestion. Hypnosis: Current Problems offers articles, plus panel participation from Wolberg, Orne, Wright, M. H. Erickson, Estabrooks, et. al., who were brought together for a Colgate University hypnosis symposium.

Evans, F. J. (with Thorn): "Source Amnesia after Hypnosis," American Psychologist, 1963, Vol. 18, p. 373. (Abstract); (with Gustafson, O'Connell, Orne, and Shor) "Response During Sleep with Intervening Waking Amnesia," Science, 1966, Vol. 152, pp. 666-667; (with Thorn) "Two Types of Posthypnotic Amnesia: Recall Amnesia and Source Amnesia," International Jour- nal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 1966, Vol. 14, pp. 162-179; "An Experimental Indirect Technique for the Induction of Hypnosis Without Awareness," International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 1967, Vol. 15, pp. 72-85; "Suggestibility in the Normal Waking State," Psychological Bulletin, 1967, Vol. 67, pp. 114-129; (with Gustafson, O'Connell, Orne, and Shor) "Sleep-induced Behavioral Response: Relationship to Susceptibility to Hypnosis and Laboratory Sleep Patterns," Journal of Nervous and Mental Disease, 1969, Vol. 148, pp. 467-476; (with Orchard) "Sleep Learning: The Successful Waking Recall of Material Presented During Sleep," presented at Association for the Psychophysiological Study of Sleep, Boston, March 1969; (with Gustafson, O'Connell, Orne, and Shor) "Verbally Induced Behavioral Responses During Sleep," Journal of Nervous and Mental Disease, 1970, Vol. 150, pp. 171-187; "Simultaneous Changes in Skin Potential and Subjective Estimates of Depth of Hypnosis," presented at Eastern Psychological Association, Atlantic City, April, 1970; "Contextual Forgetting: A Study of Source Amnesia," presented at Eastern Psychological Association, New York, April, 1971; (with Kihlstrom) "Posthypnotic Amnesia as Disrupted Retrieval," Journal of Abnormal Psychology, 1973, Vol. 82, pp. 317-323.

Eysenck, H.J. Uses and Abuses of Psychology. Baltimore: Penguin, 1953.

F

Faraday, Ann. Dream Power. Berkeley: Medallion, 1973; The Dream Game, Perennial, 1974.

Farago, Robert. "HDTV Mass Hypnosis," Journal of Hypnotism, Sept. 1991.

Ferenczi, Sandor. [Also spelled Ferenci.] Sex in Psychoanalysis, Boston: Richard G. Badger, 1916, "Introjection and Transference," reprinted in Sex in Psychoanalysis. N.Y.: 1950, pp. 35-93; Contributions to Psychoanalysis. (Tr. by E. Jones) Boston: Badger, 1916; (with others) Psycho-analysis and the War Neuroses. London: International Psycho-analytical Press, 1921; Theory and Technique of Psychoanalysis (Tr. by J. I. Suttie), N.Y.: Boni & Liveright, 1927; "Suggestion and Psychoanalysis," in Further Contributions to the Theory and Technique of Psychoanalysis, London: Institute of Psychoanalysis and Hogarth Press, 1926.

Festinger, Leon. A Theory of Cognitive Dissonance, Stanford, CA: 1957; (with J. M. Carlsmith), "Cognitive Consequences of Forced Compliance," Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology 1959, Vol. 58, pp. 203-10; (with D. Bramel) "The Reactions of Humans to Cognitive Dissonance," in Bachrach, A.J. (ed.) Experimental Foundations of Clinical Psychology. Basic Books, N.Y., 1962; Conflict, Decision and Dissonance, Stanford, CA, 1964.

Finkelhor, David. "What's Wrong with Sex between Adults and Children? Ethics and the Problems of Sexual Abuse." American Journal of Orthopsychiatry, 1979, Vol. 49, pp. 692-697.

Fisher, C. "Hypnosis in Treatment of Neuroses Due to War and Other Causes," War Med., 1943, Vol. 4, p. 565.

Fisher, Seymour. The Use of Hypnosis in Intelligence and Related Military Situations. Technical Report No. 4, Study SR 177-D, Contract AF 18 (600) 1797. Washington, D.C.: Bureau of Social Science Research, Inc., 1958.

Forel, August. Der hypnotismus. Stuttgart, Germany: von Ferdinand Enke, 1902. Psychotherapy and Suggestion, or Hypnotism. N.Y.: Allied Publishing Co., 1927.

Franklin, Benjamin. Some researchers list the "Report on Mesmerism" as authored by Franklin, who was Chairman of the French Commission. Actually, Bailly, the Commission's official Reporter, wrote it.

Franklin, Jon. Molecules of the Mind: The Brave New Science of Molecular Psychology. N.Y.: Atheneum, 1987.

Freud, Sigmund. "The Psychic Mechanism of Hysteria Phenomena," in Selected Papers on Hysteria and Other Psychoneuroses. N.Y.: J. Nerv. Ment. Dis. Publishing Co., 1893; (with J. Breuer) Studies in Hysteria. Washington: Nervous and Mental Disease Publishing, 1914; The Ego and the Mechanisms of Defense, N.Y.: International Universities Press, 1936, reprinted 1946; "Origin and Development of Psychoanalysis," in General Selection from Works of Freud, London: L. and V. Woolf, Institute of Psychoanalysis, 1937; Group Psychology and the Analysis of the Ego, London: The Hogarth Press, 1948; "Recommendations to Physicians Practising Psychoanalysis," in Standard Edition of the Complete Psychological Works (tr. under editorship of James Strachey), Vol. XII, London: Hogarth, 1958; "Remembering, Repeating and Working-Through," Standard Edition, Vol. 12.; The Ego and the Mechanisms of Defense, N.Y.: International Universities Press, 1966.

Frey, Alan H. "Auditory System Response to Radio Frequency Energy," Aerospace Medicine, Dec. 1961, Vol. 32, pp. 1140-1142; "Human Auditory System Response to Modulated Electromagnetic Energy," Journal of Ap- plied Physiology, Vol. 17, No. 4, July 1962, pp. 689-692.

Fried, Yehuda and Agassi, Joseph. Paranoia: A Study in Diagnosis. Boston: D. Reidel Publishing Company, 1976. “Editorial Preface” by Robert S. Cohen and Marx W. Wartofsky. Fromm, Erika and Shor, Ronald E., (eds.) Hypnosis: Research Developments and Perspectives. Chicago: Aldine-Atherton, 1972.

Furst, Charles, Origins of the Mind: Mind-Brain Connections. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1979.

G

Gibbs, Nancy. “The EQ Factor,” Time, Oct. 2, 1995, pp. 60-68.

Gindes, Bernard C., M.D. New Concepts of Hypnosis: Theories, Techniques and Practical Applications. N.Y.: Julian Press, 1951; reprint, No. Hollywood, CA: Wilshire, 1967.

Glaser, Robert D. and Thorpe, Joseph S., “Unethical Intimacy: A Survey of Sexual Contact and Advances Between Psychology Educators and Female Graduate Students,” American Psychologist, Vol. 41, pp. 43-51.

Goldstein, Eleanor and Farmer, Kevin. Confabulations: Creating False Memories—Destroying Families. Boca Raton, FL: Social Issues Resources Series Books, 1992; True Stories of False Memories. Boca Raton, FL: SIRS, 1993.

Goleman, Daniel. “Sad Legacy of Abuse: The Search for Remedies,” The New York Times, Jan. 24, 1989, pp. C1, C6.

Goleman, Daniel and Thurman, Robert A. F., (eds.), MindScience: An East-West Dialogue. Boston: Wisdom Publications, 1991.

Gorton, B.E. “The Physiology of Hypnosis. I. A Review of the Literature.” Psychiatric Quarterly, 1949, Vol,. 23, pp. 317-343; “The Physiology of Hypnosis. II. A review of the literature.” Psychiat. Quart., 1949, Vol. 23, pp. 457-485; “Current Problems of Physiologic Research in Hypnosis,” in Estabrooks, Hypnosis: Current Problems, p. 30.

Grinker, Roy P. and Spiegel, John P. War Neuroses in North Africa. N.Y.: Josiah Macy, Jr. Foundation, 1943; Special Report: Conference on Narcosis, Hypnosis, and War Neuroses, sponsored by the Josiah Macy, Jr. Foundation, N.Y.: Jan., 1944, “privately distributed”; Men under Stress, Philadelphia: Blakiston, 1945; War Neuroses, N.Y.: Blakiston, McGraw-Hill, 1945.

Gruneberg, M.M. “Feeling of Knowing and Cued Recall,” Acta Psychologica, 1974, Vol. 38, pp. 257-265; “The First Letter Search Strategy,” IRCS Medical Science: Psychology and Psychiatry, 1976, Vol. 4, p. 307; “The Feeling of Knowing, Memory Blocks and Memory Aids,” in (with P.E. Morris, eds.) Aspects of Memory, London: Methuen, 1978; (with R.N. Sykes) “Knowledge and Memory: The Feeling of Knowing and Reminiscence” in (with P.E. Morris and R. N. Sykes, eds.) Practical Aspects of Memory, Academic Press, London, 1978.

H

Hammerschlag, Dr. Heinz E. Hypnotism and Crime. Wilshire Book Co., 1957. (Tr. from German, forewords by John Cohen and Melvin Powers) Hammerschlag was a Swiss hypnotist. This brief (137-page) collection of old European incidents involving exploitative hypnosis is of mixed value to researchers. Some cases are marginal, some helpful, some rare and valuable. Although his style is pretentious and often abstract, yet it is also readable and frank about criminal hypnosis.

Harriman, P.L. “The Experimental Production of Some Phenomena Related to the Multiple Personality,” Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology, 1942, Vol. 37, pp. 244-255; “A New Approach to Multiple Personalities,” Amer. J. Orthopsychiat., 1943, Vol. 13, pp. 638-644.

Hart, Ernest. Hypnotism, Mesmerism, and the New Witchcraft. N.Y.: D. Appleton, 1898.

Harte, Richard, Journal of Hypnotism, Dec. 1990, Vol. 5, No. 4.

Hartland, J. Medical and Dental Hypnosis and Its Clinical Applications. London: Bailliere, 1971 (2nd ed.); “An Alleged Case of Criminal Assault upon a Married Woman under Hypnosis,” American J. of Clinical Hypnosis 1974, Vol. 16, No. 3, pp. 188-198. Medical and Dental Hypnosis and Its Clinical Applications is a respected collection of induction routines and hypnotherapy principles by this British author.

Hearst, Patricia. Every Secret Thing. N.Y.: Doubleday, 1982.

Hebb, Donald (and others). “The Effects of Isolation upon Attitudes, Motivation, and Thought,” and (with W. Heron) “Effects of Radical Isolation upon Intellectual Function and the Manipulation of Attitudes,” both presented at Fourth Symposium, Military Medicine, Defense Research Board, Canada, 1952.

Heron, William T. Clinical Applications of Suggestion and Hypnosis, Springfield: Charles C. Thomas, 1950; "Hypnosis as a Factor in the Production and Detection of Crime," The British Journal of Medical Hypnotism, 1952, Vol. 3, pp. 15-29; "Hypnosis in Obstetrics (A Psychological Preparation for Childbirth)," in LeCron (ed.) Experimental Hypnosis; (ed) A Handbook of Therapeutic Suggestions, Minneapolis, MN: American Society of Clinical Hypnosis-Education and Research Foundation, 1971.

Heyer, G. Hypnosis and Hypnotherapy. London: W. Daniel Co., 1931. (A British medical hypnotherapy text.)

Hilgard, Ernest R. (with Marquis) Conditioning and Learning, 1940; "Impulsive vs. Realistic Thinking: An Examination of The Distinction Between Primary and Secondary Processes in Thought," Psychological Bulletin, 1962, Vol. 59, pp. 477-488; "Ability to Resist Suggestions Within the Hypnotic State: Responsiveness to Conflicting Communications," Psychological Reports, 1963, Vol. 12, pp. 3-13; Hypnotic Susceptibility. N.Y.: Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 1965; (with L. M. Cooper) "Spontaneous and Suggested Posthypnotic Amnesia," International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 1965, Vol. 13, pp. 261-273; "Lawfulness within Hypnotic Phenomena," in Estabrooks, G. H. (ed.), Hypnosis: Current Problems, 1965; "Hypnosis and Childlikeness," in J.P. Hill (ed.) Minnesota Symposia on Child Psychology, 1971, Vol. 5; "A Critique of Johnson, Maher, and Barber's 'Artifact in the Essence of Hypnosis: An Evaluation of Trance Logic,' with a Recomputation of Their Findings," Journal of Abnormal Psychology, 1972, Vol. 79, pp. 221-233; (with J. R. Hilgard) Hypnosis in the Relief of Pain. Los Altos, Calif.: William Kaufmann, Inc., 1975; Divided Consciousness: Multiple Controls in Human Thought and Action. N.Y.: John Wiley & Sons, 1977 (Expanded ed., 1986); "Divided Consciousness in Hypnosis: The Implications of the Hidden Observer," in E. Fromm & R. E. Shor (eds.), Hypnosis: Developments in Research and New Perspectives; revised. 2nd ed. N.Y.: Aldine, 1979, pp. 145-179; (with E.F. Loftus) "Effective Interrogation of the Eyewitness," International J. of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 1979, Vol. 27, No. 4, pp. 342-57, 1979.

Hilgard, Josephine. (with E.R. Hilgard, and M.F. Newman) "Sequelae to Hypnotic Induction with Special Reference to Earlier Chemical Anesthesia," J. Nervous and Mental Disease, 1961, Vol. 133, pp. 461-478; "Personality and Hypnotizability: Inferences from Case Studies," in E. R. Hilgard, Hypnotic Susceptibility, N.Y.: Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 1965; Personality and Hypnosis: A Study of Imaginative Involvement, Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1970; "Sequelae to Hypnosis, International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 1974, Vol. 22, pp. 281-298; "Imaginative Involvement: Some Characteristics of the Highly Hypnotizable and the Non-Hypnotizable," International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 1974, Vol. 22, pp. 138-156; (with E.R. Hilgard) Hypnosis in the Relief of Pain, Los Altos, CA: Wm. Kaufmann, 1976.

Hillman. Quoted in U.S. News and World Report, June 24, 1991, "Where Emotions Come From" by Erica E. Goode with Joannie M. Schrof and Sarah Burke, p. 62.

Hinkle. Article in Biderman and Zimmer (eds.), The Manipulation of Human Behavior.

Hittleman, Richard. Guide to Yoga Meditation. N.Y.: Bantam, 1969.

Horsley, J.S. "Narco-Analysis," Journal of Mental Science, Vol. 82, pp. 416-422; "Narco-Analysis: A New Technique in Short-cut Psychotherapy: A Comparison with Other Methods," Lancet, 1936, Vol. 1, p. 55; "Pentothal Sodium in Mental Hospital Practice," Brit. M.J., May 9, 1936, Vol. 1, p. 938; "Narco-analysis: A Method of Investigating Normal and Morbid Mentality," M. Press, 1937, Vol. 194, p. 5109; Narco-Analysis. New York & London: Oxford University Press, 1943; Oxford Medical Publications, 1946; "Narcotic Hypnosis: A Critical Discussion of the Relationship Between Hypnosis and Narcosis, and of the Value of These States in Psychological Medicine" in LeCron (ed.) Experimental Hypnosis. N.Y.: Macmillan, 1952.

Howell, Max. "Profile of an Investigative Hypnosis Interview," in Journal of Hypnotism, March 1991, pp. 36-40.

Hubbard, L. Ron. Dianetics. N.Y.: Hermitage Press, Inc., 1950; The Science of Survival, LA: Church of Scientology, 1951.

Hudson, T. R. The Law of Psychic Phenomena. 1892.

Hughes, John C. Hypnosis: The Induction of Conviction. Hollis, N.H.: Transcendental Publications, 1990.

Hull, Clark L. (with B. Huse) "Quantitative Methods of Investigating Waking Suggestion," Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology, 1929, Vol. 24, p. 153-169; "Comparative Suggestibility in the Trance and Waking States," American Journal of Psychology, 1930, Vol. 42, pp. 279-286; "Quantitative Methods of Investigating Hypnotic Suggestion, Part I," Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology, 1930, Vol. 25, pp. 200-223;

"Part II," Ibid., 1931, pp. 390-417; (with Patten, E. F., and Switzer, S. A.) "Does Positive Response to Direct Suggestion as Such Evoke a Generalized Hypersuggestibility?" Journal of General Psychology, 1933, Vol. 8, pp. 52-64; Hypnosis and Suggestibility: An Experimental Approach. N.Y.: Appleton-Century, 1933 (reprint, 1968); "The Concept of the Habit-Family Hierarchy and Maze Learning," Psychological Review, 1934, Vol. 41, pp. 33-54; "Mind, Mechanism, and Adaptive Behavior," Psychological Review, 1937, Vol. 44, pp. 1-32; Principles of Behavior: An Introduction to Behavior Theory. N.Y.: Appleton-Century-Crofts, 1943; Essentials of Behavior. New Haven: Yale University Press, 1951; A Behavior System. New Haven: Yale University Press, 1952; "Psychology of the Scientist: IV. Passages from the 'Idea Books' of Clark L. Hull," Perceptual and Motor Skills, 1962, Vol. 15, pp. 807-882.

Hunt, Morton M. Mental Hospital. N.Y., 1962.

Huxley, Aldous. The Doors of Perception. N.Y.: Harper & Row, 1954; Brave New World Re-Visited. N.Y.: Harper & Row, 1958; Moksha: Writings on Psychedelics and the Visionary Experience (1931-1963) (eds., Michael Horowitz and Cynthia Palmer), N.Y.: Stonehill, 1977.

Aldous Huxley coined the term "expanding consciousness" in The Doors of Perception, wherein he mused on a mescaline experience. From then on, Huxley advocated the use of hallucinogenic drugs. He had a CIA connection through his correspondence with Lewis J. West. Huxley once proposed hypnotizing subjects then giving them LSD, the resulting mental trip to be directed by posthypnotic suggestions. The CIA was interested.

Hyman, Jackie. AP article. "'Betrayal' alerts women to trust instincts, star says." Seattle Post-Intelligencer, Mon., Jan. 3, 1994.

J

Jacobson, E. Progressive Relaxation. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1928, revised ed., 1938; periodic new editions, such as: You Must Relax, 1977.

James, William. "Automatic Writing," Proceedings of the American Society for Psychical Research, 1909, Vol. 1, pp. 548-564. The Principles of Psychology, Volumes I and II. N.Y.: Henry Holt & Co., 1890, 1904. Reprinted by Dover, 1950. The Varieties of Religious Experience. N.Y.: Modern Library, 1902, 1929.

William James, a Harvard professor, wrote the first American psychology text, The Principles of Psychology. It served a generation. (My mother used it at college.) In Chapter 27, James broke the psychological taboo against considering the concept of human will as a brain function. About a fourth of his text discussed hypnotism, covering every hypnotic and posthypnotic phenomenon, including hypnotic amnesia and rehypnotization. James later broke another taboo and wrote The Varieties of Religious Experience, a psychological study of experiential religious phenomena.

Janet, Pierre. L'Automatisme psychologique (Felix Alcan, 1889); Psychological Healing: A Historical and Clinical Study. Vol. I & II. (tr. by Eden and Cedar Paul), N.Y.: Macmillan, 1925; The Mental State of Hystericals, N.Y.: Putnam, 1901; The Major Symptoms of Hysteria, N.Y.: Macmillan, 1907.

Jones, Penn, Jr. Forgive My Grief, Vols I-IV. Volume I: A Critical Review of the Warren Commission Report, 1966; Volume II, A Further Critical Review of the Warren Commission Report, 1967; Volume III, Now the People Know Who Killed Their President and They Are Totally Afraid, 1969 (reissued with photos in 1976); IV: A Further Critical Review of the Warren Commission Report on the Assassination of President John F. Kennedy, 1974.

K

Kahn, David. The Codebreakers. N.Y.: Macmillan, 1967.

Kaiser, Robert Blair. "R.F.K. Must Die!": A History of the Robert Kennedy Assassination and Its Aftermath. N.Y.: E.P. Dutton, 1970.

Katz, Dolores. "Swapping 'Old' Personalities for 'New,'" Detroit Free Press, Sunday, Feb. 11, 1973, Vol. 142-No. 279.

Kelly, Sean F., Ph.D., and Reid J. Kelly, A.C.S.W. Hypnosis: Understanding How It Can Work for You. Menlo Park, CA: Addison-Wesley, 1983, 1985.

Kleinhauz, Morris and Beran, Barbara. "Misuses of Hypnosis: A Medical Emergency and Its Treatment," Int. J. Clin. Exp. Hypnosis, 1981, Vol. 29, pp. 148-161; "Misuse of Hypnosis: A Factor in Psychopathology," American Journal of Clinical Hypnosis, Jan. 1984, Vol. 26, No. 3, pp. 283-288.

Kline, M. V. "Hypnotic Age Regression and Intelligence, J. Genet. Psychol, 1950, Vol. 77, pp. 129-132; (ed.) A Sci- entific Report on "The Search for Bridey Murphy," N.Y.: Julian Press, 1953; Hypodynamic Psychology (ed.) N.Y., 1955; (with Ventur, P., Kransdorff, M.) "A Differential Study of Emotional Attitudes toward Hypnosis with Card 12M of the Thematic Apperception Test," British Journal of Medical Hypnosis, 1956, Vol. 8, pp. 5-16; "The Dynamics of Hypnotically Induced Anti-Social Behavior," J. Psychol, 1958, Vol. 45, pp. 239-245; Freud and Hypnosis: The Interaction of Psychodynamics and Hypnosis, N.Y.: Julian Press, 1958; "The Production of Antisocial Behavior Through Hypnosis: New Clinical Data," International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 1972, Vol. 20, pp. 80-94; "Dangerous Aspects of the Practice of Hypnosis and the Need for Legislative Regulation," Clinical Psychologist, 1976, Vol. 29, No. 2, pp. 3-6—and other publications.

Knight, Bryan M. "The Case Against Restrictive Laws," Journal of Hypnotism, Dec. 1990, Vol. 5, No. 4, pp. 27-30.

Kolb, Lawrence Coleman. Modern Clinical Psychiatry. Philadelphia: W. B. Saunders Company, 1982.

Korotkin, I.I. and Suslova, M.M. "Changes in Conditioned and Unconditioned Reflexes During Suggested States in Hypnosis." In The Central Nervous System and Human Behavior—Translations from the Russian Medical Literature. Bethesda, MD: U.S. Dept. of HEWW, 1959, pp. 653-670.

Kosslyn, Stephen Michael. Ghosts in the Mind's Machine: Creating and Using Images in the Brain. N.Y.: W.W. Norton & Co., 1983.

Kovel, Joel. A Complete Guide to Therapy from Psychoanalysis to Behavior Modification. N.Y.: Pantheon Books, 1976.

Kovnat, Denise Bolger, "Committed to Memory," Rochester Review, Spring 1989, pp. 9-13.

Kroger, William S. (with Freed) Psychosomatic Gynecology: Including Problems of Obstetrical Care, Chicago: Free Press, 1956, reprint by Wilshire, 1962; (with Schneider, A.) "An Electronic Aid for Hypnotic Induction: A Preliminary Report," International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 1959, Vol. 7, pp. 93-98; Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis in Medicine, Dentistry and Psychology. Philadelphia: J.B. Lippincott, 1963, 1977; (with W.D. Fezler) Hypnosis and Behavior Modification: Imagery Conditioning. Philadelphia: Lippincott, 1976; (with R. G. Douce) "Hypnosis in Criminal Investigation," International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 1979, Vol. 27, No. 4, pp. 358-74; (with R.G. Douce) "Forensic Uses of Hypnosis," American J. of Clinical Hypnosis, Vol. 23, No. 2, pp. 86-93.

Kronenwetter, Michael. Covert Action. New York: Franklin Watts, 1991.

Kubie, Lawrence S. "Relation of the Conditioned Reflex to Psychoanalytic Technic." Archives of Neurology and Psychiatry, 1934, Vol. 32, pp. 1137-1142; (with R. Brickner) "A Miniature Psychotic Storm Produced by a Superego Conflict over a Simple Posthypnotic Suggestion," Psychoanal. Quart., 1936, Vol. 5, pp. 467-487; "A Critical Analysis of the Concept of a Repetition Compulsion," Int. J. Psa., 1939, Vol. XX, pp. 390-402; (with Margolin) "A Physiological Method for the Induction of States of Partial Sleep, and Securing Free Association and Early Memories in Such States," Trans. Amer. Neurol. Assoc., 1942, pp. 136-139; "Review of Pavlov and His School, by Y.P. Frolov." Psychoanal. Quart., April 1942, Vol. X, pp. 329-339; "Induced Hypnagogic Reveries in the Recovery of Repressed Data," Bulletin of the Menninger Clinic, Sept.-Nov. 1943, Vol. 7, pp. 6-7, 172-182, reprinted in Rhodes (ed.), Therapy Through Hypnosis with Case Histories; (with S. Margolin) "An Apparatus for the Use of Breath Sounds as a Hypnagogic Stimulus," Amer. J. Psychiat., 1944, Vol. 100, p. 610; (with Margolin) "The Process of Hypnotism and the Nature of the Hypnotic State," Amer. J. Psychiat., 1944, Vol. 100, pp. 611-622; (with Margolin) "The Therapeutic Role of Drugs in the Process of Repression, Dissociation and Synthesis," Psychosomatic Medicine, 1945, Vol. 7, pp. 147-151.

Kuhn, Lesley and Russo, Salvatore (eds). Modern Hypnosis. No. Hollywood, CA: Wilshire Book Co., 1958. This collection of articles includes Rowland's "Will Hypnotized Persons Try to Harm Themselves or Others"; Wells's "Ability to Resist Artificially Induced Dissociation" and "Experiments in the Hypnotic Production of Crime"; and Erickson's "Concerning the Nature and Character of Post-Hypnotic Behavior" and also "Experimental Investigation of the Possible Anti-Social Use of Hypnosis."

Kuper, Andrew, "AT&T's $12 Billion Cellular Dream," Fortune, Dec. 12, 1994, p. 102. (Same info in Microwave News, Nov./Dec. 1994.)

L

Laubach, Frank. Selection in Practicing His Presence Beaumont, TX: The SeedSowers, 1973.

Lausch, Erwin. Manipulation: Dangers and Benefits of Brain Research. N.Y.: The Viking Press, 1972. (Translated from German.) About lobotomy, electroshock, and psycho-drugs.

Lawrence, Jean-Roch, and Perry, Campbell. Hypnosis, Will, and Memory: a Psycho-legal History. N.Y.: The Guilford Press, 1986, 1988.

Lawrence, Jodi. Alpha Brain Waves. N.Y.: Avon Books, 1972.

LeCron, Leslie M. (with Bordeaux, Jean), Hypnotism Today. No. Hollywood, CA: Wilshire, 1947; " A Study of Age Regression Under Hypnosis," in LeCron, (ed.) Experimental Hypnosis: A Symposium of Articles on Research by Many of the World's Leading Authorities. N.Y.: Macmillan, 1952, pp. 155-174; "The Loss During Hypnotic Age Regression of an Established Conditioned Reflex," Psychiat. Quart., 1952, Vol. 26, pp. 657-662; "A Method of Measuring the Depth of Hypnosis," Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 1953, Vol. 1, pp. 4-7; Self Hypnotism, Englewood Cliffs, N.J., 1964; The Complete Guide to Hypnosis, N.Y.: Harper & Row, 1971.

Hypnotism Today is a good little paperback overview of hypnosis (foreword by M. H. Erickson) for lay readers and beginners at hypnotherapy. The Complete Guide to Hypnosis is a later paperback overview, also written for the lay reader but with a reassuringly professional flavor. Experimental Hypnosis contains: Paul C. Young's "Antisocial Uses of Hypnosis"; M. H. Erickson's "Deep Hypnosis and Its Induction"; "Narcotic Hypnosis" by the hypno-analytic pioneer, Stephen J. Horsley; "The Influence of Hypnosis in Somatic Fields of Function," by Paul J. Reiter, and more.

Lee, Martin A. and Schlain, Bruce. Acid Dreams: The CIA, LSD, and the Sixties Rebellion. New York: Grove Press, 1985.

Leuba. "Hypnosis as a Method of Controlling Variables in Psychological Experiments," Am. J. Psychol., 1946, Vol. 59, p. 686.

Levitt, E.E.; Persky, H.; Brady, J.P.; Fitzgerald, J.; and den Breeijen, A. "Evidence for Hypnotically Induced Amnesia as an Analog of Repression," Journal of Nervous and Mental Disease, 1961, Vol. 133, pp. 218-221; (with S. Hershman) "The Clinical Practice of Hypnosis in the United States: A Survey," Paper read at the 14th Int. Congr. Appl. Psychol., Copenhagen, August, 1961; (with S. Hershman) "Clinical Practice of Hypnosis in the United States: A Preliminary Survey," Int. J. Clin. Exp. Hypnosis, 1963, Vol. 11, pp. 55-65; (with T. M. Overley and D. Rubinstein) "The Objectionable Act as a Mechanism for Testing the Coercive Power of the Hypnotic State." American J. of Clinical Hypnosis 1975, Vol. 17, No. 4, pp. 263-66; (with G. Aronoff, C.D. Morgan, T.M. Overley, and M.J. Parrish). "Testing the Coercive Powers of Hypnosis: Committing Objectionable Acts. International J. of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 1975, Vol. 23, No. 1, pp. 59-67. (Levitt's "objectionable acts" used to test coercive powers of hypnosis were the mutilation of a flag or Bible.) "Research Strategies in Evaluating the Coercive Power of Hypnosis," Annals of the New York Academy of Sciences, 1977; "The Use of Hypnosis to "Freshen" the Memory of Witnesses or Victims," Trial, 1981, Vol. 17, No. 4, pp. 56-59, 63.

Lew, Mike. Victims No Longer: Men Recovering from Incest and Other Sexual Child Abuse. N.Y.: Harper & Row, 1990.

Lewis, C.S. The Magician's Nephew. N.Y.: HarperCollins, 1994.

Liebeault, A. A. Du sommeil et des etats analogues consideres surtout au point de vue de l'action moral sur le physique. Paris: V. Masson, 1866. "Anesthesie par suggestion," Journal Magnetisme, 1885, 64-67.

Liegeois. De la Suggestion et du Somnambulisme dans leurs rapports avec la Jurisprudence et la Medicine legale. Paris: 1889.

Lifton, Robert J. "Thought Reform in Western Civilians in Chinese Communist Prisons," Psychiatry, 1956, Vol. 19, p. 173; Thought Reform and the Psychology of Totalism: A Study of "Brainwashing" in China. N.Y.: W.W. Norton, 1961, 1963, 1969; Death in Life, Basic Books, 1968; The Life of the Self, Basic Books, 1976; The Broken Connection. New York: Simon & Schuster, 1979. Indefensible Weapons, Basic Books, 1982; The Nazi Doctors: Medical Killing and the Psychology of Genocide. N. Y.: Basic Books, 1986.

Lindner, Robert M. Rebel Without a Cause. N.Y.: Grove Press, 1944; "The Shared Neurosis: Hypnotist and Subject," Int. J. Clin. Exp. Hypnosis, 1960, Vol. 7, pp. 61-70.

Loftus, Elizabeth. "Leading Questions and the Eyewitness Report," Cognitive Psychology, 1975, Vol. 7, pp. 560-572; (with G. Zanni) "Eyewitness Testimony. The Influence of the Wording of a Question," Bulletin of the Psychonomic Society, 1975, Vol.5, pp. 86-88; Memory: Surprising New Insights into How We Remember and Why We Forget. Menlo Park, CA: Addison-Wesley, 1980.

London, Perry. "Hypnosis in Children: An Experimental Approach," The International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 1962, Vol. 2, pp. 10, 69-91; The Children's Hypnotic Susceptibility Scale, 1963; The Modes and Morals of Psychotherapy, 1964; (with M.Convant and G. C. Davison) "More Hypnosis in the Unhypnotizable: Effects of Hypnosis and Exhortation on Rote Learning," J. Personality Vol. 34, pp. 71-79; "The Induction of Hypnosis," in J. E. Gordon (Ed.) Handbook of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, N.Y.: Macmillan, 1967, pp. 44-79; Foundations of Abnormal Psychology (with David Rosenhan), 1968; (with J. T. Hart and M. Leibovitz) "EEG Alpha Rhythms and Susceptibility to Hypnosis," Nature, 1968, Vol. 219, pp. 71-72, 1968; Behavior Control. N.Y.: Harper & Row, 1969; (with David Rosenhan) Theory and Research in Abnormal Psychology, 1969; (with D. R. Engstrom and J.T. Hart) presented "Increasing Hypnotic Susceptibility by EEG Alpha Training" at American Psychological Association annual meeting, Miami Beach, Sept., 1970; "The End of Ideology in Behavior Modification," appeared in American Psychologist 27: 913-20, 1972; "Social Issues of Behavior Control: Present and Prospective," Lex et Scientia 9:4, pp. 132-38, 1972; "The Future of Psychotherapy" a speech given at the Institute of Society, Ethics and the Life Sciences' Conference on Psychological and Psychotherapeutic Methods of Behavior Control, May 1973, Tarrytown, N.Y (Partial reprint Hastings Center Report, Dec., 1973, later revised as "The Psychotherapy Boom," Psychology Today, pp. 62-68, June 1974; "Legislating the Brain: The Citizen as Patient," on the ethics of behavior control, in The Columbia Forum, Spring 1972, pp. 2-7; "Kidding Around With Hypnosis," International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 1976, Vol. 24, p. 2, 105-121.

Lovell, Stanley, Ph.D. Of Spies and Stratagems. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1963.

Ludwig, Arnold M. "Clinical Features and Diagnosis of Malingering in Military Personnel; Use of Barbiturates as an Aid in Detection," War Med., 1944, Vol. 5, p. 379; "Hypnosis in Fiction," The International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 1963, Vol. XI, No. 2, pp. 71-80; "An Historical Survey of the Early Roots of Mesmerism," International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 1964, Vol. 12, pp. 205-217; (with Lyle, W. H.) "Tension Induction and the Hyperalert Trance," Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology, 1964, Vol. 69, pp. 70-76; "Altered States of Consciousness," Archives of General Psychiatry, 1966, Vol. 26, pp. 225-234; "Altered States of Consciousness," in Trance and Possessions States (Raymond Prince, ed.) Montreal: R. M. Bucke Society, 1968; Ludwig (et. al.) "The Control of Violent Behavior Through Faradic Shock," J. of Nervous and Mental Disease, 1969, Vol. 148, No. 6, pp. 624-31; Ludwig (et. al.) "The Objective Study of a Multiple Personality, Or, Are Four Heads Better Than One?" Archives of General Psychiatry, April, 1972, Vol. 26, p. 298; (with Brandsma, J. M.) "A Case of Multiple Personality: Diagnosis and Therapy," International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 1974, Vol. 22, pp. 216-233.

Ludwig began his career by experimenting on the use of narcohypnosis to uncloak malingering soldiers. His publications over the next thirty years included reviews of hypnosis in fiction and of the early history of mesmerism, studies of tension inductions, of trance by various names in normal social settings, of curing violent behavior by the use of cattle prodding, and of multiple personality. He publicly claimed that criminal hypnosis existed only in fiction, but experimented at one time or another with most of its elements, including drug induction and sophisticated psychoanalytic manipulations of the unconscious. It would be logical to guess that Ludwig was associated with the technology applied in the Operation Often case history.

Luria, A. R. The Nature of Human Conflicts (Or Emotion, Conflict and Will: An Objective Study of Disorganization and Control of Human Behaviour). (Translated from Russian by W. Horsley Gantt) N.Y.: Grove Press, 1932 (Also, New York: Liverright, 1932).

M

Magonet, Philip A. Practical Hypnotism. No. Hollywood, CA: Wilshire Book Co., 1957.

Malko, George. Scientology: The Now Religion. N.Y.: Dell/ Delacorte Press, Delta Book, 1970.

Mander, Jerry. Four Arguments for the Elimination of Television. N.Y.: William Morrow & Company, 1978.

Mandese, Joe. "Setting Minds Against Terrorism." Advertising Age, April 24, 1995.

Marcuse, F. L. "Hypnosis in Dentistry," Amer. J. Orthod. and Oral Surg., 1947, Vol. 33, pp. 3-16; "Anti-social behavior and hypnosis, J. Clin. Exp. Hypn., 1953, Vol. 1, p. 18; Hypnosis: Fact and Fiction, Baltimore, MD: Penguin Books, 1959 (rev. ed., Baltimore, 1966); Hypnosis Throughout the World, Springfield, IL, 1964.

Marks, John D. (with Marchetti, Victor) The CIA and the Cult of Intelligence. N.Y., Dell, 1974. The Search for the Manchurian Candidate. N.Y.: The New York Times Book Co., 1979.

Marks, Robert W. The Story of Hypnotism. New York: Prentice-Hall, 1947.

Marrs, Texe. Project L.U.C.I.D.—The Beast 666 Universal Human Control System. Austin, TX: Living Truth Publishers, 1996.

Martin, David C. Wilderness of Mirrors. New York: Harper & Row, 1980.

Masserman, Jules H. Behavior and Neuroses: An Experimental Psychoanalytic Approach to Psychobiologic Principles. 1943.

Mayer, Dr. med., Ludwig. Das Verbrechen in Hypnose, and seine Aufklarungsmethoden. Berlin: J. F. Lehmanns Verlag, 1937. Also, Die Technik der Hypnose. Munich: J. F. Lehmanns Verlag, 1953. Die Technik der Hypnose includes rebuttal arguments against critics of Dr. Mayer's previous book (on the case of Mrs. E) who insisted in various print sources that hypnotism cannot be abused.

McConnell, James V. "Criminals Can Be Brainwashed Now." Psychology Today, April 1970.

McGill, Ormond. The Encyclopedia of Genuine Stage Hypnotism. Colon, Michigan, Abbott's Magic Novelty Co., 1947; Hypnotism and Mysticism of India; Professional Stage Hypnotism; Instantaneous Hypnosis Techniques; Hypnosis Opinions," Journal of Hypnotism, June 1991.

McLeester, Dick. Welcome to the Magic Theater: A Handbook for Exploring Dreams. Worcester, MA: Saltus Press, 1976.

Meares, A. Hypnography: A Study in the Therapeutic Use of Hypnotic Painting. Springfield, IL: Charles C. Thomas, 1957; A System of Medical Hypnosis, Philadelphia: Saunders, 1960; "An Evaluation of the Dangers of Medical Hypnosis," Amer. J. clin. Hypn., 1961, Vol. 4, pp. 90-97.

Meerloo, Joost A. M. "Pavlovian Strategy as a Weapon of Menticide," Amer. J. Psychiat., 1954, Vol. 110, pp. 173-196; "Medication into Submission; the Danger of Therapeutic Coercion," J. Nerv. Ment. Dis., 1955, Vol. 122, pp. 353-360; The Rape of the Mind: The Psychology of Thought Control, Menticide, and Brainwashing. N.Y.: Grosset & Dunlap, 1956.

Miller, Tim. The Assassination Please Almanac. Chicago: Henry Regnery Co., 1977.

Moll, A. Der Hypnotismus, 1889. Translated from fourth German edition by A. F. Hopkirk as Hypnotism, N.Y.: Chas. Scribner's Sons, 1898, reprint N.Y.: Walter Scott, 1904; Reprint titled The Study of Hypnosis: Historical, Clinical, and Experimental Research in the Techniques of Hypnotic Induction, N.Y.: Julian Press, 1958. Reprint titled Hypnotism, N.Y.: Da Capo Press, 1982.

Montgomery, Geoffrey. "Molecules of Memory," Discover, Dec., 1989, pp. 46-55.

Moss, Aaron A. "Hypnodontics" in LeCron (ed) Experimental Hypnosis.

Moss, C. Scott. "Therapeutic Suggestion and Autosuggestion, J.Clin.Exp.Hypnosis, 1958, Vol. 6, pp.109-115; "Present Status of Psychological Research and Training in Hypnosis: A Developing Professional Problem," Amer. Psychol., 1962, Vol. 17, pp. 542-549; "Brief Crisis-Oriented Hypnotherapy," in J. Gordon (ed) Handbook of Hypnotherapy, N.Y.: Macmillan, 1965; Hypnosis in Perspective. N.Y.: Macmillan, 1965.

Myers. Exploring Psychology, 1990.

N

Naeslund, Robert. When the State Rapes. (You may contact the author, Robert Naeslund, at Slipgaten 12, 117-39, Stockholm, Sweden).

Nelson, Robert A. Hellstromism. (Oldtime mentalist stage performers' catalog published by Nelson Enterprises, Columbus, Ohio).

Noel, Barbara. You Must Be Dreaming. Poseidon Press.

O

Orne, Martin T. "The Mechanisms of Hypnotic Age Regression: An Experimental Study," Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology, 1951, Vol. 46, pp. 213-225; "The Nature of Hypnosis: Artifact and Essence," Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology, 1959, Vol. 58, pp. 277-299; "The Potential Uses of Hypnosis in Interrogation," in Biderman and Zimmer (eds), The Manipulation of Human Behavior, 1961; (with O'Connell, D.N.) "Bioelectric Correlates of Hypnosis: An Experimental Reevaluation," J. of Psychiatric Research, 1962, Vol. 1, pp. 201-213; "Implications for Psychotherapy Derived from Current Research on the Nature of Hypnosis," Amer. J. Psychiat., 1962, Vol. 118, pp. 1097-1103; "Hypnotically Induced Hallucinations," In L. J. West (Ed.) Hallucinations. N.Y.: Grune and Stratton, 1962; "Antisocial Behavior and Hypnosis: Problems of Control and Validation in Empirical Studies," in Estabrooks (ed.) Hypnosis: Current Problems. N.Y.: Harper & Row, 1962, pp. 137-192; Undesirable Effects of Hypnosis: The Determinants and Management," International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 1965, Vol. 13, pp. 226-237; (with F. J. Evans) "Social Control in the Psychological Experiment: Antisocial Behavior and Hypnosis," J. of Personality and Social Psychology 1965, Vol. 1, No. 3, pp. 189-200; "The Use and Misuse of Hypnosis in Court," "Can a Hypnotized Subject Be Compelled to Carry out Otherwise Unacceptable Behavior?" The Int. J. Clin. Exp. Hypnosis, 1972, Vol. 20, pp. 101-117; "The Use and Misuse of Hypnosis in Court," Int. J. Clin. Exp. Hypnosis, 1979, Vol. 24, pp. 311-341; amicus brief to U.S. Supreme Court in case of Quaglino v. The People of the State of California, 1978

Ornstein, Robert E. (with Naranjo, C.) On the Psychology of Meditation. N.Y.: Viking, 1971; The Psychology of Consciousness. San Francisco: Freeman, 1972 (2nd ed. N.Y.: Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 1977); The Nature of Human Consciousness. N.Y.: Viking, 1973; (with Richard F. Thompson) The Amazing Brain. Boston: Houghton Mifflin Co., 1984.

Oswold, Ian. Sleep. Baltimore, MD: Penguin Books, 1966.

P

Paivio, A. "Imagery and Language," in Segal, S.J. (ed.) Imagery: Current Cognitive Approaches. N.Y.: Academic Press; Imagery and Verbal Processes. N.Y.: Holt, Rinehart and Winston, 1971; "Imagery and Long-term Memory," in Kennedy, A. and Wilkes, A. (eds) Studies in Long Term Memory: London: Wiley; "Dual Coding: Theoretical Issues and Empirical Evidence," in Scandura, J.M. and Brainerd, C.J. (eds) Structural/Process Models of Complex Human Behavior. Leiden: Nordhoff.

Pardell, S. S. "Psychology of the Hypnotist," Psychiat. Quart., 1950, Vol. 24, pp. 483-491.

Pavlov, I.P. Conditioned Reflexes. London: Oxford Press, 1927 (reprint N.Y., 1960); Lectures on Conditioned Reflexes. (Tr. by W. Horsley Gantt): Vol I. The Higher Nervous Activity (Behaviour) of Animals, London: Lawrence & Wishart, 1928; and Lectures on Conditioned Reflexes, Vol II: Conditioned Reflexes and Psychiatry, Vol. II, N.Y.: International Publishers, 1941; Experimental Psychology: N.Y., Philosophical Library, 1957.

Perry, C. W. "An Investigation of the Relationship between Proneness to Fantasy and Susceptibility to Hypnosis." Unpublished doctoral dissertation, University of Sydney, Australia, 1965; "The Relation of Some Aspects of Imagery and Fantasy to Hypnotic Susceptibility," Journal of Abnormal Psychology, 1970, Vol. 76, pp. 279-287; (with F.J. Evans, D.N. O'Connell, M.T. Orne, and Emily C. Orne) Behavioral Response to Verbal Stimuli Administered and Tested During REM Sleep: A Further Investigation, Philadelphia, PA: Institute of the Pennsylvania Hospital, 1972; "Variables Influencing the Posthypnotic Persistence of an Uncancelled Hypnotic Suggestion," in W. E. Edmonston, Jr. (ed.), Conceptual and Investigative Approaches to Hypnosis and Hypnotic Phenomena; "Hypnotic Coercion and Compliance to It: A review of Evidence Presented in a Legal Case," International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 1979, Vol. 3, No. 27, pp. 187-218. Also see Lawrence (and Perry).

Pettinati, Helen M. (ed.) Hypnosis and Memory. Guilford Press, 1988. This book was published by Lawrence and Perry's publisher as part of the Guilford Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis Series (which Pettinati coedits). I have not read it. According to the advertising, it is "directly questioning the value of hypnosis" in a legal setting. The ad also mentions amnesia:

> No volume on hypnosis and memory can be complete without a discussion of the use of hypnosis to aid forgetting (posthypnotic amnesia)... Understanding the reversal of amnesia in laboratory studies [is] reviewed in the book's third section...

The publisher also claims that this book covers hypnotherapy and "narcosynthesis," and describes it as "an indispensable reference for investigators...a source of pertinent information for law enforcement and legal professionals." Having carefully read the publisher's other offering in this field (by Lawrence and Perry), I am skeptical.

Phillips, Mark E. Various brief self-published items. Phillips works hard to get the word out that he is an "MK-ULTRA Abuses Investigator" for the "SKBI Research Group." He urges past mind-control victims to contact him. I advise you to avoid him and his organization. If what Phillips fears has even a grain of truth, networking would be a dumb thing to do. Including, or especially, with him.

Pincher, Chapman, "Typist in Trance Against Her Will," Daily Express, Nov. 13, 1959.

Pines, Maya. The Brain Changers: Scientists and the New Mind Control. N.Y.: Signet (New American Library), 1973

Platanow, K.I. "On the Objective Proof of the Experimental Personality Age Regression," J. Gen. Psychol., 1933, Vol. 9, pp. 190-209.

Polgar, F. J. The Story of a Hypnotist. N. Y.: Hermitage House, 1951.

Pope, Kenneth S.; Keith-Spiegel, Patricia; Tabachnick, Barbara G. "Sexual Attraction to Clients: The Human Therapist and the (Sometimes) Inhuman Training System," American Psychologist, Vol. 41, pp. 147-158.

Powers, Melvin. Advanced Techniques of Hypnosis. No. Hollywood: Wilshire, 1953; Hypnotism Revealed: The Powers Technique of Hypnotizing and Self-Hypnosis. Hollywood: Wilshire, 1949, 1969.

Powers also wrote: Self-Hypnosis, Dynamic Thinking, Hypnotism Revealed, The Science of Hypnosis, Advanced Techniques of Hypnosis, A Practical Guide to Self-Hypnosis, A Practical Guide to Better Concentration. He wrote this revealing series of how-to-hypnotize books for the mass market in the 50s; his Wilshire Book Company still sells them by mailorder.

R

Rachman, S. and Teasdale, J. Aversion Therapy and Behaviour Disorders: An Analysis. Coral Gables, FL: U. of Miami Press, 1969.

Rauchman, Steven. "The Invisible Scars of Torture." Canadian Doctor, Nov/Dec, 1985, pp. 29-34.

Reilly, S. W. Stage Hypnotism. (Superficial information, scripts for short hypnosis acts by stage magicians.); Hellstromism. (On mentalist acts, using highly-developed ability to observe.)

Reiser, M. "Hypnosis as an Aid in a Homicide Investigation," American J. of Clinical Hypnosis, 1974, Vol. 17, No. 2, pp. 84-87; "Hypnosis as a Tool in Criminal Investigation," Police Chief, 1976, Vol. 43, No. 11, pp. 36, 39-40; "Hypnosis and Its Uses in Law Enforcement, Police J., 1978, Vol. 5, No. 1, pp. 24-33; Handbook of Investigative Hypnosis, L.A., Calif.: Lehi Pub. Co., 1980; (with M. Nielson) "Investigative Hypnosis: A Developing Specialty, American J. of Clinical Hypnosis, 1980, Vol. 23, No. 2, pp. 75-77.

Reiter, P. J. Antisocial or Criminal Acts of Hypnosis: A Case Study. Springfield, IL: Charles C. Thomas, 1958; "The Influence of Hypnosis on Somatic Fields of Function, " in LeCron (ed) Experimental Hypnosis: A Symposium of Articles on Research by Many of the World's Leading Authorities. N.Y.: Macmillan, 1952.

Rhodes, Raphael H. (ed.). Therapy Through Hypnosis with Case Histories. No. Hollywood, CA: Wilshire Book Co., 1952.

Rolin, Jean. Police Drugs. N.Y.: Philosophical Library, 1956.

Rothschild, David, et. al. "Regressive Shock Therapy in Schizophrenia," Diseases of the Nervous System, 1951, Vol. 11, pp. 147-150.

Rowland, L. W. "Will Hypnotized Persons Try to Harm Themselves or Others?" J. Abnorm. & Social Psychol, 1939, Vol. 34, pp. 114-117. Reprinted in L. Kuhn & S. Russo (eds.), Modern Hypnosis, North Hollywood, CA: Hal Leighton, 1958.

Ruckman, Peter. Black Is Beautiful. Pensacola, FL: Bible Believer's Press, 1995.

S

Salter, Andrew. "Three Techniques of Autohypnosis." Journal of General Psychology, 1941, Vol. 24, pp. 423-438; What Is Hypnosis? Studies in Auto and Hetero Conditioning. N.Y.: Richard R. Smith, 1944; London: Athenaeum Press, 1950, N.Y., 1965, 1972; The Case Against Psychoanalysis. N.Y.: Holt, 1952; Conditioned Reflex Therapy: The Direct Approach to the Reconstruction of Personality. N.Y.: Creative Age Press, 1949, 2nd ed. Capricorn Books, 1961; (with Joseph Wolpe and L.J. Reyna) The Conditioning Therapies, N.Y.: Holt, Rinehart and Winston, Inc., 1964.

Sargant, William. (with R. Fraser) "Inducing Hypnosis by Hyperventilation," Brit. J. Med., 1935, Vol. 1, p. 378; Battle for the Mind: A Physiology of Conversion and Brain-Washing. N.Y.: Doubleday, 1957 (reprints Harper and Row, 1971, and Westport, CT: Greenwood Press, 1975); The Unquiet Mind: The Autobiography of a Physician in Psychological Medicine. London: William Heinemann, Ltd., 1967; (with E. Slater) Introduction to Physical Methods of Treatment in Psychiatry. Churchill and Livingston, 1973; The Mind Possessed: A Physiology of Possession, Mysticism and Faith Healing, N.Y.: J. B. Lippincott Co., 1974.

Schacter, Daniel L., "Multiple Forms of Memory in Humans and Animals," in Weinberger, McGaugh, Lynch (eds.), Memory Systems of the Brain, N.Y.: Guilford Press, 1985. (In Ch. 20, he describes the independent memory systems of left and right brains, and muscle memory.)

Scheflin, Alan W. and Opton, Edward, M., Jr. The Mind Manipulators. N.Y.: Grosset & Dunlap, 1978. Also, New York and London: Paddington Press, Ltd.

Schilder, P. F., and Kauders, O. Hypnosis. Translated from German by S. Rothenberg. N.Y.: Nervous and Mental Disease Publishing Co. Monograph Series, No. 46, 1927. Reprint titled The Nature of Hypnosis. (Tr. by Gerda Corvin) N.Y.: International Universities Press, 1956; Excerpts reprinted in the Journal of Hypnotism. For example, Chapter 11, "The Technique of Hypnosis," Dec. 1990, pp. 31-36; Schilder (no coauthor), Psychotherapy. N.Y.: W.W. Norton, 1938.

Schorr, Daniel. Clearing the Air. Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1977.

Schrag, Peter. Mind Control. N.Y.: Pantheon Books, 1978.

Schreiber, Flora Rheta. Sybil. N.Y.: Warner Paperback Library, 1973.

Schrenck-Notzing, A.N. The Use of Hypnosis in Psychopathia Sexualis. N.Y.: The Julian Press, 1956.

Schultz, J. H. Die seelische Krankenbehandlung. Stuttgart, 1952.

Schwartz, B. E., Bickford, R. G., and Rasmussen, W. C. "Hypnotic Phenomena, Including Hypnotically Activated Seizures, Studied with the Electroencephalogram." Journal of Nervous and Mental Disease, 1955, Vol. 122, pp. 564-574.

Sextus, Carl. Hypnotism: A Correct Guide to the Science and How Subjects Are Influenced, 1893. Reprint: No. Hollywood, CA: Wilshire Book Company, 1957.

Simpson, Christopher. Science of Coercion. Oxford University Press, 1994.

Skinner, B. F. Walden Two. N.Y.: Macmillan., 1948; Science and Human Behavior. N.Y.: Macmillan, 1953; "Freedom and the Control of Men," The American Scholar Winter 1955-56, Vol. 25, pp. 47-65; Beyond Freedom and Dignity. N.Y.: Bantam/Knopf, 1971; About Behaviorism. N.Y.: Alfred A. Knopf, 1974.

Spanos, N. P. and John F. Chaves (eds), Hypnosis: The Cognitive-Behavioral Perspective. Prometheus Books, 1989.

Spiegel, Herbert, M.D. (with Shor, J., and Fishman, S.) "An Hypnotic Ablation Technique for the Study of Personality Development," Psychosomatic Medicine, Vol. 7, p. 273; "Hypnosis and Evidence: Help or Hindrance?" Annals of N.Y. Academy of Science, Vol. 347, pp. 73-85. Spiegel also wrote an Introduction to Bain's book, The Control of Candy Jones.

Stephenson, Sir William. A Man Called Intrepid.

Stine, G. Harry. The Silicon Gods. N.Y.: Dell, 1984.

Stover, Eric and Nightingale, Elena O., M.D. (eds). The Breaking of Bodies and Minds: Torture, Psychiatric Abuse, and the Health Professions. (American Association for the Advancement of Science) N.Y.: W. H. Freeman and Co., 1985.

Suedfeld, Peter. "The Benefits of Boredom: Sensory Deprivation Reconsidered." American Scientist, 1975, Vol. 63, pp. 60-69.

T

Tardieu, Etudes medico-legales sur les attentats aux moeurs. Paris, 1878.

Tart, Charles T., "Types of Hypnotic Dreams and Their Relation to Hypnotic Depth," Journal of Abnormal Psychology, 1960, Vol. 71, pp. 377-382; (with Suzanne Troffer) "Experimenter Bias in Hypnotist Performance," Science, 1964, Vol. 145, pp. 1330-331; "Psychedelic Experiences Associated with a Novel Hypnotic Procedure, Mutual Hypnosis," American Journal of Clinical Hypnosis, 1967, Vol. 10, pp. 65-78, reprinted in Tart (editor) Altered States of Consciousness: A Book of Readings. Garden City, N.Y.: Doubleday and Co., 1969, reprint 1990, Harper, San Francisco; "Three Studies of EEG Alpha Feedback," Biofeedback Society Proceedings, Santa Monica, 1969, Part III, pp. 14-19; "Waking from Sleep at a Preselected Time," Journal of the American Society of Psychosomatic Dentistry and Medicine, 1970, Vol. 17, pp. 3-16; "Measuring the Depth of an Altered State of Consciousness, with Particular Reference to Self-Report Scales of Hypnotic Depth," 1970; "Transpersonal Potentialities of Deep Hypnosis," Journal of Transpersonal Psychology, 1970, Vol. 2, p. 33; (with Lois Dick) "Conscious Control of Dreaming: I. The Posthypnotic Dream," Journal of Abnormal Psychology, 1970, Vol. 76, pp. 304-315; Waking Up. Boston, MA: Shambhala, 1987.

Tebbetts, Charles. Miracles on Demand: Radical Short-term Hypnotherapy. Edmonds, WA: Hypnotism Training Institute of Washington, 1985; Self Hypnosis and Other Mind Expanding Techniques, Edmonds, WA: Tebbetts Hypnotism Training Institute, 1989.

Teitlebaum, Myron. "Admissibility of Hypnotically Adduced Evidence and the Arthur Nebb Case," St. Louis Law J., 1963, Vol. 8, pp. 205-214; "Personal Injury Law and Hypnotism," Medical Trial Technique Quarterly, 1963, pp. 95-101; Hypnosis Induction Technics. Springfield, IL: Charles C. Thomas, 1965.

Thigpen, Corbett H., M.D. and Cleckley, Hervey M., M.D. The Three Faces of Eve. N.Y.: McGraw-Hill Book Co., 1957; "Safeguards Against Suggestiveness: A Means for Admissibility of Hypno-Induced Testimony," Washington and Lee Law Rev., Vol. 38, pp. 197-212..

Thoinot, L. Medicolegal Aspects of Moral Offenses. (tr. by A.W. Weysse). Philadelphia: F. A. Davis, 1919.

Thomas, Gordon. Journey into Madness: The True Story of Secret CIA Mind Control and Medical Abuse. N.Y.: Bantam Books, 1989, 1990.

Tourette, Gilles de la. L'Hypnotisme et les etats analogues au point de vue medico-legale. Paris, 1887.

U

Udolf, Roy. (with A. Cohn) The Criminal Justice System and Its Psychology. N.Y.: Van Nostrand Reinhold, 1979; Handbook of Hypnosis for Professionals. N.Y.: Van Nostrand Reinhold Co.; Forensic Hypnosis: Psychological and Legal Aspects. Lexington, MA: D.C. Heath & Co., 1983.

United States documents...

I quoted government documents excerpted in Bain, Bowart, Collins, John Marks, Lee and Schlain, Scheflin and Opton, etc. Lee and Schlain have an especially clear listing of these sources (pp. 328-329) Typical government sources were:

Supplemental Detailed Staff Reports of Foreign and Military Intelligence, Book IV: Final Report of the Select Committee to Study Governmental Operations with Respect to Intelligence Activities, United States Senate (1976) [Church Committee Report]. Scheflin and Opton say it "contains an excellent history of the CIA and other valuable reports."

Biomedical and Behavioral Research, 1975: Joint Hearings before the Subcommittee on Health of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare and the Subcommittee on Administrative Practice and Procedure of the Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate (1976). Scheflin and Opton say it "contains hundreds of pages of CIA mind-control documents as well as a wealth of other source material."

V

Valenstein, Elliot S. Brain Control: A Critical Examination of Brain Stimulation and Psychosurgery. N.Y.: John Wiley & Sons, 1973.

Van Pelt, S. J. Hypnotism and the Power Within. Skeffington, London (N.Y., Wehman Bros.), 1950; Secrets of Hypnotism. No. Hollywood, CA: Wilshire Book Company, 1958; Hypnotic Suggestion (Wright, Bristol); "The Control of Heart Rate by Hypnotic Suggestion," LeCron (ed.) Experimental Hypnosis.

Verdier, Paul A. Brainwashing and the Cults: An Expose on Capturing the Human Mind. No. Hollywood, CA: Wilshire Book Co., 1977.

Volgyesi, Ferenc A. Hypnosetherapie and psychosomatische Probleme. Stuttgart, 1950.

Voluntaryist, The. Ed., Carl Watner. PO Box 1275, Gramling, SC 29348.

Von Schrenck. "The Medico-forensic Aspect of Suggestion," Archiv fur Criminal-Anthropologie und Criminalistik, August 1900.

W

Warrington, E. K. and Weiskrantz, L. "Amnesia: A Disconnection Syndrome?" Neuropsychologia, 1982, Vol. 20, pp. 233-248.

Watkins, J. G. "Antisocial Compulsions Induced under Hypnotic Trance," Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology, 1939, Vol. 34, pp. 114-117; "A Case of Hypnotic Trance Induced in a Resistant Subject in Spite of Active Opposition," Brit. J. Med. Hypnotism, 1941, Vol. 2, pp. 26-31; "Antisocial Compulsions Induced under Hypnotic Trance," Journal of Abnormal & Social Psychology, 1947, Vol. 42, pp. 256-259; "Projective Hypnoanalysis" in Le Cron (ed) Experimental Hypnosis, N.Y.: Macmillan, 1948; The Hypnotherapy of War Neuroses, N.Y.: Ronald Press, 1949; "Case of Hypnotic Trance Induced in a Resistant Subject in Spite of Active Opposition," Brit. J. Med. Hypnotism, 1951, Vol. 2, pp. 26-31; "Trance and Transference," Journal Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 1954, Vol. 2, pp. 284-291; "Symposium on Posthypnotic Amnesia: Discussion," Int. J. Clin. Exp. Hypn., 1966, Vol. 14, pp. 139-149; "The Affect Bridge," International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 1971, Vol. 19, pp. 21-27; "Antisocial Behavior under Hypnosis; Possible or Impossible?" Int. J. Clin. Exp. Hypnosis, 1972, Vol. 20, pp. 95-100; "Hypnotic Coercion as Perceptually Determined," in E. Goffman (Chm.), "Can a Person Be Coerced through the Use of Hypnosis?" Symposium presented at the 28th annual meeting of the Society for Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, Philadelphia, June 1976.

Watson, Peter. War on the Mind: The Military Uses and Abuses of Psychology. N.Y.: Basic Books, 1978.

Weinstein, Harvey. A Father, A Son, and the CIA. This was first a hardback published by James Lorimer and Co., Canada, 1988. Then it was reprinted as a paperback: Goodread Autobiographies, Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1990, Formac Publishing Co. A revised, retitled edition, was published in hardcover: Psychiatry and the CIA: Victims of Mind Control in Washington, D.C., by the American Psychiatric Press, Inc., 1990.

Wells, W. Raymond. "Experiments in Waking Hypnosis for Instructional Purposes," Journal of Abnormal Psychology and Social Psychology, 1923-1924; "Hypnotizability versus Suggestibility, Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology, 1931, Vol. 25, pp. 436-449; "Ability to Resist Artificially Induced Dissociation," J. of Abnormal and Social Psychology, 1940, Vol. 35, pp. 261-272; "The Extent and Duration of Posthypnotic Amnesia," Journal of Psychology, 1940, Vol. 9, pp. 137-151; "Experiments in the Hypnotic Production of Crime," J. of Psychology, 1941, Vol. 11, pp. 63-102; "The Hypnotic Treatment of the Major Symptoms of Hysteria: A Case Study," J. Psychol., 1944, Vol. 17, p. 269; "Expectancy Versus Performance in Hypnosis," J. Gen. Psychol., 1946, Vol. 35, pp. 99-119.

West, Louis J. (with Niell, K.C. and Hardy, J.D.), "The effects of Hypnotic Suggestion on Pain Perception and Galvanic Skin Response," Archives of Neurol. Psychiat., 1951,Vol. 69, pp. 549-560; Report No. 4, U.S. Airforce Prisoners of the Chinese Communists. Group for the Advancement of Psychiatry, N.Y., 1957, pp. 270-84; (ed.) Hallucinations (AAAS symposium on hallucinations, December 1958); "Psychophysiology of Hypnosis," Journal of the American Medical Association, 1960, Vol. 172, pp. 672-675; "Psychiatry, 'Brainwashing' and the American Character," The American Journal of Psychiatry, 1964, Vol. 120, pp. 842-509; (with G. H. Deckert) "Dangers of Hypnosis," J. American Medical Association, 1965, Vol. 192, pp. 9-12.

White, R. W., "Two Types of Hypnotic Trance and Their Personality Correlates," J. Psychol., 1936, Vol. 3, pp. 279-289; "Prediction of Hypnotic Susceptibility from a Knowledge of Subject's Attitudes," J. Psychol., 1937, Vol. 3, pp. 265-277; (with Fox, G.F. and Harris, W.W.) "Hyperamnesia for Recently Learned Material," J. Abnorm. Soc. Psychol., 1940, Vol. 35, pp. 88-103; "A Preface to the Theory of Hypnotism," The Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology, Oct. 1941, Vol. 4, pp. 36, 477-505; "An Analysis of Motivation in Hypnosis," J. Gen. Psychol., 1941, Vol. 24, p. 145; (with Shevach, B.J.) "Hypnosis and the Concept of Dissociation," Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology, July, 1942, Vol. 37, p. 3, 309-328.

Wiener, Norbert. Cybernetics: Or Control and Communication in the Animal and the Machine. N.Y.: John Wiley and Sons, 1948. Reprint: Cybernetics, N.Y.: The M.I.T. Press, 1961. Also, The Human Use of Human Beings. Boston: Houghton Mifflin, 1950.

Williams, Glanville. *Criminal Law: The General Part. (*Second ed.) London: Stevens and Sons, 1961.

Williams, Griffith. "Hypnosis in Perspective," in L. M. LeCron (ed.) Experimental Hypnosis: A Symposium of Research. N.Y.: Macmillan, 1952, pp. 4-21; "Difficulty in Dehypnotizing," J. Clin. Exp. Hypnosis, 1953, Vol. 1, pp. 3-12; "Highway Hypnosis: An Hypothesis," The International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 1963, Vol. 11, pp. 143-151.

Winn, Ralph B. Scientific Hypnotism: An Introductory Survey of Theory and Practice. Boston: Christopher, 1939. Reprinted Hollywood, CA: Wilshire Book Co., 1956.

Wolberg, L.R. "A Mechanism of Hysteria Elucidated During Hypnosis, Psychoanalytic Quarterly, 1945, Vol. 14; Hypnoanalysis. N.Y.: Grune and Stratton, 1945, (second ed.) 1964; "Hypnotic Experiments in Psychosomatic Medicine," Psychosom. Med. 1947, Vol. 9, p. 337; Vol I: Medical Hypnosis, Vol. II: The Principles of Hypnotherapy. N.Y.: Grune and Stratton, 1948; (with M.V. Kline) The Nature of Hypnosis: Contemporary Theoretical Approaches. N.Y., 1962; "The Efficacy of Suggestion in Clinical Situations" in Estabrooks (ed), Hypnosis: Current Problems.

Wortman, Loftus, and Marshall. Psychology, 1981.

Wright, Erik M. "Hypnosis Research and Rehabilitation Problems" in Estabrooks (ed), Hypnosis: Current Problems (N.Y.: Harper and Row, 1962); "Symposium on Posthypnotic Amnesia: Discussion," International Journal of Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis, 1966, Vol. 14, pp. 135-138.

Y

Young, P.C., "An Experimental Study of Mental and Physical Functions in the Normal and Hypnotic States," Amer. J. Psychol., 1925, Vol. 36, pp. 214-232; "An Experimental Study of Mental and Physical Functions in the Normal and Hypnotic States: Additional Results, Amer. J. Psychol, 1926, Vol. 37, pp. 345-356; "Is Rapport an Essential of Hypnosis?" Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology, 1927, Vol. XXII, pp. 130-139; "The Nature of Hypnosis: As Indicated by the Presence or Absence of Post-Hypnotic Amnesia and Rapport," J. Abnorm. Soc. Psychol., 1928, Vol. 22, No. 4, pp. 372-382; "Hypnotic Regression—Fact or Artifact?" Journal of Abnormal and Social Psychology, 1940; "Experimental Hypnotism: A Review," Psych. Bull., 1941, Vol. 38, pp. 92-104; "Antisocial Uses of Hypnosis," in L. M. LeCron (ed.), Experimental Hypnosis. N.Y.: Macmillan, 1952, 1954, 1956.

Z

Zeig, Jeffrey K., Teaching Seminar with Milton H. Erickson, M.D.. N.Y.: Brunner/Mazel, 1980.

A - Corpus Callosum
B - Thalamus
C - Midbrain
D - Cerebellum
E - Brain Stem
F - Medulla
G - Pons
H - Pituitary
I - Hypothalamus

Relevant Chronology:

1493 to Present

1493 Paracelsus is born. He is the first person who scientifically describes and defines unethical hypnosis. He calls the phenomena of hypnotism magic (a word then used to describe any incomprehensible science). He calls hypnosis, used benevolently for medical purposes white magic. Hypnotism used harmfully, for exploitative control, he calls black magic.

1679 Guillaume Maxwell, a Scot, writes De Medicina Magnetica, describing a universal force, supposedly magnetic, transmissible, and useful for healing (an idea later adopted by Mesmer.)

1775 Mesmer demonstrates the power of suggestion to a German scientific commission, tells them anybody can do it.

1780 Marquis Tissart du Rouvres, the three de Puysegur brothers, General LaFayette, and other French military officers do mesmeric experiments with troops. Many French posts have officer-magnetists on staff.

1784 The French King authorizes a Commission to examine Mesmer's scientific claims for animal magnetism. The Committee is chaired by America's Dr. Benjamin Franklin. It reports the phenomena are caused by imagination rather than a mysterious invisible fluid. The Committee delivers a Secret Addendum to the report to the King. It states that mesmerism can be used for unethical purposes, such as seduction.

1784 Puysegur describes the spontaneous posthypnotic amnesia associated with deepest trance. He names that state artificial somnambulism, because subjects, if so instructed, can walk about with open eyes, without awaking from trance.

1787 Posthypnotic suggestions are described.

1790 Luys creates first mechanical induction devices: metronome, and hypnodisc with spinning light(s) on side.

1807 Puysegur describes transfer of rapport, when control of a somnambulist is shifted from one hypnotist to another by verbal suggestion.

1815 Franz Anton Mesmer dies. He leaves many disciples with various opinions and induction techniques. They spread mesmerism all over the world, some as scientific hypnosis, some as spiritualism. Some mesmerists say the cures are from God. Some use seances to call up spirits of the dead. One disciple founds chiropracty. Mesmer's efforts to find a physiological explanation for hypnotic phenomena caused scholars to shift from considering hypnosis as magic or religion to seeking scientific understanding of it. Thus, Mesmer began dynamic (unconscious) psychiatry.

1815 Abbe Faria comes to Paris from India, gives public demonstrations of hypnosis, hypnotizes as many as 5,000 at a time. He, like Mesmer's disciple Puysegur, proves Mesmer's props are not necessary for induction. He says that both the induction and the cures arise from expectancy and cooperation in the patient.

1820 Dr. Alexandre Bertrand publishes treatise saying trance makes subject preternaturally sensitive to suggestions of the mesmerist, both spoken and unspoken.

1821 First recorded operations under hypnotic anesthesia done by Recamier. First tooth extraction under hypnosis.

1823 First childbirth under formal hypnosis.

1825 The word hypnosis (from Greek, "sleep") is first used. Hypnotic anesthesia, analgesia, positive and negative hallucinations, catalepsy, regression, posthypnotic suggestion, and some physiological effects on the body caused by suggestion are all identified and experimented with.

1837 John Elliotson, an English doctor, begins lifelong campaign for scientific study and medical use of hypnotism.

1841 An English doctor in India, James Esdaile, uses hours of mesmeric stroking and passes in a semi-darkened room, combined with "sleep" suggestions to induce trances deep enough for major surgeries, hypnosis being the only available anesthetic. He experiments on a prisoner: he induces deep trance, automatism, then amnesia, and makes him an unknowing hypnoprogrammed subject.

1843 James Braid, a Scottish surgeon, sees mesmerism demonstrated, and begins a lifelong study of it. He pioneers practical medical applications of hypnosis. He theorizes that it is a type of special suggestibility. He discusses disguised induction—trance (hypnosis) deliberately caused in a susceptible subject without a formal or pre-announced induction.

1846 Chemical anesthesia begins. Surgeons lose interest in Esdaile's hypnotic anesthesia. Hypnotists begin to experiment with drug-induced trances.

1858 Dr. Azam, of Bordeaux, attempts to create an artificial multiple personality by means of hypnosis. (Hammerschlag, p. 14)

1860s Charcot's Salpetriere group competes with Liebeault and Bernheim's Nancy School. Charcot, et. al., accept hypnosis as worthy of scientific analysis, but insist that criminal hypnosis is impossible (though he and his staff exploit, display, and scorn somnambulist women). The Nancy School believes criminal hypnosis is possible because suggested amnesia is possible.

1866 Dr. Liebeault defines suggestion and suggestibility. He analyzes the depth stages of trance, classifying the next-to-deepest stage by its characteristic mild amnesia, the deepest stage by the spontaneous appearance of complete amnesia.

1879 Wilhelm Wundt opens the first psychological laboratory at Leipzig, Germany. That event is considered to begin the new science of psychology.

1880 Multiple personality is a hot topic among hypnosis researchers, writers, and the public. Hypnotists know how to artificially create the condition.

1882 Conrad and Guthzeit synthesize barbital (5,5-diethyl-barbituric acid), the first barbiturate used for medical purposes.

1882 Parapsychology begins as a science with the founding of the Society for Psychical Research, which attempts careful investigation of hypnotic phenomena having parapsychological implications.

1888 Hypnosis researchers commonly know that hypnotic amnesia can be overcome in a subsequent trance state. Moll writes: "...the subject remembers in hypnosis all that has happened in previous hypnosis."

1889 Pierre Janet (1859-1947), a famous French hypnosis researcher, defines dissociation: "Things happen as if an idea, a partial system of thoughts, emancipated itself, became independent..." This explains hypnotic amnesia and obedience to "forgotten" posthypnotic suggestions.

1890 Research and practice of hypnosis are now part of medicine and psychology. Max Dessoir's bibliography of books on hypnotism now includes 1183 titles, many dealing with issues of crime under hypnosis.

1892 Freud writes about regression to childhood during lowered consciousness.

1892 British Medical Association unanimously accepts hypnotism as therapeutic method.

1893 A Swedish hypnotist, Wetterstrand, finds that "a few drops of chloroform," plus his regular induction routine, turns resistive individuals into good hypnotic subjects.

1894 George DuMaurier publishes Trilby, a protest novel about the abused stage "mediums" of his day in which the ruthless hypnotist, Svengali, captures Trilby by a disguised induction, trains her, then displays her somnambulist skill on stage.

1899 Herrero reports to first International Congress of Hypnotism, in Paris, on various drugs that facilitate hypnotic induction, especially barbiturates.

1900 Paris meeting of International Congress of Hypnotism accepts therapeutic value of hypnotism.

1901 Freud points out the phenomenon which he calls slips of tongue, and explains the cause of such "thoughtless" mis-sayings, mislayings, etc., as repressed unconscious feelings managing to act out.

1903 Bramwell pioneers many elements used in modern hypnotic inductions: pre-induction interview to gain trust and understanding, use of quiet, darkened room to reduce sensory input, telling subject to "just let it happen," and directing subject's attention to "sensations he probably is experiencing" (actually sensory illusions and exercises in obedience). He uses narcohypnotic induction to overcome cases of resistance to merely verbal induction.

1903 Pavlov introduces classical conditioning.

1904 William James reports that the Frenchman, M. Liegeois, has hypnotized persons as far away as twelve kilometers by giving an induction cue over the telephone.

1907 A German, Auguste Forel, writes that a criminal hypnotist could prevent his discovery by means of sealing, which he calls "locking suggestions."

1907 Lapponi reports that electric shocking can induce trance: electro-induction.

1908 First American researcher on the physiology of hypnosis, William McDougal, describes inhibited state of cortex during trance, suggests new methods to cause that inhibition (staring, monotonous stimulation, etc.)

1912 A researcher in Pavlov's laboratory causes neurosis in a dog. Pavlov later does extensive investigation of artificial neurosis.

1914 Juliusburger uses diallylbarbituric acid as a hypnotic drug to treat psychosis.

1915 Watson and Lashley perform first human conditioning experiments in U.S. John Watson's publications popularize the terms behaviorism and conditioning. His child-rearing books are best sellers.

1917 Hungary's Dr. Volgyesi uses a strong electric shock to induce "passivity." He then verbally deepens the trance and further trains the hypnotic subject.

1921 In a small German town, "Z" is hypnotized (using a disguised induction) by his ex-con neighbor. He is an exploited, unknowing hypnotic subject for the next decade.

1923 Eli Lilly and Company markets the barbiturates amobarbital and butabarbital.

1923 The State Institute of Experimental Psychology in Moscow reports Luria's success with hypnotically-implanted "crimes." He made people confess to things they did not really do.

1924 Hans Berger, Austrian psychiatrist, discovers electric brain waves, weak but detectable, coming from his son's brain. He then learns that different states of mind emit different characteristic signals. This research will result in the EEG. (A flat EEG is now the legal definition of death.)

1925 P. C. Young publishes the first true controlled experiment on hypnosis.

1926 U.S. research into causing artificial neuroses in animals begins in Howard S. Liddell's laboratory.

1927 Pavlov wins Pulitzer Prize for discovering classical conditioning: he can make dogs drool when a bell rings.

1929 Sodium amytal is first used to force hypnosis on a subject.

1930 George Estabrooks markets first recorded hypnotic induction (12-inch Victrola record). One side is induction, catalepsy challenge, then waking hypnosis instruction. The other is induction, challenge, then shifting of rapport from the recorded voice to a live hypnotist in the room-IF subject has given prior written permission.

1931 W. Horsely Gantt, after six years in Pavlov's lab, returns to Johns-Hopkins and founds a U.S. conditioning laboratory. He studies experimental neuroses, frustration, and drive conflict in dogs.

1932 Hauptmann, in Germany, and Dr. J.S. Horsley, in Great Britain, independently discover that injecting the barbiturate Evipan causes "a state indistinguishable from verbally-induced hypnosis." (LeCron, Experimental Hypnosis, p. 141) Horsley begins a career of practicing and promoting barbiturate-induced trance, followed by conventional hypnotic training. The method offers speed, depth, and coercion.

1933 Dr. Clark Hull, Yale, publishes Hypnosis and Suggestibility, first book-length behaviorist study of hypnosis. Most hypnosis research is now published in scientific journals.

1934 Mr. E. tells police that an unknown "doctor" is covertly hypnotizing and abusing his wife.

1935 Tabern and Volwiler synthesize Pentothal (thiopental) and Lundy introduces it as an intravenous anesthetic.

1935 Biofeedback experiments begin.

1935 Portuguese neurologist Egas Moniz invents prefrontal lobotomy. It soon becomes a popular psychiatric technique. A few years later, he wins a Nobel Prize for the lobotomy.

1936 P. Brotteaux reports use of combined scopolamine and chloralose to induce hypnotic suggestibility. Sodium pentothal is first synthesized nd used as an intravenous anesthetic.

1936 Walter Bergen and his accomplice are sentenced to jail because of criminal hypnosis.

1937 Dr. Mayer's Das Verbrechen en Hypnose und seine Aufklaringsmethoden, describing Mrs. E's, case is published.

1938 Cerletti and Bini introduce electroconvulsive shock treatments. Over the coming years, hundreds of experiments are carried out on animals and people. Many seek predictable control of the shock's amnesia effect.

1939 Estabrooks recruits M. H. Erickson to do hypnosis experiment for F.B.I. Erickson's subject demonstrates detailed, accurate memory in hypnotic regression.

1940 William J. Donovan (World War I general, N.Y. lawyer) proposes to Pres. Roosevelt a new government organization to specialize in secret scientific research and "securing of information important for national security"—the Organization for Special Services (OSS).

1941 Donovan, first director of OSS, recruits U.S. scientists from all fields, atomic to hypnotic.

1941 Estabrooks proposes various uses of hypnosis for military. He creates hypnoprogrammed couriers. (Science Digest, April 1971)

1942 Donovan organizes OSS committee of psychiatrists and biochemists to study drugs which might be useful for interrogation.

1942 Development of electronic computers and artificial intelligence begins.

1943 George Estabrooks publishes Hypnotism, publicly urges military and police use of hypnoprogrammed spies and couriers, reveals that hypnosis both causes and cures multiple personality.

1943 U.S. and British psychiatrists use narcohypnosis as a quick, effective treatment for battle fatigue.

1943 Jules H. Masserman, University of Chicago, applies Pavlovian concepts of conditioning and experimental neuroses to humans, and integrates them with theories of psychopathology and psychoanalysis.

1944 Ferenc Volgyesi, "best hypnotist in Hungary," helps Gestapo use Scopolamine-Ephotamine-Hukatal to create a highly suggestible mental state in prisoners. During that state, hypnosis is induced, subjects are interrogated, and then prepared for trial.

1945 English doctors, Grinker and Spiegel, publish War Neuroses. It describes the use of barbiturate to induce trance and to accelerate abreactive hypnotherapy, a therapy method they call narcosynthesis. American doctors call it narcohypnosis.

1945 John J. McCloy establishes "Psychological Warfare" as a top-secret branch of the War Department.

1947 Nielsen uses disguised induction in a yoga context to make his Danish cellmate an unknowing hypnotic subject.

1947 Congress passes National Security Act. It creates CIA out of post-war remnant of OSS. The law says CIA has no police or security function within the U.S. Truman signs, later says he was not fully informed and regrets having signed.

1947 U.S. keeps secret records of Nazi mind-control experiments (including drug-hypnosis) obtained from Dachau ruins. (Marks, The Search for the Manchurian Candidate, pp. 4-5)

1948 Research begins on a machine that will emit signals at the frequency of alpha brain waves on the theory that brainwaves of hypnotically susceptible nearby persons will synchronize, shifting the subject into a trance condition.

1949 Congress passes Central Intelligence Agency Act, which also restricts CIA activities to foreign countries.

1949 Hungarian government puts Cardinal Mindszenty on trial. With a glazed look in his eyes, he publicly confesses to astonishing and illogical crimes of treason. Within six months, CIA believes they know how the Cardinal's mind was broken: psychological stress, drugs, and hypnosis.

1949 S.M. Korson reports the "Successful Treatment of an Obsessive-Compulsive Neurosis with Narcosynthesis Followed by Daily Electroshocks."

1949 Dr. Janis (Rand Corporation report) urges research on “drugs, hypnotism, hypno-narcoanalysis, electric and drug shock...” and on ECT (convulsive level of electric shock to brain) to assist mind control. Testing mind-control drugs is underway. Rockefeller and Macy [CIA conduit] Foundations fund Menninger Clinic to research hypnosis.

1949 The Society for Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis is founded: membership by invitation only.

1950 Brickner reports implanting false unconscious memories of early childhood incest in amnesic drugged persons: “Direct Reorientation of Behavior Patterns in Narcosis.”

1950 Lie detector tests (biofeedback analysis) are becoming accepted by police forces.

1950 Edward Hunter’s article “‘Brain-Washing’ Tactics Force Chinese into Ranks of Communist Party” introduces the term brainwashing.

1950 CIA’s Roscoe Hillenkoetter approves “virtually unlimited use of unaccountable funds” (Thomas, p. 96) for new Project, BLUEBIRD. Goals include 1) learning to obtain accurate data from persons, willing or unwilling; 2) learning to condition persons so that data cannot be extracted from them by any means; 3) researching combinations of electroshock, Freudian psychiatry, hypnoid drugs, and hypnotic training techniques to achieve subconscious isolation (artificial personality splitting) and increase “compliance to suggested acts.” Then comes induced amnesia for all those procedures. (Scheflin & Opton, The Mind Manipulators, p. 115) CIA Director Morse Allen okays terminal experiments.

1950 Soviet and U.S. governments both begin pouring money into secret research to develop and control psychic powers.

1951 Nielsen’s hypnorobot, Palle Hardwick, commits second bank robbery, murders, and is arrested. Witnesses implicate Nielsen. Dr. Reiter enters case.

1951 CIA psychiatrist reports that ECT can produce varying degrees of amnesia. Morse Allen asks the CIA psychiatrist to try using the post-ECT “groggy” period to gain hypnotic control. A CIA memo says that, using hypnosis, they could “brief a prisoner...dispatch him on a mission and successfully debrief him on his return without his recollection...” (Scheflin & Opton, p. 114)

1951 CIA begins ARTICHOKE (named for the “A treatment,” drug-hypnosis combinations), a joint program of BLUEBIRD-type research with the military (Army, Navy, and Air Force). The F.B.I. refuses to join.

1952 Project ARTICHOKE mission statement targets development of means to obtain data “from a person against his will and without his knowledge,” preventing those means from being used on “us,” and raises the question, “Can we get control of an individual to the point where he will do our bidding against his will and even against such fundamental laws of nature such as self-preservation?” (Chavkin, p. 13) Project M-K-Delta investigates how to covertly modify a person’s behavior. Amnesia is a research goal: “The greater the amnesia produced, the more effective the results.” (John Marks, pp. 40-41) Parapsychology is another research area.

1952 During the Korean war, 7000 Americans are captured. None escape; 30% die; 33% collaborate. The many false confessions of germ warfare participation by U.S. and British prisoners astonish U.S. public, and stir interest in brainwashing.

1952 President Truman signs National Security Agency into existence.

1952 Prescription tranquilizers become common.

1953 U.S. signs Nuremburg Code, containing rules governing medical research. They prohibit human experimentation, unless subject is provided full information beforehand and freely consents. It states the subject can withdraw at any time.

1953 CIA begins covert testing of chemicals and technologies on unknowing citizens. ARTICHOKE becomes Project MKULTRA, a Technical Services Staff (TSS) operation, which will continue for twenty years. (Project MKDelta is absorbed into MKULTRA.) Richard Helms is the "driving force behind this" (Weinstein, p. 129). MKULTRA experiments with "electroshock, psychology, psychiatry... aversive therapy, electric shock, and...'brainwashing'." (Bowart, pp. 105-108) Improving their hypnoprogramming technology is a top goal. The Director of Security for Artichoke adds a sub-goal: "...attempting to have a hypnotic subject kill someone while in a trance." (Lee and Schlain, Acid Dreams, p. 28)

1953 Dr. Ewan Cameron, head psychiatrist at McGill U., Montreal, Canada, reads paper at a Neuropsychiatric meeting in Arkansas which explains his concept of depatterning by electroconvulsive shock and repatterning by psychic driving (forced listening to repeated, taped message). He says, "We have explored this procedure in one case, using sleeplessness, disinhibiting agents [barbiturate], and hypnosis."

1954 Morse Allen, CIA hypnosis chief, hypnotizes office secretaries. He causes one to shoot her friend with an (unloaded) pistol. He wants to test if "hypnotically induced amnesia would stand up to torture." (Marks, The Search for the Manchurian Candidate, p. 187). CIA gives a Soviet agent the "A" treatment (barbiturate to induce unconsciousness, then, twenty minutes later, a shot of stimulant); the agent then accepts a male interrogator as being his beloved wife Eva, and confides in her. Suggested total amnesia is successful.

1954 Soviet defector Petrov's revelations of KGB infiltration of CIA shake up President Eisenhower. Lieutenant General Doolittle urges "every possible scientific and technical avenue of approach to the intelligence problem" and becoming "more ruthless" than the KGB.

1954 CIA Director Allen Dulles shifts hypnosis research from Morse Allen to Sid Gottlieb's MKULTRA team. Alden Sears begins experiments: "Could a hypnotist induce a totally separate personality? Could a subject be sent on missions he would not remember...?" (Ibid., p. 186)

1954 Dr. Frank R. Olson's suicide becomes public (CIA slipped him LSD). Congress gives widow big monetary settlement. Director Allen Dulles writes public letters to responsible persons in the Agency accusing them of "poor judgment." However, his handwritten private memo makes clear the letters are merely for public consumption: "These are not reprimands and no personnel file notation is being made." (Scheflin & Opton, p. 112)

1954 Copenhagen Criminal Court convicts Nielsen of using hypnotic and other means to control of Hardwick cause him to commit robbery and murder. Nielsen is sentenced to prison, Hardwick to psychiatric confinement.

1955 For first time in history, twenty-six Korean War POWs elect to stay in Communist China rather than return to U.S. Others return, but then hand out flyers on street-corners urging support for North Korean victory. Brainwashed becomes a household word—and a government research priority.

1955 Army pays for Tulane U. research program which implants electrodes in brains of mental patients.

1956 Dulles assigns Hinkle and Wolff to create a definitive study on the roots, history, and methods of brainwashing.

1956 The Group for the Advancement of Psychiatry (CIA funds conduit for brainwash research) holds Symposium No. 3 in New York on "Factors Used to Increase the Susceptibility of Individuals to Forceful Indoctrination: Observations and Experiments."

1957 Alden Sears refuses to continue experiments on artificial personality-splitting for CIA. Cameron submits grant application to Society for the Investigation of Human Ecology (CIA front), gets $60,000 to test ECT amnesia and psychic driving.

1957 Vance Packard publishes The Hidden Persuaders, exposing the advertising industry's adoption of unconscious motivators. New York Times quotes ad executive who says that subliminals, messages so briefly flashed on screen as to be consciously indiscernible, do influence buying decisions.

1957 Estabrooks' Hypnotism, new edition, says: "A nation fighting with its back to the wall is not worried over the niceties of ethics." It says research on hypnoprogramming will not be made public, but discusses disguised induction, amnesia, sealing, waking hypnosis, and creation of an artificially-split personality.

1958 Seymour Fisher (Bureau of Social Science Research, Rand Corporation subcontractor) sends Air Force a report predicting that "some drugs would prove useful in reducing the amount of time required to induce complex hypnotic behavior." (Bowart, p. 23)

1959 A machine which aids hypnotic induction by putting out a repetitive electric signal in alpha or theta range is invented: the Brainwave Synchronizer.

1959 First hypnosis susceptibility scales are published; these standardized inductions enable systematic, reliable prediction of response to hypnosis at any depth in one standardized induction.

1959 Marcuse (Hypnosis: Fact and Fiction, p. 204),. states that a person involved in military hypnosis experiments told him they were "unethical" and "a dirty mess."

1959 Congress passes law forbidding the National Security Agency to disclose any information about itself.

1960 MKULTRA launches expanded "operational experiments in hypnosis" with three goals: 1) rapid, disguised induction; 2) creation of durable amnesia; 3) implantation of "durable and operationally useful posthypnotic suggestion." MKULTRA does the laboratory development of techniques; TSS (Technology and Science Section) handles "field experimentation." (J. Marks, p. 189)

1960 CIA begins spying on "domestic dissidents." The Society for the Investigation of Human Ecology (a funds conduit), publishes Brainwashing: A Guide to the Literature.

1961 Researchers study left and right brain hemispheres, discover they have independent consciousness and also have separate, independent memory systems.

1961 Alan H. Frey discovers that humans can perceive pulsed microwaves in 300-3,000 megahertz range by direct brain perception of the radiated energy—no ears necessary.

1962 CIA discusses “joint work in hypnosis with a foreign secret service...” for experimental torture interrogation of a hypnoprogrammed agent. (J. Marks, p. 188)

1962 President Kennedy dumps Allen Dulles, puts McCone in charge of CIA: “I must have someone there with whom I can be in complete and intimate contact—someone from whom I will be getting the exact pitch [truth]. I made a mistake in putting Bobby in the Justice Department...Bobby should be in CIA.” (Martin, p. 118) McCone is not told about “the safehouses and the CIA-Mafia assassination plots” (J. Marks, p. 100)

1963 McCone’s Inspector General learns of MKULTRA. He reports: a) It is “professionally unethical,” (b) doubts its legality by original [CIA] charter, (c) warns “it places the rights and interests of U.S. citizens in jeopardy,” and (d) warns that “public disclosure of some aspects of MKULTRA activity could induce serious adverse reaction in U.S. public opinion, as well as stimulate offensive and defensive action in this field on the part of foreign intelligence services.” (Scheflin & Opton, The Mind Manipulators, p. 132)

1963 In the midst of conflict with the CIA, on November 22, President Kennedy is assassinated. President Lyndon Johnson immediately returns the CIA to business as usual.

1964 J. Lee Rankin, General Counsel for the Warren Commission (investigating the assassination) asks CIA’s Helms for data on Soviet mind-control technology. Helms reports that they “consistently lagged about five years behind Western research.” (Warren Commission Doc. #1131)

1964 CIA “ends” MKULTRA, telling Congress and the press that its behavioral research is over. However, the Science and Technology Directorate quietly continues brain research.

1964 Hypnotic audiotapes proliferate in therapeutic circles and in the general marketplace. Hypnosis researchers (Barber & Calverley, 1963; Hoskoved, Svorad, & Lanc, 1963) confirm their effectiveness. Videotaped hypnotic induction and training will soon follow.

1965 The CIA’s San Francisco safehouse (a fake brothel where mind-control experiments on unknowing citizens are conducted) closes. The N.Y. safehouse remains open until 1967.

1966 CIA experiments in Taiwan test the ability of hypnoprogrammed person (Candy Jones) to resist interrogation, including under drugs and torture.

1967 The CIA announces the “end” of mind-control testing, and claims to have destroyed related records. (Ditto in 1964 and 1973.)

1969 Delgado proposes direct radio interface between brains and machines: “direct communication can be established between brain and computer, circumventing normal sensory” routes. (Delgado, 1963, p. 93)

1969 “...Agency [CIA] scientists from the Office of Research and Development (ORD) ran a number of bizarre and potentially far-reaching experiments in mind control... The most innovative and daring doctors had been transferred to ORD, and a number of young consultants from civilian medical research laboratories had been recruited...called Operation Often." (Thomas, p. 273)

1970 Behavioral psychologist McConnell writes "...we can combine sensory deprivation with drugs, hypnosis and astute manipulation of reward and punishment to gain almost absolute control over an individual's behavior..."

1971 Microprocessor introduced to computing world. Computer miniaturization is now possible. Implantation in humans will be researched.

1972 Maimonides Medical Center confirms the theoretical link between trance and psychic ability.

1973 The Watergate and Church Committees force unpleasant disclosures. In January, CIA Director Richard Helms orders remaining MKULTRA records (files 1-152) shredded, then resigns. A document which lists the file titles, however, escapes the shredding. (The last two titles are "GRANT.") Dr. Sidney Gottlieb (MKULTRA's other most important manager) retires.

1973 Dr. Joseph C. Sharp, Walter Reed Army Institute of Research, understands words radiated directly into his brain in the form of "a pulsed-microwave audiogram (analog of the words' sound vibrations)" (Becker, 1985, p. 319)

1973 The NSA's Advanced Research Projects Agency begins work on creating a machine that can read minds by deciphering the brain's radiated magnetic waves. Aspects of the new technology are being worked on at MIT, NYU, UCLA, and NASA's Ames Research Center.

1974 CIA Document #455, 6 May 1974, reports on "Experimentation Programs Conducted by the Department of Defense That Had CIA Sponsorship or Participation and That Involved the Administration to Human Subjects of Drugs Intended for Mind-control or Behavior-Modification Purposes" (J. Marks, p. 230).

1975 Report to the President by the Commission on CIA Activities within the United States says "...studies explored the effects of radiation, electric-shock, psychology, psychiatry, sociology..."

1975 John Marks files Freedom of Information Act requesting the CIA documents mentioned in the above Report which deal with studies of "possible means for controlling human behavior."

1975 Inspector General sends memo to CIA Director: "Precautions must be taken ...to conceal these activities from the American public... The knowledge that the Agency is engaging in unethical and illicit activities would have serious repercussions in political and diplomatic circles and would be detrimental to the accomplishment of its mission..." (Scheflin & Opton, p. 498, #177)

1976 Playboy Press publishes The Control of Candy Jones. Candy and Bain start nationwide publicity tour, give one interview, then accept $100,000 for "movie rights," and never give another.

1976 Sen. Frank Church (Church Committee Report) says in a radio interview: "I know the capacity that is there to make tyranny total." He warns urgently that the secret agencies have acquired such devastating tools of control that they must always be required to operate within the law, and must always be supervised.

1977 CIA, pressured by President Carter, releases ten boxes of old documents to Marks—and to other reporters and journalists. New York Times front page reports the MKULTRA effort: twenty-five years and $25,000,000, and it quotes their 1952 mission statement. Congress calls for testimony on the documents that Marks obtained. CIA Director Admiral Stansfield Turner testifies that 185 nongovernment researchers in eighty institutions were involved in the MKULTRA research. Among them were forty-four colleges and universities, fifteen research foundations, twelve hospitals and clinics, and three penal institutions. He refuses to name specific institutions or researchers.

1977 The investigating committee lacked time to read all 16,000 pages, and “the small cadre of [longtime CIA] witnesses had agreed among themselves beforehand to limit their testimony to questions asked, not to volunteer anything.” (Collins, p. 34)

1978 Michel Ter-Pogossian, et. al., at Washington University, St. Louis, has built prototype PET. This sophisticated brain-scanning device lets scientists watch the brain at work by detecting bioradiation from outside the head. A computer projects the data as a picture.

1979 Nine of Cameron’s surviving McGill research subjects file a lawsuit against the CIA.

1979 U.S. District Court orders CIA to name the universities and researchers that worked for MKULTRA (to facilitate the finding and compensating of research victims which Congress has ordered). CIA Director Turner, however, argues for keeping the names secret, on the basis that they fit the CIA definition of “intelligence sources.”

1980 GAO reports that the National Security Agency (NSA) classifies 50 to 100 million documents per year. “...its classification activity is probably greater than the combined total activity of all components and agencies of the government.”

1981 U.S. Army begins SRI study with goal of systematizing psychic phenomena and making the results of performance of psychics reliable, consistent, and useful to nonpsychics. Funding is millions of dollars per year.

1982 The National Science Foundation begins funding research on ways of “gluing” biochip proteins to neurons. Biochips use organic materials to create data processing chips which may be integrated with human nervous systems, creating actual machine-man combinations.

1983 Despite the 1979 U.S. District Court order, only fourteen CIA experimental subjects (all surreptitiously dosed with LSD in the S.F. safehouse) are found. Only one of them is compensated. CIA’s Laubinger deposes: “It was decided that there were no subjects that required notification other than those.” Admiral Turner expresses regret about “...a disappointingly small number” notified, but defends the CIA’s refusal to declassify: “I don’t think that would have been necessarily the best way...Not in the litigious society we live in.”

1983 CIA psychics develop the skill of remote viewing.

1983 National Security Agency budget is estimated to be $10 billion.

1984 The federal budget for scientific and technological reasearch is $47 billion. Two-thirds of that money goes to the military. Government research in bioelectricity and biomagnetism kicks into high gear.

1985 “...the CIA, which has always been at the cutting edge of developments in psychopharmacology, continues to conduct secret research aimed at creating more sophisticated forms of chemical [mind] control" (Lee & Schlain, Acid Dreams, p. 292)

1985 Judge John Penn, U.S. District Court, D.C., rules that CIA does not have to reveal names of MKULTRA researchers: "Courts do not have sufficient background or expertise to formulate a knowledgeable decision as to what may be harmful to the intelligence-gathering procedures used by this country..." (Weinstein, p. 184)

1987 Jon Franklin describes each brain's unique energy-radiated brainprint which could be used for identification. He predicts use in near future of "scanners" by police to read minds. (Franklin, Molecules of the Mind)

1987 "Secret ESP research is still being conducted, although CIA spokesmen refuse to comment on the nature of these experiments." (Lee and Schlain, Acid Dreams, 1987)

1988 CIA settles out of court with Cameron's patients, paying $100,000 to each—on condition that they drop the case without requiring a CIA admission of guilt and never again give an interview. They agree.

1988 Science journalist Howard Rheingold gets through the tight security guarding Stanford Research Institute's top-secret mind-control program's enormous center in Santa Monica to interview a scientist, "Mack." It's a short interview. Mack warns, "...you're strolling through a mine field." Mack does confide this much: "We are entering an area more revolutionary than any traditional political theory...In some fundamental ways, getting high [entering trance] is really what makes the world go around. We're talking about changing the nature of our beliefs about reality when we talk about 'getting high'." Mack tells Rheingold that "perception of reality can be reshaped by modifying those beliefs through drugs, hypnosis, or psychotherapy techniques." (Rheingold, 1988, pp. 122-3)

1990 The Dec. Journal of Hypnotism reprints Schilder and Kauder's narcohypnosis instructions to National Guild of Hypnosis members.

1994 Ohio Sen. John Glenn convenes hearings on cold war experiments on unknowing citizens. The administration works to "keep our focus limited to human radiation" (with nuclear materials). ("The Cold War Experiments," U.S. News & World Report, Jan. 24)

1994 U.S. News & World Report interviews Gittinger, Gottlieb, et. al. Gittinger says, "...most of it [the mind-control research] was exciting and interesting and stimulating, and quite necessary as it happens, during that period of time." Former MKULTRA Director Sidney Gottlieb, who now works with hospice AIDS and cancer victims, says he is "trying to get on the side of the angels instead of the devils." (Ibid.)

1995 Rohypnol, "the date rape drug," becomes street problem. In three weeks of July at Laredo, 101,000 tablets of this drug, which strips away consciousness, enter U.S.

1996 The Commission on the Roles and Capabilities of the U.S. Intelligence Community reveals the CIA has "accumulated a $2 billion slush fund" and recommends that spooks who lie to Congress be severely punished. The Commission also points out the need "for greater disclosure of details of the now-classified intelligence budget" because right now nobody knows exactly how much they get or what they use it for." (Asheville Citizen-Times, Mar. 7, 1996, p. 4A)

Index

BOLD-FACE ENTRIES ALSO CAN BE FOUND IN THE GLOSSARY.

A

"A" treatment 149, 523, 524
abasement 175
Abbe Faria 445, 518 ability, hypnotic 292. See also susceptibility abreaction 430, 434, 482, 487 defined 475
  therapy 270
abuse, bizarre 413 acidosis 147
Adams and Williams 496
ADD 234
Addendum, Secret 443–444, 494 addiction 476
  response 243
Addiction Research Center 134
Advanced Research Projects Agency 218, 527 adventure 295
advertising 185, 232–233, 472
Aesculapian temple 440 affect 354, 435. See also emotion tone 476 affective arousal 174
  behavior disorganization 160 AFL-CIO 358 agent 94, 111
  double 113, 141–142
  unknowing 113–116, 226
aggression 161, 433 primary process element 174 aging 398 agitated 63
Aha! 230, 335
Air Force 117, 130, 148, 180
  Office of Scientific Research 88
  Psychological Warfare Division 119
Akwei, John St. Clair 130, 192, 215, 216 Albert Moll Collection 494 alcohol 147, 228
alertness 301
Alexander, Gary 496 alien abduction 424
alkalosis 147
Allen, Morse 123, 133, 523, 524
Allodi, Federico 496 alpha 205, 306, 310, 336–337 controlled production 291 altered state of consciousness 476 Alzheimer's disease 258
ambivalence 431
American Civil Liberties Union 190
American Psychiatric Association 355, 499
American Psychological Association 343
amnesia 36, 43, 46, 62, 75, 86, 90, 102, 113, 114–115, 119, 137–138, 140, 143, 158–159, 173, 242, 259–262, 285, 297, 301, 346, 374, 419–424, 446, 450, 523 caused by regressive ECT 156 complete 118, 142, 159, 300 dominance factor 125 drug-caused 146
  hides sealing 256
  Hilgard's two types 179
  hypnotic 258
  methods to cause 146, 186–187 one-way 91, 146
  overcoming 419–424
  posthypnotic 142, 300, 354, 384
  profound (total) 374–375 research goal 523, 525 resolves conflict 179–182 retroactive 156, 183 retrograde 156 selective 115

  source 426 spontaneous 300, 335, 380, 446, 519 tested by torture 95 testing 263 traumatic 262 amnesias specific 396 amnestic 476
amplification level 177
amplify (sensory imput) 308 amygdala 176
analgesia 249
analysis 326, 476
analytical 45, 361 analyzer 316, 460
anchoring 277, 349, 476
Andrews and Karlins 496
anesthesia 65, 73, 96, 104, 281, 285, 297, 320, 397 chemical 147 dental 294
  hypnotic 249–250, 397
  obstetrical 306 angels 424
anger 161, 371, 433, 476
Ann Landers 355
anthropologist view of trance 292 antisocial. See also hypnotism: antisocial; suggested... hypnosis 133, 370–371, 476
anxiety 230, 375, 402, 404, 419, 422, 477 death 464
apathetic 406 apathy 476 approach-avoidance 403 aptitude 484
Army 525
  Medical and Information Agency 214 Arnold, William 496 art 327
arterial pressure 306
ARTICHOKE 123, 137, 146, 149, 190, 196, 523
Asklepeion program 466
Assagioli, Roberto 496 assassination 196–201, 411, 526
assault, report 419 assertive 406 association 257–258, 477
  image 422
  learning 64, 182
attitude, frozen 466 audience 378
audiogram 214, 527
audiotapes 235, 526
aura 310
Austin v. Barker 347–348 authority 368 attitude toward 406 figure 370, 430
automatic 478
  learning 64 obedience 119, 159 speech 420
  writing 162, 243, 425
automatism 119, 240–243, 301, 314, 344, 362, 370, 374, 378, 441, 449, 478 demonstrated in court 419 autonomic nervous system 290–291 autonomy 481 autopsied 346
autosuggestion 290
Avatar 207
aversive 478. See also conditioning awake 53, 479 awakened 323
axon 313
Azam 158, 447, 496, 518

B

Babinsky 451
Baer, Randall N. 319, 496
Bagnone, Francisco 440
Bailly, J. S. 443, 496
Bain, Donald 100, 106–108, 201, 496
Bamford, James 496
baquet 442
Baranowski, George H. 357, 367
Barber, T. X. 368, 376–377, 496
Barberisms 377–378
barbiturate 75, 91, 94, 124, 147, 410, 419, 519 forces induction 149–150 in hypnotherapy 147 overdose 428–429
  plus stimulant 149
  police use 147
Barbizet, Jacques 497
Barker and Burgwin 497
Bay of Pigs invasion 197
Beaunis 449, 453, 497
Bech, n.d 80
Becker, Robert O. 497
Beecher, Henry K. 497
Begich, Nick 497
behavior control 124, 142, 470, 473, 527 inexplicable 396 modification 462–464, 479, 527 paradoxical 459 predicting 113 shaping 171, 354, 390
  therapy 479
behaviorism 472, 521 history 468
  postulates 469
behaviorist 142, 378–379, 457, 470
belief 294, 307, 492
Bell, Art 497
Bell, C. 497
Benson, Herbert, M.D 497
Benzedrine 149
Bergen, Walter 41
Berger, Hans 520
Berger, N. 497
Bernheim 241, 290, 334
Bernheim, H. M. 448–449, 453, 497
Bertrand, Alexandre 518
beta brainwaves 310 endorphins 310 betray 464
Bibliography 494
Biderman, Albert 117, 119, 462–463, 497
Big Lie 191, 472
Binet and Fere 449, 497
biochip 219, 528
biocomputer 129, 219
bioelectric 313 circuit 129–130
  monitoring 215–220
  research 216
bioelectricity/ biomagnetism
  research 528
biofeedback 290–291, 305–306, 479, 521
  training 230
biomagnetism 129–130, 219, 309, 313, 315, 336 bioradiation 528
Birns, H.D. 497
Björnstörm, F. 498
blackness, visual 300
Blake, Robert Rogers 498

blanked 156, 184 minds 124 bleeding 291 block 480 protective 436
blocked 215, 415
  extrasensory induction 202–203, 208 blocking 258, 402, 413
  pain perception 312–313
  when questioned 403 blood pressure 291
BLUEBIRD 123, 133, 137, 160, 191, 523
Blum, Gerald S. 174, 498
Bly, Robert 498 body flush 301 body space, invasion of 463 Bompard, Gabrielle 454–455 bond 240, 271, 433
Bourguignon, Erica 292, 498
bouton 313
Bowart, Walter 108, 180, 498
Bowers, Kenneth 386–387, 498
Braid, James 457, 498, 518 brain hemispheres 420 left (verbal) 142, 420, 423 overload 443 right 276, 327, 420, 430 memory 421
  scan 529
  syndrome 315, 333–335, 462 brainprint 209, 214, 218, 221, 529 brainstem 176, 308
brainwash 116, 119, 124, 135, 142–143, 173, 334, 404, 439, 461–467, 523–524, 525 Chinese Comm. system 464 final stage 186 forced conversion 464
  positive 142
  procedure 178
  research 119, 133
brainwave 310
  doubletake 309 intention 309 nonsynchronized 336 slowing 306–307 surprise 309
  synchronization 207, 297, 310, 336, 338, 358, 523, 525 Bramwell, J. Milne 457, 498, 519 breakdown, artificial 462
breaking point 119, 178, 458, 464 breast milk production 174 breathing 301, 306, 399, 429
Brende, Joel Osler 498
Brenman, Margaret 371, 384, 498
Breuer 498
Breuer and Freud 329
Brevital Sodium 147
Brickner, Richard 498, 523
Brickner's technique 167
Bridey Murphy 270 bridge phenomenon 65, 246, 281, 346
brief therapy 480
British Intelligence 112
Brodeur, Paul 499
Brooke, Tal 499 brothel 134
Brother Lawrence 323, 499
Brouardel 454, 455, 499
Brown and Fromm 499
Brown, Barbara B. 499
Bryan, William Jennings 123, 366, 499
Buckley, Bill 95
Buddhism 229, 439
Burger, Marshall 84
Burgess, Thomas O. 499

C

Cabell, General Charles 197
Caffeine Sodium-benzoate 149 calming 153, 157
Cameron, Ewen 123–124, 193, 330, 499, 524, 528 electroshock research 156–157 patients 135–136, 529 titles 499 candidate 88, 115, 410
Candy Jones 82–95
Cannon, Alexander 499
Cannon, W. B. 499 can't come up 172 capacity regression. See also regression: capacity Cardinal Mindszenty 522 carrier wave 209, 212
Carter, President 129, 190, 527 case, court 346–350
case history 29
  Barbara Noel 355
  Candy Jones 82, 201, 527
  Edith Austin 347–348
  Joe gets brainwashed 192–194
  Kline's cases 353–354
  Mrs. E 382
  Mrs. E. 41–49
  Nora O. 402
  Operation Often 168
  Palle Hardwick 50, 200, 362, 381, 382
  Sala Affair 348
  Springston 351
  Spurgeon Young 346
  "Z" Kantor 34–49
Casey, Edward S. 499
catalepsy 62, 65, 73, 245–246, 285, 300, 302, 308, 374
  eyelid 449
cataleptic 332, 346
catatonia 246
catatonic 52, 334, 374, 452, 460, 480 catharsis 475
cathartic 267
Catholic 440 cattle prod 478
caudate nucleus 305 cause-and-effect
  training 241
Cautela, J. R. 422, 499 centered prayer 229
Central Intelligence Agency. See CIA
Central Intelligence Agency Act, 522 central nervous system 116 central-inhibition 116 cerebellum 176 cerebrum 420
channeling 53, 230, 486
chaotic stimulation 315 Charcot, J. M. 347, 379, 451, 499 charismatic 209, 229
CHATTER 149, 191
Chavkin, Samuel 499 chemical communication, neural 313, 336 Chevreul's pendulum 327, 425 childhood's importance 174 childlike persona 163–165 chiropracty 518
chloroform 147, 519
chlorpromazine 147
Chowchilla 363, 365–366
Christenson, James A. 499
Christian 209, 229, 418, 467
Church Committee 527

Church Committee Report] 514
Church, Frank 527
CIA 103, 111, 120, 126, 128, 132–137, 145, 149, 153–156, 160, 168–170, 189–190, 196–198, 360, 366, 469, 522 begins 120 censor 190 employees 89
  mind-control documents 514 unit 89 cigarettes 232
citizen researcher 197
Citrenbaum, King, and Cohen 499 clairvoyant 204–205 Clandestine Services 123 classified 127–128, 130–131, 471, 528 climax 53 clinical 480
Clipper Chip 471 clue 426–427 CNN 473 coached childbirth 230 code (brain) 307
Coe, W.C. 499 coercion 472
cognition 422
cognitive dissonance 171, 415, 420, 428, 480, 488 cognitive expectancy 386 cognitive modes 420
Colgate University 113
Collins, Anne 500
Collins, Larry 500
Colquhoun, J. C. 500
Columbia University 134
coma 281, 300, 303, 308, 334, 441
Company, the 89 compel 37 compensation 245 complex implanted 375. See also neurosis, artificial compliance 464
compulsion 285, 389 compulsive 139, 465 computer 522
  hypno-concept 174
  implant in human 527
  research 116, 127–130
concentration 52, 230, 295, 457 camp survivors 404
conditionability 321 conditioned 386
  reflex 240–241
  theory of 386
  response 64, 241
  stimulus (word) 241 term introduced 410
  un- 64
conditioning 64, 140–142, 182, 287–288, 480, 520 abstract 325
  association 92
  aversive 478 classical 64, 92, 182, 458, 473, 480, 520 covert 499 density 428 four types 480
  narcotic 147–153
  operant 466, 473, 479, 480, 486 sessions 478 theories 162
Condon, Richard 88, 160, 386, 410, 500
confabulation 268–270, 335, 365, 381, 409, 424, 426 safeguards against 364–366
  suggested 409
confession 38, 348–349, 464, 466
  false 38, 79, 147, 523
confidential 343, 455
conflict imaged 73–75 internal 431 motivational 179
  non resolved 172 resolved 179 stable 160
confusion 172, 194, 215, 330, 462–463
Conn, J. R. 353, 500
Conrad and Guthzeit 519 conscience 492 conscious mind 65, 167, 241, 284, 361, 460, 481 displacement of 246 consciousness altered state of 292, 476 expanding 506 loss of 35
  lowered 64, 228, 310, 317 spontaneously lowered 402 consent 132–134
consolidation 257 constructive errors 427 contagion 481 container, image of 430 context clues 396, 481 continuance 393 contract, induction 282–283 control 137–153, 159, 173, 419, 433, 462, 464, 469, 481 abuses of 474
  agent 89
  by threats 172
  erotic 441
  fear of 194–195, 406 feeling in 397
  hypnotic 281
  loss of 276, 462
  of information 470 pharmacological 124
  psychological 124 subjects 377
conversion 482
  linked to stress 335, 461
  reaction 100, 158, 245, 433, 490
convulsion 442–443, 451
Cook 143, 300, 500
Coon, Dennis 500
Cornell 116, 119
corpus callosum 420
corroboration 366, 482
Corson, William R. 500
cortex 176, 307–308 auditory 215
  excitation 310
  inhibition 314
  rational 177 reduced stimulation to 308
Corydon and Hubbard 500
Coue, Emile 290, 500
Council of Professional Hypnosis Organizations 358 counseling 208 cult bait 358
count backwards 84 counter-suggestibility 459 countercontrol 474 counterintelligence 137
courier
  hypnoprogrammed 86, 94, 138–139, 439, 483 interrogation of 95 court 75–81 cover personality 392. See also personality: cover covert sensitization 499 creative 227
Crick, Frances 500 crisis 452 chamber 443

  suggested 442
crossover, dream info 407
crossover time (hypnogogic) 311 cryptographer 125 crystals 319
cue 38, 44, 55, 138, 254, 482, 487. See also posthypnotic (re-) induction 43, 63, 92, 115, 192 inadvertent 381 statement 185 word 44
    memory recovery 48, 427
cued reflex 283 cult 395
current of injury reverses polarity 312 cybernetics 116, 174, 482
cyborg 219 cycles-per-second brainwaves 310

D

Dachau 148, 522
Damon, Dwight 500
Danto, B. L. 500
d'Arcet 443
Das, J. P. 500 data (brain) 307
Davida, George I. 471
Davis and Husband 500
daydreaming 276, 295, 351, 482
De Bory 443
De Jonge, Alex 500
De Maupassant 33
De Puysegur, Marquis. See Puysegur deaths 196–198 deceit 86, 281. See also permissible deceit decode 218 deductive principle 492 deepen trance 46, 297
  by re-inductions 298
  by visualization 298 time factor 298
Deese, James 500 defend 433
Defense Intelligence Agency 471 defense lawyers 71 defense mechanism 253, 403, 490 defensive 433 degradation 463 dehumanized 173
dehypnotize 53
Deleuze 445, 500
Delgado, Jose 215–216, 500, 526 delirium 482
Delphic 440
delta brainwave 310 delusion logical 394 paranoid 394
demand characteristics 378 demands, trivial 463 demonstration 49
dendrites 313
densitization 482 dentist 369
depattern 156, 184, 524 dependence 167, 430 depotentiation 422 depression 163, 389, 404, 476
deprogram 142, 414, 482 depth of trance 53, 143, 148, 227–229, 242, 297–299, 375, 444, 458
  analysis 459
  characteristics 301–302 degrees 300 drug-induced 298 limited 46, 62, 254, 398
  medium 301
  plenary 303 scale 299 self-report 300 stages 447
  test 490
  training 297
desensitization 245, 386, 422, 479, 482 desires 380 desires, lewd 452
Deslon, M. 443, 444
Dessoir, Max 43, 159, 500, 519
Deutsch, J. Anthony 500
Deyoub, Paul L. 351, 500 diagnosis abusive hypnosis 408, 412 mental illness 247
Diamond 199
direct command 353. See also suggestion: direct, indirect direct current 308–309, 314 disguised induction. See induction: disguised disinformation 472
disinhibiting agent. See narcohypnosis disorientation 170–171, 215, 374, 462–463, 483 displacement 65, 159, 208
dissociated 243, 246
dissociation 29, 146, 159, 243, 246, 299, 319, 351, 355, 425, 457, 519
  spontaneous 403–404 tendency 88 distract 215 dogma of moral integrity 39, 76, 80, 244–245, 351, 360, 363, 377, 380, 453 domestic dissidents 525 dominance 406 dominant 469
domineering 164
Donovan, William 84, 86, 111–112, 121–122, 521 down 310
dowse 327, 425 dream 292, 406 analysis 407
  clues 406 nightmare 407, 411 not remembered 407 of survivor 69, 406 repeated 407
  suggested 354
  therapist 230
  therapy 491
drive 174, 481, 483
  conflict 179–182
  emotions 176, 492 related 388 strength 243 drug 142
  abreaction 145
  induced trance 145, 147–153, 518 use enhances susceptibility 295
Du Maurier, George 29, 500, 519 Du Prel, Karl 500
dual coding system 420
Dulles, Allen 124, 147–148, 191, 197, 524, 526
Dumas, Alexander 33

E

E.S.B. 500
Earman, John 197 ears, sound bypass 337
ECS 153

Edmonston, William E., Jr. 304, 501 Edmunds, Simeon 501
EEG 291, 302, 309, 520
ego 65, 143, 316, 464, 481, 483 inflation 335 strongest 295 weakening 154
Egypt 439
Eisenbud, J. 245, 501 Eisenhower, President 133 electric 315, 336–337 currents 309 field around head 309 shocks 97, 142, 153, 442, 478
electrically-controlled 215, 500 electro-induction/narcosis 153, 314–315, 337, 362, 460, 520 electrode 97, 214 brain stimulation 500
  implant 525
electromagnetic field 214, 309, 312, 315
  wave 216, 471 electronic brain stimulation 216, 500 mind-reading 129–130
  surveillance 128
electroshock 124, 135–136, 153–157, 194, 521, 523
  amnesia 525
    three stages 156–157 brain damage 193
  convulsion 153
  machine 183 regressive 157
  three effects 153 use in hyonoprogramming 184 electrosleep 314 electrostatic machine 312
Ellenberger, Henri F. 501 Elliotson, John 518 emotion 74, 77, 177, 329–331, 475, 476, 483, 492. See also carrier wave amplification level 177 dominates programming 435 flat 459 intensity 242 numbing 403
  reprograms 177
  shocks 330 emotional cognition 423 energy, radiant 145
Engstrom, D. R. 501 enkephalins 310 enlightened 323 entrapment 86
epilepsy 442, 451
Epstein, Edward 198, 501 equilibrium 474
equivalent phase 459
Erickson, Elizabeth Moore 369
Erickson Foundation 369
Erickson, M. H. 115, 162, 172, 173, 181, 215, 368, 369, 388, 501, 521 on "antisocial hypnosis" 370 technology applicable to criminal hypnosis 374 erotic 164
  signal 215
erotive root 484
Esdaile, James 320, 502, 518
EST 225
Estabrook, Marjorie 502
Estabrooks, George 33, 92, 112–116, 158, 352, 371, 502, 521, 525 ether 57, 147 ethics 55, 342, 358, 385, 525 issues 430 medical 136 situational 472 euphoric 310
Evans, F. J. 502
Eve 435–436
Evipan 62, 75, 147, 521
excitation 313, 329–331
excitatory system 161 exhaustion 334, 463
exorcism 229, 441 expectations 377 experiment controlled 387, 520 FBI 115
  field 137 human 524, 528
  hypnosis 84, 89–94, 137–153, 384
  mind-control 145–146 mocked-up 370
  snake-in-box 97, 377
  terminal 95, 99, 132–137, 523
expressionless 321 extinction 428
  covert 499
extrasensory perception 145, 201–222, 227, 299, 337, 446 research 529
eye closure 281, 285, 317, 448 conditioned pupillary light reflex 64 fixation 228, 448
  focus 276
  pupil contraction 301 pupil dilation 300
  relaxation 321
  sleepy appearance 321 upward gaze 447 upward roll 301 eyelid flutter/quiver 301, 306
Eyraud 454
Eysenck, H.J. 503

F

fabrication 268, 269, 299, 409, 427 fact 472 faith 290 healing 50, 440
  v. science on hypnosis 440 fakir 439 false front 116 knowing 269
  memory implanting 365 syndrome 268–270 family 227 fantasy 299, 351, 483 classroom, guided 232
  v. reality 167
Faraday, Ann 503
Faraday Hand 337
Farago, Robert 503
Farmer, Frances 496 fasting 335
father 163–164
FBI 86, 115, 121, 123, 129
fear 332, 404, 422, 476
feedback 291, 483
  circuit 161
Fere. See Binet and Fere
Ferencz, Sandor 163, 503
Festinger, Leon 503 fiction 33 fight 433
Finkelhor, David 503
firewalking 358
Fisher, C. 503
Fisher, Seymour 503, 525 fixed idea 451
flaccidity 245
Flanagan 471

Flint 32
focus 242, 308, 317, 319
Forel, August 300, 334, 347, 503, 520 forensic hypnosis 483. See also hypnotism: forensic forget 136, 297, 420 forced 148, 156–157, 186–187
  remembering enables 420
Franklin, Benjamin 443, 503
Franklin Commission Report 443–444
Franklin, Jon 218, 503, 529
Freedom of Information Act 126, 129, 190 frequency 216 modulated 218
Freud and Breuer 475
Freud, Sigmund 503, 519
Freudian concepts 169 hook 175 hypnosis researchers 163
  hypnotists 483
Frey, Alan H. 214, 503, 526
Fried and Agassi 504
Fromm and Shor 504 frozen 466
fugue 262
Furst, Charles 504

G

Galvani 312
Galyean 232
gambling 332
Gantt, Horsley 162, 468, 521
Garrison, Jim 198
Gassner, Father 441 generalize the response 64, 182 gentle 406
Geschicter Foundation for Medical Research 116
Gestapo 148
Gibbs, Nancy 504
Gill, Merton M. 385
Gindes, Bernard C. 504
Gittinger, John 119
Glaser and Thorpe 504
Glenn, Sen. John 529 goals 423, 492
Goldstein and Farmer 504
Goleman and Thurman 504
Goleman, Daniel 504
good or evil 33, 292
Gorton, B.E. 504
Gottlieb, Sidney 111, 123–124, 190, 524, 527, 529 government contracts 470 grandiose ideas 389
grant system 470 graphics language 430 gratitude 467
Greatrakes, Valentine 440
Grinker and Spiegel 147, 504, 522
Group for the Advancement of Psychiatry 116, 525 Gruneberg, M.M. 504 guess 243, 426
Guilford Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis Serie 511 Guillotin 443 guilt 464 induced 161 repeated driving 185 to create submission 166 training 178–182

H

habit 113, 182, 257, 492
  of obedience 276 strength 243
habituation 478
hallucination 43, 73, 247, 269, 285, 302, 318, 335, 370, 374, 386, 449
  autonomous 247
    hearing a voice 66 negative 53, 65
    pain 44
    positive 48
    posthypnotic 54
    spontaneous 74
    visual 65
  negative 277, 387, 411
    difficult suggestion 293 test 184
  positive 277
    visual 47, 301
  posthypnotic 396
    multisensual 66
  visual 276, 317
Hammerschlag, Heinz E. 504
handclasp challenge 52, 325
Harriman, P.L. 162, 504
Hart, Ernest 504
Harte, Richard 504
Hartland, J 504
Harvard 134, 473
Hauptmann 521
HDTV 235
healing 441
  for survivor 412 relationship 434
Hearst, Patricia 143, 462, 504 heart rate (trance control) 174, 291, 306
Hebb, Donald 317, 504
Heidelberg case 46
Hellstromism 483
Helms, Richard 111, 123, 124, 134, 197, 527
Heron, William T. 505
Herrero 519
Heyer, G. 505 hidden observer 408, 492, 505
hierarchy 348
Hilgard, E. R. 165, 179, 505
Hilgard, Josephine 88, 505
Hillenkoetter, Roscoe 523
Hillman 505
Hindu 229, 439
Hinkle 119, 334, 505
Hinkle and Wolff 525
hippocampus 420
Hittleman, Richard. 505
holy 323
Holy See view on hypnosis 430
Holy Spirit 489
Hoover, J. Edgar 121 hope 422, 437 hopeless 436
Horsley, J. S. 505, 521
Howell, Max 357, 505
Huard, Jeanine 193
Hubbard, L. Ron 505
Hudgins 64
Hudson, T. R 505
Hughes, John C. 505
Hull, Clark 113, 369, 505, 521 humor, lost sense 300
Hunt, Morton M. 506
Hunter, Edward 119, 523
Huxley, Aldous 506
Hyman, Jackie 506
hynotism books 496–516 hyperactivity 234 hypermnesia 483

hypersuggestibility 374, 485 hypnagogic crossover 311
hypno-analysis 145, 298, 388, 485 hypnochild 166–167
hypnocourier 138
hypnodisc 322, 517
hypnogogic 205, 228, 311
  crossover 426
hypnoid 159, 310, 324, 336 drug. See narcohypnosis state 476, 485
hypnoidal stage 466
hypnopompic 311, 426
hypnoprogrammed 55, 135, 138–139
  agent 112–113
  assassin 198–201 hypnoscope 322
hypnotherapist 230, 417–418
hypnotherapy 104, 322, 358, 414–417, 480, 485 client-centered 290 course 358, 429–430 legislation 418
  regression 266–267
  techniques 430, 433–434
hypnotic
  ability. See susceptibility coercion 117, 148
  conditioning 479
  drug 520. See also narcohypnosis exploitation 31, 36 management 440
  phases 458 posture 303 predator 413
  slave 439 subject. See subject susceptibility. See susceptibility
  techniques 169
Hypnotic Induction Profile 105
Hypnotism
  The Journal of 358
hypnotism 52, 76, 89–90, 225–226, 446, 457, 518. See also suggestion; trance 4000 BC-1900 AD 439
  addiction 239
  antisocial 80, 346, 359, 380, 387–388, 447, 449, 476, 494, 495
  audience 378
  books 33, 40, 49, 80, 108, 197, 198, 358
  conditioning 386 dangers 377
  definition x, 227–228, 439
  demonstration 68–70, 73–74, 99 depth 375. See also depth of trance; hypnotism: waking detection 303
  espionage 91
  forensic 381, 483
    Texas 367 texts, training 357 highway 228
  history 439 history, criminal xi history: criminal 494
  in psych text 506 investigative/interrogation 381, 384 legislation 358
  libraries 495
  mescaline combo 199 misuse 346–355 motivation 65 mutual 230
  offensive uses 137 precautions 384 pretend 378
  rape 345, 347, 350 research goals 137–153, 191 scientific explanation 444 self 83, 230, 289, 380, 486
  somatic reaction 401–402
  speeds therapy 433 stage 29–49, 275–278, 322, 378
    fakery? 280–281
  unethical 29, 47, 114–116, 301, 346–355, 359, 364, 368, 382, 388, 410, 440, 449, 498, 500 victim identification 391–408 volunteer for 283
  waking 43, 65, 91, 116, 278, 300, 302–303, 309, 373, 374, 383, 392
  witness 363–365, 381
hypnotist 485
  behaviorist 325 convention 358
  counterintelligence 211 experimental 387, 390, 446, 476, 495 identification with 65 organization 358 psychology of 178, 385 qualifications 358, 381
  subject's role model 390
hypnotizability. See susceptibility hypnotize 62–63, 102
hypnotized refusal to admit 103
hypospray 149
hypotaxis 300
hypothalamus 176, 420 hysteria 451, 485 defined 459
  mass 337 hysteric 139 hysterical blindness 266 disorders 158 paralysis 451 symptoms 485

I

id 174, 481, 492
ideas 471
identification 464–465 with aggressor 489 identity 172
ideomotor 294–295, 425, 485
illogical, accepted 167 illusion 325 imagery 71, 172, 327, 419–421, 430 autonomous 421–422
  depth measure 299 directed 327 for forgetting 419 free 421 generating 422 guided 231 inspecting 422
  manipulating 422
  predicts susceptibility 293 reliable 421
  suggested 435
  therapy 419–421
  transformations 422 imaginary friend/playmate 83, 87, 88, 294 imagination 268–270, 276, 365 marker for susceptibility 295 immersion 90, 147–153, 410
imperativeness 161 impersonation of spirits 293
implant 160
  dynamic 185 imprint 167, 430 impulse irresistable 119

indecision 431
index word 258, 477 indignation overload 397 individuality 172
indoctrination 127, 461
induction 52, 62, 66, 84, 116, 143, 238, 275–287, 398–399, 448 anxiety/somatic reaction to 398–399 audiotaped 322
  avoiding H word 284. See also induction: disguised behavior reveals abuse 398–399 books about 304
  by abstract conditioning 325
  by boredom 317–322
  by brain syndrome 333–335
  by breathing exercises 52
  by choking 334
  by combination 319
  by confusion 213, 323
  by drug 147–153, 230. See also narcohypnosis by electroshock 153–154
  by extrasensory method 201–222 by eye focus 324
  by fatigue 348–349
  by flashing lights 322, 337
  by highway hypnosis 228, 317
  by imagery 276, 285–286, 421, 480
  by input-overload 329–331 by machine 315, 322, 337–338. See also brainwave synchronizer by mind blanking 448
  by mirror 83, 290, 322
  by monologue 319
  by monotony 228–235
  by noise 330
  by nonlogical/paradoxical 323
  by obedience 298, 326
  by Pavlovian Type 1 317–328, 462
  by Pavlovian Type 2 329, 462
  by Pavlovian Type 3 338, 462
  by Pavlovian Type 4 336, 462
  by Pavlovian Types 1-4 315
  by pretending 281
  by pyramiding. See pyramiding by relaxation 84, 102, 230, 276, 285, 351 by sensory deprivation 316–328 by shift to right brain 327 by sleep patter 171, 378
  by spinning disc 322
  by "standard" patter 381
  by standardized test 293
  by suffering 331–332
  by thought-centering 284
  by thought-stopping 323
  by verbal patter 449
  by "watching television" 354
  by yoga training 52, 348 cue 46, 54, 70, 92, 118, 119, 254, 399
    blocking 413
    over phone 92, 413, 449, 520 reinducts 241–242
    written 66
  definition 316–317
  denial 103
  disguised 89, 102, 115, 137, 150, 284–285, 325–326, 349, 361, 362, 373, 378, 380, 428, 449, 456, 518, 525 by chaperone method 361
    by conversational method 213, 286, 369, 457
    by imagery 285–286
    by relaxation 102, 285, 320–321, 361
    during medical exam 358 of sleeping subject 36, 286–287 seal breaking 428
  electronic 153, 314
  extrasensory 42, 201–222, 212 failure 288
  first 90, 170, 282–283
  forced 287–288
  group 284, 320 hardware 90, 322 maternal style 163, 328 mechanical 207
  negative 460
  paternal style 328
  patter 285
  positive 460 pressure 215 recorded 113, 322
  reflex 287–288
  repeated 46
  resistance to 296, 399, 429
  self 289–290, 439
  stages 282–283, 446
  synchronizing 207 trust element 86, 170 types 315 videotaped 322
indulgences 463
inhibition 285, 313, 315, 330, 332, 402 caused by overstimulation 460
  complete 374, 457 mechanisms 314
  of cortex 457, 458 protective reflex 460 spreading 313, 457–459
  suggested 449
inhibitory system 161 initiative, lost 299
Inquisition 424 insight 492
insomnia 63, 102, 334, 406
Inspector General 527
instinctual drives 162, 486 Institute for Defense Analysis 127 insulin shock 145 integration, healing 266, 434 intelligence budget 529 community 125, 189 gathering 84, 111
  military 180–181
  sources 528
Intelligence Committee 122 intensive 161
interrogation 60, 115, 117, 137, 145, 380, 522
  counterintelligence 211
  hypnotic chamber 318 nice cop, mean cop routine 184 resist 526 testing courier 95
introvert 139, 294, 406
intuitive abilities 492 invasion 208
IQ 317 irradiated 214 irrational 487 isolation 462
  breaking out of 100 of M-K researchers 127, 131 of mind-control victims 53, 92 tank 319

J

Jacobson, Edmund 320, 506
James, William 506
Janet, Pierre 159, 455, 506, 519
Janis 523
Jefferson, Thomas 196
Jensen, Gilbert 84
Jesus 423

John Hopkins 468
Johnson v. State 349 joke, loss of awareness 300
Jones, Penn, Jr. 197, 506
Josiah Macy Foundation 116 journalism investigative 108, 126, 180, 197, 198
Judaism 229
Jung 369, 475
Jungian 419, 469
  analysis 476
justice 356

K

Kahn, David 126, 506
Kaiser, Robert Blair 506
Kalevala 440
Kamiya 291
Kantor, "Z" 34
Katkov 300
Katz, Dolores 506
Kelly and Kelly 506
Kennedy, Jacqueline 197
Kennedy, John F. 124, 197–198, 411, 526
Kennedy, Robert F. 197–201, 411
Kennedy, Ted 191
King, Stephen 332
Kleinhauz and Beran 352, 506
Kline, Milton V. 198, 353–354, 506
Knight, Bryan M. 358, 507
Kohlberg, Lawrence 167
Kolb, Lawrence Coleman 507
Korean War 523
Korotkin and Suslova 507
Korson, S. M. 522
Kosslyn, Stephen Michael 507
Kovel, Joel 507
Kovnat, Denise Bolger 507
Kroener, Dr. 381
Kroger, William S. 337, 507
Kronenwetter, Michael 507
KSAN 107, 108
Kubie and Margolin 65
Kubie, Lawrence S. 507
Kuhn and Russo 507
kundalini 53, 335
Kuper, Andrew 507

L

Ladame 347
Lafontaine, Charles 31, 457 language 420. See also word Lapponi 520
Lassaigne, Auguste 32
Laubach, Frank 331, 507
Laubinger 528
laughter, healing 332
Lausch, Erwin 508
Lavoisier 443, 444
Lawrence and Perry 362–363, 508
Lawrence, Jodi 508
Le Roy 443 learned easily 295 helplessness 182, 485
learning
  state-dependent 427–428 theory 480, 484
LeCron and Bordeaux
  50-degree depth scale 300
LeCron, Leslie M. 369, 508
Lee and Schlain 190, 508
legal 75–81, 78–79
  appeal 78–81
  cases 346–355, 357, 361, 453–454, 471 issues in criminal hypnosis 341–355, 390 lethargy 300, 301
Leuba 508
levitation 52
Levitt, E.E 508
Lew, Mike 508
Lewis, C.S 508
libido 486 lie 368, 370, 394 detection 220
  detector 523
Liebeault 447, 508, 518
Liegeois 449, 453
Liegeois, Jules 449, 453, 455, 508
Lifton, Robert J. 119, 462, 464, 508 limbic/emotional system 176, 307, 335, 420
Lindner, Robert M. 150, 298, 508
Lisina 291 listener helps healing 415 lobotomy 145, 423, 521
Loftus, Elizabeth 508 logic, missing 431
London, Perry 509
Louis v. State 348
love 228, 295, 422, 430
Lovell, Stanley 111, 509
LSD 198
  with hypnosis 199, 506
Lubicz-Czynski, Ceslav 32
Ludwig, Arnold M. 509
Luria, A. R. 160–161, 468, 509, 520 Luys 322, 517

M

M-K-Delta Project 523 machine induction. See induction: hardware; brainwave synchonizing Madison Avenue 472 magic 440, 517
Magic, Inc. 494 magicians, Chaldean 439 magnetic field 309
  fluid 443 force 441 medicine 447
  strokings 52, 442
magnetism animal 442, 517
magnetizer 442
magnetoencephalogram (MEG) 309 magnetometer 312
Magonet, Philip A 509
Majault 443
Malko, George 509
malpractice lawsuits 357–358
Manchurian Candidate 160, 199, 366, 386 novel 410–411
Mander, Jerry 509
Mandese, Joe 472, 509
Mann, Thomas 33 manslaughter 32 mantra 321
Marchetti, Victor 126
Marcuse 371, 495, 509, 525
Marks, John 126, 189, 196, 509
Marks, Robert W. 510
Marrs, Texe 510
Marshall, George 122
Martin, David C. 510

mask, deep trance 67
masochism 162, 164
  natural development of 178 suggestions 174
massage 230
Masserman, Jules H. 162, 355, 510, 522
Maxwell, Guillaume 441, 447, 517
Mayer, Ludwig 46, 510
McCloy, John J. 522
McCone, J. 197, 526
McConnell, James V. 142, 510, 527
McDougal, William 520
McGill, Ormond 510
McGill University 123, 135, 317, 524
  Osler Library 494
McLeester, Dick 510
McVeigh, Timothy 199
Meares, A. 510
Medfield Foundation. 377 media 472, 473
  information control 382
  Information Warfare 130, 472 medical professionals 369 meditation 52, 208, 306
  in classroom 232 monastic 229
medium 31, 230, 456, 486
meek 406
Meerloo, Joost 462, 510
memory 162, 257–262, 492 absent, or too perfect 405
  blocking 402 contaminated 381 direct 268
  dynamic storage 257
  false 269, 449, 476, 523
  long-term (LTM) 257 muscle 257, 513 normal 257–258
  of names/faces 193
  recovered 62–65, 365, 405, 420, 434, 451, 488 retrieval 258, 421 revised 266
  short-term (STM) 257 spontaneous eruption of 403–404 symbolic 257, 513
  training 137–138, 302
  verbal 257, 513
Menninger Clinic 523 mental reorganization 142–143, 180 mescaline 506
Mesmer, Franz A. 441–456, 517 mesmerism 33, 441–443
mesmerist 238, 443 messenger. See courier metrazol 145
microprocessor 527
microwave signal 214–215
  audiogram 214, 527
  pulsed 214, 526, 527
midbrain 160
migraine 291, 321
milieu control 466
military 326
  intelligence 364 mind 131
Military Aptitude Test 88
Miller, Tim 510
Miller, Tom 197
mind control research 111–119 expansion 52
  reading 52, 129, 204, 208
    by scanner 220, 529
mindprint 220
Mirowitz v. State 349
MIT 527
MKULTRA 82, 123–125, 134, 137–142, 149, 191, 197, 204, 524–525, 528, 529 modeling 479
Moll, A. 43, 510, 519
Montanists 323
Montgomery, Geoffrey 510
Moss, Aaron 80, 369, 510
Moss, C. Scott 510
motivation 178, 484 infantile 388
  research 233
  specialist 30 tapes 290
motive 374
motor analyzer 308 multiple personality. See personality: multiple murder 196
music 327
Myers 510 mystical 229
myths about hypnosis 283

N

Naeslund, Robert 510
Nancy School 447–448, 518
  v. Salpetriere 453
narcoanalysis 145, 147, 483
narcohypnosis 57, 62–63, 147–153, 166–167, 168, 171, 355, 362, 388, 410, 428–429, 522 detects malingering 509 immersion 399
  in therapy 419
  training 526
narcoplexis 499
narcosynthesis 145, 153, 522
NASA's Ames Research Center. 527
National Guild of Hypnotists 494
National Institutes of Health 145, 219
National Institutes of Mental Health 473
National Science Foundation 219, 471, 528
National Security Act 121, 522
National Security Agency 125–131, 189, 524, 525
National Security Agency (528
National Security Council 121, 472
National Security Order 471 National Technical Information Service 180 navy 149
Nazi mind-control experiments 522 need-to-know 127
need-to-tell 415
needles 281 negative current 314
Nelson, Robert A. 510 nerve polarity 314 nervous burn-out 335 nervous system 481
Nettesheim, Agrippa von 440 neural net 219
neurobehavioral science 216 neurobiology 307, 312
neuron 219, 313–314 excited 313
neurophysiological response 336 neuroscience 116, 210, 218
neurosis 185, 307, 419, 451, 476, 486
  artificial 375, 433
  artificial research 160–167, 486, 520 symptoms 266
neurotic 88
neurotransmitter 162, 313, 457
New Age 230, 335
Nicolai, Carl 471
Nielsen, Bjorn Schouw 50–81

Nixon 129
Noel, Barbara 355, 510 nonverbal directive 370
nonvolition 241
Nuremberg Code 133, 524
nymphomaniac 451–452
NYU 527

O

obedience 54, 141, 143, 182, 300 4-step method 173
  internalization of 465–467 observe 257 obsession 162, 351
obsessive
  ideas 389
obsessive-compulsive neurosis 153
  neurotic 465
occult 50, 348, 440 terminology 52 Oedipal cravings 163 experience 175–182
  root 117–119, 122–125, 484
  stage, defined 175
Office of Research and Development (ORD) 526
Olson, Frank R. 524
omnipotence 374 demonstrating 463 need for 484 omniscience 463 open eyes 302
open-end clause 121
operant conditioning 486
Operation Chaos 189
Operation Mind Control 180
Operation Often 168, 526–527
operator 486 anachronism 427 controlled 290
opiate 310 opposites 100, 436, 489
oracular answers 53
orgasm 53, 333, 443
Orne, Martin T. 169, 199, 336, 351, 352–353, 368, 380–382, 510 on Mrs. E's case 382
Ornstein, Robert E. 511
OSS 111–112, 121–122, 147, 147–148, 521
Oswald, Lee Harvey 198
Oswold, Ian 511 out-of-court settlement 344, 345, 351–355 overlearned 420
overload induction 329–331 sensory 315
overstimulation 457, 462

P

Packard, Vance 525 pain 476. See also suggested: pain chronic 230 patient 230 pain and pleasure centers 176
  linkage 174 response of split personality 96
Paivio, A. 511
Paracelsus 440, 517
paradoxical phase 459 paranoid 199
  schizophrenic 200
paranormal phenomena 230
parapsychology 204, 519, 523
Pardell, S. S. 511 parent 489 child relationship 240 passes 320, 442, 518
passive 64, 317, 406 past life 424, 491
patsy 196–201
patterned input 318
Pavlov, I. P. 113, 147, 468, 511, 520
Pavlovian reversal 459, 465 syndrome 306
  vocabulary 457 penal code, model 344
pendulum 425
People v. Leyra 348 perception monopolization of 463 perineural cells 314
permissible deceit 222
Perry, C. W. 511 personality alteration of 140, 143–153 artificially-split 29, 86, 88, 91–95, 144, 169, 518, 525. See also imaginary playmate childlike 167 cover 141, 186, 392, 403 dual 159
  multiple 113, 146, 158, 159–160, 294, 403, 519 natural 165–167
  restore the original 140 restructuring 142–153
  root self 88, 92, 417, 431
  split 91, 115–116, 146, 417, 459 splitting 29, 91, 113, 158–167
PET scan 458, 528
Pettinati, Helen M. 511
pharmacological 124
Phillips, Mark E. 511 philosophy 468
phobia 94, 230, 266, 389, 404, 429, 482 physiological event 334
  state 291
piggybacking 398, 399, 428
Pincher, Chapman 511 Pines, Maya 512
pituitary 420 placebo 330, 377
Platanow, K. I. 512
Platonov 306 poetry 420
Polgar, F. J. 512 political torture help for victims 496
polygraph 127, 137, 146
Pope, et. al. 512 positive current 314 positive thinking 290 possession 293 spirit 424
post-traumatic stress symptoms 404
  syndrome 408
posthypnotic 56
  amnesia 43
  cued reinduction 287–288 suggestion 37, 43, 56, 58, 60, 62, 66, 73, 251–253, 302, 351, 364, 486, 517. See also suggestion: posthypnotic postmortem 32
Potter, David 312 power 471
Powers, Melvin 512 prayer 491
pre-induction evaluation 381

  interview 429, 457, 519
  suggestion 276, 283
pre-speech cortex 212, 215–222 preconditioned 141
predator 296
pregnant 347 press 121, 472, 495
pride 323 primary process 174, 177, 265, 388, 483, 487 primitivation 265
Princeton 124, 134 prisoners of war 404, 524 problem solving 299 procedure (intention) 307 programming 240–243, 480 chronological sequence 242 conflicting 431 dominance attributes 242
  error 396, 430
  hypno- 55, 115–116, 174 unconscious 94 prohibition 486
Project Lightning 127
Project Monarch 181
projection 487
projective techniques 400, 421, 423, 487 propaganda 121, 124, 191, 233, 318, 372, 471, 495 bandwagon 275
  techniques 370
prosopagnosia 193
psychiatrist 94, 358, 364 psychiatry 76, 210
  dynamic (unconscious) 518 physical methods 123, 145 psychic 201–222
  ability 523
  CIA 528
  experiments 204–205, 528 in trance 460
  research 204, 501 transfer 32
psychic driving 136, 156, 184–185, 524 psychoanalysis 475, 476, 483, 485, 487 in narcosis 147, 165–167, 179 view of hypnosis 65
psychoanalytic 145
  hypnotist 160–167, 240, 485
  view of hypnosis 65, 146, 174–182, 485
psychobiology 199
psychodynamic 174 psychological warfare 130–131, 472, 522 psychologist 358, 369 clinical 280, 341
  sports 30
psychology 76, 519 applied 469 behavioral 143 dynamic 380
  military 130–131, 468
  psychoanalytic 475
  textbook 500, 506
psychopharmacology 528
psychophysiologist 468 psychosis 200. See also suggested: psychosis psychosomatic 245, 306
  conversion 91, 245
psychosurgery 145
psychotherapy 476
Psychotronic Technology 204–205 pulse rate 67 pulses (neuron) 313 pumper command 298, 487 punishment 164, 182–183, 478 purification 335
Puysegur 204, 517
pyramiding suggestions.instructions 173
pyramiding suggestions/instructions 276, 326

Q

quackery 368, 447 questions leading 381, 424 persistent 424 subtle 419

R

Race, Victor 446
Rachman and Teasdale 512 radiation 216
Radiation Intelligence 216
RAND 130, 148, 523
rape (hypno-) 178, 347, 351, 444 rape, healing 332
rapport 44, 71, 72, 206, 230, 271, 365, 430, 444, 446, 448, 487
  Freudian view of 240 shift/transfer 44, 240, 491, 517
Rasputin 178
rationalize 37, 66, 253, 269, 488
Rauchman, Steven 512 reaction time (slowed) 317
reactivity (loss of) 301 readiness (pre-induction) 282–283 Reagan, Ronald 129 reality 72
  testing 299
reason by deduction 492 receptors 313
recognition 258, 427
recondition 141, 466–467 recovered memory 488 recovery effect 479 redemption 489 redintegration 426 reenacting 266
reflex 182, 240–243, 290, 480, 488
  conditioned 64, 113, 469, 476
  dominance attributes 242
  implant conditioned 458 inborn 469
  inhibition 159
refreeze 466
Regina v. Palmer 350 regression 39–40, 47–49, 65, 67, 70, 90, 102, 149, 265–266, 300, 374, 387, 403, 416, 434
  blocked 398
  blots out future 102 capacity 172, 173, 175, 387 fabricated 409
  psychoanalytic view 175 spontaneous 102, 404. See also spontaneous therapy 266
  truthful 67–68
rehypnotization 46, 280, 288, 450
Reilly, S. W. 512 reincarnation 52
reindoctrination 462, 466 reinforcement 64, 479 covert negative 499
  negative 473
  positive 277, 473
Reiser, M. 512
Reiter, P. J. 62, 306, 364–365, 381, 512, 523 takes on Erickson 372

relationship, positive 295 relaxation 301, 306–307, 317, 320, 321, 446, 480. See also induction, by relaxation progressive 102 response 306, 321
  tapes 235
  techniques 52, 316
relearn 427–428 releasing 266 religion circuits 492 Eastern 229 experiences, research 506 remember 266
  diphasic act 258
  intention to 258
Remote Neural Monitoring 215 remote viewing 204–205, 528 Renaissance 440, 441
reorient 171–172
repattern 524 repetition 184–185. See also induction: by repetition of message 466 report direct 393 repressed return of the 488
repressed, return of the 174 repression 158, 165, 177, 179–182, 392, 483, 487, 488 emotional 403
  of traumatic event 266–267 reprogram 141–142, 431
research 440, 470
  budget, federal 528
  duty 469 hypnotism/mind-control 84, 111–119 patent process 471 unlimited 469 resistance 58, 165, 182, 258, 433, 488
  overcoming 195
  to hypnosis 117, 147 resonance frequency 218 respect and obey 296
response alternative 182, 479
  automatic 441
  deviant 479 responsibility 363 retarded 296
reticular activating system (RAS) 305, 308 retracted 271
revivification 102–103, 266, 366, 427 reward and punishment 142
Rheingold, Howard 529
Rhodes, Raphael H. 512 rigid 245–246, 281
Rockefeller Foundation 145
Rockefeller, Vice President 190 Rohypnol 529 role-playing 266, 427, 448, 488
  operator 103
Rolin, Jean 512
Roosevelt, President 111, 121
root self 91
Rorschach 293, 488. See also projective; projection Rothschild, David, et. al 512
Rowland, L. W. 97, 512
Ruby, Jack 198–199
Ruckman, Peter 512 running your energy through a person 208

S

safehouse 134, 197, 526, 528
Sala affair 50, 80, 348
salivary output 290
Sallin 443
Salpetriere 379, 451–454, 518
Salter, Andrew 369, 386, 410, 512 sanity 46, 80, 105, 200, 394–395 Sarbin, Theodore 368, 379
Sargant, William 135, 159, 461, 512 satellite cameras 128 scale, performance 299
scan 210, 218–220
Schacter, Daniel L. 513
Scheflin and Opton 108, 513
Schilder and Kauders 484, 513 schizoid personality 351
schizophrenic 201, 355
Schneck, J.M. 119
Schorr, Daniel 513
Schrag, Peter 513
Schreiber, Flora Rheta 165, 513
Schrenck-Notzing, A.N. 513
Schultz, J. H. 513
Schwann cells 314
Schwartz, Bickford, and Rasmussen 513
Science and Technology Directorate 526 Scientology 225
scopolamine 147 script 167
  training 169
Scripture 435
seal breaking 428
sealing 46, 55, 62–63, 116, 139, 203, 364, 399, 429, 480, 520 seance 31, 439, 489
Sears, Alden 134, 524, 525 secret xi, 178, 197, 470, 471 agencies 113, 120
  For the King's Eyes Only 443 police 210
  will rule 125
Secretary of Defense 126 security clearances 180 security oath 89
sedative 150 seers 204 self talk 492
  waking 298
sensory deprivation 145, 276, 315, 326, 462, 463 sensory distortion 374 Sentic Cycles 306
septum 305 sequence, command 44 sequential coding 420 sex 52–53
  assault 123, 165, 352, 358, 449. See also rape desire 161, 333, 444 dysfunction 230, 404
  in therapy 430
  obsession 335
  orgasms 443
  primary process element 174 with hypnotist 347–349, 352–355 with instructor 358
Sextus, Carl 513 shadow 489 shaping. See behavior: shaping Sharp, Joseph C. 214, 527 shock 82, 332. See also electric: shocks shutdown (overload) 330
SI (subconscious isolation) 160 sigh (deep, evidence of lowering consciousness) 254, 429 sigh (deep, evidence of lowering subconsciousness) 306 signal system (Pavlov's)

  first 241, 243
  second 241, 243
Signals Intelligence 216
Silva Mind Control 206, 225, 232, 319, 327
Simpson, Christopher 513
Simson-Kallas, Eduard 200 simultaneous 421 sin 472 singing 327, 420
Sirhan Sirhan 107, 198–201
SKBI Research Group 511
Skeptics, the 378–379
Skinner, B. F. 470, 473–474, 513 slain in the Spirit 209 sleep 446, 449
  continuous (drugged) 145 deprivation 102, 119
  induction 320
  partial 458 patterns 406 suggestions 448 teaching 145 temple 440
sleepwalker 302, 446 slips of tongue 519
smoking, stop 358
social isolation. See isolation Society for Clinical and Experimental Hypnosis 523 Society for the Investigation of Human Ecology 116, 125, 185, 380, 525
Sodium Amytal 62, 147, 152, 166, 355, 520 Sodium Pentothal 147, 171, 521 solution learning 480 somnambulic passion 240
somnambulism
  artificial 446, 517
  deep stage 293, 374
somnambulist 36, 43, 62, 63–66, 276, 297, 299–301, 346, 374–375, 443, 447, 457, 489, 495 genetic 115
somnolence 300 song lyrics 420 sore spot 463 soul 469
source amnesia 426
Soviet mindcontrol research 124, 204
Spanos and Chaves 513
Spanos, N. P. 368, 379
spasm 335
Special Forces 88, 195, 211
speech 420
speech center 215–216 Spiegel, Herbert 201, 513 spiritualism 486, 518
spontaneous
  multiple personality 165–166
  trance 101, 403–404
stage hypnotists. See hypnosis: stage Stanford Research Institute 204 stare 201, 206, 300, 324 starvation 119, 306, 463 state of consciousness 310 state of equalization 459
State v. Levitt 349
Stephenson, Sir William 112, 513 stimulant 149 stimulus 241, 321 noxious 478 weak 459 stimulus-response machine 182
Stine, G. Harry 513
Stockholm syndrome 489
stop-smoking clinic 322
Stover and Nightingale 513 stream-of-consciousness 426 stress 330, 402, 459, 464
  management 358 strong stimulus 459
stuporous 300, 303, 374
subconscious. See also unconscious consent 361
  isolate 88, 170
  isolation 137, 160, 523
subject 426, 442, 490 bonding together 240
  normal 135, 159, 394–395
  rights of 290
  terminal 133–137
  training 240–241
  unknowing 36, 113–114, 158–160, 495, 518
subjective 491
subjugation 463 subliminal 207, 319, 472, 490, 491, 525 audio 215 messages 235, 236
  projection 145
subordination 166
Suedfeld, Peter 513
Sufism 229
suggested amnesia 115, 370, 524
  anxieties 145
  arousal 174
  blindness 43 blisters 174 breast milk (start or stop) 174 burn 32
  colorblindness 375 conversion 144
  convulsion 104
  crime 293, 450
  crisis 442
  deafness 43 death 32
  dream 354
  epileptic seizure 442 false confession 38 false testimony 43
  forced marriage 352
  hypochondria 389
  indecent exposure 353
  masochism 174
  miscarriage 174, 306
  murder 44, 55, 57, 119, 198–201, 244
  neurosis 395
  obsessive ideas 389
  pain 43, 145, 373
  paralysis 43
  personas 169–170
  phobia 94
  physiologic changes 174, 290–291, 305–306 psychosis 55, 61, 72, 395 rape. See rape (hypno-) robbery/murder 37, 44–45, 348, 351, 384, 450 self-injury 381
  sensory deprivation 375 suicide 45–46, 99, 348 vomiting 174
suggestibility 52, 174, 377–378, 444 enhanced 148, 153, 278, 332
suggestion 36, 43, 63–65, 237, 444, 490, 517 direct vs. indirect 238, 370 extraverbal 238 indirect 45, 353–354, 370
  intraverbal 238 literal 301, 435 mutual 240
  nonverbal 238
  positive 435
  posthypnotic 63–66, 113, 114, 119, 137–138, 142, 243, 448,

    486. See also posthypnotic
    test 184
  pre-induction 283 rejected 344–345
  repeated 375
  systematic 374
  verbal 238, 241
superconducting quantum interferometric device (SQUID) 314
superconscious 491
superego 481, 492
  artificial 55, 65, 170, 182, 390
Supreme Court 381
surveillance 128–131
susceptibility 36, 50, 88, 89, 102, 115, 139, 203, 277, 292–294, 299, 374, 378, 444, 455, 484 child 294 genetic 293 multiple personality 294 non- 398
  of extravert/introvert 139 personality types 139, 292–294 scales 525 screening for 292–293
  test 490
  training 297–298, 398 unusual 398
Svengali 29–31, 353, 367, 519
Sybil 165 symbol. See imagery symptom conversion 243–244 removal 245, 480, 490
synapse (neural) 257, 313
synchronize. See brainwave synchronization

T

TA 491
Tabern and Volwiler 521
Tardieu 347, 513
Tart, Charles T. 300, 513
teacher (public school) 231 Tebbetts, Charles 373, 429–430, 513
technocracy 472
Teitlebaum, Myron 90, 359, 514 telephone. See induction: cue, over phone television 234, 332 tell (need to) 415 temperature body 174, 291
Ter-Pogossian, Michel 528 terrorism 472 test (after trance) 65, 184, 410–411, 490 follow-up 285, 479, 490 standardized 299 with pain/shame 95
testimony 75–76
thalamus 305, 308
Thematic Apperception Test 105, 139, 293, 400
therapist credentialing/training 418 gender choice 417 lay 418
therapy 71–72, 355, 391–408, 491 accepting 433 action 470 addiction to 491 brief 423, 480 client-directed 433 cost 417 parts 420–436
  past-life 358, 430
  process 416–417, 433
  strengthen subject 433
  talk 416, 491
theta brainwaves 310, 336
Thigpen and Cleckley 435–436, 514 thinktank 127
Thoinot, L. 347, 514
Thomas, Gordon 514
thorazine 94 Thouret 444 threat 47, 54, 172, 463 Tibet 291
time
  in therapy 416, 436
  meaningless concept 300 missing 35, 103, 114, 346 token economy 491
torture 95, 491, 526
Tourette, Gilles 451, 455, 514 train 36, 43, 52–55, 57, 115–116, 140–142, 276–277, 287–288, 297–298, 325–326, 444, 462 flatworms 142 increases susceptibility 292, 297–298 mind-control experts 86 trance 225–226, 392, 492. See also hypnotism automatistic 441 capacity 229. See also susceptibility creative 228
  deep 227–228, 374–375 depth. See depth of trance hyperalert 333
  light 227, 301, 370
  logic 491
  management 447
  natural 228
  operator-managed 230 personal experience 225–226 physiology of 305–310, 457, 497 profound/coma 301–303
  psychic 205
  reaction to onset 398–399 reverses nerve polarity 314–315 self-recognition of 300 subjective experience 227 walking/waking 53, 302–303. See also somnambulism tranceable 491
tranquilizer 94, 524
Transcendental Meditation 306 transfer of rapport 491
transference 63–65, 165, 240, 433, 448, 491 interpretation 485
  reaction 487
transidentification 389
transmarginal 458 collapse 464 states 459 stimulation 458 transmission to brain via skin 471
trauma 329–335 treatment 412–436, 478 trial 75–76
Trilby 29, 411, 519
Truman, Harry 120, 125 trust 240, 283, 295
truth 68, 108, 127, 221, 368, 386, 472, 495 truth serum 124, 148
Tulane University 525 tunnel of forgetfulness 430
Tunney, Gene 86
Turner, Stansfield 205, 528 tyranny 527

U

- UCLA 527
- Udolf, Roy 359, 361, 514
- ULTRA 123
- ultraparadoxical 159, 459, 464
- unconscious 451, 481, 490, 491. See also subconscious
  - accepts beliefs 492
  - "agreement" to be hypnotized 284, 361
  - association 64
  - behavior 241
  - characteristics of 492
  - conditioned reflexes 240–241
  - ESP base 204–205
  - goal-setting 423
  - habit 321. See also habit
  - isolate. See subconscious isolate
  - motivators 525
  - self-healing 422
  - study of 444
- unfreeze 466
- United States
  - documents 514
  - Justice Department 471
  - v. Springston 351

V

- Valenstein, Elliot 215, 514
- Van Pelt, S. J. 514
- Vanderbilt University 494
- variable, intervening 243
- Verdier, Paul A 514
- vibrations, ultrasonic 145
- videotape 381
- vigilambulism 289, 323
- vision 229, 230
  - quest 335
- visual activity 310
- visual blackness 300
- visualization 57, 247–249, 285, 327, 354, 420–421, 493
  - ability 295
  - of "guide" 231–232
- Voisin, August 296
- Volgyesi, Ferenc 148, 153, 306, 334, 337, 514, 520, 522
- voltage, neural 314
- Von Schrenck 514
- voodoo death 32

W

- Waco 473
- wake up 53, 479, 493
- Walter, Franz 41, 47–48
- Warren Commission 124, 198, 526
- Warrington and Weiskrantz 514
- watch list 189
- watch operation 128
- Watergate 527
- Watkins, J. G. 117–119, 147, 423, 514
- Watson, John B. 469, 520
- Watson, Peter 130–131, 515
- weakness 406
- Weinstein, Harvey 135, 515
- Welch, Livingston 325
- Wells and Brenman 383–384
- Wells, Raymond 44, 371, 383–384, 515
- West, Louis Jolyon 199, 515
- Wetterstrand 519
- White, George 111, 134–135
- white noise 317
- White, R. W. 65, 175, 484, 515
- Whole Life Expo 208
- Wichita State University 494
- Wiener, Norbert 116, 174, 515
- will 302
  - against his 287–288
  - power 50, 360
- Williams, Glanville 515
- Williams, Griffith 515
- Winn, Ralph B. 515
- Wisner, Frank 111
- witches 376
- witness 60, 381
  - expert 178, 357, 358
- Wolberg, L. R. 369, 515
  - Five-step Therapy 433
- Wolff 119, 133
- word 492
  - association. See association
  - conditioned stimulus 240–241
  - key 128
  - written
    - dominates spoken 233–234, 435
- Wortman, Loftus, and Marshall 515
- Wright, Erik M. 515
- writers on criminal hypnosis 494–495
- Wundt, Wilhelm 519

Y

- Yale 113
- yoga 225, 306, 323, 335
  - kundalini 53
  - training 51, 348
- Young, Paul Campbell 369, 371, 387–408, 516, 520
- Young, Spurgeon, case 346

Z

- Zeig, Jeffrey K. 516
- Zen 229, 306

Thank you, God, for enabling the completion of this long and heavy task of telling. All glory be to You in Your holy aspect of Truth.

Carla Emery

This photo was taken by Mark Spencer of Zelienople, Pennsylvania, in his living room. Mark is a professional photographer. While visiting Mark and his family, I told him I needed some photos. He said, “Sure.” Half an hour later, he had captured 25 different Carla-expressions. (He used a small colored screen as a backdrop.) Corey chose the close-mouthed look. Actually, I can smile and show my teeth, too.

Corey Smigliani

Corey Smigliani is a graduate of the Massachusettes College of Art and currently resides in the Boston area, sharing the roof of Art Making Factory #53 with some talented alumni and friends. With the solemn “Secret, Dont Tell” under her belt, Corey is looking forward to working on some lighter ideas of her own.

Should you care to get in touch with Corey, she may be reached via her hometown P.O. Box of 264 - Brant Rock, MA 02020.

Have nothing to do with the fruitless deeds of darkness, but rather expose them. For it is shameful even to mention what the disobedient do in secret. But everything exposed by the light becomes visible, for it is light that makes everything visible. This is why it is said:

Wake up, O sleeper, rise from the dead,
and Christ will shine on you.

Ephesians 5: 11-14 NIV

I. Case Histories of Criminal Hypnosis
II. A Partial History of U. S. Government Mind-control Research
III. Trance Phenomena
IV. Induction Methods
V. Legal and Therapy Issues in Criminal Hypnosis
VI. Reference: History, Glossary, Bibliography, Chronology, Index

> But all at once...with one wave of his hand over her - with one look of his eye - with a word - Svengali could turn her into the other Trilby, his Trilby - and make her do whatever he liked...
>
> George Du Maurier, Trilby, 1894

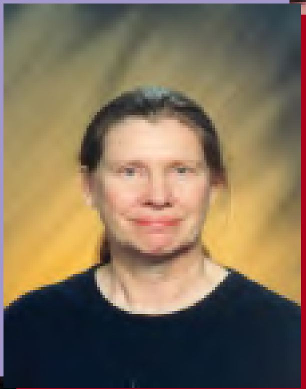
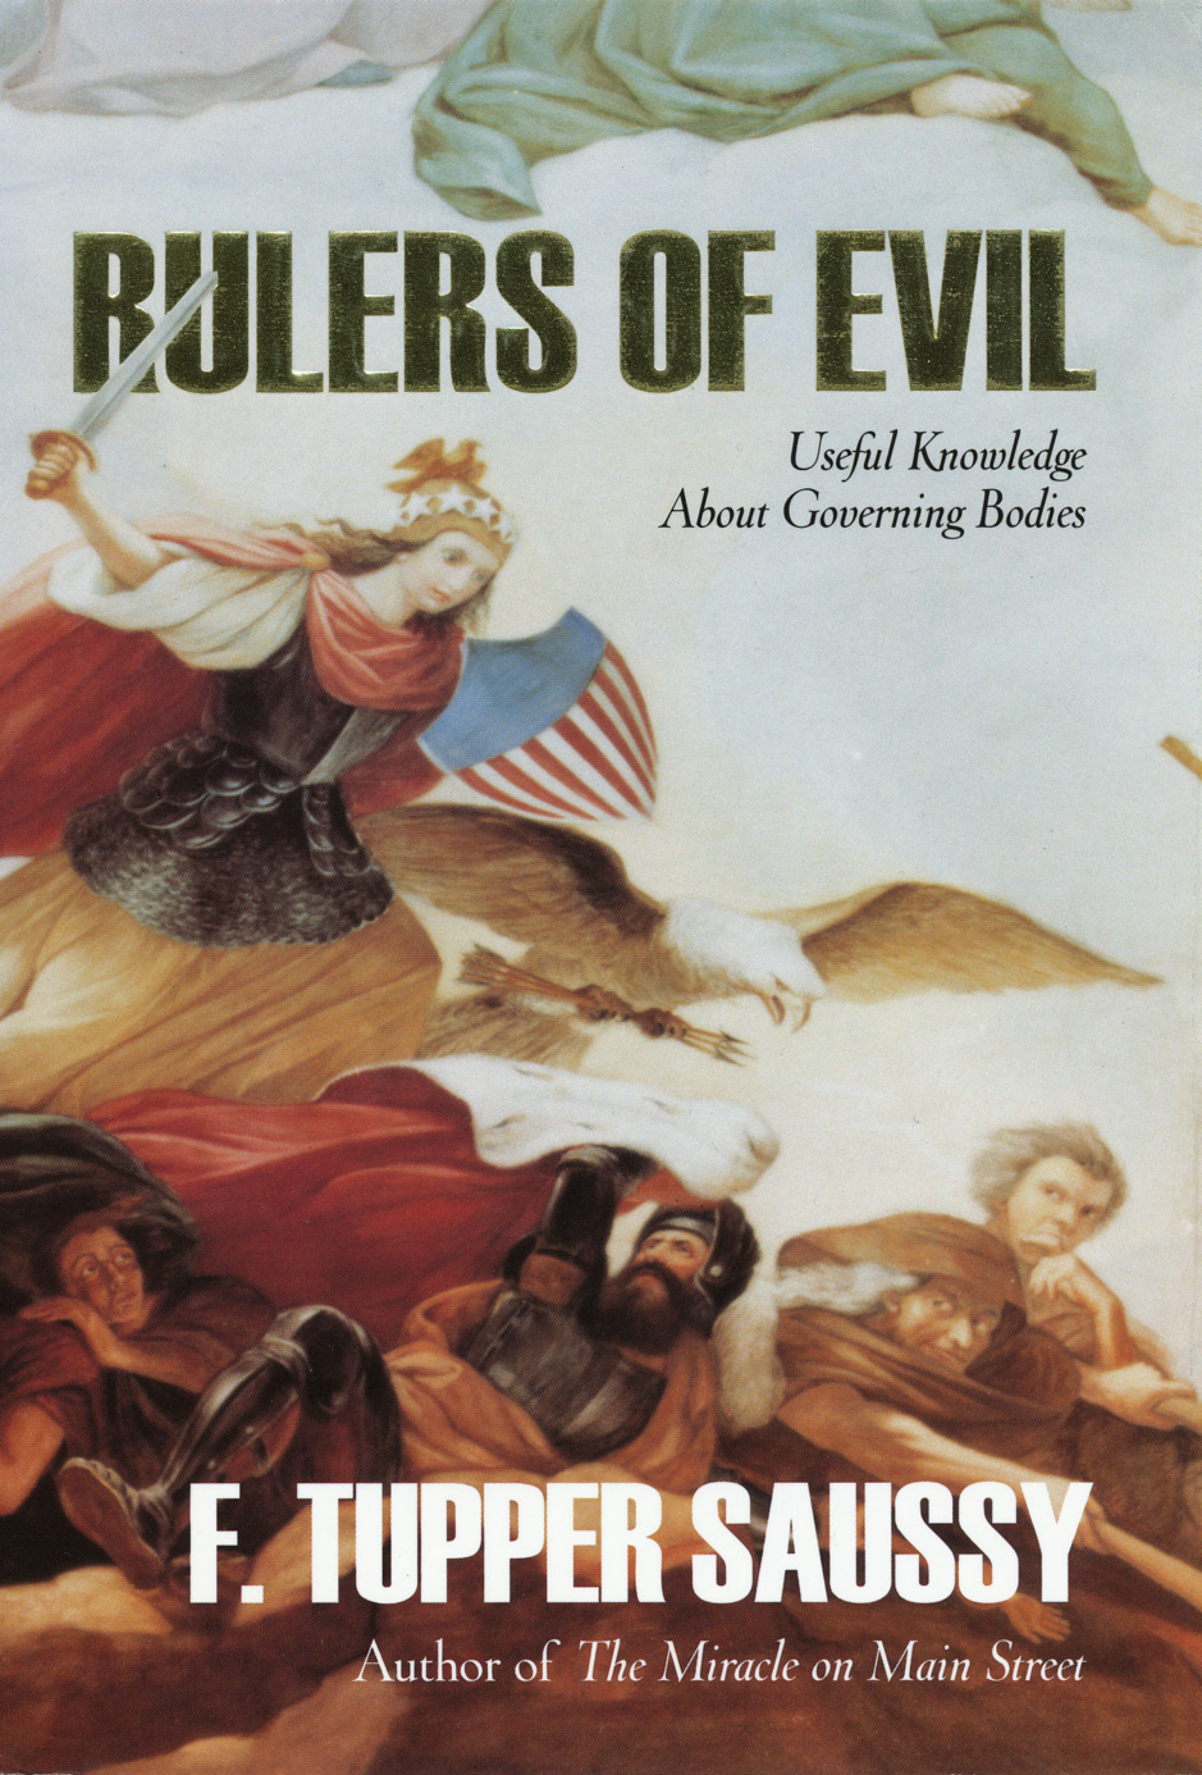
From corrupt therapists to unethical researchers to secretive government agencies, Svengalis have victimized the unsuspecting and the imprudent. SECRET, DON'T TELL is a good read about this too-long closed subject, exposing the darker side of hypnotism throughout history - a world where real-life Svengalis abuse their hapless Trilbys.

Born from the author's own painful experience with unethical hypnosis, SECRET, DON'T TELL is the product of over a decade of interviews and diligent scholarly research. It is a true encyclopedia in the field of hypnosis and modern mind-control technologies, indispensable for anyone interested in trance phenomena, psychotherapy, psychoanalysis, counseling, or related fields of law.

Yet Carla Emery's writing is far from stuffy or academic. This book is intensely readable, with the pace of an excellent suspense novel. It is both compelling and terrifying - and every word is true.

Carla Emery is a mother, speaker, and writer - especially of encyclopedias. She is the author of the critically and publicly acclaimed Encyclopedia of Country Living, a basic reference work in the field of family food production ("goats and gardens"). In print for 25 years, currently in its ninth edition, this old-fashioned recipe book and how-to manual now has some 400,000 copies in print. She is also a perceptive watcher and clarion of world events affecting our environment, health, freedoms, and fortunes.





RULERS OF EVIL

Useful Knowledge About Governing Bodies

F. TUPPER SAUSSY

Author of The Miracle on Main Street

RULERS OF EVIL

Useful Knowledge About Governing Bodies

F. TUPPER SAUSSY

OSPRAY
BOOKMAKERS

Copyright © 1999 by Frederick Tupper Saussy

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reproduced or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic or mechanical, including photocopying, recording, or by any information storage or retrieval system, without permission in writing from the publisher.

Published by Ospray Bookmakers, Reno, Nevada

Further information:
Pastoral Business
1223 Wilshire Boulevard, No. 855
Santa Monica, California 90403

World rights inquiries:
The Peter Fleming Agency
peterfleming@earthlink.net
15200 Sunset Boulevard, Suite 204
Pacific Palisades, California 90272

ISBN 0-9673768-0-7
First Edition

OSPRAY BOOKMAKERS IS AN IMPRIMATUR OF THE ORDER OF SIMON PETER, LAS VEGAS, NEVADA

“The worst thing you can do in life is underestimate your adversary.”

—PRESIDENT WILLIAM J. CLINTON, CBS News, March 31, 1999

xx The Capitol dome*
1 Time Magazine Cover*
6 Fasces*
8 The Washington Nunciature*
11 Emperor Constantine* 12 Mithras & David†
14 Pope Gregory IX Excommunicating the Holy Roman Emperor*
18 Pope Clement VII & the Holy Roman Emperor*
21 Martin Luther*
26 Ignatius de Loyola*
34 The Baphomet*
36 Map of Troyes*
42 Fingerstroke of God*
46 Giulia Farnese*
54 The Spirit of Trent (after Sebastiano Ricci)*
62 Ignatius in Heaven†
96 Lorenzo Ricci†
114 Castel Sant'Angelo*
116 Washington in Masonic Regalia*

ILLUSTRATIONS

124 Charles Thomson*
128 Cardinal Robert Bellarmine*
134 John Stuart, Lord Bute*
146 Bishop John Carroll*
154 Archbishop von Hontheim*
166 King George III*
186 East India Company Flag†
202 American Graffiti†
204 The Mosaic Seal†
226 L'Enfant's Plan of Washington*
228 Congressional Medal of Honor†
232 Seal of Georgetown University‡
234 Persephone, Goddess of the Capitol‡
246 "Apotheosis of Washington"§
248 Constantino Brumidi*
252 Rev. Charles Chiniquy*
257 The States§ / The Virgin pursues evildoers§
258 Young America§
259 Jehu worshiping Shalmaneser II†
261 Mercury 6k Morris§ 293-5 The Annu Signature*, †, ‡

* sketch by the author † author's collection
‡ photographed by the author
§ Architect of the Capitol

Introduction: ix
  Preface ix
  Foreword xi
  Orientation xiii
1: Subliminal Rome 1
2: Missionary Adaptation 9
3: Marginalizing the Bible 15
4: Medici Learning 19
5: Appointment at Cyprus 27
6: The Epitome of Christian Values 35
7: The Fingerstroke of God 43
8: Moving In 55
9: Securing Confidence 63
10: Definitions 77
11: The Thirteen Articles Concerning Military Art 85
12: Lorenzo Ricci's War 97
13: The Secret Bridge 117
14: The Dogma of Independence 129

CONTENTS

15: The Madness of King George III 135
16: Tweaking the Religious Right 147
17: A Timely Grand Tour 155
18: The Stimulating Effects of Tea 167
19: Death and Resurrection of Lorenzo Ricci 187
20: American Grafitti 203
21: Jupiter's Earthly Abode 227
22: The Immaculate Conception 235
23: The Dome of the Great Sky 247
24: The Mark of Cain 265
25: The Two Ministries 279
Appendix 293
  A: Fifty Centuries of the Annu Signature 293
  B: Superior Generals of the Society of Jesus 296
  c: Glossary 298
  D: Notes 303
  E: Bibliography 313
  F: Index 318

RULERS OF EVIL

Introduction

PREFACE

THE ONLY PEOPLE in the world, it seems, who believe in the conspiracy theory of history are those of us who have studied it. While Franklin D. Roosevelt might have exaggerated when he said “Nothing happens in politics by accident; if it happens, it was planned that way,” Carroll Quigley – Bill Clinton’s favorite professor at Georgetown University – boldly admitted in his Tragedy & Hope (1966) that (a) the multitudes were already under the control of a small but powerful group bent on world domination and (b) Quigley himself was a part of that group.

Internet conspiracy sites strive to identify the conspiratorial factions. We get pieces here and pieces there. The world is run by Freemasons, some say. Other say Skull & Bones, and a loose confederation of secret societies. CIA gets lots of votes, along with Mossad (though I suspect these factions are merely tools) and, of course, “the British.” A major frontrunner is the International Banking Cartel. When Victor Marsden published The Protocols of the Elders of Zion in 1906, which purported to be a Jewish plan to take over the world, Jewish writers denied responsibility, charging a Catholic plot to defame Jewry. Whose side was Marsden on? You can get so deep into conspiracies that the suspects start canceling each other out. It can become frustrating.

I'm happy to report that F. Tupper Saussy has come to our emotional rescue. During his ten years as a fugitive from the Department of Justice (convicted of a crime that cannot be found in the lawbooks), Saussy occupied himself with an investigation into the powers that be. It was an investigation the likes of which, as far as I know, has never before been undertaken. The fruit of his amazing legwork is Rulers of Evil, a powerful book that in less loving hands might have been angry and judgmental.

Saussy's thesis: There is indeed a small group that runs the world, but we can't call it a conspiracy because it identifies itself with signs, mottoes, and monuments. Signs, mottoes, and monuments? you ask. Quick: what occupies the highest point on the U.S. Capitol building? It's probably the most oft-published statue on earth, and you can't name it? As long as you don't know whose feet are firmly planted atop your country's legislative center, or how she got there, or whence she came, the group that controls America remains invisible. Once you know these things, the fog begins lifting.

Saussy has analyzed hundreds of signatory clues left by the true rulers of the world, clues that we have perhaps been trained to ignore. He's traced them to their origins, and matched them to facts of history going back six thousand years – all balanced against the most reliable human reference work there is, the Bible. The result: an unavoidable touchstone for all future works on the subject.

Rulers of Evil is an indispensable study book that you'll probably deface from cover to cover with highlighting. By all means keep it on your lower library shelf, within close reach of inquisitive children.

— Pat Shannon
Journalist-at-Large, MEDIA BYPASS

Introduction

FOREWORD

WHETHER OR NOT it's appropriate for a literary agent to write his client's Foreword, I don't know. If I'm breaking the rules here, well, this is a rule-breaking book. Example. During last spring's Bookexpo in Los Angeles, I agently introduced my client, Tupper Saussy, to one of New York's most unshockable publishing executives. As Tupper articulately summarized Rulers of Evil for him, I personally witnessed the brow of this fearless executive develop a twitch. I saw him actually gulp. With my own ears I heard him say, "This is a little too extreme for us."

The twitch developed as Tupper was saying "the Roman Catholic Church really does run the world, including the United States government, and this is openly declared in monuments and emblems and insignia as well as official documents..." By the time Tupper calmly reached his payoff – "And this is good, because it's divinely ordained" – the exec was staring into space.

All right, Rulers of Evil is extreme. (Does that frighten you?) It was researched and written during a decade of flight that probably saved the author's life from vindictive federal authorities. I wanted to represent this book from the moment I read the first draft back in 1993, completely unaware that its author could claim the classic Miracle On Main Street as his own. (Tupper Saussy's identity was not revealed to me until his capture in 1997. He can keep a secret.)

Like no book I've seen in my thirty years of literary-agenting, Rulers of Evil lays out who's really who in world power, pegs them as evil (about as evil as the rest of us, more or less), and then explains how spiritual wickedness in high places works for the ultimate good of mankind. It's the book about conspiracies that doesn't advocate throwing the bums out.

Rulers of Evil is almost a self-help product. The useful knowledge it imparts reveals the world structure as it really is. Once we can see, our choices increase, our pathways widen, and our lives improve.

But don't expect a breeze. Parts of the book are so rich in historical detail that your brain might feel over-burdened. When that happens, just flip to more readable parts. Or study the pictures. My client doesn't mind being read casually, back to front, front to back, middle out, a few pages at a time. Enjoy freedom of movement. If a chapter doesn't fit today's mood, find another that does. Use a bookmark, or the dustjacket flaps.

Ultimately, you'll get it all. And when you do, I predict you'll be a different person. You'll have a new worldview, one shaped by evidence that has never been assembled quite this way before. I can say this with confidence because Rulers of Evil is still influencing my own life, having begun in me a process of answering many of the heretofore unanswerable questions of our time.

— Peter Fleming
THE PETER FLEMING AGENCY

Introduction

ORIENTATION

"The only new thing in this world is the history you don't know."
— PRESIDENT HARRY S. TRUMAN

ON FRESHMAN ORIENTATION day at the University of the South in Sewanee, Tennessee, I took a seat across the table from my faculty advisor. He was a professor of botany named Edmund Berkeley. Dr. Berkeley studied the tab on my manila file folder as though it were some rare species of leaf. Suddenly his eyes leapt into my face. Giddy eighteen-year-old that I was, I gulped and tried to smile.

'"Saussy,"' he mused calmly. "Good Huguenot name."

The word stumped me. "Huguenot?"

"'Saussy' is a French name," he lectured. "Sewanee is a Protestant university. Your people must have been Huguenots."

I silently forgave my father for never having told me our name was French and that our ancestors might have been something called "Huguenots."

"What exactly are Huguenots?" I inquired.

"French Protestants," declared my advisor. "Massacred by soldiers ordered by Catherine d'Medici in cahoots with the Jesuits.

The survivors were exiled. Some established in England, others in Prussia. Some came to America, as your people obviously did."

"Jesuits." Now that was a familiar word. In Tampa, my hometown, there was a high school named Jesuit. Jesuit High was greatly esteemed academically and athletically. I was aware of a connection between the Jesuits and the Roman Catholic Church, but little else.

"What are Jesuits?" I asked.

"Oh, the Jesuits are members of the Society of Jesus," he replied. "Excellent men. Intellectuals. They work exclusively for the Pope, take an oath to him and him alone. Some people call them the Pope's private militia. Kind of a swordless army. Controversial. They've gotten into trouble meddling with civil governments in the past, trying to bring them under the Pope's dominion, you know, but in this century they've been tamed down considerably. They're wonderful educators."

That night I called my father, who answered Dr. Berkeley's surmise. Yes, our people were Huguenots. They arrived at Savannah harbor in the latter half of the eighteenth century, after a stopover of several generations in Scotland. They had indeed been run out of their beloved country, the same way the Jews were run out of Germany. Nazis chased the Jews, Jesuits chased us. Ah, but that was a long time ago, my father said, and I agreed. Forgiveness is a great virtue, and it's best to let bygones be bygones. So I forgot about Huguenots and Jesuits and plunged into my college career, my future, my life.

I never had occasion to think about my conversation with Edmund Berkeley until some thirty years later, in August of 1984, during a brief but telling encounter with an assistant United States attorney by the name of John MacCoon. We were standing a few paces apart in the marble hallway outside a federal courtroom in Chattanooga, waiting for the morning session to be called. I was on the docket, scheduled to be arraigned on charges of willful failure to file income tax returns for the years 1977, 1978, and 1979.

I had no doubt that the charges would be dropped. The statute I had supposedly run afoul of applied to persons "required" to file returns. Yet I possessed a letter signed by the IRS District Director stating that a diligent search of IRS files had failed to disclose any tax liability in my name for those years. People who have no tax liability are not required to file returns. Why was I there?

The booming voice of a lawyer friend broke my concentration. "Tupper," he said, guiding me over to John MacCoon, "have you met your prosecutor?"

He introduced us in a jovial fashion and then rushed off to a huddle of other litigants.

MacCoon and I shook hands. "John," I asked, feeling the need to make small talk, "are you from Chattanooga?"

"No," he replied, "I came from Washington."

Something inside told me to press. "So you're originally from Washington?"

"No, originally I'm from New Orleans."

"I have lots of cousins in New Orleans," I beamed. He seemed to get a little edgy.

"Well, the name Saussy is not unknown there," he said.

"One of my favorite cousins lives in New Orleans," I said, and named my cousin.

"He's your cousin? Why, he and I were ordained together."

"Ordained?" I asked. "My cousin is a Jesuit priest. Are you a Jesuit?"

"Yes," said my prosecutor, now visibly agitated. "You know, I might have to recuse myself...."

"I've got a better idea, drop the charges."

"Oh no, I couldn't do that."

The dialogue ended suddenly with the hoarse drawl of a bailiff announcing that court was now in session.

So John MacCoon was a Jesuit! The media, spoonfed by his offices, had already branded me a "tax protestor." What was going on? Were the Jesuits chasing Protestants again?

Actually, I had not protested any taxes at all. I had merely discovered some truths about the tax and monetary laws and had dared to stand on them. As with the Huguenots and the truths they'd discovered about Christianity, authorities were offended. Wasn't it interesting that both of us – my ancestors and me – were branded as antisocial, repugnant, as people who disturb good order by daring to "protest"? Was this a religious persecution here? Was my stand on Truth somehow so offensive that the Pope had dispatched one of his swordless warriors to do me in? And then there was the date. The charges against me were filed on July 31st. That happens to be the Feast Day of St. Ignatius Loyola, the founding father of the Society of Jesus. According to the dogma of the Roman Liturgical Calendar, any cause initiated on a saint's feast day is especially worthy of the saint's attention.

A bizarre series of furtive proceedings occurred over the next eleven months. Exculpatory evidence was ignored or suppressed. There were prosecutorial improprieties, which the court excused. When I attempted to avoid the consequences of the improprieties, I was punished. Few precedents for such judicial steam-rolling could be found outside the annals of the Roman Inquisition, which I learned had been administered since 1542 by the Jesuits. What was this – the American Inquisition? All the while, the IRS, John MacCoon, and the media kept labeling me "tax protestor." Sometimes they would slip and call me a "tax evader," even though I had never been accused of the much more serious crime of tax evasion.

Ultimately, a jury acquitted me of willfully failing to file income tax returns for 1978 and 1979. But for 1977 they found willfulness, and the higher courts upheld their verdict. It was only a misdemeanor. The last defendant in my district to be convicted on the same count had been sentenced to six weeks. But the court sentenced me to a full year, the maximum allowed by statute. This was due to what the prosecutor called my "unrepentance." Some say I should have wept crocodile tears and promised to mend my ways. But that would be gameplaying. How can you repent of willfully failing to do something that was never required in the first place?

WHEN I soberly reviewed the long list of prosecutorial absurdities, I decided that I was being punished for something not remotely connected to willfulness in filing tax returns. I was being punished for mobilizing what turned out to be the only constitutional issue no court in the United States will fully entertain – the money issue.

Back in the late seventies, I discovered that constitutional government was contravening every American's right to an economy free of fluctuating monetary values. I wrote a book The Miracle On Main Street: Saving Yourself and America from Financial Ruin (1980), in which I compared American money as mandated by the Constitution – gold and silver coin – with American money currently in use – notes, computer entries, and base-metal tokens. Not only was the money in use inferior to constitutional money, but also it had been introduced without a constitutional amendment. Since our values were denominated in units of lawless money, we had become a lawless nation. Quality of life follows quality of money. I urged the people to take the initiative in nudging government officials to restore the kind of monetary system established by the Constitution. The ultimate payoff would be a wholesome society. Main Street activism would have worked a miracle.

MOMS caught on very quickly. Activists began asserting economic rights in many creative ways. To assist and document their work, I launched "The Main Street Journal." Published more or less monthly, the MSJ reported in detail the interesting, sometimes frightening consequences of economic rights activism.

By July 1984, my book and my journal had expanded into a growing bibliography of historic and legal materials related to the money issue. I was speaking all over the country, and holding well-attended seminars in Tennessee. We had history on our side. The Framers of the Constitution had unanimously voted down the kind of monetary system that was destroying modern America, and had unanimously voted for the system we were advocating. We had the law on our side. The Supreme Court had never ruled that America's lawless monetary system was constitutional. What we didn't have on our side was the entity having most to gain from lawless money – the governing bodies. We were deeply offending their appearance of legitimacy. As one Tennessee village lawyer said, in returning Miracle On Main Street to the friend who'd loaned it to him, "This book won't get Saussy killed, but they'll figure out a humane way of shutting him up."

THERE was an interval of two years between my trial and the Supreme Court's decision on it. About midway during that interval, I received a postcard from the most famous prisoner in Tennessee, James Earl Ray. Mr. Ray, the self-convicted assassin of Dr. Martin Luther King, wanted me to help him write his autobiography. I interviewed him personally, examined his manuscript, and conducted some research of my own. The evidence persuaded me that Mr. Ray did not deserve to be called, in Life Magazine's words, "the world's most hated man." He had been tortured into pleading guilty. Far from punishment for murder, his confinement was the government's way of concealing the true assassins, and at the Tennessee taxpayers' expense. I felt that he, like myself, was being maliciously used by governing bodies for the purpose of deceiving the public.

I worked closely with Mr. Ray, publishing his autobiography under the title Tennessee Waltz: The Making of A Political Prisoner. I included an epilogue of my own, "The Politics of Witchcraft," in which I discussed how Dr. King's murder benefitted no one as much as it did the economic powers of government. About a month before Tennessee Waltz would be coming off the press, I was notified that the U.S. Supreme Court had denied my appeal. Then the District Judge ordered me to surrender myself to Atlanta Federal Prison Camp on or before April 10, 1987. A friend happened to say, "You know, if your previous writings brought about the tax prosecution, think what Tennessee Waltz might provoke them to, with you in custody...."

And so, when the moment came for me to pass through the Prison Camp gates, something got in the way. I can only call it a spirit, an irresistible spirit. It was the same spirit that had directed me to stand on the truth in my writing and speaking. It was the same spirit that had led me to interrogate John MacCoon at our first encounter in that marble hallway back in 1984, the same spirit that had moved him to tell me he was a Jesuit. This spirit turned me away from the prison gate and led me into a fugitive lifestyle.

I felt an overwhelming obligation to love my enemies by studying them in intricate detail. I wanted to know the extent of Jesuit involvement in United States government, presently and historically. What I discovered was a vast Roman Catholic substratum to American history, especially the Revolution that produced the constitutional republic. I found that Jesuits played eminent and under-appreciated roles in moving the complacent New Englanders to rebel against their mother country. I discovered facts and motives strongly suggesting that events that made Great Britain divide in 1776 were the outworkings of an ingenious Jesuit strategy. This strategy appears to have been single-handedly designed and supervised by a true founding father few Americans have ever heard of – Lorenzo Ricci (known to British Jesuits as Laurence Richey). In fact, investigating Jesuit involvement in the formation of the United States turned up a whole host of hitherto little-known names, such as Robert Bellarmine, Joseph Amiot, the Dukes of Norfolk, Daniel Coxe, Sun-Tzu, Lord Bute, Francis Thorpe, Nikolaus von Hontheim, and the Carrolls, Daniel, Charles, and John. In their way, these men were as essential to our constitutional origins as Jefferson, Paine, Adams, Washington, Locke, and George III.

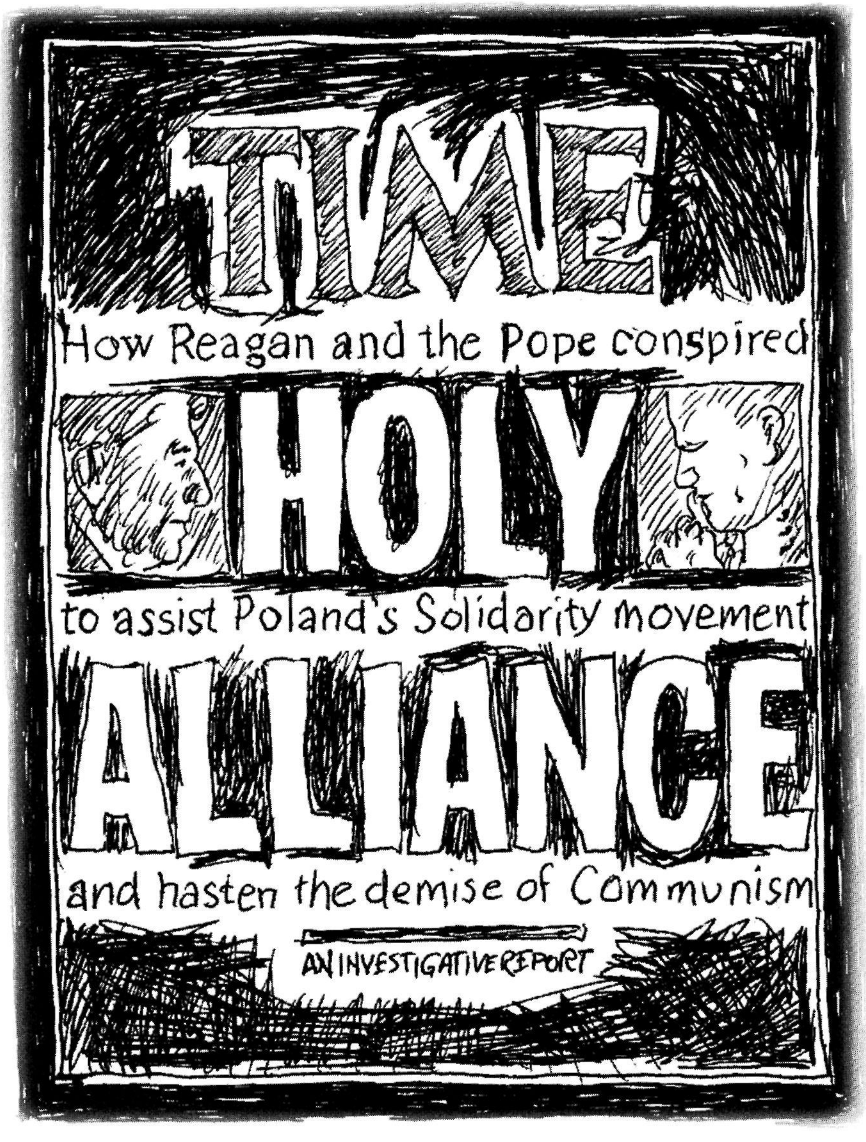
My investigation began in 1987. It coursed ten years, and ranged – with the help of our Lord and many courageous friends, to whom this book is dedicated – from the Florida Keys to Puget Sound, from the District of Columbia to southern California. The mounting evidence inexorably changed the way I perceived constituted authority, and my relationship to it. Finally, on the thirteenth minute of the thirteenth hour of the thirteenth day of November, 1997, the journey that had begun with the filing of charges against me thirteen years earlier reached its destination. I was captured without violence by three U.S. Marshals outside my office on the canals in Venice, California. A valuable personhood

I was prepared to deny forever was given back to me. For sixteen months, the Bureau of Prisons afforded me the opportunity to discuss the fruits of my investigation with intelligent prisoners in California, Georgia, Tennessee, Oklahoma, and Mississippi. Their straightforward questions, comments, insights, and criticisms helped further prepare my manuscript for a general audience.

Now that my liberties are fully restored, I am able finally to relate my findings to you in my own true voice, tried in adversity, seasoned by time.

F. Tupper Saussy

RULERS OF EVIL



TIME
How Reagan and the Pope conspired HOLY
to assist Poland's Solidarity movement ALLIANCE and hasten the demise of Communism
AN INVESTIGATIVE REPORT

Chapter 1

SUBLIMINAL ROME

"The Roman Catholic Church is a State."
— BISHOP MANDELL CREIGHTON, LETTERS

WHEN A PULITZER PRIZE-winning reporter announced in his 1992 Time Magazine cover story[1] that a "conspiracy" binding President Ronald Reagan and Pope John Paul II into a "secret, holy alliance" had brought about the demise of communism, at least one reader saw through the hype.

Professor Carol A. Brown of the University of Massachusetts fired off a letter to Time's editors saying,

> Last week I taught my students about the separation of church and state. This week I learned that the Pope is running U.S. foreign policy. No wonder our young people are cynical about American ideals.

What Brown had learned from Carl Bernstein I had discovered for myself over several years of private investigation: the papacy really does run United States foreign policy, and always has. Yes, Bernstein noted that the leading American players behind the Reagan/Vatican conspiracy, to a man, were "devout Roman Catholics" – namely,

William Casey
Director, CIA

Richard Allen
National Security Advisor

Judge William Clark
National Security Advisor

Alexander Haig
Secretary of State

Vernon Walters
Ambassador-at-Large

William Wilson
Ambassador to the Vatican State

But the reporter neglected to mention that the entire Senate Foreign Relations committee was governed by Roman Catholics, as well. Specifically, Senators

Joseph Biden
Subcommittee on European Affairs

Paul Sarbanes
International Economic Policy, Trade, Oceans, and Environment
Daniel P. Moynihan
Near Eastern and South Asian Affairs

John Kerry
Terrorism, Narcotics, and International Communications and...

Christopher Dodd
Western Hemisphere and Peace Corps Affairs

Bernstein would have been wandering off-point to list the Roman Catholic leaders of American domestic policy, such as Senate majority leader George Mitchell and Speaker of the House Tom Foley.

In fact, when the holy alliance story hit the stands, there was virtually no arena of federal legislative activity, according to The 1992 World Almanac of US Politics, that was not directly controlled by a Roman Catholic senator or representative. The committees and subcommittees of the United States Senate and House of Representatives governing commerce, communications and telecommunications, energy, medicine, health, education and welfare, human services, consumer protection, finance and financial institutions, transportation, labor and unemployment, hazardous materials, taxation, bank regulation, currency and monetary policy, oversight of the Federal Reserve System, commodity prices, rents services, small business administration, urban affairs, European affairs, Near Eastern 6k South Asian affairs, terrorism/narcotics/ international communications, international economic/trade/ oceans/environmental policy, insurance, housing, community development, federal loan guarantees, economic stabilization measures (including wage and price controls), gold and precious metals transactions, agriculture, animal and forestry industries, rural issues, nutrition, price supports, Food for Peace, agricultural exports, soil conservation, irrigation, stream channelization, flood-control, minority enterprise, environment and pollution, appropriations, defense, foreign operations, vaccines, drug labeling and packaging, drug and alcohol abuse, inspection and certification of fish and processed food, use of vitamins and saccharin, national health insurance proposals, human services, legal services, family relations, the arts and humanities, the handicapped, and aging – in other words, virtually every aspect of secular life in America – came under the chairmanship of one of these Roman Catholic laypersons:

Frank Annunzio
Joseph Biden
Silvio Conte
Kika De la Garza
John Dingell
Christopher Dodd
Vic Fazio
James Florio
Henry Gonzalez
Thomas Harkin
Edward Kennedy
John Kerry
John LaFalce
Patrick Leahy
Charles Luken
Edward Madigan
Edward Markey
Joseph McDade
Barbara Mikulski
George Miller
Daniel Moynihan
John Murtha
Mary Rose Oakar
David Obey
Claiborne Pell
Charles Rangel
Dan Rostenkowski or Edward Roybal.[2]

Vatican Council IPs Constitution on the Church (1964) instructs politicians to use their secular offices to advance the cause of Roman Catholicism. Catholic laypersons, "whoever they are, are called upon to expend all their energy for the growth of the Church and its continuous sanctification," and "to make the Church present and operative in those places and circumstances where only through them can it become the salt of the earth" (IV, 33). Vatican II further instructs all Catholics "by their competence in secular disciplines and by their activity [to] vigorously contribute their effort so that … the goods of this world may be more equitably distributed among all men, and may in their own way be conducive to universal progress in human and Christian freedom … and [to] remedy the customs and conditions of the world, if they are an inducement to sin, so that they all may be conformed to the norms of justice and may favor the practice of virtue rather than hinder it" (IV, 36).

Vatican II affirms Catholic doctrine dating back to 1302, when Pope Boniface VIII asserted that "it is absolutely necessary for the salvation of every human creature to be subject to the Roman Pontiff." This was the inspiration for the papacy to create the United States of America that materialized in 1776, by a process just as secret as the Reagan-Vatican production of Eastern Europe in 1989. What? American government Roman Catholic from the beginning?

Consider: the land known today as the District of Columbia bore the name "Rome" in 1663 property records; and the branch of the Potomac River that bordered "Rome" on the south was called "Tiber."[3] This information was reported in the 1902 edition of the Catholic Encyclopedia's article on Daniel Carroll. The article, specifically declaring itself "of interest to Catholics" in the 1902 edition, was deleted from the New Catholic Encyclopedia (1967). Other facts were reported in 1902 and deleted from 1967. For example, when Congress met in Washington for the first time, in November, 1800, "the only two really comfortable and imposing houses within the bounds of the city" belonged to Roman Catholics. One was Washington's first mayor, Robert Brent. The other was Brent's brother-in-law, Notley Young, a Jesuit priest.

Daniel Carroll was a Roman Catholic congressman from Maryland who signed two of America's fundamental documents, the Articles of Confederation and the United States Constitution. Carroll was a direct descendant of the Calverts, a Catholic family to whom King Charles I of England had granted Maryland as a feudal barony. Carroll had received his education at St. Omer's Jesuit College in Flanders, where young English-speaking Catholics were trained in a variety of guerrilla techniques for advancing the cause of Roman Catholicism among hostile Protestants.

In 1790, President George Washington, a Protestant, appointed Congressman Carroll to head a commission of three men to select land for the "federal city" called for in the Constitution. Of all places, the commission chose "Rome," which at the time consisted of four farms, one of which belonged to... Daniel Carroll. It was upon Carroll's farm that the new government chose to erect its most important building, the Capitol.

THE American Capitol abounds with clues of its Roman origins. "Freedom," the Roman goddess whose statue crowns the dome, was created in Rome at the studio of American sculptor Thomas Crawford. We find a whole pantheon of Roman deities in the great fresco covering the dome's interior rotunda: Persephone, Ceres, Freedom, Vulcan, Mercury, even a deified George Washington. These figures were the creation of Vatican artist Constantino Brumidi.

The fact that the national Statehouse evolved as a "capitol" bespeaks Roman influence. No building can rightly be called a capitol unless it's a temple of Jupiter, the great father-god of Rome who ruled heaven with his thunderbolts and nourished the earth with his fertilizing rains. If it was a capitolium, it belonged to Jupiter and his priests.

Jupiter's mascot was the eagle, which the founding fathers made their mascot as well. A Roman eagle tops the governing idol of the House of Representatives, a forty-six-inch sterling silver-and-ebony wand called a "mace." The mace is "the symbol of authority in the House."[4] When the Sergeant-at-arms displays it before an unruly member of Congress, the mace restores order. Its position at the rostrum tells whether the House is in "committee" or in "session."

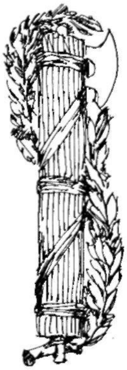
America's national motto "Annuit Coeptis" came from a prayer to Jupiter. It appears in Book IX of Virgil's epic propaganda, the Aeneid, a poem commissioned just before the birth of Christ by Caius Maecenas, the multi-billionaire power behind Augustus Caesar. The poem's objective was to fashion Rome into an imperial monarchy for which its citizens would gladly sacrifice their lives.

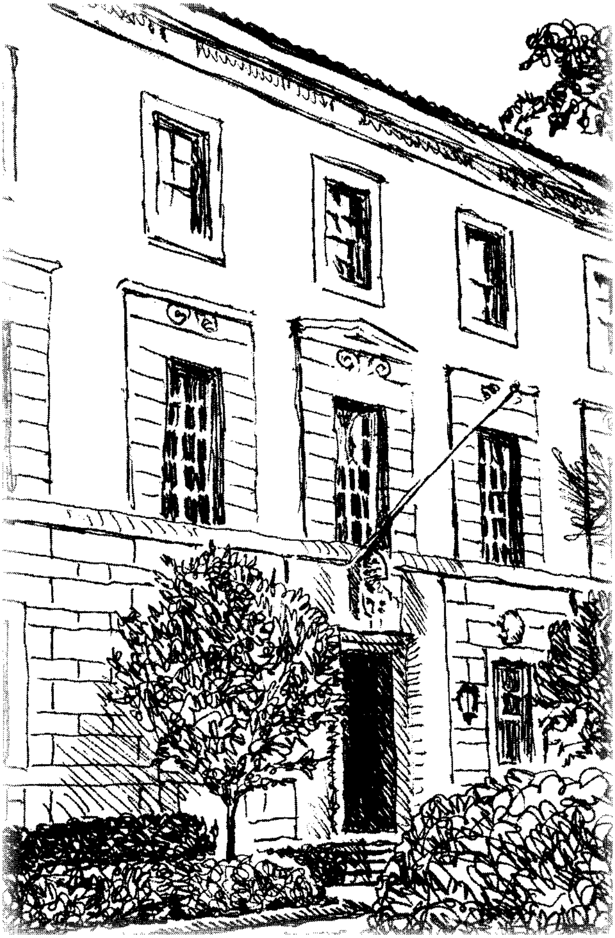
Fascism may be an ugly word to many, but its stately emblem is apparently offensive to no one. The emblem of fascism, a pair of them, commands the wall above and behind the speaker's rostrum in the Chamber of the House of Representatives. They're called fasces, and I can think of no reason for them to be there other than to declare the fascistic nature of American republican democracy.



A fasces is a Roman device. Actually, it originated with the ancient Etruscans, from whom the earliest Romans derived their religious jurisprudence nearly three thousand years ago. It's an axe-head whose handle is a bundle of rods tightly strapped together by a red sinew. It symbolizes the ordering of priestly functions into a single infallible sovereign, an autocrat who could require life and limb of his subjects. If the fasces is entwined with laurel, like the pair on the House wall, it signifies Caesarean military power. The Romans called this infallible sovereign Pontifex Maximus, "Supreme Bridgebuilder." No Roman was called Pontifex Maximus until the title was given to Julius Caesar in 48 BC. Today's Pontifex Maximus is Pope John Paul II.

As we shall discover in a forthcoming chapter, John Paul does not hold that title alone. He shares it with a mysterious partner, a military man, a man holding an office that has been known for more than four centuries as "Papa Nero," the Black Pope. I shall present evidence that the House fasces represent the Black Pope, who indeed rules the world.

Later, I will develop what is sure to become a controversial hypothesis: that the Black Pope rules by divine appointment, and for the ultimate good of mankind.



APOSTOLIC NUNCIATURE, UNITED STATES OF AMERICA
3339 Massachusetts Avenue NW
Washington, D.C.

Chapter 2

MISSIONARY ADAPTATION

FEW PEOPLE SEEM to be aware that the Roman Catholic Church in America is officially recognized as a State. How this came about makes interesting reading.

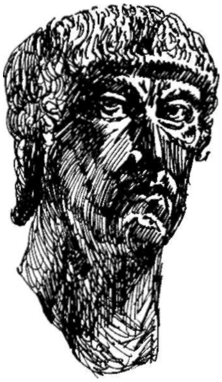
Early in his administration, President Ronald Reagan invited the Vatican City, whose ruling head is the Pope, to open its first embassy in Washington, D.C. His Holiness responded positively, and the embassy, or Apostolic Nunciature of the Holy See, opened officially on January 10, 1984.

Shortly thereafter, a complaint was filed against President Reagan at U.S. District Court in Philadelphia by the American Jewish Congress, the Baptist Joint Committee on Public Affairs, Seventh Day Adventists, the National Council of Churches, the National Association of Evangelicals, and Americans United for Separation of Church and State.The plaintiffs sought to have the Court declare that the administration had unconstitutionally granted to the Roman Catholic faith privileges that were being denied to other establishments of religion.

On May 7, 1985 the suit was thrown out by Chief Judge John Fullam. Judge Fullam ruled that district courts do not have jurisdiction to intervene in "foreign policy decisions" of the executive branch. Bishop James W. Malone, President of the U.S. Catholic Conference, praised Judge Fullam's decision, noting that it settled "not a religious issue but a public policy question."[1] The plaintiffs appealed. The Third Circuit denied the appeal, noticing that "the Roman Catholic Church's unique position of control over a sovereign territory gives it advantages that other religious organizations do not enjoy."[1] The Apostolic Nunciature at 3339 Massachusetts Avenue N.W. enables Pontifex Maximus to supervise more closely American civil government – "public policy" – as administered through Roman Catholic laypersons. (One such layperson was Chief Judge Fullam, whose Roman Catholicism apparently escaped the attention of the plaintiffs.)

This same imperium ran pagan Rome in essentially the same way. The public servants were priests of the various gods and goddesses. Monetary affairs, for example, were governed by priests of the goddess Moneta. Priests of Dionysus managed architecture and cemeteries, while priests of Justitia, with her sword, and Libera, blindfolded, holding her scales aloft, ruled the courts.[2] Hundreds of priestly orders, known as the Sacred College, managed hundreds of government bureaus, from the justice system to the construction, cleaning, and repair of bridges (no bridge could be built without the approval of Pontifex Maximus), buildings, temples, castles, baths, sewers, ports, highways, walls and ramparts of cities and the boundaries of lands.[3]

Priests directed the paving and repairing of streets and roads, supervised the calendar and the education of youth. Priests regulated weights, measures, and the value of money. Priests solemnized and certified births, baptisms, puberty, purification, confession, adolescence, marriage, divorce, death, burial, excommunication, canonization, deification, adoption into families, adoption into tribes and orders of nobility. Priests ran the libraries, the museums, the consecrated lands and treasures. Priests registered the trademarks and symbols. Priests were in charge of public worship, directing the festivals, plays, entertainments, games and ceremonies. Priests wrote and held custody over wills, testaments, and legal conveyances.

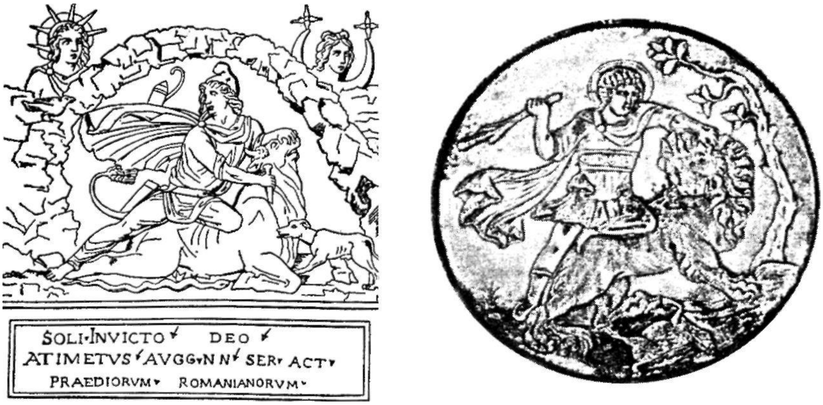


Constantine

By the fourth century, one half of the lands and one fourth of the population of the Roman Empire were owned by the priests.[4] When the Emperor Constantine and his Senate formally adopted Christianity as the Empire's official religion, the exercise was more of a merger or acquisition than a revolution. The wealth of the priests merely became the immediate possession of the Christian churches, and the priests merely declared themselves Christians. Government continued without interruption. The pagan gods and goddesses were artfully outfitted with names appropriate to Christianity.[1] The sign over the Pantheon indicating "To [the fertility goddess] Cybele and All the Gods" was re-written "To Mary and All the Saints." The Temple of Apollo became the Church of St. Apollinaris. The Temple of Mars was reconsecrated Church of Santa Martina, with the inscription "Mars hence ejected, Martina, martyred maid/ Claims now the worship which to him was paid."

Haloed icons of Apollo were identified as Jesus, and the crosses of Bacchus and Tammuz were accepted as the official symbol of the Crucifixion. Pope Leo I decreed that "St. Peter and St. Paul have replaced Romulus and Remus as Rome's protecting patrons."[2] Pagan feasts, too, were Christianized. December 25 – the celebrated birthday of a number of gods, among them Saturn, Jupiter, Tammuz, Bacchus, Osiris, and Mithras – was claimed to have been that of Jesus as well, and the traditional Saturnalia, season of drunken merriment and gift-giving, evolved into Christmas.

Bacchus was popular in ancient France under his Greek name



Sketch of Mithras (left), from a stone carving. Mithras was "Sol Invictus" the "unconquerable Sun," an imperial Roman god since the third century BC Under Constantinian Christianity, artisans re-consecrated him Jesus and other biblical names. In the silver dish made on Cyprus in the eighth century AD, Mithras (note the peculiar stance) slaying the Cosmic Bull became David killing a lion.

Dionysus – or, as the French rendered it, Denis. His feast, the Festurn Dionysi, was held every seventh day of October, at the end of the vintage season. After two days of wild partying, another feast was held, the Festum Dionysi Eleutherei Rusticum ("Country Festival of Merry Dionysus"). The papacy cleverly brought the worshippers of Dionysus into its jurisdiction by transforming the words Dionysos, Bacchus, Eleutherei, and Rusticum into... a group of Christian martyrs. October seventh was entered on the Liturgical Calendar as the feast day of "St. Bacchus the Martyr," while October ninth was instituted as the "Festival of St. Denis, and of his companions St. Eleuthere and St. Rustic." The Catholic Almanac (1992 et seq) sustains the fabrication by designating October ninth as the > Feast Day of Denis, bishop of Paris, and two companions identified by early writers as Rusticus, a priest, and Eleutherius, a deacon martyred near Paris. Denis is popularly regarded as the apostle and patron saint of France.

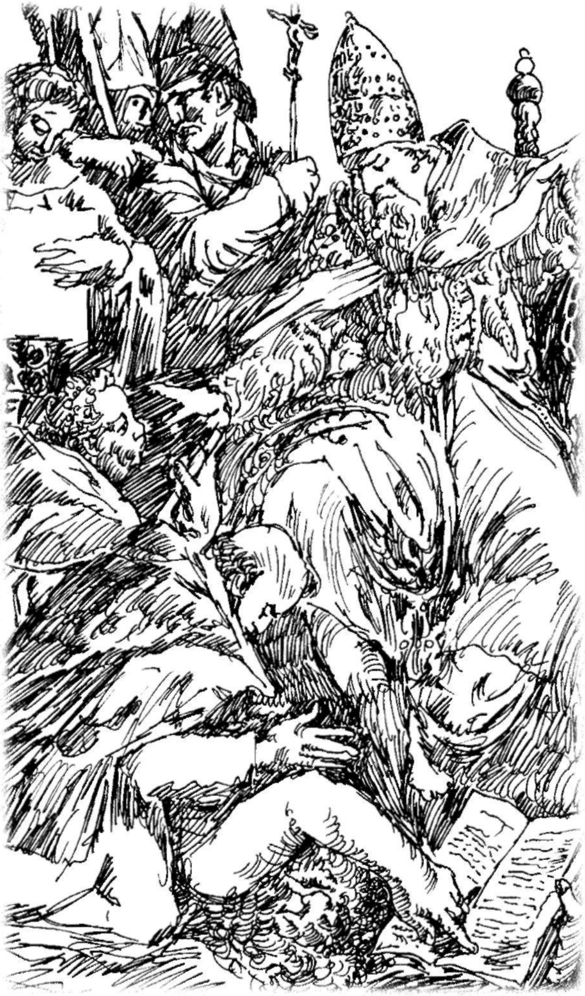
PLAYING loose with truth and Scripture in order to bring every human creature into subjection to the Roman Pontiff is a technique called "missionary adaptation." This is explained as "the adjustment of the mission subject to the cultural requirements of the mission object" so that the papacy's needs will be brought "as much as possible in accord with existing socially shared patterns of thought, evaluation, and action, so as to avoid unnecessary and serious disorganization."[1]

Rome has so seamlessly adapted its mission to American secularism that we do not think of the United States as a Catholic system.Yet the rosters of government rather decisively show this to be the case.

By far the greatest challenge to missionary adaptation has been Scripture – that is, the Old and New Testaments, commonly known as the Holy Bible. Almost for as long as Rome has been the seat of Pontifex Maximus, there has been a curious enmity between between the popes and the Bible whose believers they are presumed to head. In the next chapter, we shall begin our examination of that enmity.



ROME vs. SCRIPTURE
Pope Gregory IX (1227-41), founder of the Inquisition and champion of Aristotle, excommunicates Holy Roman Emperor Frederick II, upside down with Bible. (From the painting by Vasari.)

Chapter 3

MARGINALIZING THE BIBLE

EVERY RULED SOCIETY has some form of holy scripture. The holy scriptures of Caesarean Rome were the prophecies and ritual directions contained in the ten Sibylline gospels and Virgil's Aeneid.

The Aeneid implied that every Roman's duty was to sacrifice his individuality, as heroic Aeneas had done, to the greater glory of Rome and Pontifex Maximus. The Sibyllines, borrowing from Isaiah's much earlier prophecy of Jesus Christ, prophesied that when Caesar Augustus succeeded his uncle Julius as Pontifex Maximus he would rule the world as "Prince of Peace, Son of God." Augustus would issue in a "new world order," as indeed he did.

The Sibyllines and the Aeneid were so beloved by the government priests that they were considered part of the Roman constitution. The same scriptures were made part of the United States Constitution when the mottoes "ANNUIT COEPTIS" and "NOVUS ORDO SECLORUM," taken from the Aeneid and the Sibyllines respectively, were incorporated, by the Act of July 28, 1782, into the Great Seal of the United States.[1]

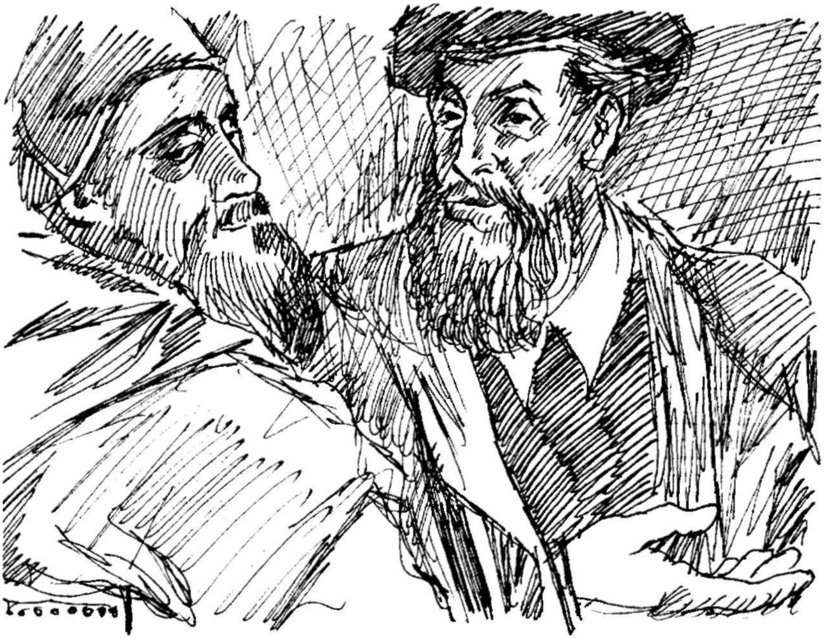
The Sibyllines and the Aeneid were open only to priests and certain privileged persons. The people learned their sacred content by the trickle-down of priestly retelling. When the Old and New Testaments were adopted as the Empire's official sacred writings they, too, were given to the exclusive care of the priests. And in accord with Roman tradition, the people learned sacred content from discretionary retelling. This had to be, for the sake of the Holy Empire. For should the people acquire biblical knowledge, they would know that Pontifex Maximus was not a legitimate Christian entitlement. Knowing this, they would not bow to his supremacy. The Empire could collapse. And so the monarchial Roman Church forcibly suppressed the Bible's intelligent reading. This is why the millennium between Constantine and Gutenberg is known as "the Dark Ages."

Sprinkled throughout the Empire, however, were isolated Christian assemblies who had preserved Scripture from the days of the early Church. For them the Bible invited an ongoing, personal communion with the Creator of the universe. They lived by the writings of which Rome was so jealous. By the thirteenth century, these assemblies had grown so vibrant that Pope Gregory IX declared unauthorized Bible study a heresy.[2] He further decreed that "it is the duty of every Catholic to persecute heretics." To manage the persecution, Gregory established the Pontifical Inquisition.

The Inquisition treated the slightest departure from the life of the community as proof of direct communion with the Bible or Satan. Either instance was a sin worthy of death.[3] Cases were prosecuted according to a strict routine. First, the inquisitors would enter a town and present their credentials to the civil authorities. In the pope's name, they would require the governor's cooperation. Next, the local priest would be ordered to summon his congregation to hear the inquisitors preach against heresy, which was defined as anything the least bit opposed to the papal system. A brief grace period followed the sermon, wherein the people were given an opportunity to step forward and accuse themselves of crimes. Those who did were usually punished mildly. Later, the inquisitors would receive at their lodgings unverified accusations, guaranteeing in the pope's name the anonymity of informants. Many innocent lives were ruined by false testimony.

Trials were conducted arbitrarily and secretly by tribunals consisting of the inquisitors, their staffs, and their witnesses, all concealed under hoods. The accused were never told the charges against them, and they were forbidden to ask. No defense witnesses were permitted. The accused had but one option: to confess guilt and die. Those who refused to confess (and witnesses who balked at testifying) were carried to the dungeon for torture sessions (boys under fourteen and girls under twelve exempted). Inquisitors and executioners were commanded by papal edict to show no mercy. No acquittal was ever recorded. Every fully prosecuted case ended in the death of the defendant and the forfeiture of his or her property, since it was assumed (as in American forfeiture cases since 1984) that the property was gained in sin. Sometimes the property of family members for generations to come was forfeited. These forfeitures were paid out in expenses to the scribes and executioners, half of the remainder going into the papal treasury and half to the inquisitors. Although popes and inquisitors amassed great fortunes from the Inquisition, its greatest beneficiary was, and has been, the Roman system.[4]

The Inquisition was most effective against the isolated truth-seeker in an ignorant community. As communities became more literate, the Inquisition grew subtler. What brought literacy to communities was the epidemic of Bible-reading made possible by the perfection of Johannes Gutenberg's invention of movable type.



NOMINATION
Charles Habsburg (right, King of Spain and Holy Roman Emperor) confides to Pope Clement VII (Giulio d'Medici) his choice of the man to stop defections to Protestantism. (After the painting by Vasari.)

Chapter 4

MEDICI LEARNING

GUTENBERG CHOSE the Bible to demonstrate movable type not so much that the common man might be brought nearer to God, but that he and his backer, Dr. Johannes Faust, might make a killing in the book trade.

Prior to 1450, Bibles were so rare they were conveyed by deed, like parcels of real estate. A Bible took nearly a year to make, commanding a price equal to ten times the annual income of a prosperous man. Johannes Gutenberg intended his first production, a folio edition of the 6th-century Latin Bible (known as the Vulgate), to fetch manuscript prices. Dr. Faust discreetly sold it as a one-of-a-kind to kings, nobles, and churches. A second edition in 1462 sold for as much as 600 crowns each in Paris, but sales were too sluggish to suit Faust, so he slashed prices to 60 crowns and then to 30.

This put enough copies into circulation for Church authorities to notice that several were identical. Such extraordinary uniformity being regarded as humanly impossible, the authorities charged that Faust had produced the Bibles by magic. On this pretext, the Archbishop of Mainz had Gutenberg's shop raided and a fortune in counterfeit Bibles seized. The red ink with which they were embellished was alleged to be human blood. Faust was arrested for conspiring with Satan, but there is no record of any trial.

Meanwhile, the pressmen, who had been sworn not to disclose Gutenberg's secrets while in his service, fled the jurisdiction of Mainz and set up shops of their own. As paper manufacture improved, along with technical improvements in matrix cutting and type-casting, books began to proliferate. Most were editions of the Vulgate. In the decade following the Mainz raid, five Latin and two German Bibles were published. Translators busied themselves in other countries. An Italian version appeared in 1471, a Bohemian in 1475, a Dutch and a French in 1477, and a Spanish in 1478.

As quickly as our generation has become computer-literate, the Gutenberg generation learned to read books, and careful readers found shocking discrepancies between the papacy's interpretation of God's Word and the Word itself.

In 1485, the Archbishop of Mainz issued an edict punishing unauthorized Bible-reading with excommunication, confiscation of books, and heavy fines. The great Renaissance theologian Desiderius Erasmus challenged the Archbishop by publishing, in 1516, the first printed edition of the Greek New Testament. He addressed the anti-Bible mentality in his preface with these words:

> I vehemently dissent from those who would not have private persons read the Holy Scriptures nor have them translated into the vulgar tongues, as though either Christ taught such difficult doctrines that they can only be understood by a few theologians, or the safety of the Christian religion lay in ignorance of it. I should like all women to read the Gospel and the Epistles of Paul. Would that they were translated into all languages so that not only the Scotch and Irish, but Turks and Saracens might be able to read and know them.

A Catholic monk named Martin Luther, against the advice of his superiors, plunged into the New Testament of Erasmus. He was shocked by the absence of scriptural authority for so many Church traditions. Of the seven Church Sacraments only two, Baptism and the Lord's Supper, were grounded in Scripture. The remaining five – Confirmation, Absolution, Ordination, Marriage, and Extreme Unction – were the inventions of post-biblical councils and decrees. Luther found no scriptural mandate for celibacy of monks and nuns, or for pilgrimages and the veneration of sacred relics. The Church taught that prayer, good works, and regular participation in the Sacraments might save man from eternal damnation. Luther found this to be opposed to the teaching of Scripture. According to Scripture, only one thing can save man from the consequences of his sins: God's grace, and that alone.

Martin Luther

The most explosive result of Luther's Bible-reading was its attitude toward the papacy. Nowhere in Scripture could the passionate monk find that God had ordained an imperious Roman "Vicar of Christ" to rule over a vast economy based on selling rights to do evil. These rights were called indulgences. They had been a Church tradition since Pope Leo III had begun granting them in the year 800, payable in the money coined by Pope Adrian I in 780.

Indulgences were floated on the Church's credibility, rather like government bonds are issued on the credibility of states today. In 1491, for example, Innocent VII granted the 20-year Butterbriefe indulgence, by which Germans could pay 1/20th of a guilder for the annual privilege of eating dairy products even while meriting from fasting. The proceeds of the Butterbriefe went to build a bridge at Torgau.[1] Rome's indulgence economy was as extensive as America's income tax system today. And it was every bit as fueled by the people's trembling compliance, voluntarily, to a presumption of liability.

In 1515 Pope Leo X issued a Bull of Indulgence authorizing letters of safe conduct to Paradise and pardons for every evil imaginable,[2] from a 25-cent purgatory release (the dead left purgatory the instant one's coins hit the bottom of the indulgence-salesman's bucket) to a license so potent that it would excuse someone who had raped the Virgin Mary. For the payment of four ducats, one could be forgiven for murdering one's father. Sorcery was pardoned for 6 ducats. For robbing a church, the law could be relaxed for only 9 ducats. Sodomy was pardoned for 12 ducats. Half the revenues from Leo's indulgence went to a fund for the building of St. Peter's Cathedral, and the other half to paying 40% interest rates on bank loans subsidizing the magnificent works of art and architecture with which His Holiness was establishing Rome as the cultural capital of the Renaissance. Historians have glorified Leo, whose father happened to be the great Florentine banker Lorenzo d'Medici, by marking the sixteenth century as "the Century of Leo X."

In early 1521, Martin Luther formally protested the indulgence racket by nailing his famous Ninety-five Theses Upon Indulgences to the door of the castle church of Wittenburg. The church was said to own a lock of the Holy Virgin's hair worth two million years of indulgences. Luther's Theses exhorted Christians "to follow Christ, their Head, through penalties, deaths, and hells," rather than purchase "a false assurance of peace" from Church indulgence-salesmen.

Leo had Luther arrested and detained for ten months in Wartburg Castle. While in custody, Luther managed to translate the Greek New Testament of Erasmus into German. Its publication alarmed the broadest reaches of Roman authority. D'Aubigne, in his History of the Reformation, tells us that "Ignorant priests shuddered at the thought that every citizen, nay every peasant, would now be able to dispute with them on the precepts of our Lord."

Meanwhile, Leo X died. The new pope, Adrian VI, hardly eulogized Leo when confessing to the Diet of Nuremberg that "for many years, abominable things have taken place in the Chair of Peter, abuses in spiritual matters, transgressions of the Commandments, so that everything here has been wickedly perverted."[3]

Adrian died shortly after speaking these lines, to be succeeded by the Cardinal who had been handling Martin Luther's case all along, another Medici, Leo X's first cousin, Giulio d'Medici. Giulio took the papal name Clement VII.

Just as Leo X's corruption had ignited Luther, Clement VII's shrewdness determined how the Church would deal with the proliferation of Bibles. Clement was personally advised by the cagey Niccolo Machiavelli, inventor of modern political science, and Cardinal Thomas Wolsey, Chancellor of England. Machiavelli and Wolsey opined that both printing and Protestantism could be turned to Rome's advantage by employing movable type to produce a literature that would confuse, diminish, and ultimately marginalize the Bible. Cardinal Wolsey, who would later found Christ Church College at Oxford, characterized the project as "to put learning against learning."[4]

Against the Bible's learning, which demonstrated how man could have eternal life simply by believing in the facts of Christ's death and resurrection, would be put the learning of the gnostics. Gnosticism held out the hope that man could achieve everlasting life by doing good works himself. To put it succinctly, Bible-learning was Christ-centered; gnostic learning was man-centered.

An enormous trove of gnostic learning had been brought from the eastern Mediterranean by agents of Clement VII's great-grandfather, Cosimo d'Medici. Suppressed since the Emperor Justinian had piously shut down the pagan colleges of Athens back in 529, these celebrated mystical, scientific and philosophical scrolls and manuscripts flattered humanity. They taught that human intelligence was competent to determine truth from falsehood without guidance or assistance from any god. Since, as Protagoras put it, "man is the measure of all things," man could control all the living powers of the universe. If elected and initiated into the secret knowledge, or gnosis, man could master the cabalah – the "royal science" of names, numbers, and symbols – to create his very own divinity.

Cosimo had stored huge quantities of this pagan material in his library in Florence. The Medici Library, whose final architect was Michaelangelo, welcomed scholars favored by the papacy. These scholars, not surprisingly, soon began emulating the papacy in focusing more upon humanity than upon the Old and New Testaments. So extensive was the Medici Library's philosophical influence that even scholars today consider it the cradle of Western civilization.

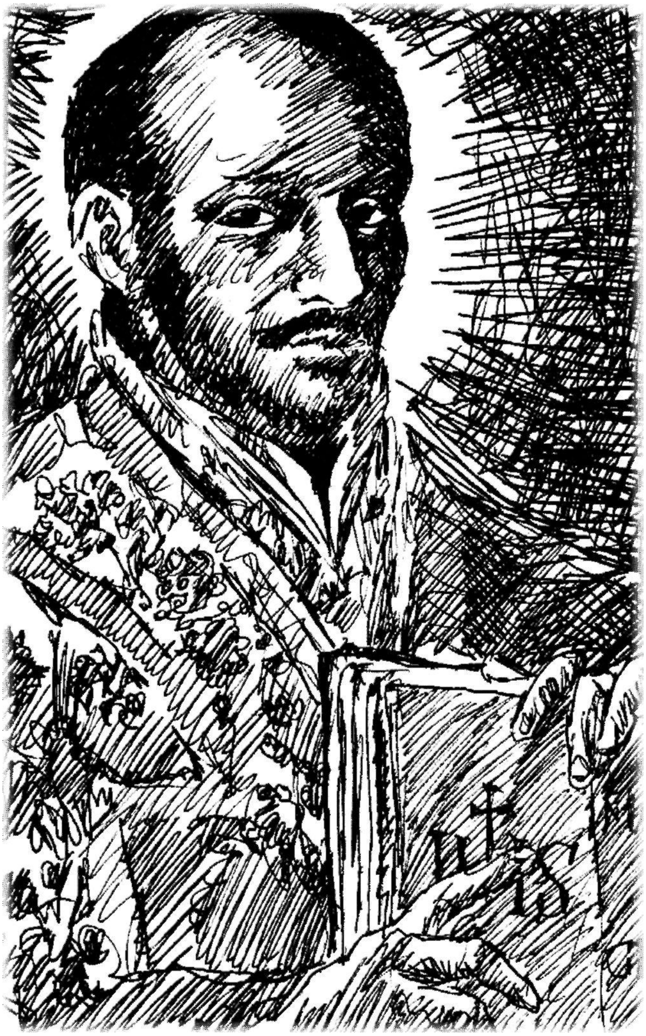
Martin Luther, seeing that learning against learning was the future of Christianity, voiced an "Appeal to the Ruling Classes" (1520), in which he wrote, rather prophetically:

> Though our children live in the midst of a Christian world, they faint and perish in misery because they lack the Gospel in which we should be training and exercising them all the time. I advise no one to place his child where the Scriptures do not reign paramount. Schools will become wide-open gates of hell if they do not diligently engrave the Holy Scriptures on young hearts. Every institution where men are not increasingly occupied with the word of God must become corrupt.

It was one thing to recommend learning against learning, and quite another to manage its multiple dimensions. Learning against learning amounted to no less than making war on the Bible. To wage such a war, the papacy needed a new priestly order of pious soldiers conditioned to wield psychological weapons on a battlefield of... human thought. But first, there had to be a general. The man chosen to lead the assault on the Bible was a swashbuckling adventurer from the proud Basque country of northern Spain.



IGNATIUS OF LOYOLA

Chapter 5

APPOINTMENT AT CYPRUS

His name was Iñigo de Loyola. He was born in 1491 to a rich family, youngest of eight boys, one of thirteen children. His older brother had sailed to the New World with Christopher Columbus.

Iñigo served as a page in the court of King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella of Spain. He became friends with Ferdinand's Belgian grandson, Charles Habsburg, whose other grandfather was Holy Roman Emperor Maximilian. (The Holy Roman Emperor was a kind of secular pope who presided over the Christian kingdoms of the western world.) Charles was propelled to great authority before his twenty-first birthday by the deaths of his two grandfathers within a space of two years. From Ferdinand, Charles inherited Spain. From Maximilian, he inherited the Holy Roman Empire. Charles Habsburg was King Charles I of Spain, Emperor Charles V of Rome. He was the most powerful secular figure in Europe. And he was Iñigo's friend.

In 1518, Iñigo was part of a legation negotiating for Charles with Spain's traditional rival, France, at the court of the Duke of Najera in Valladolid. While the summit was in session, Catherina, the Emperor's sister, was presented to the Najera court. Iñigo fell in love with her. He was twenty-seven and she was eleven. (The Emperor was eighteen.) The match, however, was not to be.

On Monday, May 20, 1521, while commanding a garrison at the Duke's fortress in Pamplona, Iñigo was struck by a French cannonball. His right leg was shattered, and with it – since a well-shaped leg was among a courtier's most prized assets – the prospects for a romantic life with Catherina, or any other woman. An honor guard of French soldiers bore the wounded champion on a stretcher to his family's castle in the Spanish Pyrenees. Surgeons butchered his leg and reset the bones. He lost appetite and was told he might die. He made confession and was given last rites. But a few days after the feast of Sts. Peter and Paul, he was pronounced out of death's immediate grasp. He credited this recovery to his devotion to St. Peter.

Iñigo remained bedridden for nearly a year. Under the concerned if distant eye of the youthful Emperor, he spent his time "searching for substitutes for the shattered ideals, ambitions, and values that had been so central to his sense of himself."[2] He gazed obsessively at a small icon of Saint Catherine, a gift from Queen Isabella to his sister-in-law. The icon sparked dreams of Catherina, which only throttled his heart with desolation. He turned to books, Ludolph of Saxony's Life of Christ and Voragine's Lives of the Saints – the only two volumes in the family library despite the fact that a Spanish Bible had been available for forty years.

The icon and the books gave him visions. The visions, in turn, led him to develop a process of "preparing and disposing the soul to rid itself of all inordinate attachments, and, after their removal, of seeking and finding the will of God."[3] Iñigo called this process "the Spiritual Exercises."

In the Exercises, a Director leads a Retreatant through Four Weeks of intense prayer, meditation, and dialogue with the Blessed Virgin Mary, Jesus, and God the Father. Frequent repetition of "Anima Christi," Loyola's own habitual prayer for disorientation and sensory deprivation ("Blood of Christ, inebriate me"), is advised. The First Week is spent considering and contemplating sins, creating vivid mental pictures of "hell in all its depth and breadth, putting your five senses at the service of your imagination." The Second Week explores the life of Christ up to Palm Sunday inclusively; the Third Week undertakes the Crucifixion, in which the Retreatant is directed to "imagine Christ our Lord present before you on the Cross, and begin to speak with him ... and ask 'What have I done for Christ? What am I doing for Christ? What ought I to do for Christ?'"[4] The Fourth Week is occupied with the Resurrection and Ascension, after which the Retreatant prays "for a knowledge of the deceits of the rebel chief and help to guard myself against them; and also to ask for a knowledge of the true life exemplified in the sovereign and true Commander, and the grace to imitate him."

By the time the Exercises have run their course, the Retreatant's purified imagination is totally dominated by mental pictures of Jesus resurrected, Jesus the King Militant. One can now answer the King's call to conquer Protestantism and its rebel chief ("the enemy of human nature") with the selfless fidelity of a chivalrous knight. One's consciousness has been altered. One's soul and brain have been washed. One's liberty has been sacrificed to authority. One's individuality has been surrendered to the Christ of Rome. One no longer has a will of one's own. One volunteers for any assigned task no matter how adverse.

Martin Luther spent Loyola's year of recovery imprisoned at Wartburg Castle for insulting the papacy with his Ninety-Five Theses. Remarkably, while one prisoner experienced mystical visions that urged him to defend the Church's honor in the romantically chivalrous manner of the Knights Templar, the other was translating (with the miraculous permission of his keepers) the New Testament into German so that ordinary people might learn the will of God directly. These parallel, simultaneous quests for holiness would define modern life's underlying conflict: Which Master Do I Serve, Rome or the Word of God?

PURIFIED by the Spiritual Exercises, Iñigo's sensual attachment to Princess Catherina was transformed through Saint Catherine into a higher, spiritual attachment to a higher femininity – to Mary, the Queen of Heaven. An apparition of the Virgin appeared to him one night and validated that he was free of fleshly lusts and was now worthy of a pilgrimage to Jerusalem. In Martin Luther's opinion, "as far as God is concerned, Jerusalem and all the Holy Land are not one whit more, or less, interesting than the cows in Switzerland."[5] But to a spiritual warrior preparing to lead the Church to war against Scripture, a touchdown in Jerusalem was absolutely necessary. Jerusalem was the domain of King Solomon's Temple, the geo-spiritual center of the Knights Templar. If Iñigo was to revive the Templars, as the Emperor desired, it was liturgically imperative that his newly-washed spirit present itself in the Sacred City for initiation into the mysteries of holy warfare.

All pilgrims to the Holy Land were required by law to apply to the pope at Easter for permission to proceed. In early March 1522, more than a year in advance, Iñigo set out for Rome in all his aristocratic finery, riding on the back of a mule. The corrupt Leo X had died suddenly of malaria in December 1521, and on January 9, 1522, Charles Habsburg (King and Emperor) had engineered the nearly unanimous election of his former tutor, Adrian Dedal, to succeed Leo as Adrian VI. Iñigo headed for Rome coincidentally with Adrian's journey across Spain to Barcelona, the point of embarcation for voyages to Italy. The new pope stopped in Navarre, in northern Spain, for an official reception by the Duke of Najera's successor. Iñigo, too, stopped at Navarre to do some undescribed business at the Duke's residence at Navarette. Perhaps Adrian gave him a discreet audience.

Further on, the pilgrim kept an all-night vigil at a chapel of the Virgin of Aranzazu, Protectress of the Basques, vowing his chastity to her small, dark statue. He continued on to Montserrat, where he lodged in a Benedictine abbey. There, he rededicated himself to God's service before another statue of the Virgin, the Black Madonna of Montserrat, Protectress of Catalonia, Patroness of Christian Conquest. The spiritual exercise here must have been intense, for in the late afternoon of the third day, Iñigo traded clothes with a beggar, hung his sword and dagger on the Madonna's shrine, and gave his mule to the abbey.

While Adrian VI proceeded on to Barcelona, Iñigo detoured on foot to the village of Manresa for ten months of penances, spiritual preparation, and note-taking. Stripped of everything but sackcloth, a gourd for drinking, and a pilgrim's staff, he adopted the lifestyle of the early Knights Templar, begging food and alms. He was initiated into the Illuminati, the "Enlightened Ones," a secret society of gnostic fundamentalists who preached that all matter is absolutely and eternally evil.

The gnostics taught that humanity itself is of Satanic origin. Adam and Eve were the offspring of devils. Humanity can achieve salvation from death and eternal punishment, however, by freeing soul from body for absorption into the pure light of Godliness. This is done by withdrawing from sensual pleasure and intuitively discovering hidden truths as conveyed by the cabalah. (The gnostics' contempt for anything having to do with the physical side of existence translated into wildly ironic behavior. Some practiced radical celibacy because they believed the result of sexual intercourse, conception, would only imprison more souls in physical bodies. Others practiced unbridled sexual libertinism in order to prove they were completely free from all physical inhibition. Still others combined the two, pursuing hypocritical lives of celibate fornication, of which "safe sex" is the modern institution. Loyola's particular cult apparently chose the asceticism of self-flagellation, for Iñigo wandered many nights about the Manresa countryside whipping himself with a scourge studded with iron barbs. Later in life, he would decide that the whips and barbs "sapped one's strength," that the Godhead could as adequately be sought by the more humane self-mortification of the Spiritual Exercises.)

While Iñigo was outlining the Exercises in Manresa, Luther's translation of the New Testament was introducing readers and listeners in Germany, Switzerland, France, Bohemia, and England to a different form of spiritual exercise, one in which God's will, ancient and immutable, was expressed not within the private imagination but publicly, in the printed Word, for all to see. People devoured the New Testament even before it reached the bindery. In one contemporary's words, "The sheet, yet wet, was brought from the press under someone's cloak, and passed from shop to shop."[6]

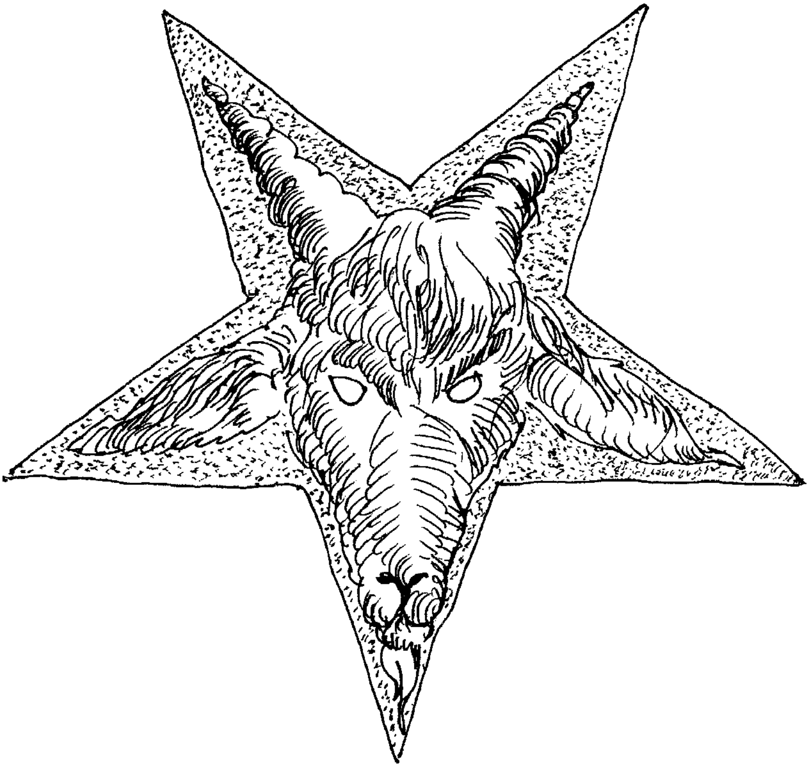
THE pilgrim sailed from Barcelona to the Italian port city of Gaeta, and walked the remaining distance to Rome, arriving there on Palm Sunday, March 29, 1523. Two days later, according to Vatican archives, "Iñigo de Loyola, cleric of the diocese of Pamplona" received permission from Pope Adrian VI to visit Jerusalem.

From Rome, Iñigo proceeded to Venice, where one of Charles Habsburg's agents received him graciously and introduced him to the Doge, Andrea Gritti, the highest official in Venetian civil government. A famed diplomat and linguist, Gritti arranged free passage for Iñigo aboard a small ship whose name – the "Negrona" – was appropriate for an evangelist dedicated to the Black Virgin of Christian Conquest.

On July 14, 1523, the Negrona left Venice, arriving a month later at the island of Cyprus. At Cyprus, one Diego Manes and his servant, along with several Cypriot officials, boarded ship for the rest of the voyage to Haifa. Diego Manes was a Commander of the Knights Hospitallers of St. John of Jerusalem.[7] Since 1312, the Hospitallers had held title to the vast wealth of the Knights Templar. They had been drawing upon these assets to defend the Roman economy against Islamic marauders in the east. But when the Turks attacked the Hospitallers' headquarters on the Island of Rhodes, the assets were frozen by the pope and his former pupil, the Holy Roman Emperor Charles. No assistance in any form was forthcoming from either party. Consequently, in December 1522, the Hospitallers had no choice but to surrender Rhodes and retreat to what would become their final domicile, Malta. The message was clear. Now that Luther's German-language New Testament was in print, Protestantism loomed a greater menace to Rome than Islam ever did.

It is possible that in a Jerusalem-bound ship named Negrona, Commander Diego Manes turned over the litanies, lists, secret codes, formulae, cabalah, and other portable assets comprising the Knights Templar resources to Iñigo. If this indeed happened, the western world's secret infrastructure was now Loyola's to populate and manipulate in the cause of learning against learning. That is my hypothesis. What is not hypothesis is that as soon as the pilgrim returned from Jerusalem he began vesting himself with Medici learning.

The idea of uniting the Templars with the Hospitallers was first argued publicly in a book published in 1305 by Raimon Llull, a renowned illuminatus from Majorca. Llull's book, Libre de Fine, ("Free At Last") appeared in the midst of a raging controversy between the French monarchy and the Roman papacy over who held jurisdiction over the Templars. That is the subject of our next chapter.



THE BAPHOMET

Chapter 6

THE EPITOME OF CHRISTIAN VALUES

SINCE THEIR FOUNDING on French soil in 1118, the Knights Templar had grown from a pair of self-impoverished knights hoping to keep Muslim terrorists from molesting pilgrims in the Holy Land to a mammoth organization controlling international finance and politics. The founders, Hugh de Payen and Godfroi de St. Omer, organized a group of excommunicated knight-crusaders and secured their absolution by a bishop. After placing the restored knights under oaths of poverty, chastity, secrecy, and obedience, they pledged the organization to rebuilding Solomon's Temple. Given space adjacent to an Islamic mosque situated upon the Temple's supposed ruins, they took the corporate name "Poor Knights of Christ and of the Temple of Solomon."

Bernard, Abbot of Clairvaux, the leading propagandist of the day, extolled the Templars as "the epitome and apotheosis of Christian values." Bolstered by such unprecedented promotion, the Poor Knights attracted the best and the brightest young men of Europe to become Crusaders, to vow celibacy and leave their families in defense of Christ's tomb against Muslim terrorists.

The mission failed within nine years. Even so, Bernard's propaganda caused the Templars to be received as conquering heroes when they returned to France. They set up their permanent lodge at Troyes under the patronage of the court of Champagne. (For nearly a century, Troyes had been Europe's leading school for the study of the cabalah, which may explain why the city is laid out in the shape of a champagne cork.)

For making the Templars a world power, Bernard shares credit with Cardinal Aimeric of Santa Maria Nuova. Aimeric was the Church's highest judicial officer. It was his unlawful connivance[1] that created Honorius II, the pope who ordained the Templars as the Church's most highly-esteemed religious order. It was Aimeric, too, who devised a radical "inner renewal of the Church," which inspired noblemen throughout England, Scotland, Flanders, Spain, and Portugal to shower the Templars with donations of land and money – over and above the properties required of all initiates upon joining the Order.

When Honorius died in 1130, Aimeric led a minority of cardinals in another connivance resulting in the election of Innocent II, who was consecrated pope in Aimeric's titular church of Santa Maria Nuova. In 1139, Innocent issued a bull placing the Templars under an exclusive vow of papal obedience – a measure by which Aimeric effectively put all Templar resources at the disposal of the papacy. Within another decade, the Knights were given exclusive rights by Pope Eugenius III to wear the rose croix, the rosy cross, on their white tunics. As their list of properties lengthened with donations from Italy, Austria, Germany, Hungary, and the Holy Land, the Templars built hundreds of great stone castles. Wealthy travelers lodged in these castles because of their unmatched security. Convinced they were building a new world, the Templars called each other frère maçon ("brother mason"). Later, this term would be anglicized into "Freemason."

The Templars invented modern banking by applying an oriental invention to their commerce. Agents of the Chinese emperor Kao-tsung, inventor of paper currency called fei-chi'en, "flying money," sought trade with the middle east during the period of Templar occupation.[2] Kao-tsung's was the first government on earth to enforce circulation of drafts as legal tender for debts. Evidently, Kao-tsung's agents introduced the Knights to this new medium of exchange created out of merchant drafts. The Templars enhanced their already booming business of (1) accepting current accounts, deposit accounts, deposits of jewels, valuables and title deeds, (2) making loans and advances (charging "fees" because the Church forbade interest), and (3) acting as agents for the secure transmission of such things by (4) adding circulating letters of credit – flying money – to serve as paper currency. To supply the Templars' currency needs may explain why paper in France was first manufactured in the Poor Knights' hometown of Troyes.

By 1300, presiding over the world economy from their Paris office,[3] the Templars had become an international power unto themselves. Engaged in diplomacy at the highest levels of state from the Holy Land westward, they set the tastes, the goals, the morality, the rules of the civilized world. Kings did their bidding – when Henry III of England threatened to confiscate certain of the Order's properties, he was upbraided by the Master Templar in the city of London:

> "What sayest thou, O King? So long as thou dost exercise justice, thou wilt reign. But if thou infringe it, thou wilt cease to be King."[4]

But suddenly, at their very zenith, the Poor Knights suffered a strange reversal of fortunes. In 1302, King Philip IV of France dared to challenge their sovereignty on his own soil. He asserted that in France everyone, Knights Templars included, was subject to the King. Pope Boniface VIII jumped in and declared that France, the King, the Templars, all of them, and everybody else as well, belonged to Pontifex Maximus – "It is absolutely necessary for the salvation of every human creature to be subject to the Roman Pontiff." Philip then accused the pope of illegitimacy, sexual misconduct, and heresy. Boniface prepared a bull excommunicating Philip, but before it could be published, a band of the Philip's mercenaries stormed the Vatican and demanded the pope's resignation. Although the intruders were driven off, the shock to body and soul was too much for Boniface, and he died a month later.

Two successor popes held firm against Philip, until Bertrand de Got, Archbishop of Bordeaux, was elected in 1305. Crowned in Lyons with the papal name Clement V, de Got moved the papacy to Avignon, and began a long train of concessions to Philip's royal prerogative. Finally, on Friday, October 13, 1307, Philip arrested all but thirteen of the Templars in France, tried them and, upon evidence of their practice of the cabalah, found them guilty of blasphemy and magic. At least fifty knights were burned at the stake.

From captured documents it was learned that the Templars, from the very beginning, had renounced what Roman theologians called "the religion of St. Peter." They had been initiated into a secret gnostic branch of the Eastern Church known as "the Primitive Christian Church." Because the Primitive Christians' apostolic succession claimed to flow from John the Baptist and the apostle John they were called "Johannites."[5]

The Johannites believed that although Jesus was "imbued with a spirit wholly divine and endowed with the most astounding qualities," he was not the true God. Consistent with gnostic logic, the true Johannite God would never lower Himself to become vile human matter. Jesus was in fact a false Messiah sent by the powers of darkness. He was justly crucified – although when his side was pierced he did repent of his pretensions and receive divine forgiveness. Thanks to his repentance, Jesus now enjoys everlasting life in the celestial company of the saints.

Regarding miracles, the Johannites believed that Jesus "did or may have done extraordinary or miraculous things," and that "since God can do things incomprehensible to human intelligence, all the acts of Christ as they are described in the Gospel, whether acts of human science or whether acts of divine power" can be accepted as true – except for the Resurrection, which is omitted from the Templars' copy of the Gospel of St. John.[6] Therefore, for all his wonderful attributes, Christ "was nothing, a false prophet and of no value." Only the Higher God of Heaven had power to save mankind.[7]

But the Higher God avoided human matter, and so lordship over the material world belonged to Satanael, the evil brother of Jesus. Satanael alone could enrich mankind. Templar cabalah represented Satanael as the head of a goat emblazoned with, sometimes contained within, a pentagram.[8] This symbol is deeply rooted in Old Testament cabalah, in which the goat is identified with power in the world and separation from God. On the greatest Israelite feastday, Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement, one goat was spared the sacrificial knife, and was sprinkled with the blood of another goat killed for the sins of Israel. The spared goat, the scapegoat, was then banished from the congregation to bear Israel's sins into the wilderness, which typified the world.[9] The scapegoat escaped with his life, his freedom.

King Solomon conferred with evil spirits,[10] but Scripture describes the spirits only generally. However, the Zohar, or "Book of Splendor," one of the main works of ancient cabalistic literature, tells us evil spirits appeared to the Israelites "under the form of he-goats and made known to them all that they wished to learn."[11]
The Templars called this goat-idol "Baphomet," from baphe- and –metis, Greek wor Baphomet encapsulates the career of Solomon, who Scripture says was absorbed into the wisdom of God more than any other human being,[12] yet finished out his life in communion with he-goatish evil spirits.[13] By the Templars' Johannite standard, communing with the evil spirits was the secret to controlling the world. By the biblical standard, however, Solomon represents the impossibility of human perfectibility. Perfectibility is indeed attainable, according to Scripture, but only through the redemptive process shown in the New Testament which Rome kept the Templars from reading.

ON March 22, 1312, Clement V dissolved the Knights Templar with his decree Vox clamantis ("War Cry"). But the dissolution proved a mere formality to further appease Philip. More importantly, it permitted the Templars, in other manifestations, to continue enriching the papacy. For Grand Master Jacques de Molay, just prior to his execution in 1313, sent the surviving thirteen French Templars to establish four new Metropolitan lodges: one at Stockholm for the north, one at Naples for the east, one at Paris for the south, and one at Edinburgh for the west. Thus, the Knights remained the militant arm of the papacy. Except that their wealth, their secrecy, their gnostic cabalism, and their oath of papal obedience were obscurely dispersed under a variety of corporate names.

A subtle provision in Vox clamantis transferred most Templar estates to the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, who took possession after King Philip's death. In Germany and Austria, the Templars became "Rosicrucians" and "Teutonic Knights." The Teutonic Knights grew strong in Mainz, birthplace of Gutenberg's press. Six centuries later, as the "Teutonic Order," the Knights would provide the nucleus of Adolf Hitler's political support in Munich and Vienna.

The Edinburgh lodge would become the headquarters of Scottish Rite Freemasonry, which Masonic historians call "American Freemasonry" because all but five of the signers of the Declaration of Independence are said to have practiced its craft. In Spain and Portugal the Templars became the "Illuminati" in whom Iñigo had taken membership at Manresa, and "Knights of Christ." It was under the red pattée cross of the Knights of Christ that Columbus had taken possession of what he called "las Indias" for King Ferdinand V of Spain, grandfather of Iñigo's discreet patron, Charles I and V, the Holy Roman Emperor.

As early as August of 1523, as I hypothesized in the previous chapter, this vast yet fragmented subterranean empire – Roman Catholicism's unseen root-system binding together the world – belonged to Iñigo de Loyola. His spiritual dynasty, which continues to this day, would use this system to cause God-fearing men who hated the papacy to perform, without realizing it, exactly how the papacy wanted them to.

But what of Iñigo’s education? His rise in academe is the subject of the next chapter.

AD MAIORU DEI GLORIA REGULA SOCIET IESU

"Hoc est digitus dei!"
Pope Paul III declares Loyola's plan for the Company of Jesus an Act of God. (From a Jesuit altar)

Chapter 7

THE FINGERSTROKE OF GOD

Determined on a priestly life, Iñigo de Loyola returned to Barcelona from Jerusalem in the spring of 1524. He spent the next three years in Spain getting the requisite Latin. Since direct contact with the Bible was prohibited by law, his reading coursed the humanities.

With the esoteric experience of his Spiritual Exercises, he charmed the wives of important men. He received frequent invitations to dine at elegant tables, but preferred to beg food door to door and distribute the choice pickings to the poor and sick. He lived in an attic and slept on the floorboards, trying desperately to persuade God of his worthiness. He prayed for six hours each day, attended mass three times a week, confessed every Sunday, and continued whipping himself. He devised secret penances, such as boring holes in his shoes and going barefoot in winter.

Sometimes the Exercises aroused in his followers instances of bizarre conduct – swooning, long spells of fainting or melancholia, rolling about the ground, being gripped with corpse-like rigidity. The Spanish Inquisition investigated him on suspicion of preaching gnostic illuminism. When Iñigo insisted that he was not preaching at all, but was merely talking about the things of God in a familiar way, the Inquisitor released him. In successive frays, the Inquisition ordered Iñigo (1) to get rid of his eccentric clothing and dress like other students, (2) to refrain from holding meetings until he had completed four years of study, and (3) to refrain from defining what constituted a grave sin. Wearying of the harassment, he decided to seek his four years of education beyond the Inquisition's reach.

He set out for the University of Paris with a pack mule carrying his belongings. He arrived at the University on February 2, 1528, and soon afterward registered in the run-down old College of Montaigu. John Calvin, who would become Protestantism's great theological systems designer, was leaving Montaigu just as Loyola arrived. Erasmus, the College's most famous alumnus, remembered graduating from Montaigu "with nothing except an infected body and a vast array of lice." The student body consisted mostly of wayward Parisian boys kept under harsh discipline; Iñigo was thirty-seven.

Paris was expensive, even for students. Much of the funds Iñigo had raised in Barcelona had been stolen by one of his disciples. In early 1529 he went into Belgium, where it is believed he received money from people close to the Holy Roman Emperor. One of these was Juan de Cuellar, Treasurer of the Kingdom of Spain. Another was Luis Vives, personal secretary to the Emperor's aunt, Queen Catherine of England, and private tutor to her daughter, Princess Mary (afterward the "Bloody" Queen). Iñigo returned to Paris much better off. He upgraded his lodgings.

In October, he left Montaigu and enrolled at the College of Ste. Barbe across the street. He pursued a course in arts and philosophy that would last three and a half years. His name appears on the Ste. Barbe registry as "Ignatius de Loyola." Some Jesuit historians have guessed he adopted the name in veneration of Ignatius of Antioch, an early Christian martyr. It was at Ste. Barbe that Iñigo began earnestly organizing his army, but not before traveling again to Belgium to ask Juan de Cuellar and Luis Vives for yet more money.

Armed with his command of the Templar secrets and with introductions provided by the Emperor and Vives, Ignatius crossed to England. This significant voyage is mentioned only once in his autobiography. He admits that he "returned with more alms than he usually did in other years." Perhaps Queen Catherine, the Emperor's aunt, introduced him to the Howards and the Petres, known to be among the first families to receive and nourish Jesuits sent to England.

Starting with his two Ste. Barbe roommates, Ignatius soon gathered a circle of six close friends ranging in age from teens to early twenties. Somewhat like himself, they were adventurous, impressionable, intelligent, and unpersuaded of the Bible's supreme authority. Their fondest dream was to save the Holy Land from the Muslims by performing heroic Templaresque exploits. One by one Ignatius gave them the Spiritual Exercises, and one by one they became disciples. Within a few years they were calling themselves La Compañìa de Iesus, the Company of Jesus.

On August 15, 1534, Feast Day of the Assumption of the Virgin into heaven, the companions swore oaths of service to the Blessed Virgin in Ste. Marie's Church at Montmartre, and to St. Denis, patron saint of France, in his chapel. (The experience of the Montmartre Oaths must have been intense, for Francis Xavier, who would become St. Francis, Apostle to the East, made the Spiritual Exercises with "a penitential fervor," says Broderick in Origin of the Jesuits, "that nearly cost him the use of his limbs.") They vowed poverty, chastity, and to rescue Jerusalem from the Muslims. However, should the rescue prove infeasible within a year, they vowed to undertake without question whatever other task the pope might require of them.

Well before a year had passed, Clement VII died and the Jerusalem dream was overwhelmed by more present dangers. Luther's Bible in German was creating defection in record numbers throughout Germany, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark. In France, the response to LeFevre's Bible was so decisive that King Francis I exclaimed that he would behead his own children if he found them harboring the blasphemous heresies acquirable through direct contact with scripture. England was lost in its entirety, due not to Bible reading, which Henry VIII prosecuted as avidly as any pope, but to the royal love life. Henry had demanded that Clement VII grant him a divorce from the Emperor's aunt Catherine, and then recognize the Protestant-oriented Anne Boleyn as his new Queen. When Clement stood mute, Henry took all of England away from Rome and made himself "complete owner of the lands and tenements [of England], as well at law as in equity."[1]

Giulia Farnese, with metal blouse

Clement VII was succeeded by the oldest cardinal, an erudite humanist with formidable diplomatic skills, 66-year-old Alessandro Farnese. Cardinal Farnese had been privately educated in the household of Lorenzo d'Medici and had been appointed Treasurer of the Vatican in 1492. He was crowned Pope Paul III. Vatican wags called Farnese "Cardinal Petticoat" because his strikingly beautiful sister Giulia had been mistress to the licentious Pope Alexander VI, for which the same wags nicknamed her "Bride of Christ." Giulia posed undraped for the statue of the Goddess Justice that still reclines voluptuously on Paul Ill's tomb in St. Peter's Basilica. Two centuries later, at the command, in the interests of decency, of Pius IX, the first pope to be officially declared infallible, Giulia's exposed breasts were fitted with a metal blouse.[2]

Paul III is a major figure in the history of the Society of Jesus, and consequently of the United States of America, since it was he who approved, in the summer of 1539, Ignatius de Loyola's business plan. Ignatius proposed a "minimal society" that would "do battle in the Lord God's service under the banner of the Cross." The militia would be very small, no more than sixty members, and each would have to take four vows – of poverty, chastity, obedience to the Church, and a vow of special obedience to the pope. They would not be confined to any specific parish but would be dispersed throughout the world according to the papacy's needs. They would wear no particular habit, but would dress according to the environment in which they found themselves. They would infiltrate the world in an unpredictable variety of pursuits – as doctors, lawyers, authors, reforming theologians, financiers, statesmen, courtiers, diplomats, explorers, tradesmen, merchants, poets, scholars, scientists, architects, engineers, artists, printers, philosophers, and whatever else the world might demand and the Church require.

Their head would be a Superior General. In the Constitutions which Ignatius was writing, the Superior General would be "obeyed and reverenced at all times as the one who holds the place of Christ our Lord."[3] The phrase "holds the place of Christ" means that the Superior General would share with the Pope, at a level unperceived by the general public, the divine title of "Vicar of Christ" first claimed by Gelasius I on May 13, 495. Loyola's completed Constitutions would repeat five hundred times that one is to see Christ in the person of the Superior General.[4] The General's equal status with the Pope, advantaged by an obscurity that renders him virtually invisible, is why the commander-in-chief of the Society of Jesus has always been called Papa Nero, the Black Pope.

The Superior General's small army would be trained by the Spiritual Exercises to practice a brand of obedience Loyola termed contemplativus in actione, active contemplation, instantaneous obedience with all critical thought suppressed. As stated in Section 353.1 of the Exercises, "We must put aside all judgment of our own, and keep the mind ever ready and prompt to obey in all things the hierarchical Church." But Jesuit obedience would be more than mere obedience of the will. An obedient will suppresses what it would do in order to obey what a superior wants done. Ignatius demanded obedience of the understanding. An obedient understanding alters its perception of reality according to the superior's dictates. Section 365.13 declares, "We must hold fast to the following principle: What seems to me white, 1 will believe black if the hierarchical Church so defines." Francis Xavier would later describe this quality of submission in a vow that unintentionally summarized the Jesuit mission: "I would not even believe in the Gospels were the Holy Church to forbid it."

The Society does not open its extreme oath of obedience to public inspection. However, a script alleged to be a true facsimile was translated by Edwin A. Sherman and deposited in the Library of Congress with the number BX3705.S56. According to this document, > when a Jesuit of the minor rank is to be elevated to command, he is conducted into the Chapel of the Convent of the Order, where there are only three others present, the principal or Superior standing in front of the altar. On either side stands a monk, one of whom holds a banner of yellow and white, which are the Papal colors, and the other a black banner with a dagger and red cross above a skull and crossbones, with the initials 'I.N.R.I.,' and below them the words 'ICSTUM NACAR REGES IMIOS,' the meaning of which is 'It is just to annihilate impious rulers.' [Biblically, these initials represent the Roman inscription above Christ's head on the cross: 'Jesus of Nazareth King of the Jews.']

>
> On the floor is a red cross upon which the postulant or candidate kneels. The Superior hands him a small black crucifix, which he takes in his left hand and presses to his heart and the Superior at the same time presents to him a dagger, which he grasps by the blade and holds the point against his heart, the Superior still holding it by the hilt....
>
> The Superior gives a preamble, and then administers the oath:
>
> I,_______________, now, in the presence of Almighty God, the Blessed Virgin Mary, the blessed Michael the Archangel, the blessed St. Paul and all the Saints and sacred Hosts of Heaven, and to you, my Ghostly Father, the Superior General of the Society of Jesus, founded by Ignatius Loyola, in the Pontificate of Paul the Third, and continued to the present, do by the Womb of the Virgin, the Matrix of God, and the Rod of Jesus Christ, declare and swear, that His Holiness the Pope is Christ's

Vice-Regent and is the true and only Head of the Catholic and Universal Church throughout the earth; and that by virtue of the keys of binding and loosing, given to His Holiness by my Saviour, Jesus Christ, he hath power to depose heretical kings, princes, states, commonwealths and governments, all being illegal without his sacred confirmation, and that they may safely be destroyed.

Therefore, to the utmost of my power, I shall and will defend this doctrine and His Holiness' right and custom against all usurpers of the heretical or Protestant authority whatever, especially the Lutheran Church of Germany, Holland, Denmark, Sweden and Norway, and the now pretended authority and churches of England and Scotland, and branches of the same now established in Ireland and on the Continent of America and elsewhere; and all adherents in regard that they be usurped and heretical, opposing the sacred Mother Church of Rome.

I do now renounce and disown any allegiance as due to any heretical king, prince, or state named Protestants or Liberals, or obedience to any of their laws, magistrates or officers.

I do further declare that the doctrines of the churches of England and Scotland, of the Calvinists, Huguenots and others of the name Protestants or Liberals to be damnable, and they themselves damned and to be damned who will not forsake the same.

I do further declare that I will help, assist and advise all or any of His Holiness' agents in any place wherever I shall be, in Switzerland, German, Holland, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, England, Ireland, or America, or in any other kingdom or territory I shall come to, and do my uttermost to extirpate the heretical Protestants or Liberals' doctrines and to destroy all their pretended powers, regal or otherwise.

I do further promise and declare that, notwithstanding I am dispensed with, to assume any religion heretical, for the propagating of the Mother Church's interest, to keep secret and private all her agents' counsels from time to time, as they may entrust me, and not to divulge, directly or indirectly, by word, writing, or circumstance whatever; but to execute all that shall be proposed, given in charge or discovered unto me, by you, my Ghostly Father, or any of this sacred convent.

I do further promise and declare that I will have no opinion or will of my own, or any mental reservation whatever, even as a corpse or cadaver, but will unhesitatingly obey each and every command that I may receive from my superiors in the Militia of the Pope and of Jesus Christ.

That I will go to any part of the world whithersoever I may be sent, to the frozen regions of the North, the burning sands of the desert of Africa, or the jungles of India, to the centres of civilization of Europe, or to the wild haunts of the barbarous savages of America, without murmuring or repining, and will be submissive in all things whatsoever communicated to me.

I furthermore promise and declare that I will, when opportunity presents, make and wage relentless war, secretly or openly, against all heretics, Protestants and Liberals, as I am directed to do, to extirpate and exterminate them from the face of the whole earth; and that I will spare neither age, sex, or condition; and that I will hang, burn, waste, boil, flay, strangle and bury alive these infamous heretics, rip up the stomachs and wombs of their women and crush their infants' heads against the walls, in order to annihilate forever their execrable race. That when the same cannot be done openly, I will secretly use the poisoned cup, the strangulating cord, the steel of the poinard or the leaden bullet, regardless of the honor, rank, dignity, or authority of the person or persons, whatever may be their condition in life, either public or private, as I at any time may be directed so to do by any agent of the Pope or Superior of the Brotherhood of the Holy Faith, of the Society of Jesus.

In confirmation of which, I hereby dedicate my life, my soul, and all my corporeal powers, and with this dagger which I now receive, I will subscribe my name written in my own blood, in testimony thereof; and should I prove false or weaken in my determination, may my brethren and fellow soldiers of the Militia of the Pope cut off my hands and my feet, and my throat from ear to ear, my belly opened and sulphur burned therein, with all the punishment that can be inflicted upon me on earth and my soul be tortured by demons in an eternal hell forever!

All of which I,________________________, do swear by the blessed Trinity and blessed Sacrament, which I am now to receive, to perform and on my part to keep inviolably; and do > call all the heavenly and glorious host of heaven to witness these my real intentions to keep this my oath.

>
> In testimony hereof I take this most holy and blessed Sacrament of the Eucharist, and witness the same further, with my name written with the point of this dagger dipped in my own blood and sealed in the face of this holy Convent.
>
> He receives the wafer from the Superior and writes his name with the point of his dagger dipped in his own blood taken from over the heart....

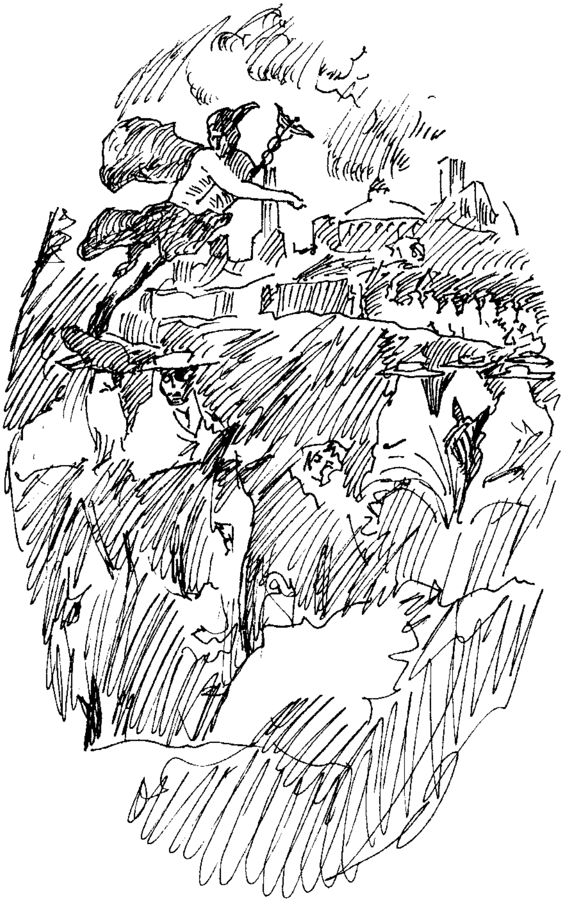
WHEN Ignatius concluded his presentation, the Pope reportedly cried out "Hoc est digitus Dei!" – "This is the fingerstroke of God!" On September 27, 1540, Paul III sealed his approval with the highest and most solemn form of papal pronouncement, a document known as a "bull" (from the Latin bulla, meaning "bubble," denoting the attached ovoid or circular seal bearing the pope's name). Paul's bull ordaining the Jesuits is entitled Regimini militantis ecclesiae, "On the Supremacy of the Church Militant." The title forms a cabalistic device common to pagan Roman divining. Known as notariqon, this device is an acronym that enhances the meaning of its initialized words, in the way "MADD" tells us that Mothers Against Drunk Drivers are more than "against" drunken drivers, they're very angry. "Regimini militantis ecclesiae" produces the notariqon "R[O]ME," the empire whose salvation the Society of Jesus was ordained by this bull to secure through the arts of war.

The following April, the original six and a few other members elected Ignatius de Loyola their first Superior General. What had been approved as a minimal society soon multiplied to a thousand strong. Ignatius did this by administering to only sixty the extreme oath of obedience to the pope, while admitting hundreds more under lesser oaths. Ever since, the exact size of the Society has been known only to the Superior General. As the world gained increasing numbers of doctors, lawyers, authors, reforming theologians, financiers, statesmen, courtiers, diplomats, explorers, tradesmen, merchants, poets, scholars, scientists, architects, engineers, artists, printers, and philosophers, it was extremely difficult for an ordinary citizen to tell which were Jesuits and which were not. Not even Jesuits could say for sure, because of a provision in the Constitutions (Sections 81-86 of Part I) which authorizes the Superior General to "receive agents, both priestly agents to help in spiritual matters and lay agents to give aid in temporal and domestic functions." Called "coadjutors," these lay agents could be of any religious denomination, race, nationality, or sex. They took an oath which bound them "for whatever time the Superior General of the Society should see fit to employ them in spiritual or temporal services." This provision was availed by so many black popes that the French had a name for people suspected of being Jesuit agents: les robes-petites ("short-robes"). The English called them "short-coats" or "Ignatians."

Within two years of Regimini militantis ecclesiae, Paul III appointed the Society to administer the Roman Inquisition (not to be confused with the Spanish Inquisition, which reported only to the Spanish crown). When the Jesuits were comfortable with the Inquisition, Paul made his move to "reconcile" with the Protestants.



THE SPIRIT OF TRENT

Sketch from the Sebastiano painting of the Psychopomp directing Paul III (left center) and his cardinals to the Council of Trent.

Chapter 8

MOVING IN

THE TERM "PROTESTANT" was coined in 1529 to describe the large number of princes and delegates of fourteen cities, largely German, who protested Emperor Charles Habsburg's attempt to enforce the Edict of Worms. This edict bound the Empire's three hundred princely states and free cities to Roman Catholicism. The Protestants proposed a compromise formula – basically a statement of the Lutheran faith – known as the Augsburg Confession.

For fifteen years the Edict of Worms and the Augsburg Confession kept Catholic and Protestant rulers in a Mexican standoff. Then, on December 13, 1545, Paul III called both factions to the small German-speaking northern Italian cathedral city of Trent. The promise was to resolve differences peacefully in an ecumenical council.

The Council of Trent had not been seated four months before it decreed that the books and biblical translations of Luther, LeFevre, Zwingli, Calvin, and other "unapproved persons" were "altogether forbidden [and] allowed to no one, since little advantage, but much danger, generally arises from reading them."[1]

Then the Jesuits moved in. Diego Lainez, Alfonso Salmeron, two of the original companions, and Claude LeJay, all three in their early thirties, distinguished themselves at Trent early on by spurning the grand style of the other delegates. They set up housekeeping in a "narrow, smoke-blackened baker's oven" and wore clothing so heavily patched and greasy that other priests were embarrassed to associate with them.[2] They carried with them intricate advisories from Ignatius himself, written from the delegates' point of view, as for example:

> When the matter that is being debated seems so manifestly just and right that I can no longer keep silent, then I should speak my mind with the greatest composure and conclude what I have said with the words 'subject of course to the judgment of a wiser head than mine.' If the leaders of the opposing party should try to befriend me, I must cultivate these men, who have influence over the heretics and lukewarm Catholics, and try to win them away from their errors with holy wisdom and love....

Most of the eighteen-year lifetime of the Council of Trent consisted of two intermissions spanning four and ten years each. At the beginning of the second intermission, Ignatius founded a special college in Rome for German-speaking Jesuits called the Germanicum. Three years later, the Peace of Augsburg established the principle cuius regio, eius religio, "whose the region, his the religion." The Peace of Augsburg was Jesuit paydirt. They could now bring whole populations to Rome simply by winning over a few princes. And so they did. By 1560, the Society had returned virtually all of South Germany and Austria to the Church.

The fruits of the Germanicum were so successful that when the Council of Trent finally adjourned on December 4, 1563, its decrees and canons conceded nothing to the Protestant reformers. Indeed, under the spiritual direction of Superior General Diego Lainez – Ignatius had died in 1556 – the Council denied every Protestant doctrine point by point. Anathematized (eternally damned) was anyone who believed that salvation is God's free gift to His faithful and does not depend upon partaking of Church sacraments. Anathematized was anyone who looked to the Bible for the ultimate authority on "doctrine, reproof, correction, and instruction in righteousness"[3] rather than to the teaching Church. Anathematized was anyone who regarded as unworthy of belief such unscriptural doctrines as (1) the efficacy of papal indulgences, (2) of confession alone to a priest as necessary to salvation, (3) of the mass as a true and real sacrifice of the body of Christ necessary to salvation, (4) the legitimacy of teachings on purgatory, (5) the celibate priesthood, (6) invoking saints by prayer to intercede with God, (7) the veneration of relics, and (8) the use of images and symbols.

The Council of Trent hurled one hundred twenty-five anathemas – eternal damnations – against Protestantism. Then, as an addendum to its closing statements, the Council recommended that the Jesuits "should be given pride of place over members of other orders as preachers and professors." It was at Trent that the Roman Catholic Church began marching to the beat of the Black Papacy.

A generation later, the guidelines of the Roman Inquisition under Jesuit direction were published at the command of the Cardinals Inquisitors General. This Directorium Inquisitorum (1584) was dedicated to Gregory XIII, the pope who bestowed upon Jesuits the right to deal in commerce and banking, and who also decreed that every papal legate should have a Jesuit advisor on his personal staff.[4] Here follows a summary of the Directorium Inquisitorum (translated by J. P. Callender, 1838):

> He is a heretic who does not believe what the Roman Hierarchy teaches— A heretic merits the pains of fire____By the Gospel, the canons, civil law, and custom, heretics must be burned.... For the suspicion alone of heresy, purgation is demanded.... Magistrates who refuse to take the oath for defense of the faith shall be suspected of heresy____Wars may be commenced by the authority of the Church.... Indulgences for the > remission of all sin belong to those who signed with the cross for the persecution of heretics____Every individual may kill a heretic. Persons who betray heretics shall be rewarded.... Heretics may be forced to profess the Roman faith.... A heretic, as he sins in all places, may everywhere be judged.... Heretics must be sought after, and be corrected or exterminated.... Heretics enjoy no privileges in law or equity.... The goods of heretics are to be considered as confiscated from the perpetration of the crime... The pope can enact new articles of faith.... Definitions of popes and councils are to be received as infallible.... Inquisitors may torture witnesses to obtain the truth.... It is laudable to torture those of every class who are guilty of heresy____The Pope has power over infidels.... The Church may make war with infidels— Those who are strongly suspected are to be reputed as heretics____He who does not inform against heretics shall be deemed as suspected— Inquisitors may allow heretics to witness against heretics, but not for them.... Inquisitors must not publish the names of informers, witnesses, and accusers.... Penitent heretics may be condemned to perpetual imprisonment____Inquisitors may provide for their own expenditures, and the salaries of their officers, from the property of heretics.... Inquisitors enjoy the benefits of a plenary indulgence [a full papal forgiveness of sin] at all times in life, and in death.

The Inquisition's effect, of course, was to send the more resourceful of the "heretics, Protestants and Liberals" who escaped torture or execution scurrying underground, or into the burgeoning world of commerce, or into regions where Protestant civil authorities kept Inquisitors at bay. Yearning for a less intrusive religious experience, they joined attractive philosophical fraternities where they could speak freely against Roman Catholicism. For this ostensible reason, these fraternities or cults or lodges operated in secrecy. In fact, they were the remnants of the Templar network – Rosicrucians, Teutonic Knights, the numerous and various rites of Freemasonry. Like the Templars and the Jesuits, they were religious hierarchies of strict obedience. They differed from the Jesuits, however, in that their pyramid culminated in an ultimate authority no brother could identify with certainty. The highest master of a Lodge received commandments from an "Unknown Superior," a Superior whose will the master's whole struggle up the degrees had trained him to obey without question. What the masters never realized was that this mysterious personage, as we shall examine in more detail later, was in fact none other than the Black Pope.

A century after Trent, a descendant of Paul III, Ranuccio Farnese, commissioned the great Venetian painter Sebastiano Ricci to commemorate the genesis of this definitive Council. Sebastiano produced his famous "Paul III and the cardinals en route to Trent." The work is breathtakingly candid. In the air, above the pope's head, hovers a deity, directing the entourage onward. The deity is not Jesus or Mary or Yahweh, God of the Bible. It is Mercury of the Sibylline and Virgilian gospels – the holy scripture of Caesarean Rome.

Mercury is the celebrated god of commerce. The metal most essential to commercial fluidity is named for him. Metallic mercury is known to scientists as the element Hg (derived from the Latin hydrargyrum, "liquid silver"). It is Hg's unique chemical nature that produces refined gold, the fundamental substance in which commercial value is denominated. Liquid at room temperature, Hg draws impurities out of gold ore and binds them into an amalgam. When the amalgam is heated, the heat drives away both Hg and the impurities. What is left is pure gold suitable for further amalgamation into coin.

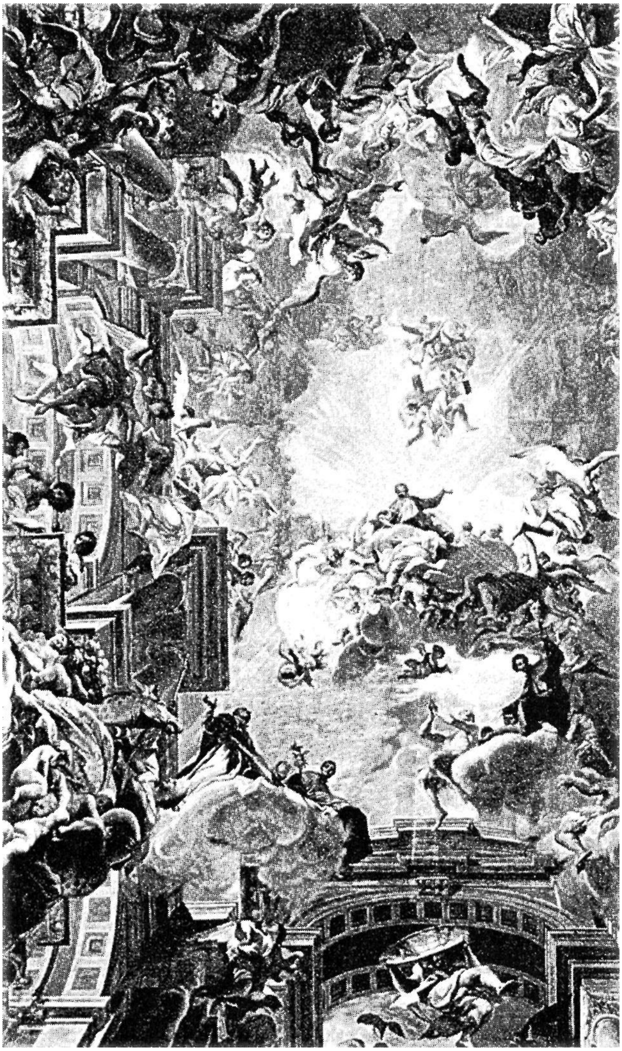
Mercury's theological life began in ancient Babylon, where he was known as Marduk. The Bible calls him Merodach, the Hebrews called him Enoch, the Egyptians called him Thoth, the Scandinavians worshiped him as Odin, the Teutons as Wotan, and the Orientals as Buddha. Livy says he was introduced to the Romans in 495 BC as a Latinate version of the Greek god Hermes.[5]

By whatever name, in whatever culture, Mercury is considered the god of the Universal Mind, of Writing, Number, and Thought. Just as Mercury the metal draws out impurities and binds them into a mass that is burned and discarded, Mercury the deity uses his intellectual brilliance to play Pied Piper to impure humanity.

He attracts followers and leads their souls to Hades, for which the Greeks gave him the title Psychopompas (from psycho- "soul" and pompous, "director"). Because Hades is not the most desirable of destinations, the Psychopomp had to construct elegant missionary adaptations. He had to charm souls, deceive them into following him any way he could – whether by words, sights, or sounds. Like Hg, his metallic form, Mercury could change his shape instantaneously. Did you see the villain in the movie Terminator II? With his ever-changing voices, physiognomies, and identities, he is state-of-the-art Psychopomp. In many cultures, Mercury's ingenious deceptions earned him the title of "The Trickster." He was patron deity of deceivers. And of thieves – even as a baby, Mercury couldn't resist stealing Apollo's cattle....

Was Sebastiano Ricci telling us that Mercury was the dominating spirit of the Council of Trent? Certainly the Council required, and still requires, Roman Catholics to honor many traditions which the Bible either condemns or does not authorize. Yet the Council also required, and still requires, that the Bible be honored as divinely inspired. Honoring the Bible by advocating unbiblical norms? This calls for a skill worthy of the Psychopomp, a skill that makes one believe that black is white. As we've seen, this is the Jesuit skill – securing obedience of the subject's understanding. If indeed the Society of Jesus performs the function of Mercury, it is participating in a natural process known to pagan and biblical scriptures alike, a process by which impure humanity is attracted to oblivion, leaving behind only the pure. The theological implications of this process we shall discuss toward the end of this book.

With the Inquisition and the Council of Trent to pave their way, the Society of Jesus quickly became what Loyola had dreamed it would become: the resurrected Knights Templar. In the next chapter, we shall examine the continuation of their meteoric rise as developers of the modern world.



IGNATIUS IN HEAVEN

Padre Pozzo's spectacular ceiling at the Church of St. Ignatius in Rome. Note how the light emanates from Ignatius rather than Jesus Christ, who still bears His cross.

Chapter 9

SECURING CONFIDENCE

STRENGTHENED BY Trent's unqualified endorsement, the Jesuits quickly became the Church's most popular confessors. Ignatius directed that "a Jesuit should not allow anyone to leave the confessional entirely without comfort." If a confessant's opinion on any matter could be found in the least bit defensible, Ignatius said, "he should be permitted to adhere to it, even when the contrary opinion can be said to be more correct."

People relished confessing to Jesuits. "Always go to the Jesuits for confession," it was said in Germany, "for they put cushions under your knees and under your elbows, too."

Merchants, aristocrats, courtiers, and crowned heads insisted that Jesuit confessional direction was the best in all Christendom. They considered the Jesuits to be the greatest converters of hardened sinners, the surest moral guides through life's bewildering complexities. Indeed, for two centuries, all the French kings, from Henry III to Louis XV, would confess to Jesuits. All German emperors after the early seventeenth century would confess to Jesuits, too. Jesuits would take the confessions of all Dukes of Bavaria after 1579, most rulers of Poland and Portugal, the Spanish kings in the eighteenth century, and James II of England.

The sacrament of confession kept Jesuit information channels loaded with vital state secrets. It also furnished the Society an ideal vehicle for influencing political action. One of the most dramatic instances is found in the famous memoir of François de la Chaize, Jesuit confessor to the painfully diseased King of France from 1675 until 1709. "Many a time since," wrote La Chaize, > when I have had him [Louis XIV] at confession, I have shook hell about his ears, and made him sigh, fear, and tremble, before I would give him absolution.[1] By this I saw that he had still an inclination to me, and was willing to be under my government; so I set the baseness of the action before him by telling the whole story, and how wicked it was, and that it could not be forgiven till he had done some good action to balance that, and expiate the crime. Whereupon he at last asked me what he must do. I told him that he must root out all heretics from his kingdom.

Louis obeyed his confessor by revoking the Edict of Nantes (October 1685), which immediately resulted in:

> the demolition of all the remaining Protestant temples throughout France, and the entire prohibition of even private worship under penalty of confiscation of body and property; the banishment of all Protestant pastors from France within fifteen days; the closing of all Protestant schools; the prohibition of parents to instruct their children in the Protestant faith; the injunction upon them, under a penalty of five hundred livres in each case, to have their children baptized by the parish priest, and brought up in the Roman Catholic religion; the confiscation of the property and goods of all Protestant refugees who failed to return to France within four months; the penalty of the galleys for life to all men, and of imprisonment for life to all women, detected in the act of attempting to escape from France.[2]

It was inevitable that the Council of Trent would establish the Jesuits as the schoolmasters of Europe. With money from royalty and commerce (and not so much as a pfennig from the Church), the Society built an extensive system of schools and colleges. No tuition was charged, but each prospective student was thoroughly examined to see if he had aptitudes the Society could use. With the founding of the first Jesuit school at Coimbra, Portugal, by the Emperor's youngest sister Catherina (Iñigo's romantic interest who had since married the King of Portugal), the principal Jesuit occupation became teaching. By 1556, three-fourths of the Society's membership were dedicated in 46 Jesuit colleges to "learning against learning," to indoctrinating minds with the learning of illuminated humanism as opposed to the learning of Scripture. This network would expand by 1749 to 669 colleges, 176 seminaries, 61 houses of study, and 24 universities partly or wholly under Jesuit direction.

Many Protestant families sent their sons to Jesuit schools, despite Martin Luther's early warning in An Appeal to the Ruling Class (1520) that "unless they diligently train and impress Scripture upon young students, schools will prove to be widening gates of hell." The Jesuit curriculum, or ratio studiorum ("method of study"), gave Scripture significant inattention. Part IV, Section 351 of Loyola's Constitutions prescribes courses in "the humane letters of different languages, logic, natural and moral philosophy, metaphysics, scholastic and positive theology," with "Sacred Scripture" bringing up the rear. How rigorously any one of these subjects was to be studied depended upon "circumstances of times, places, persons, and other such factors, according to what seems expedient in our Lord to him who holds the principal charge." Section 366 puts Scripture at the mercy of these factors: "The scholastics should acquire a good foundation in Latin before they attend lectures on the arts, and in the arts before they pass on to scholastic theology; and in it before they study positive theology. Scripture may be studied either concomitantly or later on." If Scripture should be studied at all, the commentary and critical interpretation of Protestant scholastics were to be ignored: "In the case of Christian authors, even though a work may be good it should not be lectured on when the author is bad, lest attachment to him be acquired."

"The curriculum of the Jesuit colleges came to be adopted to a great extent as the basis of the curricula in the European colleges generally," wrote Dr. James J. Walsh, Dean of Fordham University Medical School.[3] Moreover, according to Dr. Walsh,

> The Founding Fathers of our American Republic, that is to say the groups of men who drew up and signed the Declaration of Independence, who were the leaders in the American Revolution, and who formulated the Constitution of the United States ... were, the majority of them, educated in the colonial colleges or in corresponding colleges abroad ... which followed ... almost exactly the Jesuit Ratio Studiorum. The fact has been missed to a great extent in our histories of American education....

Embedded in the ratio studiorum were the elements of entertainment, of dramatic production – composition, rhetoric, and eloquence. These courses interlinked with the Spiritual Exercises to intensify the experientiality of Catholic doctrine over Scripture and Protestantism. They resulted in a genre of spectacular plays that won distinction as "Jesuit theatre."

The first Jesuit theatre was performed in Vienna in 1555, nearly forty years before the emergence of Shakespeare. It was instantly popular and quickly spread to other parts of Europe. Between 1597 and 1773 more than five hundred Jesuit theatricals were staged in the lower Rhine regions alone. Jacob Bidermann's play Cenodoxus ("Newfangled Beliefs"), a point-by-point rebuttal of Luther's teachings, proved the power of entertainment to achieve political reform. "Such a wholesome impression was made," wrote Father Bidermann recalling the 1609 opening of Cenodoxus in Munich, "that a full fourteen persons of the highest rank of the Bavarian court retired into solitude during the days that followed, to perform the Spiritual Exercises and to reform their manner of living. Truly a hundred sermons would not have done so much good."[4]

An exemplary Jesuit drama, performed in 1625 at the College of St. Omer in honor of Belgian royalty, allegorized the glorious end to civil war in Belgium brought by the advent of Princess Isabella and her husband, Albert. The play, as reviewed by a contemporary official, > represented a country, long heavily oppressed under the Iron Age, supplicating the help of Jupiter, who, after having summoned a council of the gods, sent down Saturn, lately married to Astraea. These visitors were received with much pomp by twelve zodiacs or princes sent by Mercury. They then dispatched four most potent heroes, Hercules, Jason, Theseus and Perseus from the Elysian Fields, with commands to conquer Iron Age, War, Error, and Discord. The heroes expelled those terrible monsters from the country and substituted in their stead Golden Age, Peace, Truth, and Concord. The Princess with the whole assembly were highly delighred.[5]

The faculty of Munich College praised the way Jesuit theatre captivated Protestants, especially the parents of school-aged youngsters: "There is no better means of making friends out of the heretics and the enemies of the Church, and filling up the enrollment of the school than good high-spirited playacting." Moliere's Jesuit theatricals in Paris were so popular that even the dress rehearsals were sold out. Mozart, at the age of eleven, was commissioned to write music for a play at the Jesuit college in Salzburg, where his father was musical director to the Archbishop. Even from the West Indies a Jesuit missionary reported that "nothing has made a more forceful impression on the Indians than our play."

In England, Jesuit theatre was not known as such because of Queen Elizabeth's statute making it a capital crime to be, or even to assist, a Jesuit within her orbit. But if the purpose of Jesuit theatre was to capture that share of man's spiritual attention which might otherwise have been directed toward the Bible, then England certainly produced the greatest Jesuit playwright of them all. Shakespeare occupies us with the human process in a way that subtly marginalizes the Bible – exactly pursuant to the Jesuit mission.

Shakespearian characters do preach, and they preach a religion, but it is not the Gospel of Jesus Christ. It is the gnostic illumination of Medici learning that Shakespeare preaches, the stuff of Jesuit schools. Not surprisingly, the secret tradition of Templarism claims Shakespeare, at least the writer of his plays, to have been a Rosicrucian steeped in Medici learning:

> The philosophic ideals promulgated throughout Shakespearian plays distinctly demonstrate their author to have been thoroughly familiar with certain doctrines and tenets peculiar to Rosicrucianism; in fact, the profundity of the Shakespearian productions stamps their creator as one of the illuminati of the ages....
>
> Who but a Platonist, a Qabbalist, or a Pythagorean could have written The Tempest, Macbeth, Hamlet, or The Tragedy of Cymbeline? Who but one deeply versed in Paracelsian lore could have conceived A Midsummer Night's Dream?

Yet, as Garry Wills in his book Witches & Jesuits points out, Macbeth is an elaborate condemnation of the Jesuits as satanists, murderers, witches. Macbeth is one of many of its period's "powder plays," a genre in which certain buzz words, well understood by contemporaries, memorialize the guilt and execution of eight Jesuits for having schemed the Gunpowder Plot of November 5, 1605. The Plot aimed to blow up the entire government of Great Britain, including the royal family, in a single catastrophic explosion under the Houses of Parliament.

How could a play defaming Jesuits be of service to the Jesuit agenda? As we shall see, warfare in defense of the papacy requires extravagant measures. In fact, both the Gunpowder Plot, which failed, and the celebration of its detection, which lives on in Macbeth, served Rome abundantly. King James I, who declared himself the Plot's divinely-illuminated discoverer, blamed the Plot on "Jesuits and papists." But at the same time, James exonerated "less fanatical Catholics."[6] According to Wills, "the Plot gave [James] his best opportunity to separate loyal and moderate Catholics from the mad extremists of the Plot." In short, the Plot secured England for "loyal and moderate" Roman Catholicism. In the reasoning of a Superior General, particularly the General of the Gunpowder Plot and Shakespearian theatre, Claudio Acquaviva, the sacrifice of eight Jesuits was a small tactical price to pay for moving the King of England to express confidence in the pope's British subjects, estimated at half the population of the realm.

CERTAINLY the most elaborate single Jesuit theatrical event was produced by Gregory XV, the first Jesuit pupil to be elected Pope. This was the canonization of Ignatius de Loyola, the climax of Gregory's brief pontificate (he reigned only three years). Canonization is authorized nowhere in the Bible. Rather, it is a process adapted from the pagan tradition of "apotheosis," whereby the priestly college declared a particularly effective mortal to be a god. In Roman Catholicism, the Sacred Congregation of Rites conducts a lengthy inquisition into the works of a deceased candidate. The inquisition can take dozens, even hundreds of years. The candidate's works are defended before a tribunal of three judges against a "devil's advocate." A final judgment is declared by the Pope, who orders the Church to believe that the candidate's soul is in Heaven, and to venerate the person with the title of "Saint." (The Bible teaches that anyone who hears and does the commandments of Jesus is a saint. Without any hierarchical red tape, he or she avoids judgment and goes to heaven immediately upon physical death.)

Loyola's canonization was celebrated on March 12, 1622 in a ceremony that was "an unprecedented display of ecclesiastical pomp, pageantry, and extravagance."[7] One eyewitness described the event as "an expression of the reborn spirit of the Catholic Church, of the triumph of the Blessed Virgin over Luther and Calvin."[8]

RIDING the crest of humanist exuberance following Loyola's canonization, Jesuit priest Athenasius Kircher (1602-1680) contributed powerfully to Jesuit theatre as sensory experience. With his megaphone, which enabled the voice of one to reach thousands, Kircher invented broadcasting. He also fathered modern camera theory with his perfection of the lanterna magica. The magic lantern projected sharp images through a lens upon a screen, giving audiences the illusion of burning cities and conflagrations. Kircher's work influenced the creation of the phenakistoscope (1832), the zoetrope (1860), the kinematoscope (1861), the kineograph (1868), the praxinoscope (1877), and finally, Thomas Alva Edison's kinetograph for filming action to be projected onto a screen through his kinetoscope (1894). Edison had a pet name for the tar-papered studio in West Orange, New Jersey, where all his prototypical films were made. He called it "Black Maria," a term that aptly described the image to whom Iñigo de Loyola dedicated his life in 1522 – the Black Madonna of Montserrat.

The American cinema's earliest subject matter to capture the popular imagination – the "cowboy" – was a Jesuit contribution as well. Eusebio Kino, whose statue is one of two representing Arizona in the U.S. Capitol building, was a Jesuit professor from Ingolstadt College in Bavaria. Between 1687 and 1711 Kino introduced cattle and their management to southern Arizona. For this he is gratefully remembered as "Father of the Cattle Business." Pondering the works of Kircher and Kino, we come to a rather astonishing awareness: Kino's cowboys, as projected through Kircher's magic lantern, indoctrinated America's earliest movie audiences with the underlying message of Jesuit theatre and Roman Catholic theology – that knowing and obeying Scripture is not necessary in comprehending the ways of good and evil, or in doing justice under natural law.

Using cinema and radio to unite Catholic laypersons with the Roman hierarchy was a main purpose of "Catholic Action." Catholic Action was inaugurated in 1922 by Pius XI, whose two confessors, Fathers Alissiardi and Celebrano, were Jesuits. The first pope to install a radio station at the Vatican (1931) and to establish national film review offices (1922), Pius XI ordered Catholics into politics. In the letter Peculari quadam ("Containing the flock") he warned that "the men of Catholic Action would fail in their duty if, as opportunities allow it, they did not try to direct the politics of their province and of their country."

The men of Catholic Action did try. Their first major effort was to employ Black Pope Vladimir Ledochowski's strategy of bringing the Catholic nations of central and eastern Europe together into a pan-German federation. To head the federation, Ledochowski required a charismatic leader charged with subduing the communistic Soviet Union on the east, Protestant Prussia, Protestant Great Britain, and republican France on the west.[9] Ledochowski chose the Catholic militarist Adolf Hitler, who told Bishop Bernind of Osnabruch in 1936 that > there was no fundamental difference between National Socialism and the Catholic Church. Had not the church, he argued, looked on Jews as parasites and shut them in ghettos? 'I am only doing,' he boasted, 'what the church has done for fifteen hundred years, only more effectively.' Being a Catholic himself, he told Berning, he 'admired and wanted to promote Christianity.'[10]

To promote Christianity as taught him by Roman Catholicism, Hitler appointed Leni Riefenstahl to create the greatest fascist films ever produced. Her deification of Hitler and romanticization of autocracy in spectacles like Triumph of the Will are, in themselves, the history of German cinema in the thirties and early forties. In print, Ledochowski's pan-German manifesto took the form of Hitler's autobiographical Mein Kampf ("My Struggle"), ghost-written by the Jesuit Father Staempfle[11] and placed beside the Bible on the altars of German churches.[12]

After World War II, during September 1957, Pope John XXIII gave Jesuit theatre even broader horizons with his encyclical Miranda prorsus ("Looking ahead"), saying,

> Men must be brought into closer communion with one another. They must become socially minded. These technical arts (cinema, sound broadcasting, and television) can achieve this aim far more easily than the printed word. [Italics mine] The Catholic Church is keenly desirous that these means be converted to the spreading and advancement of everything that can be > truly called good. Embracing, as she does, the whole of human society within the orbit of her divinely appointed mission, she is directly concerned with the fostering of civilization among all peoples.

To Catholic film producers and directors, Miranda prorsus delivered > a paternal injunction not to allow films to be made which are at variance with the faith and Christian moral standards. Should this happen – which God forbid – then it is for the Bishops to rebuke them and, if necessary, to impose upon them appropriate sanctions.

John XXIII urged that Pius XI's national film reviewing offices > be entrusted to men who are experienced in cinema, sound broadcasting, and television, under the guidance of a priest specially chosen by the Bishops.... At the same time We urge that the faithful, and particularly those who are militant in the cause of Catholic Action [Jesuits and their protégés], be suitably instructed, so that they may appreciate the need for giving to these offices their willing, united, and effective support.

In 1964, Pope Paul VI amplified Miranda prorsus with the decree Inter mirifica ("Among the Wonders"), saying "it is the Church's birthright to use and own ... the press, the cinema, radio, television and others of a like nature." Paul cited > a special responsibility for the proper use of the means of social communication [which] rests on journalists, writers, actors, designers, producers, exhibitors, distributors, operators, sellers, critics – all those, in a word, who are involved in the making and transmission of communications in any way whatever.... They have power to direct mankind along a good path or an evil path by the information they impart and the pressure they exert. It will be for them to regulate the economic, political, and artistic values in a way that will not conflict with the common good....

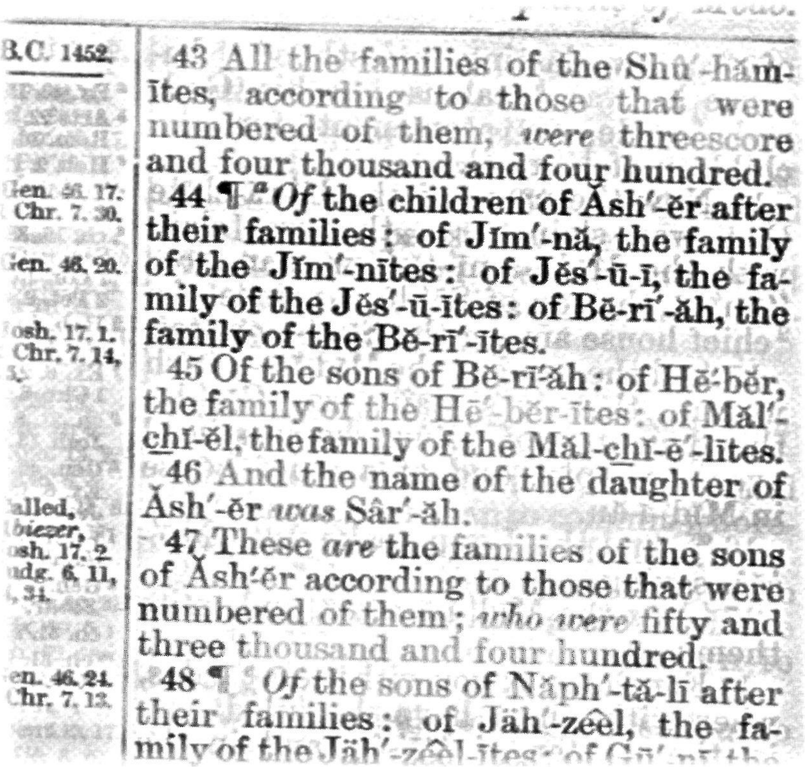
The quality of entertainment's content was decreed in a section of Inter mirifica encouraging "the chronicling, the description or the representation of moral evil [which] can, with the help of the means of social communication and with suitable dramatization, lead to a deeper knowledge and analysis of man and to a manifestation of the true and the good in all their splendor." Emboldened by this papal decree, social communicators since 1965 have pushed the constitutional guarantees of "free speech" to the limit by chronicling, describing, and representing moral evil with such progressively vivid, repulsive, prurient, yet often appealing detail that entertainment has become, in the opinion of many, a veritable technological "how to" of moral evil. It clearly does not lead audiences to a deeper appreciation of Holy Scripture. This fact identifies entertainment today as a successful Jesuit theatrical mission.

DURING its four centuries of existence, the Jesuit educational/theatrical enterprise has produced a proud, poised, and imaginative graduate. He or she is enlightened by the Medici Library's humanities, facile in worldly matters, moved by theatricality, and indifferent toward Holy Scripture. Producing Jesuitic graduates has become the aim of modern public education, despite the heavy price of ignoring Scripture (which, as Luther warned and the Columbine murders attest, has indeed turned the public schools into "widening gates of hell"). Jesuit theatre and the Spiritual Exercises, whose original purpose was to bring human understanding into papal subservience through esoteric emotional experiences, have evolved into the full panoply of contemporary social communication.

The great objective of obscuring Scripture has operated to discourage the formal study of the basics of which the Bible is the cornerstone – literature, science, and history. Research by the National Association of Scholars (NAS) of U.S. News & World Report's annual listing of "America's Best Colleges" (including both private and public) disclosed startling figures.[15] In 1914, nearly all of these institutions had required courses in English composition; by 1964 the figure was 86%; in 1996, 36%. In 1914, 82% of the best colleges and universities had traditional mathematics requirements; by 1964 only 36% did; by 1996, 12%. In 1914, 1939 and 1964, more than 70% of the institutions required at least one course in the natural sciences; that figure fell to 34% in 1996. Literature courses were required at 75% of the institutions in 1914, and at 50% in 1939 and 1964. Today, not one of the "best" institutions has a literature requirement. Most colleges today are turning out graduates who have studied little or no history. In 1914, 90% of America's elite colleges required history; in 1939 and 1964 more than 50% did; by 1996 only one of the 50 best schools offered a required history course. The day is approaching, perhaps, when the only historians will be amateurs who study history as self-help, who examine the past in order to make sense of the present and not be caught unprepared by the future.

America's understanding has been systematically bent to the will of the Church Militant, while the intellectual means for sensing the capture have been disconnected. Most of the content of modern media, whether television, radio, print, film, stage, or web, is state-of-the-art Jesuit ratio studiorum. The Jesuit college is no longer just a chartered institution; it has become our entire social environment - the movies, the mall, the school, the home, the mind. Human experience has become a Spiritual Exercise managed by charismatic spiritual directors who know how to manipulate a democracy's emotions. Logic, perspective, national memory, and self-discipline are purged to the point that "unbridled emotional responses," as economist Thomas Sowell put it, "are all we have left."

Despite its ascendancy over American life, few Americans understand the term "Jesuit." In our next chapter, we shall examine how this term is defined in our basic reference works. These definitions will help us to better understand the kind of character produced by Ignatian psychological technique.



B.C. 1452.

en. 46. 17.
Chr. 7. 30.
en. 46. 20.
osh. 17. 1.
Chr. 7. 14,
alled,
biezer,
osh. 17. 2
udg. 6. 11,
, 34.
en. 46. 24.
Chr. 7. 13.

43 All the families of the Shū′-hăm-ītes, according to those that were numbered of them, were threescore and four thousand and four hundred.

44 ¶ [a] Of the children of Ăsh′-ĕr after their families: of Jĭm′-nă, the family of the Jĭm′-nītes: of Jĕs′-ū-ī, the family of the Jĕs′-ū-ītes: of Bĕ-rī′-ăh, the family of the Bĕ-rī′-ītes.

45 Of the sons of Bĕ-rī′-ăh: of Hē′-bĕr, the family of the Hē′-bĕr-ītes: of Măl′-chī-ĕl, the family of the Măl-chī-ē′-lītes.

46 And the name of the daughter of Ăsh′-ĕr was Sâr′-ăh.

47 These are the families of the sons of Ăsh′-ĕr according to those that were numbered of them; who were fifty and three thousand and four hundred.

48 ¶ Of the sons of Năph′-tă-lī after their families: of Jäh′-zêel, the family of the Jäh′-zêel-ītes:

DEFINITIONS

THE TERM "Jesuit" was first used to describe a member of the Society of Jesus in 1559. It did not originate from within the Society, but from outsiders. Whether intended derisively or respectfully, "Jesuit" does appear to have been inspired.

We find in the Bible (Numbers 26:44) the mention of "Jesuites." These Jesuites were the progeny of Jesui, whose name in Hebrew, Yishviy, means "level." The Jesuits certainly levelled the Protestant menace.

Jesui was a great-grandson of Abraham. His father was the Israelite tribal chieftan Asher (Asher, "happy"). At Genesis 49:20, Asher's posterity is divinely prophesied to "yield royal dainties (ma-adanim, 'delights')." Their uniquely privileged access to the minds and wills of kings has certainly enabled the Jesuits to yield copious harvests of royal delights.

But in fulfilling their scriptural prophecy, the Jesuits seem to have alienated themselves from people who use the English language. This does not disappoint St. Ignatius. "Let us hope," he once wrote, "that the Society may never be left untroubled by the hostility of the world for very long."

America's first indigenous dictionary was compiled by Noah Webster and published in 1828. His American Dictionary of the English Language reflects the place held by Jesuits in the opinion of a public whose senior citizens had brought forth the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution (Webster himself was forty-one when the Constitution was ratified):

> Jesuit. One of the society of Jesus, so called, founded by Ignatius Loyola; a society remarkable for their cunning in propagating their principles.
> Jesuited. Conforming to the principles of the Jesuits.
> Jesuitess. A female Jesuit in principle.
> Jesuitic, jesuitical. Pertaining to the Jesuits or their principles and arts. 2. Designing; cunning; deceitful; prevaricating.
> Jesuitically. Craftily.
> Jesuitism. The arts, principles and practices of the Jesuits. 2. Cunning; deceit; hypocrisy; prevarication; deceptive practices to effect a purpose.

One hundred seventy-eight years later, Webster's Third New International Dictionary (1986) informs us that the language has not repented:

> Jesuit: 1: a member of a religious society for men founded by St. Ignatius Loyola in 1534. 2: one given to intrigue or equivocation: a crafty person: CASUIST
> Jesuited: jesuitic
> Jesuitic or jesuitical: 1: of or relating to the Jesuits, Jesuitism, or Jesuitry. 2: having qualities thought to resemble those of a Jesuit - usu. used disparagingly
> Jesuitize: to act or teach in the actual or ascribed manner of a Jesuit: to indoctrinate with actual or ascribed Jesuit principles
> Jesuitry: principles or practices ascribed to the Jesuits, as the practice of mental reservation, casuistry, and equivocation

Webster's online dictionary, WWWebster (1999), is particularly revealing. Here we read that "Jesuit" means "a member of the Roman Catholic Society of Jesus founded by Saint Ignatius Loyola in 1534 and devoted to missionary and educational work," and that a Jesuit is "one given to intrigue or equivocation." WWWebster defines "to intrigue" as meaning "to cheat, trick, plot, and scheme," and "to equivocate" as "to use equivocal language especially with intent to deceive; to avoid committing oneself in what one says." "Equivocal" language, according to the same source, is language "subject to two or more interpretations and usually used to mislead or confuse; of uncertain nature or disposition toward a person or thing; of doubtful advantage, genuineness, or moral rectitude."

The Jesuit discipline has elevated mental reservation, casuistry, and equivocation to high arts - you will not find a more hilarious defense of these arts than Blaise Pascal's classic "Pastoral Letters"(1657), freely available on the internet. Purportedly written to a friend, the "Letters" report conversations Pascal is having with a Jesuit casuist. The Jesuit defends his arts thusly:

> Men have arrived at such a pitch of corruption nowadays that, unable to make them come to us, we must e'en go to them, otherwise they would cast us off altogether; and, what is worse, they would become perfect castaways. It is to retain such characters as these that our casuists have taken under consideration the vices to which people of various conditions are most addicted, with the view of laying down maxims which, while they cannot be said to violate the truth, are so gentle that he must be a very impracticable subject indeed who is not pleased with them. The grand project of our Society, for the good of religion, is never to repulse any one, let him be what he may, and so avoid driving people to despair.

Jesuit moral theology hardly needs a satirist. Its humor is self-contained. Consider Hermann Busenbaum, one of the Society's most venerated moral theologians. Busenbaum literally wrote the book on self-serving logic. His celebrated Medulla theologiae moralis

("The Marrow of Moral Theology," 1645) enjoyed more than two hundred printings and was required ethics reading in all the Jesuit colleges. A man of stout appetites, Busenbaum constructed an equivocation to relieve himself of the obligation to eat fish on Fridays: "On Fridays every good Catholic must eat only creatures that live in the water, which justifies ordering a nice roast duck!"

Busenbaum demonstrated how mental reservation could enable a criminal to escape a charge of breaking and entering:

> "Did you force the window to gain felonious entry into these premises?" asks the judge. "Certainly not!" replies the accused, qualifying his denial with the mental reservation "I entered through the skylight."

Father Gury, who taught moral theology at the Roman College from his book Casus Conscientire (1875), approved of the way an adulterous wife, having just received absolution for her sin from a priest, used mental reservation to mislead her husband:

> To the entreaties of her husband, she absolutely denied the fault: "I have not committed it," she said; meaning "adultery such as I am obliged to reveal;" in other words, "I have not committed an adultery." She could deny her sin as a culprit may say to a judge who does not question him legitimately: "I have not committed any crime," adding mentally, "in such a manner that I should reveal it." This is the opinion of St. Liguori, and of many others.

The "St. Liguori" to whom Gury refers is Alphonse Liguori, declared Patron Saint of Confessors and Moralists by Pope Pius XII. St. Liguori was not a Jesuit himself, but he was devoted to them. He facilitated adultery by means of an equivocation: "An adulteress questioned by her husband, may deny her guilt by declaring that she has not committed 'adultery,' meaning 'idolatry,' for which the term 'adultery' is often employed in the Old Testament."

Casuistry is the process of applying moral principles falsely in deciding the rights or wrongs of a case - the word "casuistry" comes from "cases." WWWebster equates casuistry with rationalization, "to cause something to seem reasonable; to provide plausible but untrue reasons for conduct." (In early 1999, President Clinton's biographer, David Maraniss, could be seen remarking on talkshows that the President owed his formidable skills as a criminal defendant to "his training in casuistry at Georgetown University.") The great Jesuit casuist Antonio Escobar pardoned evildoing as long as it was committed in pursuit of a lofty goal. "Purity of intention," he declared in 1627, "may justify actions which are contrary to the moral code and to human laws." Hermann Busenbaum ratified Escobar with his own famous maxim "Cum finis est licitus, etiam media sunt licita," "If the end is legal, the means are legal." Escobar and Busenbaum boil down to the essential doctrine of terrorism: "The end justifies the means."

Casuistry solved the problem of usury. Although the voice of Jesus commanded "lend, hoping for nothing again; and your reward will be great" (Luke 6:35), Jesuit lenders often charged exorbitant interest. Father Gury explained the principle:

> If lending one hundred francs you are losing ten francs by it, you lend really one hundred and ten francs. Then you shall receive one hundred and ten francs.

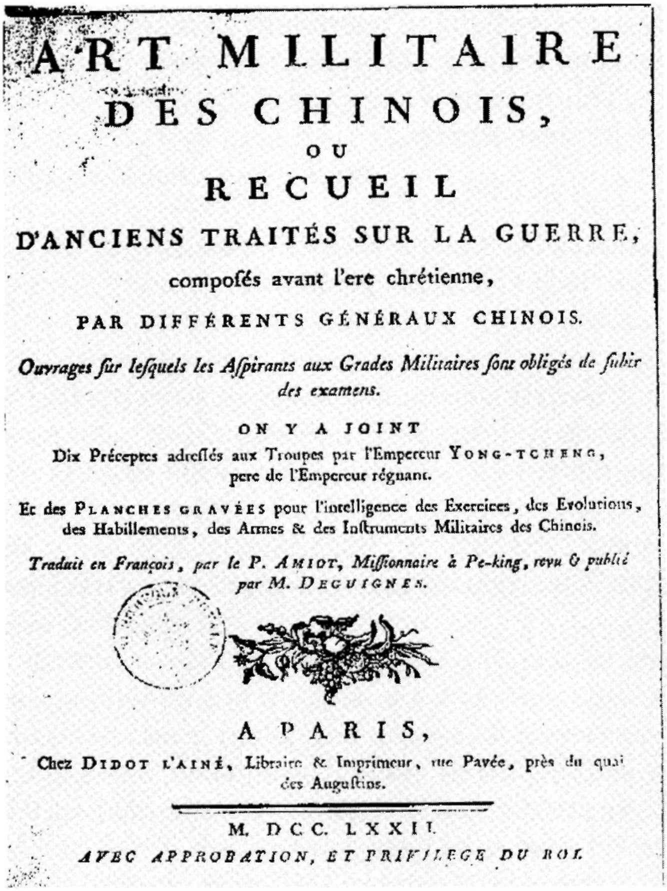
Indeed, casuistry has set the moral tone of world economics. In his Universae theologiae moralis ("Catholic Moral Theology", 1652-66), Antonio Escobar rendered the opinion that "The giving of short weight is not to be reckoned as a sin when the official price for certain goods is so low that the merchant would be ruined thereby." By this reasoning, the international network of central banks (beginning with the Knights Templars and sustained by the Society of Jesus) has been absolved of manipulating monetary values if doing so helps individual sovereign nation-states manage their subjects. Subjects are cyclically required to part with true value - that is, hard-earned gold and silver coinage - in exchange for intangible credit denominated in paper notes whose official promises to repay in precious coinage... are cyclically broken. As the most powerful office in Roman Catholicism, the black papacy might have promoted stable national economies by means of the divinely fair monetary system commanded in the Bible at Leviticus 19 -

> Ye shall do no unrighteousness in measure. Just balances, just weights, shall ye have: I am the Lord your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt.

Instead, it has promoted Escobar's casuistry, which directs merchants to survive official value manipulations by cheating one another. There are significant sociological consequences. When giving short weight becomes policy, a moral paradigm is set. That paradigm governs more than just commercial transactions. It affects human relationships, as well. Partners in friendships, marriages, and families begin giving short weight - giving less than represented. This results in one-sided, frustrating, dysfunctional emotional transactions, and ultimately an aberrant society. The ultimate beneficiary of aberrant societies, of course, is Pontifex Maximus, whose profession is their regulation.

If we depend solely on dictionary definitions, we learn that Jesuits are churchmen and teachers of a doubtful moral rectitude who are likely to cheat, trick, plot, scheme, deceive, and confuse us while avoiding to commit themselves verbally. When we study their published moralists, we sense a rather vibrant presence of The Trickster. But in the Society's defense, it must be said these are legitimate character traits for a militia empowered by a declaration of war, and we must remember that Paul Ill's bull ordaining the Society of Jesus, Regimini militantis ecclesiae, is just such a declaration. Human life in a declared war becomes subject to the first great rule of war, belli legum dormit, “in war the law sleeps.” When the law sleeps, the unarmed priest's only weapons are the intrigue, deceit, equivocation, casuistry, and mental reservation with which the Jesuits have made themselves so notorious and so often despised.

In forthcoming chapters, we shall be examining how the Society of Jesus made war against Great Britain and the British colonies during the second half of the eighteenth century, and then against the sovereign American States a century later. In each instance, the warfare was of the highest sophistication. It was so subtly conceived and so masterfully executed, that neither of the major combatants could discern the presence of Jesuits in the equation. The amazing technology of Jesuit warfare - that is the subject of our next chapter.



ART MILITAIRE DES CHINOIS,

OU

RECUEIL D'ANCIENS TRAITÉS SUR LA GUERRE, compoſés avant l'ere chrétienne,

PAR DIFFÉRENTS GÉNÉRAUX CHINOIS.

Ouvrages ſur leſquels les Aſpirants aux Grades Militaires ſont obligés de ſubir des examens.

ON Y A JOINT
Dix Préceptes adreſſés aux Troupes par l'Empereur YONG-TCHENG, pere de l'Empereur régnant.

Et des PLANCHES GRAVÉES pour l'intelligence des Exercices, des Evolutions, des Habillements, des Armes & des Inſtruments Militaires des Chinois.

Traduit en François, par le P. AMIOT, Miſſionnaire à Pe-king, revu & publié par M. DEGUIGNES.

A PARIS,
Chez DIDOT L'AINÉ, Libraire & Imprimeur, rue Pavée, près du quai des Auguſtins.

M. DCC. LXXII.

AVEC APPROBATION, ET PRIVILEGE DU ROI.

Chapter 11

THE THIRTEEN ARTICLES CONCERNING MILITARY ART

BEFORE THE American Revolution, Roman Catholics were barred from voting or holding public office throughout the British colonies. They were a persecuted minority everywhere but in the proprietary domain of William Penn (Pennsylvania and Delaware). Some of their most energetic persecutors, in fact, were the very Huguenots whom the Catholics had chased out of France in the wake of Louis XIV's revocation of the Edict of Nantes.

The basis of Roman Catholic persecution was political. Catholics owed allegiance to Pontifex Maximus, the Bishop of Rome. The Bishop of Rome was a foreign ruler who, as a matter of public policy, regarded the British king and his Protestant Church as heretics to be destroyed. From the American colonists' standpoint, to allow Catholics to vote or hold office was tantamount to surrendering their colonies to a foreign conqueror. A crucial part of maintaining personal liberty in Protestant colonial America was keeping Roman Catholics out of government. But then came the Revolution. The colonial citizenry fought for and won their independence from Great Britain. They established a Constitution that amounted to... surrendering their country to a foreign conqueror. Consider the legalities. Before the Constitution was ratified, American Catholics had few civil rights; after ratification, they had them all. Article VI, section 3 provides that “no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the authority of the United States,” while the First Amendment denies Congress the power “to make any law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.” With Article IV Section 3 and the First Amendment, the Constitution welcomed agents of Pontifex Maximus, the world's chief enemy of Protestantism, into the ranks of government.

Of the 2,500,000 enumerated inhabitants in 1787 America, the Roman Catholic population consisted of no more than 16,000 in Maryland, 7,000 in Pennsylvania, 1,500 in New York, and 200 in Virginia.[1] Once the Constitution was in place, a steady influx of European immigrants transformed Roman Catholicism from America's smallest to largest religious denomination. By 1850, the higher powers at Rome could view the United States as a viable tributary, if not another papal state.

This awesome result did not just happen. I submit that it was brilliantly designed and commanded by a man I am pleased to honor as the American republic's least known founding father, Lorenzo Ricci (pronounced “Richey.”) Ricci was a Tuscan aristocrat by birth, a stoical philosopher by reputation, and a Jesuit father by profession. He was Superior General of the Society of Jesus during the formative years of the American Revolution, from 1758 until 1775. He also may be credited with having written the most celebrated treatise on war ever published, a work entitled The Thirteen Articles Concerning Military Art.

The reputed author of this work is a quasi-historical Chinese general believed to have lived in the sixth century BC named Sun-tzu. Sun-tzu was unknown to western languages until Joseph-Marie Amiot, astronomer to the Emperor of China, brought forth a French edition of the Thirteen Articles in 1772. Amiot was a Jesuit priest under obedience to General Ricci. I base my inference that Ricci is the author of Amiot's Sun-tzu on a remark from today's premier Jesuit spokesman, Malachi Martin, retired professor at the Pontifical Institute in Rome, to the effect that a book written by a Jesuit, due to the obedience factor, can be presumed "in essence" to be the work of his Superior General.[2] Amiot's Sun-tzu, then, can be presumed to have been "written" by Lorenzo Ricci.

The black pope's decision to publish Sun-tzu prior to the outbreak of the Revolution he had engineered demonstrates, I believe, his confidence that divine authority had already delivered victory to him. Ricci knew that circumstances had reached the point at which there was nothing which his enemy, the forces of Protestantism on both sides of the Atlantic, could do to alter the outcome. He was like a chess master who sees the inevitability of checkmate four moves ahead and reveals his winning method out of courtesy to the imminent loser. His method was so sublimely Sun-tzuan that his opponents never even perceived his army to be an opponent - just as Protestants today are unaware that extirpating their credo is still the unrelenting Jesuit mission.

The Thirteen Articles were ignored by Americans until the nineteen-seventies, when our corporate executives discovered that their oriental counterparts were doing business according to Sun-tzuan strategies. As U.S. corporations increased their presence in the Pacific Rim, Sun-tzu became a major survival tool. Since the middle eighties, more than fifty editions of the Articles have been published in this country, mostly under the "Art of War" title. These editions represent Sun-tzu well enough, but none of them are derived from the 1772 Amiot translation into French (which itself was based on a Tartar-Manchurian version of the older Chinese manuscripts). Amiot's Sun-tzu appears never to have been published in English, although a 1996 commission by La Belle Église produced a very fine manuscript English translation by Hermine F. Garcia. That manuscript is the source of my citations here.

Only the Amiot edition reflects in virtually the Jesuit General's own words how he formed the United States of America by dividing the British Empire against itself, while at the same time dividing the rest of Europe against Britain, against even the General's own army! The Amiot is all the more remarkable for appearing in the very midst of the unfolding of this extraordinary process.

AMIOT begins The Thirteen Articles by noting how odd it is that the benign Chinese morality should spawn a warrior of Sun-tzu's magnitude:

> If we are to judge the Chinese by their morals ... and in general by everything one can currently observe of them, we would instantly conclude that this must be the most pacifist Nation in the world, far from having the brilliant qualities necessary for Warriors. Yet, surprisingly, this very Nation, which has subsisted for nearly four thousand years in approximately the same state we see it in today, has always, or almost always, triumphed over its enemies; and when it had the misfortune of being conquered, it gave its laws to the conquerors themselves.

We know this, Amiot says, from the Annals, which contain "admirable accounts of prodigious bravery," and lists of actions and military conduct of various founders of dynasties. He exclaims

> What Heroes! What Politicians! What Warriors! No Alexander or Caesar could surpass them. Why shouldn't these great men, these powerful geniuses, who made such fine political and civil Laws, have made military laws which were just as fine?

The reference to Caesar is significant. Declaring China's dynastic heroes to be Caesar's equals, Amiot equates Lorenzo Ricci, the reigning bearer of Caesarean authority, with the greatest oriental Warriors. Were the oriental military laws "just as fine" as Caesar's? "It is not up to me to judge this," Amiot answers. "Our Warriors must pronounce themselves in this regard."

If the term "Our Warriors" means "our Jesuit brethren," as I believe it does, then we have before us Ricci's clandestine order that the book be received by the scattered members of the Society as the latest statement of the General's military Law. (Clandestine generals order clandestinely.) Amiot admits that translating a war manual was "contrary to my taste, & so far from the object of my profession." He says that he only undertook the work in hopes that the reader might have "some pleasure conversing with these foreign Heroes and receiving some of their instructions and [finding] something useful." What cannot be denied is that Rome was served by critical events in America and England during the years of Ricci's reign in ways that flow quite discernably from the strategies, laws, and maxims set forth in the Thirteen Articles. I believe that anyone reading Amiot's Sun-tzu in 1772, knowing that its translator was a Jesuit, knowing the Jesuit mission, and knowing the nature of Jesuitic obedience, could observe world events with this knowledge, and predict that the dispute between the American colonists and the British Empire would end - as it actually did - in Roman dominance over a new, independent republic.

Before presenting the works of Sun-tzu, Amiot recounts an important legend demonstrating the severity of Sun-tzuan authority. It is a severity that empowers the General to overrule even his Sovereign in order to secure the army's perfect obedience. Hearing that the King of Oo was preparing for war and not wishing to remain idle, Sun-tzu offered his services to the King. The King had read Sun-tzu's book and liked it, but doubted its practicability.

> "Prince," replied Sun-tzu, "I said nothing in my Writings that I had not already practiced in the army. What I have not yet said, but of which I presume to assure Your Majesty today, is that I am capable of transmitting these practices to anyone whomsoever & training them in military exercises when I am authorized to do so."
>
> "I understand," replied the King. "You wish to say that you will easily teach your maxims to intelligent men who are already both prudent and valorous; that you will have no difficulty giving training in military exercises to men accustomed to hard work who are docile & full of good will. But the majority is not of that nature."
>
> "It matters not," replied Sun-tzu. "I said anyone whomsoever and I exclude no one from my offer, including the most mutinous, the most cowardly and the weakest of men."

"To hear you speak," said the King, "you would even inspire women to have the feelings of Warriors; you would train them to bear arms."

"Yes, Prince," replied Sun-tzu in a firm voice, "and I beg Your Majesty to be assured of it."

The King, who in the circumstances in which he found himself was no longer entertained by the customary amusements of Court, took advantage of this opportunity to find a new sort of amusement. He said, "Bring me one hundred eighty of my wives." He was obeyed, & the Princesses appeared. Among them were two in particular whom the King loved tenderly; they were placed ahead of the others. "We will see," said the King, smiling. "We will see, Sun-tzu, if you will be true to your word. I make you General of these new troops. All throughout my palace you need only choose the place which seems the most comfortable to give them military training. When they are sufficiently instructed you will let me know, & I will come myself to render justice to them & to your talent."

The General sensed the ridicule of the role he was asked to play. But he did not back down, and instead appeared quite satisfied by the honor bestowed on him by the King, not only by allowing him to see his wives but also by putting them under his direction. "I will do well with them, Sire," he said in an assured tone, "and I hope that soon Your Majesty will have cause to be satisfied with my services. At the very least, Your Majesty will be convinced that Sun-tzu is not a man who takes risks."

Once the King had retired to his apartments, the Warrior thought only of executing his commission. He asked for weapons & all the military equipment needed for his newly created soldiers. While waiting for everything to be ready, he led his troop into one of the courtyards of the palace which seemed the best suited for his work. Soon the items he had requested were brought to him. Sun-tzu then spoke to the Princesses. "Here you are," he said, "under my direction and my orders. You must listen to me attentively and obey me in whatever I command you to do. That is the first & most essential military law: make sure you don't break it. By tomorrow I want you to perform exercises before the King, & I intend for them to be done perfectly."

After those words he strapped on their swords, put spears in their hands, divided them into two groups, and put one of the favorite Princesses at the head of each. Once that arrangement was made, he began his instructions in these terms: "Can you tell the difference between your chest and your back, & your right hand from your left hand? Answer me." At first the only response he received was some bursts of laughter. But he remained silent and very serious. "Yes, of course," the Ladies then replied in one voice. "If that is so," resumed Sun-tzu, "then listen carefully to what I am going to say. When the drum strikes only one beat, you will remain as you are now, only paying attention to what is before your chest. When the drum strikes two beats, you must turn so that your chest is in the place where your right hand was before. If instead of two beats you hear three, you must turn so that your chest is precisely where your left hand was before. But when the drum strikes four beats, you must turn so that your chest is where your back was, & your back will be where your chest was.

"What I just said may not be clear enough; let me explain. A single drum beat means that you must not change your position & you must be on guard. Two beats means you must turn right. Three beats means you must turn left. And four beats means you make a half turn. I will explain even more.

"This is the order I shall follow. First I will strike one beat: at that signal you will be ready to receive my orders. A few moments later I will strike two beats: then, all together, you will turn to the right with gravity, after which I will not strike three beats but four, & you will make a half-turn. I will then have you return to your first position and, as before, I will strike one beat. At the first signal, be ready. Then I will strike, not two beats but three, & you will turn left; at four beats you will complete the half-turn. Have you well understood what I am saying? If you have any difficulties, you have but to speak to me of them and I shall attempt to explain the matter." "We have understood," replied the Ladies. "If that is so," responded Sun-tzu, "I will begin. Do not forget that the sound of the drum takes the place of the General's voice, but he is the one who is giving you these orders."

After repeating his instructions three times, Sun-tzu again aligned his small army, after which he had the drum strike one beat. At that sound, all the Ladies began to laugh. At two drum beats, they laughed even louder. Ever serious, the General spoke to them thus: "It is possible that I did not explain clearly enough the instructions I gave you. If that is so, it is my fault. I will attempt to remedy it by speaking to you in a way that is more accessible to you (& at once he repeated the lesson three times in other terms), and then we will see," he added, "if you obey me any better." He had the drum strike one beat, and then two. Seeing him look so serious, and given the strange situation they found themselves in, the Ladies forgot to obey him. After attempting in vain to stop the laughter that was choking them, they finally let it burst forth loudly.

Sun-tzu was in no way disconcerted, but in the same tone he had used when speaking to them before, he said: "If I had not explained myself clearly, or if you had not assured me, in unison, that you understood what I said, you would in no way be guilty. But I spoke to you clearly, as you admitted yourselves. Why did you not obey? You deserve punishment, and military punishment. Among the Makers of War, whoever does not obey the orders of his General deserves death. Therefore you will die." After that short preamble, Sun-tzu ordered the women who formed the two lines to kill the two who were leading them. Just then, one of the men whose job it was to guard the women, seeing that the Warrior was not joking, ran to warn the King of what was happening. The King sent someone to Sun-tzu to forbid him from going any farther, & in particular from mistreating the two women he loved the best & without whom he could not live.

The General listened with respect to the words that were spoken on behalf of the King, but he refused to bow to his wishes. "Go tell the King," he replied, "that Sun-tzu believes him to be too reasonable & too just to think he might have changed his mind so soon, & that he truly wishes to be obeyed in what you have just told me on his behalf. The Prince is the lawmaker; he would not give orders which would sully the dignity he vested in me. He asked me to train one hundred and eighty of his Wives as soldiers, he made me their General. The rest is up to me. They > disobeyed me, they will die." So saying, he pulled out his sword and with the same calmness he had displayed until then, he cut off the heads of the two who were leading the others. He immediately put two others in their place, and had the drum strike the various beats he had explained to his troops. And it was as if those women had been professional soldiers all their lives; they made their turns silently and impeccably.

>
> Sun-tzu spoke thus to the Envoy: "Go tell the King," he said, "that his wives know how to drill. Now I can lead them to war, make them affront all sorts of perils, & even make them pass through water & fire."
>
> When the King learned what had happened, he was penetrated by the deepest sorrow. With a great sigh he said, "Thus have I lost what was dearest to me in this world.... Have that Foreigner return to his country. I do not want him, nor his services— What have you done, barbarian?... How can I go on living?" ... and so on.
>
> As unconsolable as the King was, time and the circumstances soon made him forget his loss. His enemies were ready to descend upon him. He asked Sun-tzu to return, made him General of his armies, & with his help he destroyed the Chou Kingdom. Those of his neighbors who had formerly been the most worrisome were now penetrated by fear at the mere mention of the glorious acts of Sun-tzu, and thought only of living peacefully under the protection of a Prince who had such a man at his service.

This introduction confirms that Paul Ill's war declaration Regimini militantis ecclesiae is about protecting the life of the nation, which is the Roman Church. Protecting the Church may require the Superior General to sacrifice his soldiers, his citizens, and if need be, his sovereign, the pope. In a very real sense, the great General is so inscrutably alone, so omnipotent, that he is at war with... everyone. Sacrificing his own (just as Saturn, the grandfather-god of Rome devoured his own children) in order to defeat an enemy short of coming to blows, this is a great General's legitimate obligation. Sun-tzu writes:

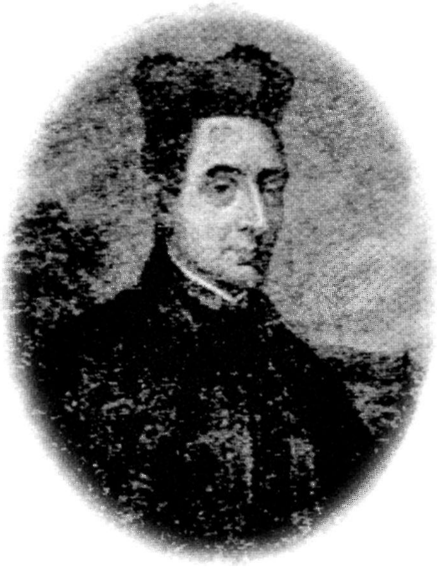
> Without giving battle, without spilling a drop of [the enemy's] blood, without even drawing a sword, the clever General succeeds in capturing cities. Without setting foot in a foreign Kingdom, he finds the means to conquer them. He acts in such a way that those who are inferior to him can never guess his intentions. He has them change location, even taking them to rather difficult places where they must work and suffer. When a clever General goes into action, the enemy is already defeated. When he fights, he alone must do more than his entire army, not through the strength of his arm but through his prudence, his manner of commanding, & above all his ruses.

Lorenzo Ricci's most compelling ruse was disestablishing the Society of Jesus, a campaign that mimicked the collapse of the Knights Templar four centuries earlier. With astonishing precision, the Disestablishment ran concurrently with the escalation of hostilities between the American colonies and the British Crown.

It was an amazing juggle that spanned seventeen years. It saw Ricci's secret liaisons in and around the British Parliament buy legislation that inflamed his secret liasons in and around the American colonial governments to formulate a culture of rebellion. It saw his own visible army, mute and defenseless, systematically assaulted by the European powers and eventually suppressed "for all eternity" by a 1773 papal brief. Once the stage was set and the action scripted, it saw the General slip into deeper cover to let the Protestant powers exhaust themselves in wars that within a single generation resulted in a glorious Roman presence where once England had reigned.

Clandestine military operations inspired by the ingenuity of Sun-tzu are virtually impossible to document. If strategic notes were taken, if written commands were given, they were carefully destroyed. Such that survive may have been spared in order to misinform. The mouths of covert operatives are kept shut out of a simple desire to stay alive. Sensational disclosures, too, we can presume to be misinformational. To determine that Lorenzo Ricci did in fact mount any clandestine operation at all requires a careful evaluation of circumstantial evidence. Was there an outcome that benefitted him and his Sovereign? Did he have the authority, the motive, the resources, the ability, and the opportunity to do what created the outcome? As to outcome: English-speaking Protestantism did in fact violently divide, and the victorious party moreover invited Roman Catholic religionists to participate in its political government. As to authority for waging war against Protestantism, Regimini militantis ecclesiae authorized the General to prosecute enemies of the Roman faith. As to motive: the Jesuit oath spiritually obligated the extirpation of Protestantism in both America and Great Britain. As to resources, the black papacy, even as its martial strategy brought its own organization to apparent oblivion, had instant call on the vast reserve of Roman Catholic wealth - as the old Spanish proverb goes, "Don Dinero es muy Catolico." Ricci's ability to direct an international covert operation was stated and defined by the momentous publication of The Thirteen Articles in what was then the language of international diplomacy. Finally, a man commanding unlimited financial resources and unlimited obedience of an unlimited supply of well-trained personnel enjoys unlimited opportunity to do anything possible, and some things deemed impossible. To deny that Lorenzo Ricci orchestrated American Independence may be to ignore his talent and demean his office.

Let us move now to the next chapter, and begin our examination of how the General did it.



LORENZO RICCI A/K/A LAURENCE RICHEY.
(From a painting believed contemporaneous.)

Chapter 12

LORENZO RICCI'S WAR

LORENZO RICCI'S strategy of dividing the British imperial system can be discerned in events occurring as early as 1752. In that year, Catholic interests in America were rather poorly managed by the Congregation for the Propaganda at Rome, depending upon a tangle of ambassadors (or nuncios) and intermediaries in Madrid, Paris, London, and Brussels. The Jesuit mission was to consolidate these often adversarial parts into a dynamic and independent whole governed directly from the mind of the black papacy.

In 1752, the Society of Jesus was brilliantly powerful, and had been so for nearly a century. "Most statesmen," a fine Jesuit historian has written, "reckoned that the Society was a major force in politics, an international Great Power, acting primarily for its own intetests."[1] Lorenzo Ricci had been Spiritual Father of this great power for nearly a year. Although that title assured him of unanimous election as Superior General upon the demise of General

Luigi Centurioni, it presently endowed him with diplomatic oversight embracing the whole world. Ricci's particular geographic interests included France and its possessions in New France - the whole Mississippi valley, from Canada and the Great Lakes down to the Gulf of Mexico; and England and its colonies in New England - all the lands to the south of French Canada and north of Spanish Florida stretching from the Atlantic to the Pacific coasts.

Both empires were to a certain extent Jesuit-driven. Great Britain was run by the Catholic-loathing system of Freemasonry, whose highest adepts obeyed the revered "unknown superior." France was run by Louis XV, who obeyed the same superior through his Jesuit confessor, Père de Sacy. De Sacy's good-natured ministry reduced the King's dinner, on a strict fast day, from eight courses to five, and limited his wine consumption to three glasses per sitting.

Sun-tzu wrote;

> I demand the art of making enemies move as one wishes. Those who possess that admirable art know how to arrange their men & the army they command in such a way that they make the enemy come toward them whenever they judge it appropriate. They know how to make generous gifts when appropriate, even to those they wish to conquer. They give to the enemy & the enemy receives; they abandon things to him & he comes to take them. They are ready for anything, they take advantage of any circumstance. They do not fully trust those whom they employ but choose others to be their overseers. They do not count on their own strength alone but use other means which they believe can be useful to them. They consider the men against whom they must fight to be stones or pieces of wood which they have been asked to roll down a slope. You, therefore, who are commanding an army must act in such a way that the enemy is in your hands like a round stone that you have caused to roll down a mountain a thousand paces high. Thus it will be recognized that you have power & authority, and that you are truly worthy of the position you occupy.

Lorenzo Ricci transformed British and French colonial personnel into round stones by creating a crisis between their conflicting imperial claims to dominion in North America. In 1752 his spiritual fatherhood directed French soldiers and their Indian allies to destroy the important British colonial trading center on the upper Great Miami river. Then followed the plundering, capture or killing – not murdering, but papally-absolved extirpating – of every English-speaking trader in the upper Ohio valley that the French and Indians could locate. Although these lands were legally British, dating from a grant to Virginia by King James I in 1609, the important Virginia families failed to empathize with the misfortunes of explorer-inhabitants in such remote and undeveloped wilderness. But when, toward the end of 1752, the Virginia government granted an additional 1,500,000 acres of Ohio valley land, empathies burst into bloom. Suddenly the Virginians had something to lose, and it was being lost to a band of Roman Catholics and their Indian converts.

In 1753, French engineers constructed a chain of forts connecting Lake Erie with the Ohio River. The governor of Virginia dispatched a small militia to confront these Catholic trespassers. Leading the militia was a recent initiate into the Fredericksburg Masonic Lodge, twenty-one-year-old Major George Washington. Washington warned the garrison at Fort LeBoeuf that it was illegally occupying Virginia real estate "so notoriously known to be the property of the Crown of Great Britain." He read aloud the governor's demand that they depart. The French ignored him and he returned home.

Despite the clear indication that the French intended not to concede to the governor's demands, Virginia encouraged the Ohio Company to build a palisaded fort at the fork where the Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers join to create the Ohio River – where Pittsburgh now stands. The government pledged Virginian troops to support the venture.

Construction began in the spring of 1754. Almost immediately, French and Indians descended upon the tiny crew of woodcutters and carpenters and overwhelmed them. By the time Washington, now a Lieutenant Colonel, could reach the scene, he was forced by Catholic fire-power to fall back to Fort Necessity. Here Washington surrendered on July 4. It was this clash between British and French armies that precipitated what was called by contemporary writers "The Maritime War," or "Great War," or "Great War for the Empire," or "Seven Years' War," or "French and Indian Wars." It could more appropriately be called "Lorenzo Ricci's War."

As these rounded stones began rolling, more succumbed to Ricci's gentle touch. The colony most affected by the fighting was meek Pennsylvania, the colony originally settled by adherents of the renowned Quaker leader, William Penn. Penn had been dead a whole generation, and ownership of his colony had devolved upon a British corporation which included some of Penn's descendants and was known austerely as "the Proprietors." The Proprietors wanted wars in Pennsylvania to be fought by Pennsylvanians. The Quakers, who controlled the Assembly, abhorred the notion of Pensylvanians bearing arms. When the Assembly voted to raise a war chest, the Quakers stepped down and out of power. First, however, they appointed their most celebrated member, Dr. Benjamin Franklin, official printer of Pennsylvania's paper currency, to sail to London and represent them against the Proprietors.

Dr. Franklin, who happened to be Grand Master of Pennsylvania Freemasonry, arrived in London to find that King George II, having made peace with France as recently as 1748, favored the Proprietors. The king's attitude was "Let Americans fight Americans." Franklin explained that Virginia's undisciplined militiamen and the pacifists of Pennsylvania were no match for seasoned French regulars and savage Indian braves. France was jeopardizing British imperial interests. The king acquiesced to Franklin's reasoning and ordered General Edward Braddock to take a small army to clear the forks of the Ohio of the French trespassers. He also sent Admiral Edward Boscawen's fleet to the Gulf of St. Lawrence to prevent the arrival of more French reinforcements in Canada. All this was in perfect obedience to Lorenzo Ricci's strategy of establishing a British military presence in America. The Crown ultimately would require the Americans to pay for this presence, which would expose the colonists to taxation from afar, which they could readily be fomented to resist. The resistance would be met with harassment, which would incite rebellion and, ultimately, division.

The philosophical similarities between Quakers and Loyolan gnosticism should not escape our notice. "Quaker," the term, was first used by an English judge in 1650 to ridicule how the leader of that denomination, George Fox, admonished him to "tremble at the Word of the Lord!" Fox summoned all who sought spiritual truth and peace to come out of the churches and seek an intimate, "personal relationship with Christ." Jesus of the Quakers spoke through inner illumination, a light available to all, having nothing to do with outward forms of ceremony, ritual, or creed. To the Quaker, every person was a walking church; every heart was God's altar and shrine. There was no need, therefore, to attend "steeple houses," or pay taxes to support a state church clergy, or doff a hat to king or commoner, or fight wars, or distinguish between sex or social class. Such doctrine, of course, was highly offensive to the Church of England, and so the Quakers were mercilessly persecuted as treasonous criminals.

They found a haven across the Atlantic in the colony conveniently granted by King Charles II to William Penn, one of the more outspoken English Quakers. Charles granted the land to settle a debt the Crown owed Penn's deceased father, Admiral Sir William Penn. Knowledgeable contemporaries publicly charged the younger Penn with being "a Jesuit in disguise." Actually, all Catholic clergy in England were to a certain extent "in disguise," thanks to a law prohibiting Roman Catholics from wearing clerical garb. Promulgated with the intent of handicapping "Popery," the law might as well have been written by Jesuits, as its effect reduced the Jesuit profile to nothing – the level preferred by covert militias. Eighteenth-century London was teeming with disguised Jesuit missioners trained at places like St. Omer's in moral theology (casuistry, equivocation, mental reservation), as well as espionage, cloak-and-dagger diplomacy, guerrilla tactics, and the manipulation of public opinion.

William Perm's higher education began at Cardinal Wolsey's endowment for the furtherance of papal supremacy, Christ Church College at Oxford. Before completing Oxford, Penn was sent by his father to the small University of Saumer, France. Penn left Saumer an accomplished propagandist less interested in achieving specific biblical objectives ("Much reading is an oppression of the mind," he would later advise his children) than in establishing illuminated social justice through reason and natural understanding. His most influential work, the pamphlet "No Cross, No Crown," published in 1669, agitated for Quaker separatism. Charles II readily accommodated Penn's agitations by launching the Great Persecution of 1682, which created enormous migrations of diehard Protestants and Catholics alike to the American colonies. If Penn was not the Jesuit he was believed to be, he was at least a rather superior Jesuit product, another in a long train of Princes (designated "Proprietor" in Penn's case, deferring to the Quakers' dislike for titles of nobility) well-trained to populate, administer and defend their land-grants in obedience to the will of the Grantor. Penn's example, and Franklin's after him, inspired Franklin's esteemed masonic brother Jean-François Arouet, better known as Voltaire, a founder of the Enlightenment, to memorialize Quakers as the noblest kind of born-again European.

Yet well-informed Englishmen saw neither Quaker nor regeneration in Penn's curiously compromising friendship with James II, who succeeded Charles II in 1685. What possible league could a Quaker have with a King? Worse, a King converted to Roman Catholicism by Jesuits? Certainly no true Quaker could have written Penn's Charter for the City of Philadelphia, which amounted to his gift of that estate to the Church of England. In the Charter's Preamble, Penn stated: "I have, by virtue of the king's letters patent, under the great seal of England, erected the said town into a borough, and do, by these presents, erect the said town and borough into a City."[2] The name "city," in every case, signifies the location of a bishop's see, the seat of his authority (from the Latin sedes), and the territory under his supervision.[3] No place in England was called a City unless governed by a bishop – as in the See or City of Canterbury, See or City of York, See or City of London, of Bath and Wells, of Bristol, of Salisbury, etc. With the Philadelphia charter, Penn erected for the persecuting Church of England a nearly invisible mechanism for recycling the very victims of its persecutions. Indeed, Penn's last will and testament, which became effective with his death in England in 1718 at the age of 74, turned all Pennsylvania into the same mechanism with these words: "The government of my province of Pennsylvania, and territories thereunto belonging, and All Powers relating thereto, I give and devise to the most honourable the Earl of Oxford, and Earl Mortimer, and their heirs, upon trust, to dispose thereof to the Queen [Anne], or to any other person, to the best advantage and profit they can." With a stroke of Penn's quill, the children of the Quakers who had followed him out of the Church of England were literally given back. To become free of this bondage, the Quakers were obliged to align themselves with the Church of Rome, at least the black papacy. This alliance was facilitated by Benjamin Franklin, whose political career was built on defending the Quaker interests against the Proprietary heirs, which were the Church of England. Against this common enemy, Franklin and the Quakers united, knowingly or unknowingly, with the designs of the Roman Church Militant.

WHILE these stones rolled unstoppably toward their objective, Jesuit General Luigi Centurioni died. Early in May of 1758 the General Congregation arrived at Rome to choose his successor. On the last day of the month the Congregation unanimously elected Lorenzo Ricci, the Society's Spiritual Father and Secretary, as its eighteenth Black Pope.

Ricci, a professor of philosophy, theology, and the classics at the Roman College, was known for his patient, placid nature, his even temper. He inherited an organization in remarkably good shape. The Latin American missions were flourishing. A mission had just been established in Poland. Everywhere the schools and colleges were prospering. In the natural sciences, Jesuits were counted among the world's leading authorities. Their presence in economic and secular government had never been more imposing. As the papal nuncio to Vienna stated in a letter to his superior at the Vatican, "the Jesuits have the upper hand over everything, even the most prominent ministers of State, and domineer over them if they do not carry out their will."[4]

But the Society's legendary power could hinder Catholic activity in the Protestant missions. To defeat Great Britain without a battle Lorenzo Ricci required the abilities and resources of an important Maryland family, the Carrolls. The three Carroll sons, Daniel, John and their first cousin Charles, all now in their twenties, had been trained in Jesuit warfare at St. Omer's. John was teaching there. Charles was studying law at the Jesuit College Louis-le-Grand in Paris, about to undertake further studies at London's Inner Temple. Daniel – of Daniel's activities between 1753 and 1781, very little is known. What is well-known is that the Carroll lads were among the wealthiest Americans alive. The mother of Daniel and John, Eleanor Darnall, claimed direct descent from the Calverts, the owning family of original Maryland. She had come into possession of much of the land that Daniel would transfer to the District of Columbia. Charles Carroll stood to inherit America's largest private estate; later, John Adams would label him America's richest citizen.

Lorenzo Ricci could not win his War without the overt participation of the Carrolls. But New England was virulently Protestant. What Protestant leader would stoop to cooperate with devout Roman Catholics schooled in trickery by the all-powerful Jesuits? Would uniting with Jesuits not be laying America's future at the feet of the Bishop of Rome? In this consensus Ricci was able to discern a valuable negative weapon. If the stones of envy and hatred were given a gentle nudge, their own weight and momentum could spectacularly blast the Society of Jesus to smithereens. With the Society out of the way, Roman Catholicism would hang in the wind, defenseless. To a Protestant's perception, the Church would no longer be a forceful contender for political power. Sun-tzu advised a ruse known in the lingo of modern covert professionals as "blown cover as cover:"

> There will be times when you will lower yourself, and others when you pretend to be afraid. Sometimes you will feign weakness so that your enemies, opening the door to presumption & pride, come to attack you unwisely.... Give out false information about the state [you] are in ... [The enemy], believing [it] to be true, will act in consequence toward his Generals & all the Officers presently at his service....

Yes, sudden misfortune would bless the Society. Weakness and persecution would be transformed into magnificent new capital for building sympathetic relationships with other weak and persecuted people, such as the British colonists were destined soon to become. Without detailing his strategy (for Sun-tzu says "You will act in such a way that those who are inferior to you can never guess your intentions...."), Lorenzo Ricci affirmed to the General Congregation that stormclouds were gathering on the horizon. The Congregation summarily gave its understanding in obedience to the "hidden design" of their new Superior General – who occupied, after all, the place of Jesus. It issued a call for esprit to the brotherhood at large:

> If, God permitting it because of his hidden designs which we could do nothing else but adore, we are to become the butt of adversity, the Lord will not abandon those who remain attached and united to him; and as long as the Society is able to go to him with an open soul and a sincere heart, no other source of strength will be necessary for it.[5]

The Prime Minister of Portugal, Sebastian the Marquis de Pombal, had been conducting what the New Catholic Encyclopedia calls "a long campaign of calumnies, false rumors, distorted manipulation of incidents, all intent on undermining the Jesuits' reputation by ascribing to them nefarious doctrines, purposes, and practices." Among Pombal's allegations were that the Jesuits had incited revolts in Paraguay (a Portuguese colony), had traded illegally, had even conspired to murder the King. Pombal supported his claim with numerous anti-Jesuit tracts and inflammatory pastoral letters, which he submitted to Parliament. In the Society's defense, a group of bishops showered Pope Clement XIII with letters commending the Jesuits for their invaluable work. Clement, known by Jesuit historians as "a Jesuited pope,"[6] hastened to send copies of these endorsements to Lorenzo Ricci for publication under the title "Catholic Ecclesiastical Judgment for the Present Status of the Society of Jesus." Publication of these endorsements would show the world that the Society enjoyed the solid support of the Roman hierarchy. Significantly, Ricci declined to publish them.

On January 19, 1759, the Marquis de Pombal procured a royal decree expelling the Jesuits from Portugal and its overseas colonies. More than a thousand Jesuit fathers were crammed into ships and dumped on the shores of the Papal States (then an area in central Italy only slightly more spacious than Switzerland). Two hundred-fifty fathers were cast into dungeons, many perishing from maltreatment. The Portuguese Crown seized all the Society's houses, churches, and colleges, as well.

STONES were then nudged in France. The Superior of a Jesuit mission in the Caribbean, Père LaValette, had obtained commercial credit to finance his mission in Martinique. When it happened that he could no longer pay his debt, a trading firm in Marseilles alleged damages against him of more than two million francs. LaValette asked Lorenzo Ricci for help. Ricci turned him down. The firm sued the Society in a French court and won. Ricci then appealed the case to the Parlement in Paris, which was more of a supreme court than a legislative body. His lawyers argued that the Society could not be held liable for personal debts of its members due to a prohibition laid down by St. Ignatius himself in the Constitutions against any member's doing business as a principal or partner. Although this claim was easily dismissible as a flimsy legal fiction, the court demanded evidence to support it. This required Lorenzo Ricci to produce the Constitutions, which had never before been publicly revealed. When the volumes were brought to court and examined, the government attorneys had a field day. A lawyer from Brittany named LaChatolais charged that the Constitutions was a handbook of "every known form of heresy, idolatry, and superstition, [which] provides tutelage in suicide, legicide, blasphemy, and every kind of impurity, usury, sorcery, murder, cruelty, hatred, vendetta, insurrection, and treason."[7]

As the LaValette case unfolded, during 1759 and 1760 Benjamin Franklin's beloved Voltaire slammed the Jesuits in two satirical plays mounted on the Parisian stage. Educated in the humanities and theatrical arts by Jesuits at the Collège Louis-le-Grand, Voltaire served the Society and the Catholic Church with distinction by becoming their chief critic and debunker, much in the way Will Rogers served Franklin Roosevelt's administration by lampooning New Deal politicians, or in the way Keystone Cops tickled an America being transformed into a police state. Audiences at Candide howled at Jesuit buffoons strutting about self-importantly drilling their Paraguayan Indian troops. In The Account of the Sickness, Confession, Death and Apparition of the Jesuit Berthier, the editor of a Jesuit literary review who dies of sheer boredom challenges the notion that the Society is even worthy of existence. With his predecessor Blaise Pascal (whose Provincial Letters had alerted earlier generations to the egomania of high Jesuitry), Voltaire provided a spirit of ridicule which gave Jesuit-bashing the feel of good sport.

Lorenzo Ricci's handling of the LaValette case resulted in a resolution, passed by Parlement on August 6, 1762, condemning the Jesuits as "endangering the Christian faith, disturbing the peace of the Church, and in general building up far less than they destroy." The resolution continued:

> The Society of Jesus by its very nature is inadmissible in any properly ordered State as contrary to natural law, attacking all temporal and spiritual authority, and tending to introduce into Church and State, under the specious veil of a religious Institute, not an Order truly aspiring towards evangelical perfection, but rather a political organization whose essence consists in a continual activity, by all sorts of ways, direct and indirect, secret and public, to gain absolute independence and then the usurpa> tion of all authority.... They outrage the laws of nature and as enemies of the laws of France should be irrevocably expelled.

Louis XV being an absolute monarch, parliamentary resolutions were worthless without his signature. Louis being obedient to his Jesuits, it was highly unlikely that he would ever sign a resolution condemning the Jesuits. Yet sign it he did. And why he did has remained a point of debate. Some say his mistress, Madame de Pompadour, craved vengeance against court Jesuits for implacably denying her a mass. Others say the king needed Parlement's favor to bail him out of debt. I submit that Louis signed because Lorenzo Ricci wanted him to.

When the resolution became law, Ricci released the French Jesuits from their vows. The Society as an institution ceased to exist on French soil. Louis consented to allow the Jesuits to remain in France, but as "regular clergy." Others went into exile. (Père LaValette, whose financial problems had brought on the debacle, was exiled by Ricci to live the rest of his life as a private citizen in England. When the war that had begun in the Ohio valley reached Martinique, the English occupied that tiny island and took over the Jesuit plantations, selling them, slaves and all, for more than enough money to have paid off LaValette's debts.)

In the midst of their decomposing glory, the Jesuits received from Clement XIII an awesome gift designed to make welcome the most humiliating of circumstances. This was the mass and office of the Sacred Heart, with its icon of a realistically bloody heart plucked from Christ's ribcage and ignited by an eternal flame. Based on visions resulting from the Spiritual Exercises made by Ste. Margaret-Marie Alacoque (1647-90) as promoted by her Jesuit spiritual director, Claude de la Colombière, Sacred Heart is a gnostic Jesuit production centering on the Saviour's perfect humanity. "By devotion to my Heart," Jesus supposedly revealed to Alacoque, "tepid souls shall grow fervent, and fervent souls shall quickly mount to high perfection." Sacred Heart summons true believers to pay a debt of "reparation" for the world's sins. The debt is payable only by prayers, penances, masses, and (significantly for this epoch in the Society's history) social action. John Carroll, so indispensable for the outworking of the American Revolution, was profoundly devoted to Sacred Heart.

Louis xv was the effective head of the "Family Compact," an agreement between reigning Bourbon monarchs to present a united front before the rest of the world "on important measures." Once he had dissolved the Jesuits in France, he advised other Bourbons to do likewise, although he could not name anything to be gained politically, economically, or financially by the Society's dissolution. The issue "still remains puzzling and problematic" (Professor Martin says[8]) unless considered (I submit) in light of Sun-tzuan ruse.

At any rate, the Bourbon Charles III of Spain followed Louis' advisory. Charles convened a special commission to prepare a master plan for ousting the Jesuits. No one could produce any hard evidence against the Society. But there were plenty of rumors. A mob that had risen up to protest a law Charles had passed forbidding the wearing of wide sombreros was said to have been fomented by Jesuits. A rumor swept across Spain that the Jesuits were nursing a plot to assassinate Charles. The Jesuits supposedly had proof that the king was technically a bastard and should be deposed. None of these rumors were ever substantiated. Moreover, General Ricci ordered the Jesuits to do nothing to dispel them. The result was that forty-six of the sixty Spanish bishops decided that Spain should follow the Marquis de Pombal and oust the Society.

And so the commission drafted an expulsion order, which Charles signed on February 27, 1767. The order was executed by ambush, reminiscent of Philip IV's move against the Knights Templar in 1312. Charles sent out sealed envelopes marked "Not to be opened before sunrise of April 2 on pain of death" to all provincial viceroys and military commanders. When sunrise came and the recipients opened their envelopes, they discovered two letters inside. The first ordered them to place troops around the Jesuit residences and colleges during the night of April 2, to arrest all Jesuits, and to arrange for them to be placed aboard waiting ships at certain docks. "If a single Jesuit," concluded the king, "even though sick or dying, is still to be found in the area under your command after the embarcation, prepare yourself to face summary execution."

The second letter was a copy of King Charles' original order of expulsion, which began "Being swayed by just and legitimate reasons which shall remain sealed within my royal breast forever," and went on to say that "all members of the Society of Jesus are to leave my kingdoms [Castille, Aragon, Navarre, and the other formerly independent kingdoms that made up Spain] and all their goods are declared forfeit ... by virtue of the highest power, which the Lord God Almighty has confided into my hands." The king made sure to discourage any investigation into causes: "It is not for subjects to question the wisdom or to seek to interpret the decisions of their sovereign."

Only days before April 2, the Spanish ambassador to the Holy See presented a document from Charles to Pope Clement XIII that explained,

> Your Holiness knows as well as anyone else that a sovereign's first duty is to ensure the peace of his dominions and the tranquillity of his subjects. In the fulfillment of this sovereign task, I have found it necessary to expel all the Jesuits residing in my kingdoms and to commit them directly to Your Holiness' wise stewardship in the States of the Church.... I beg Your Holiness to consider that my decision is unalterable and has been made as the result of mature reflection and all due consideration for the consequences....

Clement, the likelihood of whose submission to the will of Lorenzo Ricci should not be underestimated, responded in a melodramatic vein, as though playing for an audience: "Of all the shocks I have had to endure in the nine unhappy years of my pontificate, this one, of which Your Majesty has informed me, is the worst." The pope had little more to say, except that the king may have placed himself in danger of eternal damnation.

The order was executed during the night of April second and third. Some six thousand Jesuits were rounded up throughout Spain. They were crammed into the lower decks of twenty-two watships. In May 1767 the gruesome fleet appeared off Civitavecchia, the port of the Papal States, and – amazingly, was fired upon by shore artillery! The ships were denied permission to land their human cargo by order of the pope himself, pursuant to a conference with Lorenzo Ricci! Historians are at a loss to explain why Clement, so devoted to the Jesuits, would impose such cruelty upon his beloveds in their hour of need. The most plausible answer, I would suggest, is that his understanding was obedient to the inscrutable command of his General, whose exceedingly private objective, after all, was to disqualify the Society of Jesus and the Roman Catholic Church as viable enemies of Protestantism, at least in the North American colonies. No longer enemies, they could develop personal alliances. The suffering priests, the guns of Civitavecchia, were all explained in Amiot's Sun-tzu:

> Your army, accustomed to not knowing your plans, will he equally unaware of the peril which threatens it. A good General takes advantage of everything. But he can only do that because he has operated in the greatest secrecy, because he knows how to remain cool-headed & because he governs with uprightness. At the same time, however, his men are constantly misled by what they see & hear. He manages for his troops never to know what they must do nor what orders they must receive.... If his own people are unaware of his plans, how can the enemy discover them?

Over the next few months, thousands more Jesuits were expelled from the remaining Bourbon states of Naples, Parma, Malta, and Spanish America. Jesuits in French America (Quebec) and New England were left undisturbed, as were those in Austria. In October 1768 the Austrian Empress Maria-Theresa, a Habsburg, wrote her Jesuit confessor, Father Koffler: "My dear fathet, there is no cause for concern; as long as I am alive you have nothing to fear." But Maria-Theresa hoped to marry her two daughters to Bourbon princes, Caroline to the son of the Spanish king, Marie-Antoinette to the son of Louis XV. Bourbon ambassadors advised her that unless she expelled the Jesuits, she would have to look elsewhere for sons-in-law. The Empress reneged on her promise to Father Koffler, expelled the Jesuits, and the girls got their men. (Marie-Antoinette's marriage would end with the execution of her husband, Louis XVI, in January 1793. Nine months later, she would die the same way, decapitated by the guillotine. This device bears the name of the French Revolutionist who in 1792 first suggested its use in administering the death penalty, Dr. Josef Guillotin. Dr. Guillotin was a disestablished Jesuit.)

In January 1769 the ambassadors from France, Spain, and Portugal visited Clement XIII to demand "the complete and utter suppression of the Society of Jesus." Clement called for a special consistory of the College of Cardinals to deliberate the question. But when the cardinals convened February 3, it was not to discuss Bourbon ultimatums, but to choose Clement's successor. For the 76-year-old pope had died the night before "of an apoplectic attack," said the official record, a heart attack attributed to the pressures applied by the Bourbon diplomats.

For nearly three months, one question charged the turbulent conclave: Should the next pope be for or against the Jesuits? The cardinals' choice of Lorenzo Ganganelli was a triumph for Lorenzo Ricci. Although Ganganelli was a Franciscan, he had colleagued with Jesuits as a special consultant to the Inquisition. His celebrated book Diatriba theologica (1743) had been dedicated to Ignatius Loyola. Moreover, Ganganelli literally owed his papacy to Lorenzo Ricci, as it was Ricci who had sponsored his nomination for cardinal in 1759.[9] Almost immediately after receiving the red hat Ganganelli had shown evidence of cooperating with General Ricci's strategy of gradually disestablishing the Society of Jesus. Oxford Book of Popes indicates a sudden and unexplainable habit change: "Hitherto regarded as a friend of the Jesuits, Cardinal Ganganelli now distanced himself from them." And now, a decade later, calling himself Clement XIV, Ganganelli presented what the Catholic Encyclopedia calls "in appearance a hostile attitude" toward the Jesuits, an apparent hostility, a theatrical hostility that masked an involved loyalty toward the Society. Clement XIV would do whatever was necessary to help the Society win victory without doing battle, even if it meant obliterating the Society.

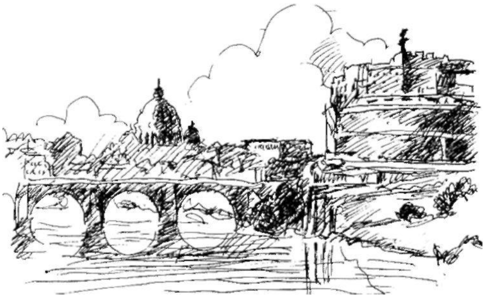
The Bourbons needed appeasing. Hastily, Clement promised Charles III of Spain forthcoming documents necessary to "proclaim to all the world the wisdom of Your Majesty's decision to expel the Jesuits as unruly and rebellious subjects." He assured Louis XV of France also of a "plan for the complete suppression of this society." On Maundy Thursday 1770, Clement omitted the annual reading of In coena Domini ("On the Lord's supper"). The omission was an astonishing statement. This celebrated bull, first proclaimed in 1568 by Pope Pius V, arrogantly reminded kings that they were but vassals of the papacy. Suddenly discontinuing this assertion flattered the royal self-importance, inviting crowned heads to stay on the anti-Jesuit, anti-Church track so necessary for the fulfillment of Lorenzo Ricci's secret designs in England and America. It surely evidences Clement's involvement in the strategy of feigned weakness in order to conceal what Sun-tzu called "an order that nothing can interrupt." The non-reading of In coena Domini rang the deathknell of the strong-armed white papacy as manifest by Ricci's political theorist, "Justinius Febronius," in his 1763 masterpiece On the State of the Church & the Legitimate Power of the Roman Pontiff – about which more presently.

For more than eighty years, the papacy had supported Rome-based members of the Stuart monarchs exiled from England for being Roman Catholics. Not only did Clement XIV diminish this tradition to almost nothing, in 1772 he began extending a highly visible and most cordial hospitality to the Protestant King George III and his family. This tableau was enormously disturbing to American Protestants, who at that time were having extreme difficulties with George. The prospect of England reuniting with Rome gave them all the more reason to strive for what Lorenzo Ricci wanted, their independence.

Finally, on July 21, 1773, Clement XIV delivered on his promise by signing the brief Dominus ac Redemptor noster ("God and our Redeemer"). The brief "dissolved, suppressed, disbanded, and abolished" the Society of Jesus "for all eternity" so as "to establish a real and enduring peace within the Church." All the Jesuits' "offices, authorities, and functions" were declared "null and void, and all their houses, colleges, hospices, and any other places occupied by them to be hereby disestablished, no matter in what province, state, or kingdom they might be found."

Clement appointed five cardinals, an archbishop, a bishop, two theologians, and other ecclesiastical dignitaries to supervise the Disestablishment. None of the confiscated Jesuit records, correspondence, and accounts showed any incriminating evidence.

Although Lorenzo Ricci lived a short walk from the pope's palace at St. Peter's, notice of the Disestablishment was not served upon him until mid-August. Guards took the General into custody at his offices in Number 45 Piazza del Gesu. They removed him to the English College a few blocks away. He remained there five weeks. Things were then happening in England and America that make Ricci's presence in the English College extraordinarily significant. We shall consider those happenings in a forthcoming chapter

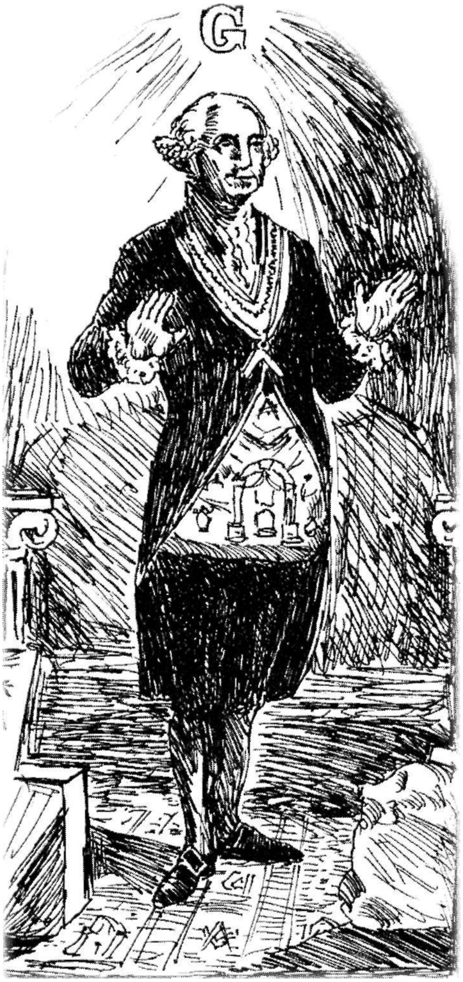


View of St. Peter's Basilica from Castel Sant'Angelo

Toward the end of September, Lorenzo Ricci was taken from the English College to Castel Sant'Angelo, a medieval fortress whose dungeons suggest a prison. His detention was probably less demeaning than we might imagine, as Sant'Angelo contained quite elegant rooms. Popes often used them as a convenient resort from administrative stresses. In fact, a secret underground tunnel connected Sant'Angelo to the papal palace at the Vatican. It would be consistent with Lorenzo Ricci's position and strategy for him to stay in personal, secret contact with Clement XIV by means of this tunnel.

On September 22, 1774, the first anniversary of Ricci's detention at Sant'Angelo, Clement died. He was sixty-nine. He had suffered the last year of his life in severe depression, it was said, with morbid paranoia over assassination. His corpse decomposed rapidly, feeding rumors of death by poison, rumors which his famous last words tended to confirm: "Mercy! Mercy! Compulsus feci!" ("I was compelled to do it!") For many years afterward, historians would wonder just whom Ganganelli was addressing: God? A vengeful Jesuit assassin? Ricci? What was the "it" he was compelled to do? Disestablish the Jesuits? Commit suicide? The definitive answer may never be known, because the pope's personal papers and effects decomposed as rapidly as his flesh. What is quite known, though, is that the death of Clement XIV, in the words of Oxford Book of Popes, "brought the prestige of the papacy to its lowest level in centuries." Which is precisely what Lorenzo Ricci needed for his American Revolution to happen.

WE now proceed to examine the structured darkness of the men who led the attack against the Society of Jesus. It was the same darkness from whence came not only the Englishmen who turned their kingdom into a hated tyranny, but also the Americans who advocated rebellion against that tyranny. The darkness is called Freemasonry, and it is the subject of our next chapter.



WASHINGTON IN MASONIC REGALIA
(From a Currier & Ives engraving, 1868.)

Chapter 13

THE SECRET BRIDGE

> "The papal prohibition might even have encouraged Masonry by identifying opposition to the group with Catholic tyranny and superstition."
>
> — STEVEN C. BULLOCK, > REVOLUTIONARY BROTHERHOOD, 1996

THE New Catholic Encyclopedia identifies the men who attacked the Society of Jesus as "the radical devotees of the rationalistic Enlightenment – richly talented and influential writers, such as Voltaire, Rousseau, and other 'philosophes' among the Encyclopedists, the followers of Freemasonry, and high placed government officials." Attacking the Jesuits was for them "a step toward their ultimate objective of abolishing all religious orders, the papacy, and finally the Church itself."

The masterpiece of the encyclopedists (most of whom happened to be philosophes), was the monumental Encyclopedia of Sciences, Arts, and Trades (1743-1751). The Encyclopedia was the flame of the Enlightenment, the fulfillment of Cardinal Wolsey's dream of flooding the world with print containing "learning against learning." It brought so much learning (secular learning, as against Scriptural learning) that it became its own paradigm demanding radical change in existing norms. The Enlightenment called for a "new age" that placed Reason above any Church, above even the Bible. The new age issued in the elegant neo-gnostic religion of Deism, the thinking man's alternative to Roman Catholicism and its imperious hold on the human conscience.

Nowhere was Deism more methodically practiced than "around the altars of Freemasonry," as the great Masonic scholar Albert Pike put it. Here, wrote Pike in his influential Morals and Dogma (1871), "the Christian, the Hebrew, the Moslem, the Brahmin, the followers of Confucius and Zoroaster, can assemble as brethren and unite in prayer to the one God who is above all gods." The brethren prayerfully climb the gnostic pyramid of successive illumination until, hopefully, a oneness with the supreme God is attained. As Pike explained, the Deists (like the papacy) looked upon the Bible as something of a stumbling block:

> The Freemason does not pretend to dogmatic certainty, nor vainly imagine such certainty attainable. He considers that if there were no written revelation, he could safely rest the hopes that animate him and the principles that guide him, on the deductions of reason and the convictions of instinct and consciousness.
>
> He studies the wonders of the Heavens, the framework and revolutions of the Earth, the mysterious beauties and adaptations of animal existence, the moral and material constitution of the human creature, so fearfully and wonderfully made; and is satisfied that God IS....

Most of the philosophes, including Frederick the Great, the Protestant King of Prussia who subsidized the entire Encyclopedia project, were Deistic brethren. As were the "high placed government officials" who pushed for the disestablishment of the Jesuits. All the Bourbon monarchs employed as their official advisors "ardent members of the Lodge," to use Professor Martin's phrase.[1] The Marquis de Pombal of Portugal was a Mason. Charles III's advisor the Count de Aranda, Louis XV's Minister de Tillot and the Duc de Choiseul, as well as Maria-Theresa's Prince von Kaunitz and Gerard von Swieten – all belonged to the secret brotherhood.

Since it was no secret that the Enlightenment aimed to make Roman Catholicism passée, Pope Clement XII promulgated in 1728 the constitution In eminenti, which appeared to condemn Freemasonry thusly:

> CONDEMNATIO SOCIETATIS DE CONVENTICULORUM DE FREEMASONS, UNDER THE PENALTY IPSO FACTO INCURRED, OR EXCOMMUNICATION; ABSOLUTION FROM IT BEING RESERVED TO PONTIFEX MAXIMUS
>
> Free Masons of whatever sect or religion, confederate together in a close and inscrutable bond, according to secret laws and orders agreed upon between them, and bind themselves as well by strict oath taken on the Bible as by the imprecations of heavy punishments to preserve their mysteries with inviolable secrecy___
>
> The great mischiefs which generally accrue from secret bodies are antagonist to civil and canonical laws.
>
> Wherefore, by the advice of the cardinals and of our mere motion, and from the plenitude of the apostolic power, we do condemn and prohibit the meetings of the above-named society of Free Masons.
>
> We strictly command that no one, under any pretext or color, dare to presume to promote, favor, admit, or conceal in their houses members of assemblies of this abominable order, nor in any way aid or assist in their meeting in any place, or to administer medicine to them in their sickness, or in any manner, directly or indirectly, by themselves or others, afford them counsel or help in their hour of trial and affliction, or persuade others to join said Order....

While Eminenti's stern rhetoric, which was renewed by Benedict XIV in 1751, seems to dig a wide ocean between Catholicism and Freemasonry, its fruits tell another story. Why, for example, were the Bourbon monarchs, all of them Roman Catholic, never penalized or excommunicated for admitting, promoting, and favoring Masonic advisors? And why, a decade after the Marquis de Pombal had shipped the Jesuits out of Portugal, did Clement XIV send an appeasing nuncio to the Portuguese court, elevate Pombal's brother to Bishop, and confirm all Pombal's nominees in bishoprics?[2] The answer, of course, is contained in the bull's title, which provides that absolution from penalties or excommunication is "reserved to Pontifex Maximus." That is to say, associating with the abomination of Freemasonry, if done for a cause valuable to the papacy (such as weakening the Jesuits to the point everybody assumes they're no longer a threat to Protestantism), will be absolved by the papacy. Given the historical context, does any other answer make sense?

The leading Jesuit-bashers were not only Freemasons, they were also the product of Jesuit learning against learning. It was the ratio studiorum – the Medici Library's gnostic wisdom absorbed in an ambiance of casuistry, equivocation, mental reservation, and obedience of the understanding, combined with smatterings of Holy Scripture usually filtered through the commentaries of Church doctors – that had turned two centuries of Jesuited students into secular philosophes. The ratio studiorum dictated the form and scope of the Encyclopedia, which in turn codified the Enlightenment paradigm, whose Deistic litany was preached "around the altars of Freemasonry."

Hold Freemasonry up to the light and you cannot help but see the black papacy's watermark. Isn't it reasonable, given the circumstances, that the "G" in the center of the familiar Masonic emblem represents the initial of "Gesu," the residence of the black popes at the Jesuits' world headquarters at Number 5, Borgo Sancto Spiritu, in Rome? Freemasons wouldn't suspect this, nor would Jesuits. It would be information reserved uniquely to the unknown superior, who shares what he knows with no one. "Your enemies will serve you without their wishes," said Sun-tzu, "or even their knowledge."

Freemasonry was the natural, the reasonable, the only intelligent way for the Roman Catholic Church to control (a) the ongoing affront of Protestantism, (b) the increase in "divine right" kings heading their own national churches independent of Vatican control, and (c) the incredible explosion of international mercantilism. Like the aquatic creature whose mouth resembles a comfortable resting place to its prey, the Lodges were a sagacious recycling of the old Templar infrastructure into a dynamic spiritual and economic brotherhood that gave Protestants, Jews, Buddhists, Muslims, agnostics, and anyone else an opportunity to build a better life outside Roman Catholicism, yet still under the Church's superintending eye. For Sun-tzu said, "The General sees all, hears all, does all, and in appearance is not involved with anything." The Jesuit General is the disembodied eye substituting for the pyramid's missing capstone, the stone the builders rejected.

The Lodge's secrecy and its condemnation by the Church were essential to sustaining the integrity of both institutions. And so the deepest Masonic secret, the secret that not even their Grandest Masters could penetrate, was that all their secrets were known to one man alone, the Superior General of the Society of Jesus. This should not surprise anyone aware of how thoroughly Freemasonry is suffused with Jesuitic technique. Both Freemasonry and the Society of Jesus are (a) humanist religious orders, (b) secretive, (c) fraternal, (d) socially conscientious and politically active – questing, like Aeneas, the prototypical Roman, for the greatest good for the greatest number. Both orders (e) hold Tradition, Reason, and Experience in equal if not greater esteem than the Bible, (f) employ carefully structured programs of gnostic visualization to achieve an ever-increasing knowledge of the divine, (g) condone "the end justifies the means," and (h) require absolute obedience, secured by a blood oath, to a hierarchy of superiors culminating in the Jesuit General, whose orders are so wisely suited to the recipient that they are obeyed as though willed by the recipient himself.

THE first recorded member of American Freemasonry was Daniel Coxe, who was constituted Provincial Grand Master of the provinces of New York, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania on June 5, 1730, on a deputation granted by the Duke of Norfolk, Grand Master of Masons in England.[5] Evidently, Coxe was an industrious recruiter. Minutes of a meeting of the Grand Lodge of London on January 29, 1731 reflect that "Coxe's health was proposed and drank [sic] as 'Provincial Grand Master of North America.'"

Daniel Coxe was actually a junior, according to Sidney Hayden's Washington and His Compeers (1868). He was "the son of Dr. Daniel Coxe of England, who was physician to the Queen of Charles II." Dr. Coxe must be presumed a Roman Catholic sympathizer, as both Charles and his Queen were Catholics. The Queen, Catherine of Braganza (Portugal), flaunted a huge Vatican entourage, for which she was continually harassed by death plots. Charles converted to Catholicism in exchange for money from Louis XIV of France under the terms of the Treaty of Dover.

The junior Daniel Coxe deserves wider recognition as an American visionary, or at least the sole apologist of some undisclosed visionary. Thirteen years before Benjamin Franklin's proposal of a "colonial Union" to the Albany congress in 1754, for which Franklin is credited with being the first to suggest a "united States," Coxe published in England a dissertation promoting a scheme to settle "an extensive tract of country lying on the Gulf of Mexico" owned by his father, the Queen's physician. The dissertation, entitled A Description of the English Province of Carolina, by the Spaniards called Florida, and by the French La Louisiane, promoted the elder Coxe's tract as an English province allied with New England against the Spanish, French, and Indians. It called for "all the colonies appertaining to the crown of Great Britain, on the northern continent of America, [to] be united under a legal, regular, and firm establishment; over which a lieutenant or supreme governor may be constituted and appointed to preside on the spot, to whom the governors of each colony shall be subordinate." With this union of governments under one president, Coxe foresaw "a great council or general convention of the estates of the colonies" to "meet together, consult and advise for the good of the whole." These "united states" would provide "for their mutual defense and safety, as well as, if necessary, for offense and invasion of their enemies" – independently of the protections of the British Crown. Of course, these imaginings became reality forty years later with the fulfillment of Lorenzo Ricci's strategy for dividing the British Empire. Considering the elements involved – lands owned by the Catholic Queen's physician, lands managed and promoted by the physician's son, who is a Freemason deputed to generate an American brotherhood by the eighth Duke of Norfolk, who himself was a member of England's premier Roman Catholic family – Coxe's dissertation appears to be the earliest formatting of the colonial conscience to divisive thinking by agents of the black papacy.

The Duke of Norfolk, "Grand Master of Masons in England," was also known as Thomas Howard, Earl of Arundell. His nephew, Henry, Lord Arundell, occupied Wardour Castle near Tisbury in Wiltshire at the time Clement XIV disestablished the Jesuits. We shall see how, in the autumn of 1773, it was to Lord Arundell's castle that John Carroll repaired when civil authorities closeci down the Jesuit school in Liège, Belgium, where Carroll had been teaching. For a year Carroll stayed at Wardour, serving as the Arundell family's tutor and chaplain before sailing for America to participate in the Revolution.

THIRTY-THIRD degree Masonic scholar Manly P. Hall, in his gnostic extravaganza Secret Teachings of All Ages: An Encyclopedic Outline of Masonic, Hermetic, Qabbalistic and Rosicrucian Symbolical Philosophy (1988), remarked that "not only were many founders of the United States Government Masons, but they received aid from a secret and August body existing in Europe, which helped them to establish this country for a peculiar and particular purpose known only to the initiated few."

Most histories of the American Government skim over the Masonic presence. Americans like their history told in high-definition icons of good and evil, liberty and tyranny, heroism and treason, might and right. They won't buy a heritage polluted by dark spots of mystery. Yet the greater part of American governmental heritage is almost wholly mysterious.

The man best qualified to become our country's greatest historian, certainly the man with the most complete access to primary sources in the Revolutionary cause, was Charles Thomson. An authentic classical scholar, a discreet Protestant steeped in Medici learning, Thomson was known as "Perpetual Secretary of the Continental Congress." He inscribed minutes of every Congressional session from 1774 until ratification of the Constitution in 1789. With William Barton, a Freemason, he designed the Great Seal of the United States of America: the choice of its Virgilian mottoes is credited exclusively to Thomson.

Charles Thomson, the man who talked the truth.

Among his contemporaries, Charles Thomson's name was synonymous with Truth. So accurate were his minutes of Pennsylvania's negotiations with the Delaware Indians that the Delawares called him Wegh-wu-law-mo-end, "the man who talks the truth." When he would take his daily reports of congressional proceedings to the streets, eager mobs would cry "Here comes Charles Thomson! Here comes the Truth!"

Once the Constitution was ratified, Charles Thomson retired to Harriton, his country home in Bryn Mawr. He destroyed his personal papers relative to the creation of the new republic. An article by Kenneth Boling in the Pennsylvania Magazine of History and Biography (1976) says that Thomson actually wrote a lengthy history of the Revolution, which he also destroyed. Thomson biographer J. Edwin Hendricks of Wake Forest suggests a fate other than destruction, alluding to "persistent rumors that the Thomson papers are in the Pennsylvania Masonic records." (Professor Hendricks assured me personally that numerous inquiries have failed to reflect Thomson's membership in Pennsylvania Masonry.) Whether Thomson destroyed his history or surrendered it to the crypt of secrecy, it is clear that he knew there were certain elements in the formation of American government that must, must be ignored. "If the truth were known," he told friends darkly, "many careers would be tarnished and the leadership of the nation would be weakened."[4]

And so Charles Thomson occupied the remaining forty years of his life translating the Septuagint, the Greek-language Bible, into English. Still, he was frequently requested to write the definitive insider's history of the Revolution. Dr. Benjamin Rush overheard Thomson's reply to one such request and recorded it in his diary:

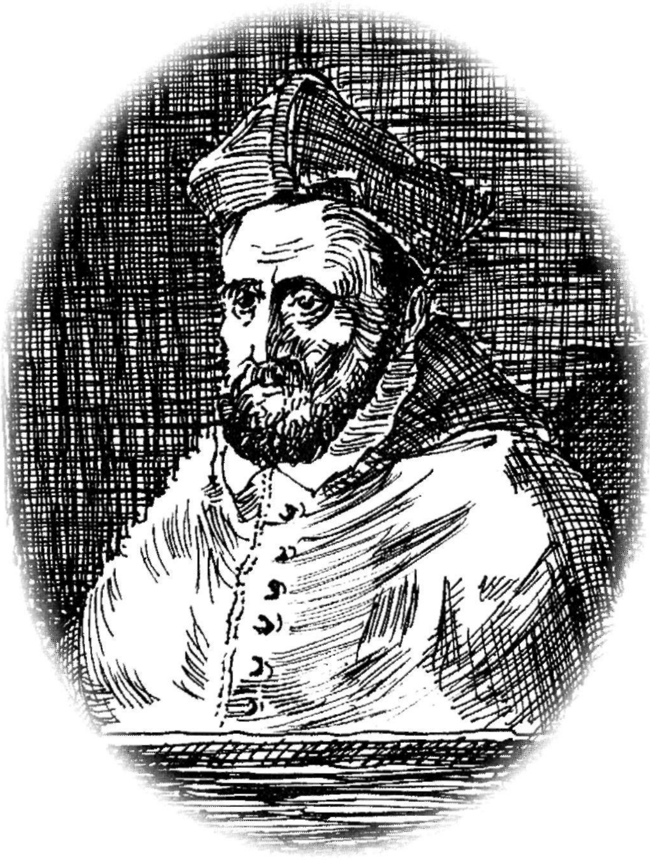
> "No," said he, "I ought not, for I should contradict all the histories of the great events of the Revolution, and shew by my account of men, motives and measures, that we are wholly indebted to the agency of Providence for its successful issue. Let the world admire the supposed wisdom and valor of our great men. Perhaps they may adopt the qualities that have been ascribed to them, and thus good may be done. I shall not undeceive future generations."[5]

What I believe Thomson was meaning to say is simply that no historical account of the American Revolution can be truthful unless it discloses the role played by "the agency of Providence." Notice that Thomson does not use the word "Providence" alone, which was understood in his day to mean "God" or "Christ." He does not say "we are wholly indebted to God," or "we are wholly indebted to Christ," but rather to the "agency" thereof.

If Thomson knew the word "agency" was a synonym for "vicar," and I can't imagine that a professional linguist wouldn't, and if he knew that the popes had been called "vicars of Christ" since the fifth century, and I can't imagine that a biblical scholar of his quality wouldn't, then Thomson was most likely saying "We are wholly indebted to the Vicar of Christ, that is, the Roman papacy."

But what a ridiculous statement to the post-Revolutionary American mindset! Who would have believed such an outrageous notion, coming from even the man who talks the truth? The embattled, degenerate, dying papacy could not possibly have effected the Revolution! Anyone foolish enough to run with this idea would have crashed headlong into a wall of ridicule. For Thomson, there was no future in telling what he knew. Since he chose not to undeceive future generations, the American people have lived according to histories that can be contradicted by truth. They have been served by careers and leaders that truth could tarnish and weaken. They seem comfortable in their deception, which is generally the case among consenting subjects to Roman rule.

Let's move now to the next chapter, wherein we shall see how the Jesuits, which we now recognize as the unsung architects of the Enlightenment, supplied the American colonists a philosophical basis for rebelling against Great Britain.



CARDINAL ROBERT BELLARMINE (1542-1641)
(After Passerotti's engraved portrait from life.)

Chapter 14

THE DOGMA OF INDEPENDENCE

THE JESUIT ratio studiorum imbued western culture with a purely Catholic political theory. This theory, as articulated by Deist philosophes and politicians, ultimately became the rhetorical mainspring of the American Revolution. It so impacted the world that its formulator and original apologist, a Jesuit priest named Robert Bellarmine, was created a Saint in 1930.

Prior to Henry VIII's break with the Roman papacy in the mid-1530s and subsequent creation of the Church of England, kings regarded themselves, within their respective realms, as the anointed vicars of God for secular purposes only. After Henry's schism, Protestant kings assumed God's anointment covered religious purposes as well. They became infallible popes of their own national churches. Following the biblical teaching that the ruler is "God's minister to thee for good," Protestant kings claimed to rule by Divine Right, holding absolute sway over their subjects. In the maxim of Divine Right's greatest champion and James I's private theologian, Sir Robert Filmer, “The King can do no wrong.”

Divine Right’s staunchest opponent was Robert Bellarmine, private theologian to the pope, Clement VIII (1592-1605), who made him Cardinal Bellarmine in 1599. Cardinal Bellarmine appealed to the self-interest of the common man, something the Divine Right system failed to do. He invented liberation theology. Drawing on Aristotle and St. Thomas Aquinas, Bellarmine maintained that God anointed no kings but instead gave sovereignty directly and naturally to the people. The people were free to confer their sovereignty upon whomever or whatever they chose. Should the people’s chosen sovereign prove himself (or itself) unworthy, the people had the right to depose him (or it) and start anew with any form of government they deemed necessary, whether monarchy, aristocracy, or republic.

Understandably, the Protestant monarchs loathed Cardinal Bellarmine. A Collegio Anti-Bellarminianum was established at Heidelberg to train Lutherans in how to cope with Bellarmine’s democratic egalitarianism. When Queen Elizabeth ordered that Bellarmine be lectured against at Cambridge, the lecturer, while reading the Cardinal to refute him, converted to Roman Catholicism. Theodore Beza, who succeeded John Calvin as head of the Protestant church at Geneva, is said to have declared of Bellarmine’s magnum opus, Christian Controversy, “This book has ruined us!”

Of the process of “making the enemy move as one wishes,” Sun-tzu wrote: “The great science is to make him desire everything you wish him to do & to provide him with all the means to help you in this, without his realizing it.” Thus, liberation theology reached the American revolutionaries through the voice and energies of its principal adversary, Sir Robert Filmer. Sir Robert spent the first four pages of Patriarcha (1680), his illustrious defense of Divine Right monarchy, refuting Cardinal Bellarmine. But his refutation contains so much material from Bellarmine’s works that Patriarcha amounts to nothing less than a concise introduction of Bellarminian theory.

The two most conspicuous reviewers of Patriarcha were Algernon Sidney, Puritanism's greatest political philosopher, and John Locke, the voice of Enlightenment in England and America. Algernon Sidney's name means little to modern Americans, but in his day, and for generations after, it was synonymous with individual liberty. Babies and country estates were called "Sidney" in his honor, even though he was beheaded in 1683 for plotting the death of King Charles II. Sidney's philosophical admirers loved his open hostility to Roman Catholicism. They ignored his intrigues with the Jesuits of Louis XIV, and his long visits to Rome. Discourses concerning Government, his most celebrated work, was known respectfully as "the noble book." After its republication in 1763, along with an account of his preposterous trial (no indictment, no assistance of counsel, perjured testimony, tainted evidence, packed jury), it could be found in the library of every affluent home in America.

Sidney began Discourses with the following sentence: "Having lately seen a book entitled Patriarcha written by Sir Robert Filmer concerning the universal and undistinguished right of all kings, I thought a time of leisure might well be employed in examining his doctrine and the questions arising from it: which seem to concern all mankind." Whereupon, quoting Filmer's quotations from Bellarmine, Sidney goes on to attack Filmer and in the process defends Bellarmine. How wondrously Sun-tzuan that a trusted Protestant thinker would indoctrinate a nation of fellow-Catholic-bashers with the teachings of a Jesuit Cardinal!

John Locke held such influence over revolutionary intellectuals that historians have labeled him "America's Philosopher." He, too, endorsed Bellarmine by attacking Filmer. On the title page of his Two Treatises on Government (1690), Locke advertises that he will refute Patriarcha with reasoning wherein "the false principles and foundation of Sir Robert Filmer and his followers are detected and overthrown." He then expounds Cardinal Bellarmine in his own words, words that will become the rationale of the American Revolution: "Men being by nature all free, equal, and independent, no one can be put out of this estate, and subjected to the political power of another, without his consent...."

The personal library of the main author of the Declaration of Independence, Thomas Jefferson, contained a copy of Patriarcha, and also a handsome folio of four hundred ninety-seven pages of the discourses of Algernon Sidney. "If Jefferson read but the opening pages of Sidney's and Filmer's books," Bellarminian scholar John Clement Rager wrote in 1926, > he had the principles of democracy as propounded by Bellarmine, in a nutshell. It is more than likely, however, that the curiosity of Jefferson ... prompted [him] to look more deeply into the original writings of this Catholic Schoolman.

>
> [He] had not far to go. In the library of Princeton University there was a copy of Cardinal Bellarmine's works. James Madison, a member of the committee which framed the Virginia Declaration of Rights, was a graduate of Princeton. Probably he read Bellarmine, for at this period of his life he read everything he could lay his hands on and was deeply versed in religious controversy.
>
> It might be remarked that several members of the committee which drew up the [Virginia] Declaration of Rights had been educated in England, where the writings of Bellarmine were not unpopular even among those who were most inimical to his faith.

The operative philosophy of the Declaration of Independence is easily traceable to Bellarminian liberation theology:

Cardinal Bellarmine	Declaration of Independence
"Political power emanates from God. Government was introduced by divine law, but the divine law has given this power to no particular man."	"The people are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights."
"Society must have power to protect and preserve itself."	"To secure these rights, governments are instituted among men."

Cardinal Bellarmine	Declaration of Independence
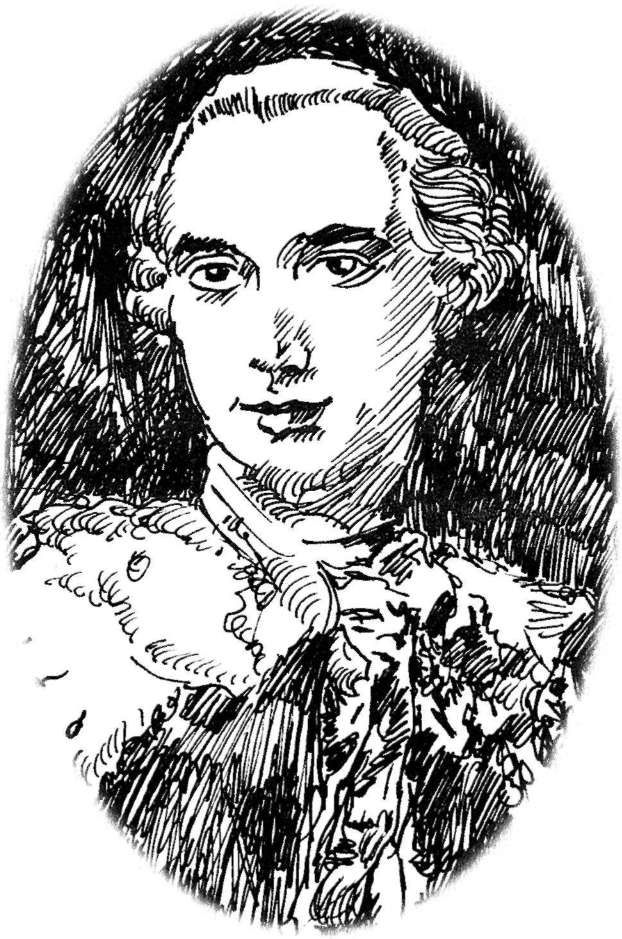
"The people themselves, immediately and directly, hold the political power."	"Governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."
"All men are born naturally free and equal."	"All men are created equal."
"For legitimate reason the people can change the government to an aristocracy or a democracy or vice versa."	"Whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or abolish it, and to institute a new goverment."

Interestingly, Patriarcha (1680) was not published until twenty-eight years after its author Sir Robert Filmer's death. It arrived in an era of dwindling hopes for Divine Right, the concept having been thoroughly discredited when King Charles I was beheaded in 1625.

Could it be that Patriarcha was edited or ghost-written by Jesuits at the command of Superior General John Paul Oliva (1661—1681)? The purpose would have been to induce the enemies of Roman Catholicism to follow Bellarmine by having Bellarminian liberation attacked by a loser, Filmer, the disgraced champion of a lost Protestant cause. The idea is not far-fetched when one considers actual outcome. For Patriarcha did in fact produce the theory of revolution that impelled the colonists to create a nation subservient to the black papacy.

But for liberation theology to translate into the violence necessary to divide the English-speaking world, England had to commit acts of tyranny. How this was accomplished, despite a dazed and confused and rather innocuous young king, is the subject of our next chapter.



JOHN STUART, 3RD EARL OF BUTE
(From the portrait by Alan Ramsay.)

Chapter 15

THE MADNESS OF KING GEORGE III

UPON THE DEATH in 1732 of Thomas Howard, Eighth Duke of Norfolk and real Founder of American Freemasonry, the Norfolk title passed to Thomas' brother Edward. In a curious way, the Ninth Duke of Norfolk played a part in the founding of the United States as well, albeit a cameo role.

Sun-tzu wrote

> Multiply your spies, put them everywhere, in the very Palace of the enemy Prince; have a list of the principal Officers who are at his service. Know their first & last names, the number of their children, their relatives, their friends, their servants. Let nothing happen to them that is not known to you.

Edward, Ninth Duke of Norfolk, was a regular in the crowd of Frederick William, Prince of Wales, and his Princess, Augusta of Saxony. The Waleses were party creatures, and an on-going disappointment to the Prince's father, King George II. The king resented that his son appeared not to have inherited his craving for war – George II was the last British monarch to lead his army into battle, which he did against the Spanish in 1739. George despised his son's Ignatian entourage. When Frederick William ran up an exorbitant tab entertaining foreign ambassadors at St. James's Palace, the king cut his allowance, shooed the ambassadors away, and ordered the couple to move out of St. James's and take up a simpler residency at Leicester House.

In 1738, Augusta gave birth to a son, George William. At the age of six the child was placed under the tutelage of a Dr. Ayscough. Like the Society of Jesus, Ayscough did not wish the head of the Church of England well. "He is chiefly remarkable," says Brittanica, "as an adherent of the opposition." Ayscough's role in history was to keep the future king of England, who suffered emotionally under the ungainly squabbles dividing father and grandfather, virtually illiterate for more than five years.

The Prince of Wales was fond of horse-racing. One afternoon in 1747, so the official story goes, a sudden downpour of rain confined him and a handful of friends to his tent at the Egham races. Determined to play cards, the Prince sent Edward, Ninth Duke of Norfolk, out in the rain to find someone to make up a whist party. The Duke returned with a strikingly handsome Scot, John Stuart, third Earl of Bute. "Bute immediately gained the favour of the prince and princess," says Brittanica, "and became the leading personage at their court." What Britannica omits saying, along with every other source I could find on this leading character in the formation of Anglo-American relations, is that Bute, like Norfolk, was a secret brother of the Lodge. This fact is ascertainable only from the keystone of the arch over Bute's mausoleum in St. Mary's Cemetery at Rothesay, Isle of Bute, in the Firth of Clyde west of Glasgow. Carved into that keystone is the familiar Masonic disembodied all-seeing eye.

Born in 1713, educated at Eton, Bute was elected in 1737 to the representative peerage for Scotland. He never opened his mouth in debate. When his bid for re-election failed, he returned to the family estate on the Isle of Bute, whose remarkably temperate climate produces a lush foliage, even palm trees. There he indulged a passion for botany that can be experienced to this day in the verdant grounds at Mount Rothesay. In 1745, Bute suddenly left Rothesay and took up residence in London. The year 1745 is distinguished by the so-called Jacobite Rebellion, another wondrous Sun-tzuan ruse in which apparent defeat for the Society of Jesus masked a hidden victory.

The Jacobite Rebellion aimed to restore Roman Catholic rule over England by deposing George II and placing James II's grandson Charles Stuart, better known as Bonnie Prince Charlie, on the throne. However, when Charlie marched on London with a band of Scottish devotees, no Catholic politician of any prominence would desert George II. The Rebellion was forced to abort. Charlie escaped to France and the and the Scots were massacred. Clearly, this was a Catholic disaster. Or was it? Such extensive Catholic support for a Protestant king assured England that the monarchy would be forever Protestant. A Catholic England was now an impossible dream. The Jesuits could give up. Englishmen could now relax with them in their midst, just as Jesuits could now go about their business without causing official alarm. The Jacobite Rebellion made England at last... safe for the black papacy. The Jesuits secured a new cover by blowing their cover – "blown cover as cover" in the parlance of CIA. The Sun-Tzuan General wins whatever the circumstances.

WHEN Bute joined the court of the Prince and Princess of Wales, their son George William was an emotional basket case. Bute lavished attention on the lad, won his trust and admiration, became his mentor. Indeed, Bute made himself so delightfully indispensable around Leicester House that the Prince appointed him, in 1750, to the most intimate position on his staff, Lord of the Bedchamber. Nothing happened in the life of the two heirs to the throne of England that was not privy to a man under obedience to the Unknown Superior.

But in the year following Bute's appointment, the Prince died mysteriously at the age of forty-four. Rumors that Bute was responsible circulated for a while and evaporated. However, gossip linking Bute romantically to Princess Augusta never went away, even though he was husband to a devoted wife and happy family.

George II, surprisingly desolate over the Prince's untimely death, remained an absurdly stern grandfather to George William. Until his own death in 1760, George II grew increasingly melancholic and disinterested in ruling. Parliament gained strength. Bute acted the surrogate father to the future king. Caring for the gardens at Leicester House, he inspired the boy with a lifelong interest in botany. He encouraged him to patronize the arts – the composer Handel, though blind, was still superintending performances of his works at the royal behest. However, Bute did little to allay George's tormenting fears of inadequacy. Reinforcing himself as the ideal of conduct, the Scot nourished the boy's self-distrust, which would become the most prominent feature of his maturity.

Such was the context of English power when Lorenzo Ricci tipped the stones in the Ohio valley that tumbled into a costly world war between England and France. Six years into the war, George II died at the age of seventy-seven. He left behind a disunited Parliament and a dysfunctional heir barely out of his teens. George William, now King George III, fearfully turned the British Empire over to John Stuart. Bute acted swiftly to conform to the wishes of his Unknown Superior. He began by appointing a more compliant first lord of the Treasury, the office later to be known as Prime Minister. Next, with secretly-funded grants, he purchased votes from key members of Parliament widely known as "the King's Friends." Under the noble pretext of achieving "a closer unity of the British Empire under Parliament," Bute whipped the King's Friends into passing a law to enforce writs of assistance across the Atlantic. These were revenue-raising warrants issued summarily under the royal seal requiring a law officer to take possession of lands without trial, without jury.

One does not need a doctorate in political science to know that summary expropriation is a sure way to divide an empire, not unite it. When the writs were enforced in Massachusetts, James

Otis resigned his Advocate-General's post in the Court of Admiralty to preach against them "in a style of oratory," John Adams would later recall, "that I have never heard equalled in this or any other country." In July 1776, Adams would declare that the enforcement of Bute's writs of assistance in 1761 was "the commencement of this controversy between Great Britain and America."[1]

Lorenzo Ricci's War, or the Maritime War, or the French and Indian Wars, came to an end in 1763. England was the apparent victor. Bute was sent by his protege, George III, to negotiate a peace in Paris. Assisted by Robert Petty, Lord Shelburne, the notorious "Jesuit of Berkeley Square," Bute perfected the Treaty of Paris. Under its terms England won from France all of Catholic Quebec and the region east of the Mississippi, except for the island of New Orleans. This was such a great territorial windfall for the colonists that North Carolinians created Bute County in the northeastern part of the colony.[2] However, Bute restricted the windfall by ordering the infamous Royal Proclamation of 1763, which prohibited Americans from moving west of a line drawn along the crest of the Allegheny Mountains. Most colonists viewed the Proclamation as a scheme to imprison them between the Alleghenies and the Atlantic. To purchasers of western real estate prior to the Treaty, it was legalized theft. The churchgoers saw a papal advance: "With Roman Catholicism no longer actively persecuted in England, many Americans concluded that the mother country was about to return to Rome."[3]

Prior to Lorenzo Ricci's accession to the black papacy in 1758, the colonists had been blissfully loyal to the mother country. Looking back on the pre-Riccian years while testifying before the House of Commons in 1766, Benjamin Franklin recalled that "the colonists were governed by England at the expense only of a little pen, ink, and paper; they were led by a thread." Yet, with the rise of Ricci, as if in preparation for the absurdities of Bute, radical propagandists began appearing throughout the colonies - Christopher Gadsden in South Carolina, Cornelius Harnett in North Carolina, Patrick Henry and Thomas Jefferson in Virginia, and, in Pennsylvania, Charles Thomson. The dean of all these propagandists was Samuel Adams, the celebrated "Father of the American Revolution" and Freemasonry's "dominant figure in the mobilization of the Boston artisans and inland towns."[4] John Adams, in a letter dated February 9, 1819, framed his cousin Sam's political activism within exactly the seventeen years of Lorenzo Ricci's generalate:

> Samuel Adams, to my certain knowledge, from 1758 to 1775, that is, for seventeen years, made it his constant rule to watch the rise of every brilliant genius, to seek his acquaintance, to court his friendship, to cultivate his natural feelings in favor of his native country, to warn him against the hostile designs of Great Britain, and to fix his affections and reflections on the side of his native country.

Thus, well before the advent of much to rebel against – well before Bute's writs of assistance and the Royal Proclamation – a propaganda of American rebellion was being organized. At the same time, Dr. Franklin put together the means of disseminating it. He streamlined the colonial postal system to flow smoothly and efficiently from southern Virginia through eastern New England.

On the diplomatic front, England's future war-making capability was stunted by the Paris negotiations of Bute and Shelburne, which isolated England from any possibility of forming helpful European alliances. This, in 1763, was of negligible importance to anyone but the foreknowing and omniscient Lorenzo Ricci. When the hour came for America to revolt for independence, and no one but Ricci knew when that hour would come, England had to be friendlessly alone.

Having weakened England and stimulated the production of hostile, divisive rhetoric in America, Bute resigned from public life a very unpopular man. But the king's mentor was not yet finished. From the shadows, Bute handpicked a new Prime Minister, George Grenville. Grenville made a broad show of refusing to accept office unless the king promised never again to employ Bute in office or seek his counsel. The king promised. Pledging to give the British Empire a thorough overhauling, Grenville then proceeded (with Bute's secret counsel and more money grants from the King's Friends) to create dynamic situations that accelerated Britain and the colonies toward divorce.

Duties were increased on colonial imports, justified by the notion that the colonies should contribute their fair share to the increased expenses of running an Empire much expanded by the Treaty of Paris. Higher duties heightened smuggling activities, which in turn increased the admiralty caseload. Americans began sniffing tyranny in the breeze.

Grenville's new Sugar and Molasses Act enforced ruinous duties on foreign staples necessary for rum-making. The Act reduced imports of sugar and molasses from the French, Spanish, and Dutch West Indies, which in turn greatly reduced the meat, fish, flour, horses and lumber which the colonies could export to the islands. This caused a slump in colonial production. Large debts which colonists owed to their British creditors for furniture, clothing, ironware, pottery, jewelry, and many other articles, went unpaid. Merchants complained that Parliament was killing the goose that laid the golden egg. Parliament's strange response was to prohibit the colonies from issuing paper currency to supply their lack of gold and silver. George Grenville did, however, invite the fuming colonists to propose suggestions for how they would like to be taxed. When the colonists refused to dignify the invitation with a response, Parliament in March 1765 passed, without debate or opposition, an even more infuriating measure.

The Stamp Act required the purchasing and fixing of stamps to all colonial deeds, leases, bills of sale, pamphlets, newspapers, advertisements, mortgages, wills, and contracts. If duties on sugar and molasses could be considered part of the regulation of the Empire's trade, the Stamp Act was a tax levied by a body thousands of miles away for the sole purpose of raising a revenue. It affected all classes of colonist. Never before had Parliament dared to impose such a tax. Whereas the duty on foreign molasses or anti-smuggling measures were felt only by the great merchants in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, or Charleston, the Stamp Act affected a wider public. It added the price of a stamp to the lawyer's bill of every colonist selling a horse, making a will, or mortgaging a house. The price of every newspaper was increased by the stated value of the stamp attached to it.

In Massachusetts, "Britannus Americanus," one of Sam Adams' more than twenty pseudonyms, charged that it was as absurd for Parliament to tax the American people as it would be for an assembly of Americans to tax the people of England. In Virginia, Patrick Henry cried his slogan "NO TAXATION WITHOUT REPRESENTATION!" From the London Coffee House in Philadelphia, Charles Thomson led a secret club of workers, teachers, merchants and professionals in advocating the production and sales of local goods strengthened by an intercolonial agreement not to import goods from Britain.

A month before the first stamps arrived, Sam Adams agitated Massachusetts to hold a "Stamp Act Congress," which convened at New York in October. The Congress drew up a Declaration of Rights and Grievances protesting that the Act threatened "the liberties of the colonies." By the time the stamps arrived from England in November, the colonists had forced most of the stamp-distributors to resign. The merchants of Boston, New York, and Philadelphia agreed not to import English goods, causing a decline in trade with Great Britain of about twenty-five percent within a year. In an address before the House of Commons, Benjamin Franklin issued his famous warning that if troops should be sent to the colonies to enforce the Act, they "will not find a revolution there but might very well create one."

Grenville's ministry suddenly fell to William Pitt and Lord Rockingham, who repealed the Stamp Act in March. The colonies rejoiced and pledged loyalty to George III. They hardly noticed that the King's Friends had accompanied the repeal with a Declaratory Act claiming "full power and authority to bind the colonies and people of America, subjects of the Crown of Great Britain, in all cases whatsoever."

Regarding Patrick Henry's objections to unfair taxation as "so much nonsense," Charles Townshend, Chancellor of the Exchequer, vowed to get "plenty of revenue from the colonies." In the summer of 1767, he and the King's Friends passed acts laying duties on glass, painters' colors, red and white lead, paper, and tea shipped to America. But the acts produced little revenue. By Townshend's own estimate, made shortly before his premature death at forty-two, the British Treasury stood to gain no more than £40,000. The real, covert, purpose of the Acts appears to have been not to get "plenty of revenue," but to stimulate the rebellious investment of colonial capital in local manufacturing.

In March of 1770, a small crowd of jeering Bostonians pelted a few British redcoats with snowballs. The angry redcoats fired into the crowd, killing four men, wounding several more. The town and surrounding countryside reacted in rage to the Boston Massacre. Samuel Adams led his disciples to the mansion of acting Governor Thomas Hutchinson and demanded the immediate deportation of the redcoats, who wisely retreated to Castle William on the harbor. When news of the Massacre reached England, the King's Friends scolded Hutchinson's "cowardly surrender to Sam Adams's regiments." Thenceforth, each anniversary of the Boston Massacre became an occasion for Adams and others to make more blistering orations against British tyranny in favor of independence.

In 1770, Lord North, the new Prime Minister, declared the Townshend Acts were costing more to collect than the revenue was returning to the Treasury. North secured the repeal of all the Townshend duties, except a tax on tea of threepence a pound to prove Parliament had authority to tax the colonies. The colonists weren't affected by this miniscule tax, since most of their tea was smuggled in from Holland anyway. Feelings toward England turned amicable once again, as colonial merchants increased orders from British firms from £1,336,122 in 1769 to £4,200,000. Sam Adams, Patrick Henry, Charles Thomson and Thomas Jefferson took advantage of the lull to agitate. Observing the first anniversary of the Boston Massacre on March 5, 1771, Adams called for action and solidarity:

> It is high time for the people of this country explicitly to declare whether they will be Freemen or Slaves. Let it be the > topic of conversation in every social Club. Let every Town assemble. Let Associations & Combinations be everywhere set up to consult and recover our just Rights.[5]

Between 1770 and 1773, about the only troublesome confrontations were those between British revenue vessels and smugglers. The colonies began producing more. Trade was so brisk that merchants, formerly the chief opponents of British rule, had little to protest. They turned their full attention back to business.

And then Lorenzo Ricci nudged his weightiest boulders to date, the Religious Right, the Protestant churchgoers. How he did this is the subject of our next chapter.

JOHN CARROLL, BISHOP OF BALTIMORE AND FOUNDER OF GEORGETOWN UNIVERSITY.
(From the portrait by Gilbert Stuart)

Chapter 16

TWEAKING THE RELIGIOUS RIGHT

As THE FUROR over the Stamp Act was cooling down, the Jesuits of Maryland and Pennsylvania discovered that the director of Catholic operations in the British colonies, Bishop Richard Challoner, had asked Rome to ordain an American bishop.

The American Jesuits disliked the idea. Father Ferdinand Steinmayer (alias Farmer) of New York cautioned Bishop Challoner, "It is incredible how hateful to non-Catholics in all parts of America is the very name of bishop." Still, in Challoner's view, an American bishop would establish better order in the colonies, restore discipline, and make it possible for colonial Catholics to be confirmed. Steinmayer and his American brethren strenuously opposed the idea on grounds that it would only make life among Protestants more difficult for Catholics. They collected lay support for their views and asked Challoner himself to forward the protests to Rome, which he declined to do, leaving it to the Jesuits to state their own case.[1]

Rome never replied to Challoner's petition for an American bishop. The bishop later discovered that the petition, made in a letter to Cardinal Spinelli and entered into the post in 1764, never left England. In Bishop Challoner's words, "it was opened, and stopt on this side of the water."[2]

Whoever opened Challoner's letter must have passed its contents on to the Church of England. For no sooner had Challoner posted his letter than the Anglican Bishop of London, who had thus far been content to rule his American subjects from London, asked the British cabinet to permit the Church of England to create an American bishop to "attend the sheperdless flock in the colonies." When word of this request reached the colonies, which were mostly Protestant but less than fifteen percent Anglican,[3] the reaction must have elated Lorenzo Ricci. The sons and daughters of immigrants who had braved wild Indians and rattlesnakes to escape religious prelates took the Bishop's petition to be the worst act of tyranny yet, the most pressing cause for alarm, the number one thing to revolt against.

The American bishop scare was whipped up in the non-Anglican Protestant church pulpit – the era's most electrifying communications medium. Presbyterian and Congregationalist preachers, representing nearly fifty percent of the churched colonists, charged that an American bishop would be "an ecclesiastical Stamp Act" which would strip Americans of all their liberties, civil as well as religious, and "if submitted to will at length grind us to powder."[4] They warned that an American bishop would dominate the colonial governors and councils, strengthen the position of the colonial oligarchy, and drive dissenters from political life with a Test Act requiring officials to state their religious preference. Having brought the colonial governments under his control, the American bishop would then establish the Church of Rome in all the colonies and impose taxes for the support of its hierarchy. A letter in the New York Gazette or Weekly Post Boy for March 14, 1768 charged that an American bishop would "introduce a system of episcopal palaces, of pontifical revenues, of spiritual courts and all the pomp, grandeur, luxury, and regalia of an American Lambeth" – Lambeth Palace being the residence of the Archbishop of Canterbury, head of all England after the royal family. An American bishop would transform Americans into a people "compelled to fall upon their knees in the streets and adore the papal miter as the Apostolic Tyrant rides by in his gilded equipage."

Rev. Jonathan Mayhew, Dudleian Lecturer at Harvard, inveighed against "Popish Idolatry" in a famous (and arguably prophetic) sermon by that title, saying,

> Let the bishops get their foot in the stirrup, and their beast, the laity, will prance and flounce about to no purpose. Bishops will prove to be the Trojan horse by which Popery will subjugate North America.

The American bishop scare did more to foment the colonists to revolt, and eventually raised more soldiery, than all the tyrannical writs and tax schemes combined. Immediately, it created permanent Committees of Correspondence, an intercolonial organization of churches, and a "Society of Dissenters" based in New York. These organizations brought all opposed to the Church of England into correspondence with one another, whether in America, Great Britain, or Ireland.[5] The specter of an American bishop gave the colonial patriots an almost inexhaustible fund of propaganda to employ against any form of perceived tyranny at home and abroad. It served, in Jonathan Boucher's words, "to keep the public mind in a state of ferment and effervescence; to make the people jealous and suspicious of all measures not brought forward by [popularly-approved leaders]; and above all, to train and habituate the people to opposition."[6]

The fact that Americans were trained and habituated to oppose the British Crown and the Church of England not by Roman Catholics but by Protestant churchmen is, to my mind, proof of the Sun-Tzuan ingenuity of Lorenzo Ricci. Sun-Tzu said: "The General will know how to shape at will, not only the army he is commanding but also that of his enemies." While Ricci's own army was appearing in the world's opinion markets to be a band of vicious dolts slipping down into their well-deserved oblivion, a small elite corps of indispensibles, some neither knowing nor caring who their true boss was, were facilitating English-speaking Protestant churchgoers in systematically annihilating one another! Lorenzo Ricci's orchestration had reached such fullness that he could now soliloquize Iago's boast in Othello: "Now, whether he kill Cassio or Cassio him, or each do kill the other, every way makes my gain."

Back in the nineteen-sixties and seventies, Central American Jesuits designed posters to motivate campesinos to overthrow corrupt politicians. The posters for this Bellarminian liberation theology depicted an angry Jesus Christ in the image of Che Guevara, swathed in fatigues, draped in bullet-belts, holding a submachine gun at the ready, a Rambo Jesus, a Jesus whose Sacred Heart called for social action that included killing. The American bishop scare aroused the same dynamic in the 1770's. What was considered by many to be the most influential sermon on the subject was preached to Boston's Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company by Rev. Jonathan Mayhew's successor at Harvard, Rev. Simeon Howard. Simeon Howard received his early preaching experience in Nova Scotia – or Acadia, as the French settlers called it. He experienced first-hand the uprooting and expulsion, by British soldiers, of some three thousand French Catholic Acadians, along with their Jesuit priests. Cruelly, often violently, the Acadians were forced to emigrate to various American colonies, with no compensation for property or livestock. (Longfellow memorialized the event in Evangeline).

With a casuistry that would have delighted Cardinal Bellarmine, Rev. Howard's famous Artillery Company sermon openly advocated the use of violence against a political tyrant. Our duty to defend personal liberty and property, he argued, is stated in Scripture at Galatians 5:1 – "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free." True, Rev. Howard admitted, Christ requires us to "resist not evil – love your enemies, do good to them that hate you" (Matthew 5), and "recompense to no man evil for evil – avenge not yourselves" (Romans 12, 17, 19). But these precepts apply only to cases of "small injuries," Howard said, not large ones, such as tyranny.

Nor, said Rev. Howard, should we fully accept Christ's commandments on property. "Love not the world, nor the things that are in the world" (John 2:5), and "Lay not up for yourselves treasure on earth" (Matthew 6:19), and "Give to him that asketh thee, and from him that would borrow of thee, turn not thou away" (Matthew 5:42) – such precepts as these, Rev. Howard said, are "indefinite expressions" which "we have a right to limit."

Now, the defensive application of lethal force is reasonable, and noble, and patriotic. But it is not recommended by Jesus Christ. The Jesus of the Scriptures cautions that life by the sword means death by the sword. It is Rome, not Jesus, that commands the use of lethal force – Rome, whose natural-law society was built on the willingness of the individual to risk his own life in killing to preserve the Religious State. And it was Rome that Simeon Howard beseeched his audience to emulate: "Rome, who rose to be mistress of the world by an army composed of men of property and worth."

A decade after the American bishop scare had broken out, thousands of American Protestant and Catholic churchgoers began killing and being killed to win The War That Would Keep Anglican Bishops Out of America. And they won this war. But the utterly stupefying outcome of their victory was that no bishops were kept out of America: two bishops were brought into America, an Anglican and a Roman Catholic!

The Roman Catholic, of course, was John Carroll. This Jesuit son of Maryland was consecrated Bishop of Baltimore on August 15, 1790, in the chapel of Lulworth, a castle set high on the Dorset coast of England owned by the Welds, a prominent Roman Catholic family. Lulworth's upper "Red Room" looks to the east upon a commanding view of the estate's long entrance meadow and to the south upon a famous smugglers' cove in the distance. A frequent visitor to Lulworth Castle, and honored guest in its Red Room, I am told, was King George III.

Bishop Carroll became the Holy See's direct representative not just in Baltimore but throughout the U.S. This fact was validated in 1798 by Judge Addison, President of the Court of Common Pleas of the Fifth Circuit of Pennsylvania in the case of Fromm vs. Carroll. Fromm was a recalcitrant German Franciscan who wanted to establish his own German-speaking, laity-owned parish. Addison ruled that "the Bishop of Baltimore has sole episcopal authority over the Catholic Church of the United States, and without authority from him no Catholic priest can exercise any pastoral function over any congregation within the United States." Fromm was excommunicated and held up as an example of what happens to rebels against wholesome Church authority. Addison's use of the term "Catholic Church of the United States" is an interesting judicial notice that Carroll's ordination instituted, for all practical purposes, a secular church ruled by the black papacy. Eminent Catholic historian Thomas O'Gorman concurred in 1895, observing that American Catholicism was, "in its inception, wholly a Jesuit affair and [has] largely remained so."[7]

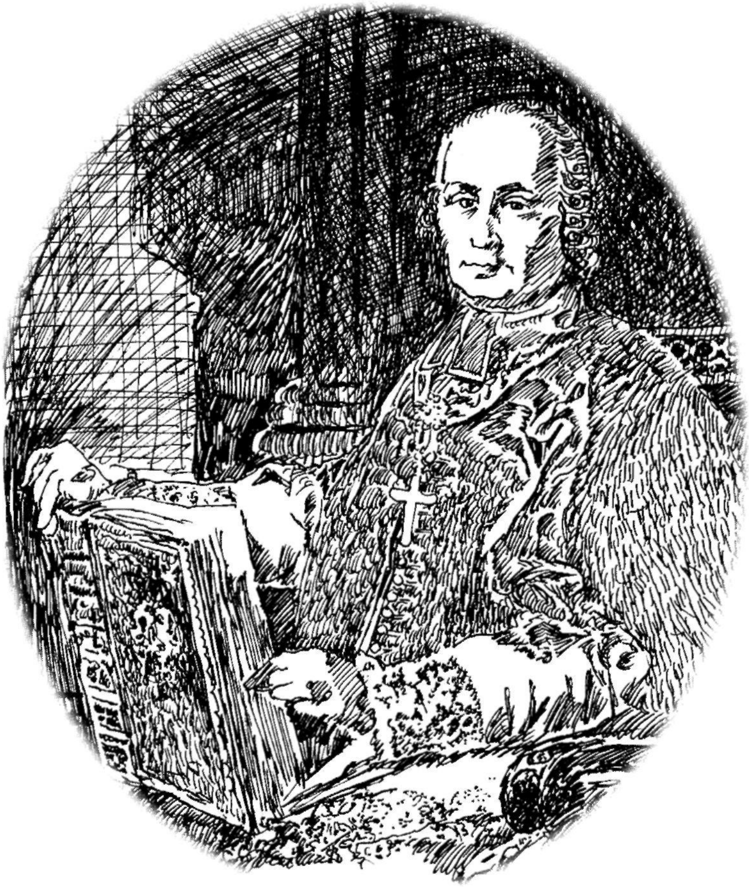
America's first Anglican bishop, ordained in 1784, was Rev. Samuel Seabury of Connecticut. Rev. Seabury was both a High Churchman and a Freemason.[8] To avoid the political repercussions of swearing allegiance to the Church of England so soon after 1776, Seabury was consecrated in November 1784 at Aberdeen, Scotland. Of critical importance to Rome was that the three bishops consecrating Seabury were all "nonjuring" bishops. "Nonjuring" described the class of Catholic bishops that stood in the succession of "Jacobite" clergy who, remaining loyal to King James II after his abdication in 1689, had refused to take a loyalty oath to James' successors – his daughter, Mary Stuart, and son-in-law, William of Orange, both Protestants.[9] America's first Protestant bishop, like his Roman Catholic counterpart, owed allegiance to Rome.

This obscure fact is commemorated in one of London's most heavily-trafficked and world-famous locations. The spacious grassy lawns on either side of the great stairway leading up to the National Portrait Gallery facing Trafalgar Square are identical except for their bronze statuary, one piece alone placed at the center of each lawn. On the north lawn stands James II, crowned with imperial laurel, wearing the armor of Julius Caesar. (An elderly British Jesuit with a passion for offbeat historical detail confided to me that James loved to go in Caesarean drag.) On the south lawn stands the celebrated Houdon figure of... George Washington, garbed in period attire, leaning for support upon a huge bundle of rods from which projects the head of an axe – the fasces, ancient emblem of Roman legal authority! When Bishop Seabury united his episcopate with the other two Anglican communions in America in 1789, the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States was born. George Washington was a member of this Church. The London statuary are explaining the little-known historical fact that James II's Roman Catholic rulership of the English-speaking people was resumed in the First President of the Constitutional United States of America. It is a tribute to the phenomenal generalate of Lorenzo Ricci.

John Carroll spent his final years in Europe helping to develop Lorenzo Ricci's vision of rebellion in America. He moved cautiously, and often incognito. What few traces he left behind are quite revealing.



ARCHBISHOP NIKOLAUS VON HONTHEIM (JUSTINIUS FEBRONIUS) (From a painting in Trier)

Chapter 17

A TIMELY GRAND TOUR

AMONG THE MANY British visitors to Rome during Clement XIV's sweetening toward England in the early 1770's was a young member of an ancient ruling family of Dorset and Somerset counties named Charles Philippe Stourton.[1] Charles Philippe was nephew to the Dukes of Norfolk. We remember the Norfolks, Thomas and Edward Howard, for their significant contributions to American independence – Thomas, originator of colonial Freemasonry; Edward, coupler of Lord Bute to the future George III.

Arriving in Rome with Charles Philippe was his professor at the Jesuit college in the medieval Flemish (now Belgian) city of Bruges, John Carroll. The pair were enjoying a Grand Tour of Europe which had begun in the summer of 1771.

From Bruges they had proceeded by carriage down through Alsace-Lorraine to Strasbourg, across the Rhine to Baden-Baden, then upstream to Carlsruhe, Bruschal, Heidelberg, Mannheim, Worms, and Mainz. From Mainz they made a curious detour over to Trier, back to Mannheim, through Swabia to Augsburg, then to Munich, Innsbruch, across the Italian border to Trent, along the Adige River to Roveredo, Verona, Mantua, Modena, and Bologna. They reached Rome in the autumn of 1772.

In Rome, Lorenzo Ricci appointed Carroll to the position of Prefect of the Sodality. This title designates, according to the New Catholic Encyclopedia, "a chief organizer of laymen for the promotion of some form of social action." For the promotion of what social action, I wonder, might Ricci have ordained Carroll to organize, if not the American Revolution?

While John was in Rome with Lorenzo Ricci, his cousin Charles Carroll, now in his mid-thirties, pulled off a clever media ruse in Maryland. It won him tremendous popularity and established him as an important civic leader. In January 1773, a letter in the Maryland Gazette attacked the administration of Maryland Governor Robert Edens. The letter was signed "First Citizen." In a subsequent Gazette, the attack was demolished by the eloquent arguments of a "Second Citizen." But in February, "First Citizen" demolished "Second Citizen." As the duel continued on into the summer, "First Citizen" was revealed to be Charles Carroll. Whereupon "Second Citizen" nastily slandered Carroll, putting him down as a "disfranchised Catholic." Suddenly now, Carroll was an underdog – just like his fellow Americans in relation to the British Crown. Although Charles was a super-rich lawyer-landowner educated at the best Jesuit colleges in Europe, the people lavished him with sympathy. They despised "Second Citizen" for his bigotry. Maryland and America now had a new hero, a preeminent champion of religious liberties, a Roman Catholic First Citizen advocating a new political order. Loathsome Second Citizen made the status quo seem distasteful and undesirable – which, of course, was his assignment in the ruse. Second Citizen turned out to be the acknowledged head of the American bar, a Mr. Dulany....

MEANWHILE, with the coming of spring, Carroll and Stourton left Rome for Florence, Genoa, Lyons, Paris, Liège, arriving back in Bruges just a few weeks before Ganganelli, Clement XIV, disestablished the Jesuits. Carroll kept a journal of their tour.[2] Partly a study-guide for Charles Philippe, partly a travelog, it's a "fragmentary and circumspect" document, as one historian gingerly put it. Here and there, one finds snatches of informal political opinion. Although Carroll's opinions are interesting, it's his circumspection that intrigues us most, it's what his journal doesn't say. Traveling with a student appears ordinary enough, but Charles Philippe Stourton was no ordinary collegian. He was a student of casuistry, equivocation, and Bellarminian liberation theology taught by professionals sworn to expand Roman Catholicism and extirpate Protestantism. He had been indoctrinated to obedience through the Spiritual Exercises, was a member of England's premier Catholic and Masonic family, and was about the age of Alexander Hamilton (who by then was already turning out anonymous revolutionary pamphlets at King's College in New York). Nor were Carroll and Stourton merely sight-seeing. They were up to something big. Carroll's journal alludes to meetings with high-ranking officials in church and state, but gives no specific names. Writing to an English Jesuit colleague, he confided "I keep a close incognito during this time."[3]

Despite Carroll's circumspection, his itinerary reveals certain clues. Consider that odd detour to Trier from the route between Mainz and Mannheim. Trier is more than two hundred kilometers out of the way, quite a long day's journey. What might warrant such a deviation? There appeared in 1763 a highly controversial book by an obviously pseudonymous person, "Justinius Febronius." The pseudonym belonged to Bishop Nikolaus von Hontheim, Chancellor of the University of Trier. In John Carroll's day, Trier University had been run by Jesuits for more than a century. The book, of which there is apparently no published English translation out of its original Latin, is entitled On the State of the Church and the Legitimate Power of the Roman Pontiff.

The gist of State of the Church suggests why Carroll had to visit

JUSTINI FEBRONII JCti
DE STATU ECCLESIÆ ET LEGITIMA POTESTATE
ROMANI PONTIFICIS
LIBER SINGULARIS, AD
REUNIENDOS DISSIDENTES
IN RELIGIONE CHRISTIANOS COMPOSITUS.

Justitia et Pax osculatæ sunt

BULLIONI
APUD GUILLIELMUM EVRARDI.
MDCCLXV.

BIBL. COLL. CAL. SCHOL.

Trier: "Febronianism," the philosophy of von Hontheim's book, contains the formula for administering Protestant America as a Bellarminian commonwealth! Febronianism calls for decentralizing the Roman Catholic Church into independent national churches modeled on the Church of England. Because they are ruled directly by kings and princes, these churches are more correctly called "States." The Pope may be successor to Peter, Prince of the Apostles, but under Febronianism he has no legal jurisdiction. He is merely a principle of unity, a spiritual unifier obligated to abide by the decrees of general councils under the leadership of bishops and their properly enlightened laymen.

Crucial to Febronianism's application is "thorough popular education." Once laymen, bishops, and councils are "properly enlightened" they will be empowered to resist any attempts of the papacy to exert monarchial control over the Church. Febronius emphasized that his system would succeed only in a milieu of popular enlightenment. His context presumes an enlightenment wherein the public is indoctrinated with the Jesuit ratio studiorum's full humanist diet, of course. It cannot operate where Scripture reigns supreme. Once the milieu's understanding, its mentality, has been shaped by the Superior General of the Society of Jesus, it will respond with unquestioning obedience to the will of the man whose fundamental duty is the expansion of Roman Catholicism and the extirpation of Protestantism. Thus will unfold a perfect secular political state within the Roman Catholic Church, an autocracy ruled by a monarch invisible to all but the few who, by the grace of God, cannot be deceived.[4]

Febronianism was the secret formula for returning the non-Catholic world to the bosom of the Church. To mask this fact, the Vatican dramatically condemned the book. The jesuited Clement XIII had banned it from colleges and universities. In a rather quaint example of academic "blown cover as cover," Bishop von Hontheim, whom few realized was Febronius, even banned it from his own classes at the University!

On the State of the Church is arguably Lorenzo Ricci's "American Manifesto," the social blueprint for how the General intended to realize Bellarminian liberation in a Protestant monarchy. The full title page of the first edition copy of the book says it all:

> On the State of the Church and the Legitimate Power of the Roman Pontiff: A Singular Book On the Properly-Ordered Reunification with Dissidents in the Christian Religion.

Here one beholds a description of the momentous social change that the American Revolution would indeed produce – neither monarchial overthrow, nor democracy, nor republicanism, but a "properly-ordered reunification with dissidents in the Christian religion," that is, the reunification of Roman Catholics with Protestants under a secularized religion whose values – long on humanism, short on Scripture – are taught through public schools following the Jesuit ratio studiorum. "Reunification" means that Protestantism has been reabsorbed into Rome. This, in the eyes of the black papacy, to the Sun-Tzuan mind, and to common sense, equals the practical extirpation of Protestantism.

ALTHOUGH Bishop von Hontheim lived in Trier, he was Archbishop of Mainz. His jurisdiction extended to the Mainz principality of Hesse-Hanover. Von Hontheim was thus the spiritual counterpart of the ruler of Hesse-Hanover, Frederick II (not to be confused with the King of Prussia, Frederick the Great, who was also a Frederick II.) Frederick II of Hesse was married to the aunt of the King of England, which made him George III's uncle. Born a Protestant, Frederick subscribed to the Rosicrucian style of Freemasonry. Although Jesuits converted him to Roman Catholicism, he nevertheless remained a Rosicrucian secretly active.

Frederick of Hesse was one of Europe's richest rulers. Much of his business was handled by his son, Prince William, also a Rosicrucian Freemason. William's specialty was facilitating war. He drafted able-bodied male Hessians, outfitted and trained them for battle, and then sold them to his English cousin George, who used them to fight alongside his own redcoats. Every time a Hessian was killed, William received a reparation in the form of extra compensation. As casualties mounted, so did his profits, which he loaned out at interest.

In September 1769, Prince William appointed Meyer Amschel Rothschild of nearby Frankfurt to transact some of his financial affairs in the capacity of Crown Agent. Aware that the Rothschilds are an important Jewish family, I looked them up in Encyclopedia Judaica and discovered that they bear the title "Guardians of the Vatican Treasury." The Vatican Treasury, of course, holds the imperial wealth of Rome. Imperial wealth grows in proportion to its victories in war – as the Jesuit empowerment Regimini militantis ecclesiae implies, the Church-at-War is more necessary than the Church-at-Peace. According to H. Russell Robinson's illustrated Armour of Imperial Rome, Caesarean soldiers protected themselves in battle with shields painted red. Since the soldiery is the State's most valuable resource (the Council of Trent admitted this in preferring the Jesuits to all other religious orders), it is easy to understand why the red shield was identified with the very life of the Church. Hence, the appropriateness of the name Rothschild, German for "red shield." The appointment of Rothschild gave the black papacy absolute financial privacy and secrecy. Who would ever search a family of orthodox Jews for the key to the wealth of the Roman Catholic Church? I believe this appointment explains why the House of Rothschild is famous for helping nations go to war. It is fascinating that, as Meyer Rothschild's sons grew into the family business, the firm took on the title Meyer Amschel Rothschild und Söhne, which gives us the notariqon MARS. Isn't Mars the Roman God of War, whose heavenly manifestation is "the red planet"? There is powerful cabalah here, and there's hardly an acre of inhabitable earth that hasn't been affected by it in some way.

It may never be known if John Carroll and Charles Philippe Stourton paid a call on the offices of Meyer Rothschild during their Grand Tour. Carroll was not permitted to keep a record, and the Rothschild name is synonymous with secrecy. But a call, keeping a "close incognito," at the House of Rothschild would not be inconsistent with outcome. The newly-designed Prefect of the Sodality, chief organizer of laymen for social action, would have a legitimate need to talk finances with the Church's most secret trustee. As things were developing, General Ricci needed an American financial crisis to provoke the colonists into resolving the utter necessity of war.

Carroll's journal reflects that he and Stourton did enter the Frankfurt-Mainz area, which is Rothschild country, in early spring 1772. If we suppose they talked financial crisis with the Rothschilds, the outcome of their talks actually did occur several months later. During July, in fact, the British banking system underwent a severe credit reduction. This consequently threw American merchants into an extreme financial distress that did not end until the Revolutionary War itself produced a business boom in 1776. Rothschild, with his access to Hesse-Hanover's vast wealth, and conceivably that of the Jesuits as well, had power to affect a credit reduction in British banking. And Rothschild's profiting from the Revolutionary War is well known. If, during the spring of 1772, the circumspect young Jesuit professor conveyed to the powerful young Jewish banker Lorenzo Ricci's need for a financial disturbance in England and America, didn't John Carroll admirably serve his Superior General, his Church, and his country? And didn't Rothschild do his client likewise?

Even as Carroll and Stourton were networking (according to my surmise) with Ricci and the bankers of war, Amiot's Sun-Tzu was published. Carroll's circumspection bars us ever from knowing whether he and Stourton came upon a copy and read it. Did Rothschild know the book? Even if they knew it well, the experience could not possibly have been for them the adventure in irony it is for us now. We open The Thirteen Articles and hear the gentle voice of the man in charge of the papacy's most important business, the man who decided everything, who was in the process of gaining advantage from dangerous and critical circumstances, whose intentions were unguessable, whose decisions were shaping both his own army and the armies of his English-speaking Protestant enemies, the man who through cleverness and ruse had already secured the obedience of his enemies in London and Boston and Paris and Philadelphia although they believed him and his army to be far away and slumped in rest from sustained losses, the man who would win the most important War in modern times without giving battle or drawing a sword, who uniquely knew the day, the hour, the moment of battle-less, sword-less combat. Lorenzo Ricci's voice whispers to us across the centuries between the lines in passages such as these:[5]

> A State's most important business is its army. It is the General who decides everything. If he is clever, he will gain an advantage from even the most dangerous & critical circumstances. He will know how to shape at will, not only the army he is commanding but also that of his enemies.
>
> Try to be victorious without giving battle. Without giving battle, without spilling a drop of blood, without even drawing a sword, the clever General succeeds in capturing cities. Without setting foot in a foreign Kingdom, he finds the means to conquer them. He acts in such a way that those who are inferior to him can never guess his intentions. He has them change location, even taking them to rather difficult places where they must work & suffer.
>
> Do not disdain the use of artifice. Begin by learning everything there is to know about your enemies. Know exactly what relationships they have, their reciprocal liaisons & interests. Do not spare large amounts of money. Have spies everywhere, be informed of everything.

Overlook nothing to corrupt what is best on the enemy's side: offers, presents, caresses, let nothing be omitted. Maintain secret liaisons with those amongst the enemy who are the most depraved. Use them for your own ends, along with other depraved individuals. Cross through their government, sowing dissension amongst their Chiefs. Ceaselessly give them false alarms & bad advice. Engage the Governors of their Provinces in your interests. That is approximately what you must do, if you wish to fool them by cleverness & ruse.

When a clever General goes into action, the enemy is already defeated. When he fights, he alone must do more than his entire army, not through the strength of his arm but through his prudence, his manner of commanding, & above all his ruses. The great secret of solving all problems consists of the art of knowing how to create division when necessary.

What is far must be brought near, advantage must be drawn even from losses, and slowness must be turned into diligence. You must be near when the enemy believes you to be far, have a real advantage when the enemy believes you have sustained some losses, be occupied by useful work when he believes you are slumped in rest, and use all sorts of diligence when he only perceives you to be moving slowly. Thus, by throwing him off track, you will lull him to sleep in order to attack him when he expects it the least & without him having the time to prepare for it.

As it is essential for you to be completely familiar with the place where you must fight, it is no less important for you to know the day, the hour, even the moment of combat. That is a calculation which you must not neglect.

You, therefore, who are at the head of an army must overlook nothing to render yourself worthy of the position you hold. Throw your gaze upon the measurements of quantities & the measurements of dimensions. Remember the rules of calculus. Consider the effects of balance. Examine what victory really is. Think about all of this deeply & you will have everything you need in order to never be defeated by your enemies.

They who possess the true art of governing troops well are > those who have known & who know how to make their power formidable, who have acquired unlimited authority, who are not brought low by any event no matter how vexing, who do nothing with precipitation, who conduct themselves as calmly when they are surprised as they do when their actions have been planned long in advance, and who always act in everything they do with that promptness which is in fact the fruit of cleverness combined with great experience.

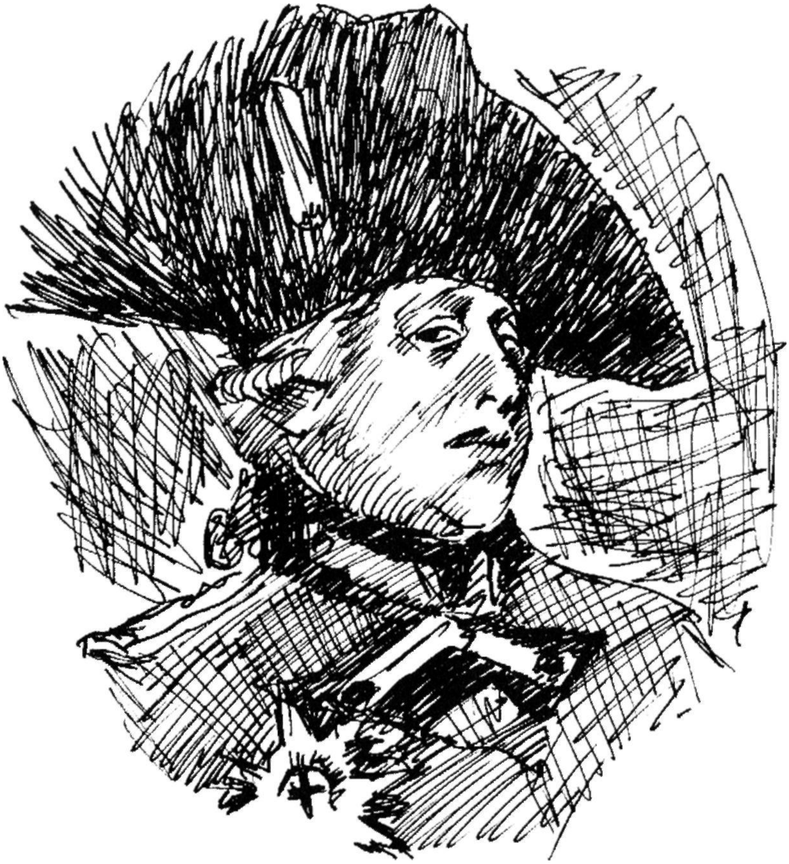
>
> The strength of this sort of warrior is like that of those great bows which can only be stretched with the help of some machine. Their authority has the effect of those terrible weapons which are shot from bows which are thus stretched. Everything succumbs to their blows, everything is laid low....
>
> If you do exactly as I have indicated, success will accompany all your steps. Everywhere you will be a conqueror, you will spare the lives of your soldiers, you will affirm your country in its former possessions and procure new ones, you will augment the splendor & glory of the State, and the Prince as well as his subjects will be indebted to you for the sweet tranquility in which they will henceforth live their lives. What objects can be more worthy of your attention & all your efforts?

CHARLES Philippe Stourton and John Carroll departed Rome for Flanders in March 1773. The journey took them four months. They passed through Florence, Genoa, Lyons, and Paris, arriving at Liège in early July. John returned Charles Philippe to his father, Lord Stourton, and proceeded alone to the Jesuit College at Bruges.

Meanwhile, in London, during the month of April, the British East India Company presented the King's Friends a scheme which, if measured by the way it would anger American merchants and point them inexorably toward rebellion, could only have sprung from the Sun-Tzuan intellect of Lorenzo Ricci – "I demand the art of making enemies move as one wishes." That scheme, a plan to glut New England with cheap tea, is the subject of our next chapter.



KING GEORGE III

Chapter 18

THE STIMULATING EFFECTS OF TEA

THE EAST INDIA COMPANY was a major subsidizer of the Jesuit mission to Beijing.[1] The Jesuits, in turn, interceded with oriental monarchs to secure lucrative commercial favors for the Company, including monopolies on tea, spices, saltpeter (for explosives), silks, and the world's opium trade. Indeed, according to Reid's Commerce and Conquest: The Story of the Honourable East India Company, the Company appears to owe its very existence to the Society of Jesus. How this came to be is worth a digression.

Briefly, in 1583, four young commercial travelers – Fitch, Newbery, Leeds, and Storey – set out from London with letters of introduction from Queen Elizabeth to the Emperor of China. Somewhere east of the Persian Gulf, they were arrested by the Portuguese for illegally crossing the "line of demarcation." Pope Alessandro VI (whose mistress, we recall, was Giulia Farnese, Paul Ill's beautiful sister) had drawn the line in 1493 from the North Pole through the Azores to the South Pole. All lands west of the line he granted to Spain and those east to Portugal.

The four violators were sent in chains to the Portuguese colony of Goa on the western coast of India. In Goa, they were rescued by a fellow countryman, Thomas Stevens. Stevens had influence. He was Rector of the University of Goa, and he was a Jesuit priest. Father Stevens arranged their release, but apparently not without certain conditions. Storey joined the Society of Jesus. Newbery and Leedes accepted posts in the Goan colonial government. Ralph Fitch proceeded on to China, evidently under an Ignatian oath, otherwise the Portuguese Viceroy would not have permitted him to carry on.

In 1591, Fitch returned to England and, like Marco Polo before him, tantalized adventurers with the lucrative possibilities of transporting to the western hemisphere all the oriental splendors he'd seen. Eight years later, on September 24, 1599, with a subscription of a little more than £30, Fitch and several others formed the East India Company.

And now, in 1773, the East India Company was governed by Freemasons, whose Grand Master since 1772 was the ninth Lord Petre (his mastery would continue until 1777). Related to the Stourtons, Norfolks, and Arundells, the Petre family (pronounced "Peter") was highly esteemed by the Society of Jesus. It was the Petres who, back in the sixteenth century, bankrolled the original Jesuit missions to England.

The East India Company's most powerful political attaché was Robert Petty, Lord Shelburne. We recall Shelburne as "The Jesuit of Berkeley Square" who worked in 1763 with Lord Bute to conclude the French and Indian Wars with the Treaty of Paris, which isolated England from European alliances and angered the Americans over the western lands. Acting on East India Company's behalf, Shelburne colluded with the King's Friends on a scheme designed to disturb the relative peace which had existed between American merchants and England since the repeal of the Townshend Acts in 1770. It went like this.

Stored in the Company's dockside British warehouses were seventeen million pounds of surplus tea. This tea could not be released for sale until a duty of one shilling per pound was paid to the Crown. If the King would exempt the Company from paying the shilling duty, the Company would sell the tea through special consignees to Americans at prices lower than the colonists were paying for either the dutied English tea or the smuggled Dutch tea. Everyone would win. The American tea-drinkers, still suffering from the depressive effects of the British banking crisis of July 1772, would win. East India Company would win. And with a windfall duty of not one but three shillings a pound, the Crown would win. The only loser would be the colonial tea merchants, who had been enjoying nice profits on both dutied and smuggled tea. The King's Friends directed Parliament to put the scheme into law, and on May 10, 1773, the "Tea Act" went into effect.

Predictably, the tea merchants reacted in fury. Over the next six months, they pressed the intercolonial network of dissident propagandists to help them mount a protest. What began as an injustice against tea merchants was amplified by the propagandists into a widely-felt injustice against the colonies generally....

THEN, on July 21, 1773, Ganganelli, Clement XIV, abolished the Jesuits "for all eternity." His brief of disestablishment is entitled Dominus ac Redemptor noster, which is usually translated "God and Our Redeemer." We should note that "redemptor" also means "revenue agent." Considering that the brief's real effect in the long term was a dramatic increase in papal revenues from a new Febronian America, perhaps "God and Our Revenue Agent" would be a more appropriate translation, if not the intended one.

Although Catholic history calls the Disestablishment "a supreme tragedy," John Carroll more accurately appraised it as the "secularisation" of the Society of Jesus. Thousands of Jesuits now rose to secular prominence throughout the western world, in the arts, sciences, and government. Raimondo Ximenes became a radical Freemason. Alessandro Zorzi from Venice joined the editors of the Italian Encyclopedia. Dr. Boscovich arrived in Paris where his scientific reputation secured him the post of Director of Optics of the French Navy. Esteban Arteaga became a music critic and published a book in Paris entitled The Revolution in the Italian Musical Theatre. We've already seen how Professor Joseph-Ignace Guillotin of the Bordeaux College became the physician who gave France the beheading machine named after him. Adam Weishaupt, dismissed from the Jesuit college at Ingolstadt, attracted the fiercer elements of European Rosicrucian Freemasonry into a new secret cult in Bavaria. His "Illuminati," whose cover was eventually blown in order to convince public opinion that evil secret societies were being diligently unmasked when in fact they were not – was another instance of "blown cover as cover." Countless other members of the greatest clandestine intelligence agency the world has ever known, now secularized with the jeering approval of its enemies, crossed the Atlantic to help guide Americans through the pains of becoming the first nation expressly designed to be a Febronian, Bellarminian democratic republican Church-State. What an amazing production, all the more impressive for the complete invisibility of its means!

We've seen how the Brief of Disestablishment was served upon Lorenzo Ricci in mid-August, and how the General was removed to the English College a few blocks away, where he remained for five weeks, until late September. Interestingly, the Dean of the English College at that time was a thirty-two-year-old Jesuit professor of controversial theology named John Mattingly. Mattingly was an American, said to be the lone American Jesuit in Rome. He was a native of Maryland, a graduate of St. Omer's, and a dear friend of John Carroll, who (as we know) had departed Rome five months before Ricci's arrest. Within fifteen years, Carroll would invite Mattingly to become the first president of Georgetown University, an offer Mattingly would decline.

What might Lorenzo Ricci be likely to discuss for five weeks (a) under a British roof, (b) in the custody of a young American Jesuit, (c) at a time when American merchants were incensed at being cheated out of their tea profits by a new law (d) sponsored by British Freemasons, (e) whose Grand Master happened to be Ricci's secret servant?

Might the General have been conferring with members of the British East India Company, one of the English College's major patrons? Might their discussions have involved to which American ports their tea might be most advantageously shipped, and when? Apparently so, for while Ricci was residing at the English College, Parliament authorized the East India Company to ship half a million pounds of tea to Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Charleston, consigned to a group of specially-chosen merchants.

Might Ricci have been formulating with Carroll's friend Mattingly plans for a demonstration intended to climax the agitations that had been fomented in the colonies since the beginning of his generalate, in 1758? Might he have suggested a spectacular event to occur in, say, Boston Harbor, symbolizing the colonists' frustrations with England? And might not Parliament respond to this event with vengeful measures designed to push the colonists over the brink of rebellion? Aren't five weeks sufficient time to script such a "Boston Tea Party," along with the harsh legal measures with which it might be punished? As well as how the colonists' violent reaction to the punishment might be coordinated? Outcome suggests that Ricci did more in his five weeks at the English College than languish in custody.

We have seen how the General was taken from the English College to Castel Sant'Angelo, with its secret tunnel to the papal apartments in the Vatican. For many months after his "imprisonment," Lorenzo Ricci was "questioned by the Inquisition," according to traditional Church history. But the Inquisition had been administered by Jesuits since 1542. Not surprisingly, the inquisitors pried absolutely no useful information out of Lorenzo Ricci....

IN October of 1773, Austrian officials with drawn bayonets descended upon the Jesuit College in Bruges – the officials were Austrian because Bruges was under the jurisdiction of the Austrian government. They arrested John Carroll and the rest of the college faculty and students. Stripped of his possessions and papers, Carroll was spared further humiliation by the timely intercession of his erstwhile traveling companion Charles Philippe Stourton's cousin, Henry Howard, Lord Arundell of Wiltshire. The Catholic nobleman escorted Carroll across the English Channel to Wiltshire's lushly rolling hills. On his family estate near Tisbury, Howard had been constructing a Palladian mansion, New Wardour Castle. One of Carroll's duties was to write his version of the closing of Bruges College in order to help Henry Howard and other English sponsors of the college win damages from the Austrian government. His principal chore, however, was to administer the Chapel occupying New Wardour Castle's west wing. In this way Carroll established a connection with Henry Howard's art agent in Rome, a Jesuit named Francis Thorpe.[2] Thorpe was a renowned intelligence-broker, a man whose knowledge of Rome, its happenings and resources, was legendary. His apartment was a favorite meeting place for visiting English nobility, and his favorite English nobleman was Henry Howard.[3] Howard had put Father Thorpe in charge of "every detail, every aspect of the Chapel's design." Father Thorpe and John Carroll needed no introduction to one another. From the editor's notes to Carroll's letters, we learn that Thorpe taught at St. Omer's during the years John was a student there. Moreover, he was Carroll's favorite instructor.

These remarkable facts suggest interesting probabilities. From Tisbury, in less than a day, Carroll could reach Benjamin Franklin's residence in London by stagecoach. Franklin, for his scientific achievements and enlightened egalitarianism, had long been the toast of Europe, a darling of Jesuit intellectuals. He was the exclusive colonial agent now, representing the commercial interests of all thirteen colonies before the Crown. Franklin knew more about America than anyone else living in England, and more about England than any other American. Francis Thorpe knew more about England than anyone else living in Rome, and more about Rome than any other Englishman.

And both men knew John Carroll well.

And there Carroll was, for the six months during which time the Tea Act erupted into the most explosive scandal of the revolutionary epoch, poised in Tisbury to facilitate information between these two personal friends of his, geniuses, institutions. But where is the evidence that anything bearing on the American Revolution transpired between Ricci and Thorpe and Carroll and Franklin and Howard and the entire Anglo-American Masonic system? We are left with nothing but clues and outcome, which nonetheless emphatically point to a fruitful collaboration.

During the night of December 16, 1773, a gang of Indians climbed aboard certain ships in Boston Harbor, ripped open three hundred forty-two of the East India Company's tea-chests and threw overboard their contents, valued at $90,000. Well, they looked like Indians, and witnesses thought they were Indians, but the big open secret was that they were Freemasons in disguise. Perhaps the most succinct statement on the subject appears in respected Masonic historian Arthur Edward Waite's New Encyclopedia of Freemasonry: "The Boston Tea Party was entirely Masonic, carried out by members of the St. John's Lodge during an adjourned meeting."

Parliament reacted to the Boston Tea Party in a way calculated to increase dozens of rolling boulders into a devastating landslide. Without seriously inquiring into who was responsible, and wholly disregarding the offer of more than a hundred Boston merchants to make restitution, Parliament rushed into law a mass of unreasonably punitive legislation – closing the port of Boston to trade, forbidding town meetings without the consent of the governor, denying the Massachusetts legislature the right to choose the governor's council, providing for the quartering of British and Hessian troops in the colony, and ordering that any officer or soldier of the Crown accused of an act of violence in the performance of his duty should be sent to another colony or to England for what would surely be a sweetheart trial.

To complete the overkill, Parliament passed the Quebec Act, which cut off the claims of Massachusetts, Connecticut, Virginia, and New York to their western lands, and placed these lands, to add insult to injury, under the French Catholic jurisdiction of Quebec.

So exaggeratedly out of proportion to the offense they were framed to punish, these notorious "Intolerable Acts" caused every class of American to sympathize with the Tea Partyers. Suddenly, independence was no longer a radical alternative. The Intolerables rendered independence the subject of sensible, serious conversation as never before.

Governor Hutchinson was recalled to England and was replaced by General Thomas Gage, who brought an army of four thousand men to quarter in Boston. Gage vowed severe discipline. The colonists vowed severe resistance. "The die is cast," George III wrote to Lord North. "The colonies must either triumph or submit."

JOHN Carroll left Wardour Castle in May 1774 and sailed for Maryland to reunite with his aged and widowed mother, the former Eleanor Darnall, whom he had not seen in twenty-five years. The history of Eleanor Darnall is the history of Maryland, which bears some reflection here.

In 1625, at about the time young Charles Stuart was inheriting the throne of England from his father, King James I, the Jesuits converted a high government official to Roman Catholicism. That official was Secretary of State George Calvert, the first Lord Baltimore. For the sake of appearances – it was deemed inappropriate for a Catholic to serve a Calvinist monarch – Baltimore resigned his post. Meanwhile, behind the scenes the Jesuits perfected an audacious marriage arrangement between Charles, now King Charles I, and a Roman Catholic princess, Henriette-Marie, sister of Louis XIII of France. The marriage purported to be good for Charles' economic interests. He went out of his way to accommodate the Jesuits. Although a Scottish Calvinist, Charles conducted his monarchy in many respects as though it were Roman Catholic. He systematically weakened England's foreign policy toward Catholic France, the country of his Queen. He promoted to the highest levels in the Church of England members of the High Church Party, clergymen sympathetic with Roman Catholic ritual and traditions. And he squandered England's resources in a pointless, Jesuit-engineered war with Spain.

Seven years into his marriage with Henriette-Marie, Charles found himself stuck between personal indebtedness to Ignatian creditors and a stingy Parliament. In hopes of generating tax revenues abroad, he carved a feudal barony out of northern Virginia and granted it to Lord Baltimore. But Baltimore died before developing the grant. The charter passed down to his son, Cecilius Calvert.

Calvert, the new Lord Baltimore, called persecuted emigrants desiring religious and tax freedom to participate in a voyage to a place bearing a name dear to Catholics "Maryland," after the Blessed Virgin. Baltimore did not neglect appealing to the irreligious niche as well. A number of his advertisements spoke of the limitless opportunities from settling in "Merrie Land."

On November 22, 1633, two ships, the Ark and the Dove, set sail from London. The passenger list included three Jesuits, sixteen to twenty Roman Catholic gentlemen, several hundred predominantly Protestant slaves and laborers, and Cecilius Calvert's brother Leonard. Leonard Calvert had been appointed Maryland's first governor. The voyage of the Ark and the Dove was spiritually directed by a Jesuit priest named Andrew White. Educated at both St. Omer's and Douai, a professor for twenty years in Portugal, Spain, and Flanders, Andrew White is remembered by the Church as "the Apostle to Maryland."

Choosing an Andrew for the task was good liturgical cabalah on the part of the Gesu. Andrew was the brother of the apostle Peter, the first Pope, the Rock upon whom Roman Catholicism claims to be established. Andrew is the Patron Saint of Scotland; King Charles I was a Scot. A personal representative of the king's brotherly attitude toward Rome could not be more eloquently identified than by the simple name "Andrew." Andrew White consecrated the Maryland voyage to two Catholic saints: the Virgin Mary, Protectress of the Jesuits, and Ignatius Loyola, only recently decreed Patron Saint of Maryland by Urban VIII, the second pupil of Jesuits to be elected Pope.

The ships were at sea nearly four months. Finally, one hundred twenty-three days from England, on March 25, 1634, the parties reached St. Clements Island in the mouth of the Potomac River.

It was an auspicious day. Not only was March 25 the first day of spring, but also it was the first day of the Julian calendar. (In 1752 the colonies would adopt the Gregorian calendar, which we follow today.) On March 25, Andrew White read the first Roman Mass ever held in any of the original thirteen colonies. Then he formally took possession of the land "for our Saviour and for our Sovereign Lord King of England."

Maryland historians trace the juridical origins of the Roman Catholic Church in the United States to a Patuxent Indian chieftain's wigwam, which Andrew White denoted in his diary "the first chapel of Maryland." White introduced Roman Catholicism to the Patuxents, Anacostics, and Piscataways on real estate that today comprises the District of Columbia. It's quite probable that the District of Columbia's executive mansion was termed "White House" less because of a color of exterior paint than out of reverence for the Apostle to Maryland. Every utterance of "White House" should fill the historically knowledgeable Jesuit with pride in his Society's achievements.

Conversions among the Indians ran high, but the Society enjoyed greater profits evangelizing Protestants. For every Protestant settler converted, the Jesuits won a land grant from Cecilius Calvert. Other lands Calvert retained and passed on to his descendants. Over the generations, Rock Creek Farm with its "Rome," on which the U.S. Capitol was erected, devolved to the Calvert heiress Eleanor Darnall and her husband, an Irish immigrant whose marriage and abilities had earned enough money to make him a prosperous merchant-planter. It was to this couple, and on this land, that the first American bishop was born in 1735.

Like his older brother Daniel, Jacky Carroll did his earliest schooling at Bohemia Manor, a secret Jesuit academy just down the road. Bohemia Manor had to be run secretly because of anti-Catholic laws resulting from the abdication of Catholic James II and the succession of Protestants William and Mary to the British throne in 1689. The Penal Period in Maryland, which would extend up to the American Revolution, served the black papacy well by inclining affluent Catholic families to send their sons across the Atlantic to take the Jesuit ratio studiorum at St. Omer's. Indeed, more Americans went to St. Omer's College in the eighteenth century than to Oxford and Cambridge combined.[4]

At the tender age of thirteen, Jacky sailed to Europe with his even younger cousin, Charles Carroll, for schooling at St. Omer's. Daniel returned home from there to help manage the family interests he stood to inherit. In 1753, Jacky entered the novitiate of the Jesuits at Watten in the Netherlands. Charles went on to study pre-law at Voltaire's alma mater, the Collège Louis-le-Grand in Paris. In 1758, Jacky returned to St. Omer's to teach, while Charles crossed the Channel to England, enrolling in London's premier school for barristers, the Inner Temple, founded in the fourteenth century by the Knights Templar.[5]

Jacky was ordained to the Jesuit priesthood in 1761. When he learned that St. Omer's was about to be seized by the French government in preparation for the royal edict suppressing the Jesuits in France, he with other teachers and their pupils moved to Bruges. In 1769, he renounced his Calvert inheritance, sloughed off his nickname, took the extreme Jesuit vow of papal obedience, and began teaching philosophy and theology at the English college in Liège. It was here that he befriended Charles Philippe Stourton, his Grand Tour companion.

JOHN Carroll's arrival at his mother's home in Maryland coincided with Paul Revere's ride to Philadelphia bearing letters from the Boston Committee of Correspondence seeking aid from Charles Thomson's group in protesting the closing of Boston Harbor. From his mother's estate at Rock Creek, Carroll dealt with the aftermath of the Tea Act by exercising his "secularised" priestly authority as Prefect of the Sodality. He integrated the Catholics of Maryland, Pennsylvania, and northern Virginia into the movement for independence.

Charles Thomson's Philadelphia committee sent Boston a letter of support. The committee additionally proposed a congress of deputies from the colonies to (a) consider measures to restore harmony with Great Britain and (b) prevent the dispute from advancing to "an undesirable end." Thomson then notified all the colonies south of Pennsylvania of his committee's action. He suggested the necessity of calling a general congress to consider the problem. Combined with a similar call from the Virginia House of Burgesses, his suggestion was approved throughout the colonies. Plans were laid for the First Continental Congress to meet at Philadelphia in September.

On June 1, 1774, the bill closing Boston Harbor went into effect. Thomson's radicals led Philadelphia in observing a day of mourning. Shops closed, churches held services, the people remained quietly in their homes. On June 8, Thomson and more than nine hundred freeholders petitioned Governor Richard Penn to convene the Pennsylvania Assembly so that it might consider sending delegates to an all-colony congress to explore ways of restoring harmony and peace to the British Empire. The Governor refused their request, which justified Thomson's taking action outside the established order.

Thomson called for a town meeting to be held on June 18. Nearly 8,000 Philadelphians attended. Boisterously, they resolved that the closing of Boston Harbor was tyrannical, and that a Continental Congress to secure the rights and liberties of the colonies must be convened in Philadelphia.

In July, the Pennsylvania Assembly yielded to Thomson's popular pressure and agreed to name a delegation to this First Continental Congress. Thomson, however, was not named.

Thanks to the publicity from his "First Citizen/Second Citizen" media production during the first half of 1773, Charles Carroll was named by the Annapolis Committee of Correspondence to be a delegate to the First Continental Congress. But he declined the nomination. He said that his usefulness might be restricted by anti-Catholic sentiment engendered by the Quebec Act (with which Parliament had avenged the Boston Tea Party by giving the western lands of Massachusetts, Connecticut, Virginia, and New York to Catholic Quebec). He attended the Congress, however, but as an "unofficial consultant" to the Marylanders. Charles Thomson accompanied the Pennsylvanians in the same capacity.

To prepare for the September 5th opening session, delegates began arriving in Philadelphia in late August. They congregated at a well-known radical meeting-place, the elegant mansion of Thomas Mifflin. Mifflin had studied classics under Charles Thomson at Benjamin Franklin's Academy (later to become University of Pennsylvania). They were close friends. As Mifflin's houseguest, Thomson was on hand round the clock to greet and confer with the arriving leaders, most of whom already knew him by name. John Adams' diary entry for August 30th speaks of "much conversation" he and his fellow delegates had with the learned Thomson. He called Thomson "the Sam Adams of Philadelphia," and "the life of the cause of liberty."

Thomson and the Carrolls – Charles, Daniel, and John – spent these critical preliminary days lobbying for the inevitability of war. Thomson was already heavily invested in New Jersey's Batso Furnace. Batso would furnish cannon balls, shot, kettles, spikes and nails to the army through the War Commissioner, who controlled all the executive duties of the military department. The War Commissioner was just the man Lorenzo Ricci needed for the job: Charles Carroll.

Thomson was elected Secretary of the First Continental Congress, an office he held under the title "Perpetual Secretary" until the United States Constitution was ratified in 1789. He led the delegates through an itemized statement of the American theory of rebellion that culminated in the critical Declaration and Resolves of October 14, 1774.

IT was while the First Continental Congress was deliberating America's future under British tyranny that Ganganelli, Pope Clement XIV, died his agonizing death (September 22, 1774). When the papacy is vacant, says New Catholic Encyclopedia, the administration and guardianship of the Holy See's temporal rights – that is, its business affairs – are routinely taken over by the Treasurer of the Apostolic Chamber. The Apostolic Treasurer on the day of Ganganelli's passing was Cardinal Giovanni Braschi. A fifty-seven-year-old aristocrat of impoverished parentage, Cardinal Braschi was a sterling product of the Jesuit colleges. The ratio studiorum had made of him a distinguished lawyer and diplomat. He had been Apostolic Treasurer when Rothschild began serving the Catholic principality of Hesse-Hanover in 1769. This interesting fact awakens the possibility that the Cardinal and Rothschild had been involved in Ricci's American project for years. But that is only conjecture. What is beyond conjecture, however, is that until a new pope could be elected, the whole fiscal wealth of the Roman Catholic Church belonged to Braschi and to no one else. Although lacking formal entitlement, Cardinal Braschi would rule as a kind of "virtual" Pontifex Maximus for one of the longest periods of papal vacancy on record.

Day after day after day, the conclave haggled over a single issue – What would the candidates do about the Jesuits? Should Ganganelli's brief of Disestablishment continue to be enforced or not?

Although Lorenzo Ricci was in detention at Castel Sant'Angelo, we know he could easily hop a tunnel carriage to the Vatican for covert meetings with the Virtual Pope. In a very real way, Braschi was a creation of Ricci's. Braschi had been made a Cardinal under the sponsorship of Ganganelli, whose own cardinalate was sponsored, as we recall, by Ricci. These two most powerful men on earth, Ricci and Braschi, had been secretly allied for years. And now the turn of events had made them invisible and inaudible. These last precious days in the final bursting-forth of Ricci's grand strategy afforded ideal conditions for Braschi and Ricci to determine face-to-face with the Rothschild emissaries, out of public sight and mind, how the Vatican's immense resources – money, men, supplies – would be deployed in the coming months and years. (In October 1774, for example, colonial agent Benjamin Franklin sent England's most enlightened copywriter, Tom Paine, to beef up the pamphleteers in Philadelphia.)

The days of papal vacancy wore on – thirty, fifty, sixty, seventy-five, a hundred days, a hundred and ten. Finally, after nearly five months of confusion, on February 15, 1775, the one hundred thirty-fourth day, it was announced that Rome had a new Pope. The new pope was a man acceptable to both sides of the Jesuit question. He had tacitly assured the anti-Jesuits that he would continue to enforce Disestablishment, yet the pro-Jesuits knew he would enforce it tenderly because of the great intellectual, political, and spiritual debts he owed the Society. The new pope was best qualified for the papacy because he'd been running the Holy See with Lorenzo Ricci for the past hundred thirty-four days – Giovanni Braschi! Braschi took the papal name Pius VI.

And now plummeted the great avalanche.

ON February 9, 1775 the British Parliament declared Massachusetts to be "in a state of rebellion."

On March 23, Patrick Henry delivered his famous "GIVE ME LIBERTY OR GIVE ME DEATH" oration.

On April 19, at a tense daybreak confrontation on Lexington Green between a group of angry colonists and some eight hundred redcoats, an unseen and unidentified shootist fired on the redcoats from behind a nearby meeting-house. This was the "shot heard 'round the world" – although Ralph Waldo Emerson coined that phrase in his Concord Hymn (1836) to describe a skirmish at Concord Bridge, seven miles away and a few hours later. The air on Lexington Green crackled with exploding gunpowder, and when the smoke cleared, eight colonists lay dead.[6]

As the redcoats returned to Boston, they were attacked by ever-increasing colonial militiamen. The Massachusetts Provincial Congress mobilized 13,600 colonial soldiers and placed Boston under a siege that lasted for almost a year.

To prevent the spread of the Boston carnage to the Quaker province, the Pennsylvania Assembly named Charles Thomson and twelve others to a committee to purchase explosives and munitions – the leading manufacturers of which happened to be Thomson and Charles Carroll.

On May 10, the Second Continental Congress convened in Philadelphia and named George Washington commander-in-chief of the Continental Army.

On June 22, Congress voted to issue a continental currency – two million dollars in unsecured bills of credit – to be used in paying the costs of war.

On July 3, George Washington formally assumed command of the Continental Army, about seventeen thousand men gathered in Cambridge, Massachusetts.

On July 5, Congress adopted its last humble plea for peace with England, the "Olive Branch Petition," written by Charles Thomson and John Dickinson. Governor Penn of Pennsylvania personally delivered the Petition to London, but the King's Friends prevented George III from seeing Penn or even acknowledging the Petition.

On July 6, Congress adopted the Declaration of the Causes and Necessities of Taking Up Arms, which fell short of asserting independence, but vowed a holy war of liberation from slavery.

On August 23, George III issued a proclamation declaring that all thirteen American colonies were in a state of open rebellion. Two months later, in October, British forces burned Falmouth, what is presently Portland, Maine.

The war was on. But from Lorenzo Ricci's vantage point, the war was won. There remained only opportunities now for his enemies, the British Crown and the American colonials, to engage in blood-letting hostilities that would eventually separate and exhaust them both. Divide et impera, divide and conquer. What to the British was "the War of American Rebellion," and to the Americans "the War for Independence," was to General Ricci "the War of Reunification with Protestant Dissidents." From it would rise the first Febronian government on earth, a constellation of secular churches called states led by an electorate of laymen properly enlightened by the ratio studiorum and united under the spiritual guidance of Pontifex Maximus, and paying tribute to Rome for the privilege. United ... States.

The real war over, there began now the unraveling, which was the historical war, the theatrical war. This would consist of a series of bloody battles mounted by Congress and Crown for the people's participation, observation, and commemoration. These events would produce Caesarean Rome's essential emotional cornerstone.

Like Virgil's Aeneid, epic national heroes would forge a fictitious national legacy. We must not forget Charles Thomson's candid assessment that the Revolution's leaders were largely deceptions, men of "supposed wisdom and valor" who were far inferior to "the qualities that have been ascribed to them."

And there is evidence – admittedly the faintest hint of evidence (as is so often the case with clandestine warriors) – that Lorenzo Ricci communed with these American heroes, and gave them instruction, on their own soil. This evidence is presented in our next chapter.

THE GENERALATE OF LORENZO RICCI — 1750-1775

A Brief Summary of Events

	EUROWORLD	ENGLAND	AMERICA
1758	LORENZO RICCI elected Black Pope, CLEMENT XIII elected Pope. JOHN CARROLL begins teaching at ST. OMER'S. POMBAL denounces Jesuits in PORTUGAL.	BENJ. FRANKLIN in LONDON seeking greater British presence in Pennsylvania. KING GEORGE II obliges by plunging England into the French & Indian Wars. CHAS. CARROLL graduates in civil law from Jesuit college in PARIS, arrives in London for more legal studies at the MIDDLE TEMPLE.	Colonies happy, seeking greater British presence, yet SAM ADAMS begins organizing against Great Britain. Gadsen in S.C., Harnett in N.C., Patrick Henry and Jefferson in Virginia, and Chas. Thomson in Phila. follow suit.
1759	Jesuits expelled from PORTUGAL, VOLTAIRE bashes Jesuits in two hit plays in Pans, GANGANELLI becomes cardinal, under RICCI'S sponsorship.	GEORGE II'S grandson, the PRINCE OF WALES, matures under the spiritual direction of LORD BUTE.	CHAS. THOMSON formalizes "YOUNG JUNTO," a secret club for young men interested in useful arts and sciences cloned from FRANKLIN'S "JUNTO," and akin to SAM ADAMS' "CAUCUS CLUB" in Boston.
1760	Jesuits under attack in SPAIN.	GEORGE III takes throne upon Grandfather's death, BUTE runs Parliament through "KING'S FRIENDS."	Happy to be English subjects, COLONISTS are peacefully "ruled by a little pen, ink, and paper-led by a thread."
1761	Jesuits condemned in SPAIN.	BUTE, virtual head of British government, chooses mate for GEORGE III, Queen CHARLOTTE of Mecklenburg.	WRITS OF ASSISTANCE imposed on colonists by KING'S FRIENDS. JOHN ADAMS considers this the "COMMENCEMENT OF THE CONTROVERSY."
1762	Jesuits condemned by FRENCH parlement. JOHN CARROLL transfers to BRUGES.		BENJ. FRANKLIN returns to install POSTAL SYSTEM connecting southern Virginia with eastern New England
1763	FEBRONIUS publishes STATE OF THE-'. CHURCH, calling for reunification of Protestants with Catholics in states under the papacy's spiritual direction.	ENGLAND wins FRENCH & INDIAN WARS, but under terms of the PEACE OF PARIS, negotiated by LORD BUTE, is cut off from any European alliances and made object of colonial resentment. BUTE forced to resign.	Colonists resent ENGLAND'S grant of lands to FRANCE under the PEACE OF PARIS. The secret clubs agitate against England.
1764	Pope CLEMENT XIII bans FEBRONIUS' book. LOUIS XV suppresses Jesuits by royal edict in FRANCE.	BUTE picks GRENVILLE new Prime Minister. GRENVILLE increases duties on colonial imports. CHAS. CARROLL leaves England for MARYLAND.	FRANKLIN returns to England to lobby for Pennsylvania's becoming a royal colony. Colonists resent GRENVILLE'S measures, smuggling increases, GRENVILLE brings ADMIRALTY COURTS inland
1765	CLEMENT XIII authorizes office of SACRED HEART, a Jesuit cult which holds believers responsible for reparations for the sins of the world, payable through prayers, penances, masses and SOCIAL ACTION.	GRENVILLE passes STAMP ACT. ANGLICAN CHURCH requests British cabinet to establish an AMERICAN BISHOP.	CHAS. CARROLL arrives in MARYLAND. The AMERICAN BISHOP SCARE "trains and habituates the colonists to opposition." PATRICK HENRY, furious at STAMP ACT, cries "No taxation without representation!" SAM ADAMS convenes STAMP ACT CONGRESS in NEW YORK.
1766	CLEMENT XIII appoints jesuited GIOV. BRASCHI Treasurer of the Apostolic Chamber.	GRENVILLE falls. STAMP ACT repealed, with rider that PARLIAMENT has "full power" to bind colonies, CHAS. TOWNSHEND takes over as Prime Minister.	Colonies exuberant over STAMP ACT repeal.
1767	KING CHARLES III expels Jesuits from SPAIN.	TOWNSHEND ACTS place high duties on goods received in America.	TOWNSHEND ACTS stimulate colonial productivity.

	EUROWORLD	ENGLAND	AMERICA
1768	Jesuits expelled from other Catholic countries.	First ENCYCLOPEDIA BRITTANICA published.	Productivity and self-support help raise comfort level of SEPARATION and INDEPENDENCE among colonists.
1768	Day before meeting with European powers to discuss DISSOLUTION OF JESUITS, Pope CLEMENT XIII dies suddenly. GANGANELLI elected CLEMENT XIV. ROTHSCHILD appointed guardian of Vatican treasury. JOHN CARROLL ordained a Jesuit.	TOWNSHEND ACTS costing more to enforce than revenue returns. BENJ. FRANKLIN now representing PENNSYLVANIA, GEORGIA, and NEW JERSEY in LONDON.	CHAS. THOMSON opens a rum distillery near PHILADELPHIA.
1770		FRANKLIN adds MASSACHUSETTS to list, making him chief spokesmen for American interests in England. TOWNSHEND ACTS repealed	REDCOATS fire into an angry Boston crowd. BOSTON MASSACRE becomes the symbol of British tyranny.
1771	JOHN CARROLL begins tour of Europe with CHARLES STOURTON.		On anniversary of BOSTON MASSACRE, SAM ADAMS calls for ACTION AND SOLIDARITY against England.
1772	RICCI causes AMIOT’S SUN-TZU to be published in PARIS, disclosing his strategy for bringing America under Rome’s dominion.
1773	After making GIOV. BRASCHI cardinal, CLEMENT XIV dissolves Jesuits on July 21. On August 17, LORENZO RICCI is taken to ENGLISH COLLEGE for meetings with JOHN MATTINGLY of MARYLAND, BRASCHI, and others, perhaps including EAST INDIA COMPANY. Sept. 22, RICCI taken to CASTEL SANT’ANGELO, as Tea Act product heads for Boston.	In May, PARLIAMENT passes the TEA ACT, proposed by EAST INDIA COMPANY. JOHN CARROLL arrives at WARDOUR CASTLE in Wiltshire, England, to serve as Chaplain to the ARUNDELLS.	CHAS. CARROLL runs his “FIRST CITIZEN” opinion shaper. CHAS. THOMSON’S group turns back Tea Act product meant for Philadelphia. DISGUISED FREEMASONS stage the BOSTON TEA PARTY, Dec. 16
1774	Pope CLEMENT XIV dies. Church gives appearance of serious disability. RICCI accesses VATICAN via tunnel from SANT’ANGELO for meetings with CARDINAL BRASCHI, who runs Holy See during long conclave to elect successor.	PARLIAMENT enacts the INTOLERABLE ACTS, ostensibly to punish the colonies for TEA PARTY offense, but meant to drive them to SEPARATION. GEORGE III writes LORD NORTH: “The die is cast; the colonies must either triumph or submit.” TOM PAINE boards ship for America with letter of introduction from BENJ. FRANKLIN. JOHN CARROLL also departs for America	Efforts of CHAS. THOMSON result in FIRST CONTINENTAL CONGRESS at Philadelphia in Sept., with THOMSON serving as “PERPETUAL SECRETARY” for the next fifteen years. CHAS. CARROLL attends first CONGRESS as “unofficial consultant” to Maryland delegation. THOS. MIFFLIN’S house scene of secret meetings between CARROLLS and patriot leaders. CHAS. CARROLL and CHAS. THOMSON manufacture explosives and weaponry.
1775	Long conclave (143 days) elects GIOV. BRASCHI pope, who takes name PIUS VI. LORENZO RICCI “dies” in CASTEL SANT’ANGELO Nov 24.	GEORGE III ignores “OLIVE BRANCH PETITION” offered by Congress.	On Apr. 19, REDCOATS fire on Americans in response to an unseen shootist at LEXINGTON GREEN, near Concord Bridge
1776	JOHN AND CHAS. CARROLL join Congressional MISSION TO CANADA and secure QUEBEC’S NEUTRALITY in the coming War		PAINE’S COMMON SENSE published. DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE resolved JULY 2, MDCCLXXVI.

THE NEW REPUBLIC'S FIRST FLAG: THE FLAG OF THE EAST INDIA COMPANY

Chapter 19

THE DEATH & RESURRECTION OF LORENZO RICCI

ON NOVEMBER 19, 1775 officials at Castel Sant'Angelo were presented the following deposition, given under oath and signed by Lorenzo Ricci: "The Society of Jesus that is dissolved offered no reason or pretext whatsoever for its dissolution."

This, Ricci's last official statement, is a masterpiece of mental reservation, for indeed the Society had not offered a pretext or reason for its dissolution, and indeed Lorenzo Ricci had not furnished a pretext or reason for his incarceration. The Jesuits had been dissolved and Ricci imprisoned for no offered reasons whatsoever; ergo, their dissolution for all eternity was null and void. Outcome would prove this fact: the Society of Jesus would be officially restored in 1814. Since the Disestablishment was a nullity from the beginning, it must follow that the Jesuits were still technically alive as the world's largest clandestine milice du Christ. Legally, thousands of Jesuits were still bound to their oath of obedience to the black papacy. They were free now to expand Roman Catholicism with perfect invisibility, end justifying means, dedicating their encyclopedic skills in the useful arts, law, religion, medicine, philosophy, the humanities, finance, commerce, communications, diplomacy, banking, finance, espionage, and intrigue – dedicating all to both sides of the self-extirpating Protestant belligerents. "Now, whether he kill Cassio or Cassio him, or each do kill the other, every way makes my gain!"

If the Society of Jesus could conquer though believed dead, could not its Superior General do the same? When Lorenzo Ricci "died" in his cell at Castel Sant'Angelo on November 24, 1775, what if his "death" was no more physical than the supposed disestablishment of his army? Lesser mystics than Ricci, who secretly commanded the Rosicrucians, were known to die and resurrect at the threshold of important endeavors:

> According to material available, the supreme council of the Fraternity of the Rose Croix [Rosicrucians] was composed of a certain number of individuals who had died what is known as the "philosophic death." When the time came for an initiate to enter upon his labors for the Order, he conveniently "died" under somewhat mysterious circumstances. In reality he changed his name and place of residence, and a box of rocks or a body secured for the purpose was buried in his stead. It is believed that this happened in the case of Sir Francis Bacon who, like all servants of the Mysteries, renounced all personal credit and permitted others to be considered as the authors of the documents which he wrote or inspired.[1]

Was it really Ricci's body lying in state at the cathedral of San Giovanni d'Fiorentini during the elaborate funeral mass that Pius VI arranged for him? Was it really Lorenzo Ricci who was entombed beneath the Church of the Gesu a week later, in the vault reserved for Generals of the Society? Or was it a wax effigy sculpted by artisans upon a corpse of Ricci's dimensions under the direction of John Carroll's collaborator, man-about-Rome and art agent extraordinaire Francis Thorpe?

Of course, Lorenzo Ricci would have covered his tracks in sublimely Sun-Tzuan fashion, so we can never be sure. But is it not consistent with his authority, resources, motives, and modus operandi, as well as the verifiable outcome of American Independence, that the General would feign death at precisely this opportunity and sail to America in order to conduct his orchestrations personally? Reflect on his counsel in The Thirteen Articles of Sun-Tzu, particularly –

> The great art of a General is to arrange for the enemy never to know the place where he will have to fight & to carefully withhold from him knowledge of which posts he must guard. If he manages that & can also hide the slightest of his movements, then he is not only a clever General, he is an extraordinary man, a prodigy. Without being seen, he sees. He hears without being heard.
>
> Go to places where the enemy would never suspect that you intended to go.... Do not think of gathering the fruits of your victory until his entire defeat has put you in a position where you can yourself reconnoitre surely, tranquilly & with leisure.

If the General did sail to America rather than lie in state, he would arrive not as a conquering hero but as a gentle, harmless, nameless, scholarly old man who spent most of his time reading. And during the course of his stay, inevitably, someone would observe his subtle power over great patriots and write about it. Just such a person was observed and written about.

DURING the fall of 1775, Congress authorized a committee made up of Benjamin Franklin, Thomas Lynch, Benjamin Harrison and George Washington to consider and recommend a design for the first united colonial flag. The so-called "Flag Committee" traveled to Cambridge, Massachusetts. There, according to the only known account of its proceedings, given in Robert Allen Campbell's book, Our Flag (Chicago, 1890), the Committee mysteriously shared its authority with a total stranger. This stranger was an elderly European transient known only as "the Professor."

He had arrived from parts unknown at summer's end. (The prisoner of Castel Sant'Angelo had not been publicly seen in two years – ample time to manage Braschi's election to the papacy, relax, pack important things, die the philosopher's death, and take a three-month voyage to Boston Harbor). Since his arrival, the Professor had occupied a guestroom in a private Cambridge home whose hostess, "one of his earnest and intelligent disciples," would remember him in her diary (cited in Campbell's book) as "a quiet and very interesting member of the family."

What the hostess records about the Professor matches remarkably what is known about the character of Lorenzo Ricci. For example, the Professor is perceived to be "more than three-score and ten" years of age; Lorenzo Ricci was seventy-two. The Professor spoke many languages fluently, displayed an encyclopedic knowledge of history, and was "seemingly at home upon any and every topic coming up in conversation." We might expect the very same of Lorenzo Ricci, a distinguished professor of literature, philosophy and theology at the Roman College and a well-established confidant of Europe's leading intellectuals, philosophes, and mystics. The Professor kept "locked away in a large, old fashioned, cubically shaped, iron bound, heavy, oaken chest, a number of very rare old books and ancient manuscripts," which he spent much of his time "deciphering, translating, or rewriting." We might expect as much of Lorenzo Ricci, the voracious scholar and publisher of oriental masterworks.

On the morning of December 13, 1775, the committeemen arrived in Cambridge for a midday feast. The Professor greeted them as we might expect Lorenzo Ricci would, "with an ease, grace and dignity [evidencing] his superior ability, experience and attainments, and ... with a courtly bow that left no room to doubt that he had habitually associated with those in acknowledged authority." When Benjamin Franklin was presented to him, the hostess watched the patriarchal Doctor lock hands with the patriarchal Professor, "and as fingers closed upon fingers, their eyes also met, and there was an instantaneous, a very apparent and a mutually gratified recognition." What had the woman witnessed? The Ultimate Summit? Unknown Superior revealing himself to America's Grandest Freemason?

The table talk soon focused on subjects that had occupied Lorenzo Ricci's attention since the beginning of his generalate. The hostess witnessed them discussing "the relation of the Colonies to each other and to the Mother Country." She saw them discuss "the related question of one's duty to the Colony, as related to his allegiance to Great Britain." She saw the Professor take "a noticeable, though not at all an obtrusive, part in the conversation, himself possessed of a wonderful fund of varied and accurate information concerning the Colonies, an understanding of their progress, condition and needs, and a familiarity with the principles and operations of British and European statesmanship." Wouldn't we expect as much from the Superior General of the world's best intelligence agency?

After lunch, General Washington and the committeemen held a "brief, undertone conversation." Then Dr. Franklin rose and stated: "As the chairman of this committee, speaking for my associates, with their consent, and with the approval of General Washington, I respectfully invite the Professor to meet with the Committee as one of its members; and we, each one, personally and urgently, request him to accept the responsibility, and to give us, and the American Colonies, the benefit of his counsel."

Taking the floor, the Professor accepted the responsibility. Then, startlingly, he proposed that his disciple, the hostess, be placed on the committee "because she is our hostess, because she is a woman, and above all, because she is a superior woman." (The committee considered this an innovation; yet the Jesuits had been employing female coadjutors for centuries.) The proposal was "immediately and unanimously adopted." Luncheon was adjourned. The committee would reconvene at seven in the evening, "in the guest chamber usually occupied by the Professor."

Franklin and the Professor spent the afternoon together walking about Cambridge. When they returned, the hostess noted that "both of them wore the relieved and confident look of earnest and determined men who had, in a satisfactory way, solved a perplexing problem, and of victors who had successfully mastered a difficult and dangerous situation."

At the evening session, Franklin turned the meeting over to "his new-found and abundantly honored friend." The subject was a flag. Addressing the committee as "Comrade Americans," the Professor explained that, since the colonies were still dependent upon Great Britain, "we are not expected to design or recommend a flag which will represent a new government or an independent nation," but instead one "that will testify our present loyalty as English Subjects," a flag that was "already in use," a flag that had been recognized by the British government for "half a century," a flag having a field of alternate horizontal red and white stripes with the Grand Union Flag of Great Britain in the upper left corner.

"I refer," he said, "to the flag of the East India Company."

To hide the fact that Americans would be fighting under the private flag of an international mercantile corporation controlled by Jesuits, the Professor provided a plausible cover whereby the flag could be "explained to the masses:"

> "The Union Flag of the Mother Country is retained as the union [upper left corner] of our new flag to announce that the Colonies are loyal to the just and legitimate sovereignty of the British Government. The thirteen stripes will at once be understood to represent the thirteen Colonies; their equal width will type the equal rank, rights and responsibilities of the Colonies. The union of the stripes in the field of our flag will announce the unity of interests and the cooperative union of efforts, which the Colonies recognize and put forth in their common cause. The white stripes will signify that we consider our demands just and reasonable; and that we will seek to secure our rights through peaceable, intelligent and statesmanlike means – if they prove at all possible; and the red stripes at the top and bottom of our flag will declare that first and last – and always – we have the determination, the enthusiasm, and the power to use force – whenever we deem force necessary. The alternation of the red and white stripes will suggest that our reasons for all demands will be intelligent and forcible, and that our force in securing our rights will be just and reasonable."

The Professor reminded the committee that "the masses of the people, and a large majority of the leaders of public opinion, desire a removal of grievances, and a rectification of wrongs, through a fuller recognition of their rights as British Subjects; and few of them desire and very few of them expect – at this time – any complete severance of their present political and dependent relations with the English Government." That severance would occur "before the sun in its next summer's strength" – indicating that the Professor foreknew, as Lorenzo Ricci would have foreknown, a July declaration of independence. At that time, the East India Company flag could be "easily modified" by replacing the Union Jack with stars against a blue background, "to make it announce and represent the new and independent nation."

Washington and Franklin lavished the Professor's idea with "especial approval and unstinted praise." The committee formally and unanimously adopted the East India Company's banner, known as "The Thirteen Stripes," as the "general flag and recognized standard of the Colonial Army and Navy." Just before midnight, they adjourned.

On January 2, 1776, at a formal ceremony attended by the Flag Committee, George Washington personally hoisted the East India Company flag "upon a towering and specially raised pine tree liberty pole," unfurling it to the breeze and displaying it for the first time "to his army, the citizens of the vicinity, and the British forces in Boston." The British officers at Charlestown Heights perceived the event > to mean that General Washington had thus announced his surrender to them. At once, they saluted "The Thirteen Stripes" with thirteen hearty cheers. They immediately followed this spontaneous outburst of British Enthusiasm with the grander and more dignified official salute of thirteen guns, the thirteen-gun salute being the highest compliment in gunpowder, the military "God speed you."

By so colorfully equivocating both his enemies, the Professor had made himself God of Confusion. The redcoats were toasting the good health of the rebels, who in turn were fighting for the East India Company. One of the few places in the world where such ludicrous phenomena are considered standard and routine is in the pages of Lorenzo Ricci's Thirteen Articles: "The General decides everything; he knows how to shape, at will, not only the army he is commanding but also that of his enemies."

LORENZO Ricci's post-mortem attendance in America is strongly suggested in yet another pivotal episode, the famous "mission to Canada." This strange exercise is normally regarded by historians as a colossal failure. It began on February 15, 1776, when the Second Continental Congress resolved to send Benjamin Franklin, Samuel Chase, and Charles Carroll to Montreal with full authority "to promote or form a union" with Canada against England.

Just before the committee left Philadelphia, John Adams proposed a curious last-minute resolution. On the record, he requested "that Charles Carroll prevail on Mr. John Carroll to accompany the committee to Canada, to assist them in such matters as they shall think useful." Congress adopted the resolution.

How might a priest have assisted the committee in promoting or forming a union with Canada? The answer lies in demographics. Canada then was largely Quebec, and Quebec, though ruled despotically by the British since 1763, was mostly Roman Catholic. A Jesuit priest, armed with the right Vatican paperwork or password, could exert powerful influence on Canadian foreign policy. The same priest, if accompanied by the combined head of the black papacy and international Freemasonry, could make that policy.

The mission arrived in Montreal only to learn that Bishop Briand of Quebec had ordered Pierre Floquet, the Jesuit superior in Montreal, to consider John Carroll persona non grata. Floquet, however, defied his bishop and invited Carroll to say a mass in his home anyway, for which Floquet was immediately suspended from his priestly functions. The incident colored the mission with disaster (although Floquet was restored, according to Walsh's Ameri- can Jesuits, after a simple apology). Disaster was verified when the committee returned to Philadelphia with no prospect for any union whatsoever with Canada. Congress lamented that America's first diplomatic legation had failed.

But America's first diplomatic legation was Sun-Tzuan and Jesuitic, and Jesuit diplomacy can be expected to conceal victory behind mishap. As the Thirteen Articles put it, "You must have a real advantage when the enemy believes you have sustained some losses." So we examine the Canadian mishap for a real advantage and discover something far more valuable than the originally-sought union. While Bishop Briand was outwardly demeaning John Carroll, the mission was obtaining from Canada a position of neutrality. This was a significant achievement, considering Canada's good relationship with Great Britain on the one hand and two centuries of hostilities toward New England on the other. For the colonists, Canadian neutrality removed the threat of a powerful northwestern enemy and cleared the way for a declaration of independence. At Montreal, as at Cambridge, I sense the presence of someone infinitely more commanding than mere committeemen appointed by Congress. I sense the presence of the "honorary" committeeman unlisted in any record – the Professor, the fugitive Vicar of Christ.

Returning from Canada, Benjamin Franklin fell ill. It was John Carroll who escorted him to Philadelphia. At Franklin's invitation, Carroll moved into his home. Franklin acknowledged the fact in a letter dated May 27, 1776, mentioning "Mr. Carroll's friendly assistance and tender care of me." These were critical weeks of countdown to the Declaration of Independence. I wonder who else might have been found under the Franklin roof? Perhaps the Professor, with his dynamic oaken chest?

Philadelphia was crawling just now with social activists from all over, the very people Lorenzo Ricci had appointed John Carroll, as Prefect of the Sodality, to organize. The home of America's pre-eminent Freemason, with Carroll and perhaps even Ricci in residence, would have become the main clearing-house for sub rosa congressional business.

ON July 3, 1776, John Adams took pen in hand and dashed off a letter to his wife Abigail. Adams was a writer of Mozartean facility, concentration, and confidence. Everything he ever wrote was first-draft and good. He never struck through words, never edited. His moving hand, having writ, just moved on. "Yesterday," he scribbled, > the greatest question was decided which ever was debated in America, and a greater, perhaps, never was nor will be decided among men. A resolution was passed without one dissenting colony, that these United Colonies are, and of right ought to have, full power to make war, conclude peace, establish commerce, and to do all other acts and things which other States may rightfully do. The second day of July 1776 will be the most memorable date in the history of America. I am apt to believe that it will be celebrated by succeeding generations as the great anniversary festival. It ought to be commemorated as the day of deliverance, by solemn acts of devotion to God Almighty. It ought to be solemnized with pomp and parade, with shows, games, sports, guns, bells, bonfires, and illuminations, from one end of this continent to the other, from this time forward, forevermore.

If the black papacy truly had orchestrated America's breakaway from England, we would expect to find the second day of July to be rich in cabalah and in Roman Catholic liturgical color. The Liturgical Calendar is a process, authorized nowhere in the Bible, through which faithful Catholics may plead with Almighty God for favors through the merits of ascended saints on special feast days. Supposedly, the prayerful performance of an act on a date the Church has consecrated to a saint endows the act with the mystique of the saint as well as the saint's intercessory prayers to God for success.

Maryland history, for example, is grounded in the Liturgical Calendar. We recall how the original settlers of Maryland, many of whom were Roman Catholics, set sail from England, under the spiritual direction of Jesuit father Andrew White, on November 22, 1633. November 22 is the Feast Day of St. Cecilia, a third century Roman martyr and traditional patroness of musicians. Did Cecilia's spirit bless the voyage with musicality to cheer up an otherwise oppressive boredom? The voyagers reached landfall the following year on March 25, Annunciation Day, feast of the angel Gabriel's announcement to the Virgin Mary that she is pregnant with the Son of God. Annunciation Day contains the joyful mystery of an angel's announcing the planting of the divine seed within a virgin matrix. Did the settlers imagine themselves planting the seed of a new social order in a strange wilderness, the whole enterprise blessed by God through the merits of the Virgin Mary's unique relationship to Him? Then, exactly one year later, on Annunciation Day 1634, Father White consecrated the colony of Maryland to the Virgin Mary.

The second day of July in the year 1776 was Visitation Day, commemorating the event recorded in the first chapter of Luke wherein the Virgin, pregnant with the Messiah, visits her cousin Elizabeth, who is pregnant with John the Baptist. (Nowadays Visitation Day is celebrated on May 31, but in the year 1776 it was celebrated on July second, as it had been celebrated, according to the New Catholic Encyclopedia's article entitled "Visitation of Mary," every year since the Council of Basel in 1441.)

No day in the Liturgical Calendar is more suited to Bellarminian liberation theology than Visitation Day. Ste. Margaret-Marie Alacoque, whose visions inspired the Jesuit social-action cult of Sacred Heart, was a member of the Visitandines, an order of nuns devoted to the Visitation. Visitation Day's scriptural basis is the Virgin Mary's ecstatic sermon to Elizabeth at Luke 1:46-55. This famous ejaculation, known as the Magnificat (the opening word in the Latin Vulgate's rendering of the passage, meaning "it magnifies"), literally defines the social action called for by Sacred Heart in Philadelphia on the second day of July, 1776:

> My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour. For he hath regarded the low estate of his handmaiden: for, behold, from henceforth all generations shall call me blessed. For he that is mighty hath done to me great things; and holy is his name. And his mercy is on them that fear > him from generation to generation. He hath shewed strength with his arm; he hath scattered the proud in the imagination of their hearts. He hath put down the mighty from their seats, and exalted them of low degree. He hath filled the hungry with good things; and the rich he hath sent empty away....

Scattered the proud, put down the mighty, exalted them of low degree, filled the hungry, emptied the rich.... This is the rhetoric of Christian redemption, yes, but in the context of Lorenzo Ricci's agenda it's the rhetoric of rebellion-to-tyranny, the very point of the Declaration of Independence, and it's spoken by the Virgin Mary, Patroness of the Society of Jesus, Patroness of Maryland, indeed, Patroness of Roman Catholic Conquest, on the day particular to her.

Even the year of Independence seems divinely validated by the perfect design of sixes and sevens contained within its expression in Roman numerals, MDCCLXXVI:

MDC = 1600 = (1+6) = 7
CLX = 160 = (1+6) = 7
XVI = 16 = (1+6) = 7

Particularly fascinating is the way the Latin equivalent of 1776 is structured upon 666 and 777. Swiss theologian E. W. Bullinger, in his scholarly guide to biblical arithmography, Number In Scripture, says that 6 in the Bible is always associated with humanity, 7 with divinity. The two numbers total 13, which Bullinger says is biblically associated with rebellion.

MDCCLXXVI, 1776, really does seem to be a unique convergence of time and human rebellion in the service of a divine ordination. This is eerily corroborated by John Adams' letter to Abigail on July third. He confides to his wife that independence should have been declared in December of 1775:

> Had a Declaration of Independency been made seven months ago, it would have been attended with many great and glorious effects. If I could write with freedom, I could easily convince you that it would, and explain it to you the manner how.

Adams never fully explained how the earlier declaration would have produced great and glorious effects. However, the numbers suggest it would have rather fizzled. Roman numerals for 1775 fall into the following groups:

MDC = 1600 = (1+6) = 7
CLX = 160 = (1+6) = 7
XV = 15 = (1 + 5) = 6

Plain to see, December 1775 fails as cabalah. It gives no indication of divine approval to rebellious humanity. This is why, I believe, Lorenzo Ricci held out for 1776.

Of course, a sufficiently gnostic Jesuit would see in MDCCLXXVI more than good numbers. He would see an encapsulation of the very origins of the Society of Jesus. MDC would give him milice du Christ ("Christian militia"), the official classification of the Knights Templar and the Society of Jesus. MDC also produces Medici, the family name of Pope Leo X, whose degeneracy provoked Martin Luther to create the Protestant movement, which in turn created the need for the Society. CLX specifies the Ignatian era, which historians have ever since called the "Century of Leo X." And the last three numerals name the Century of Leo X, the sixteenth century, XVI.

WHEN it came time to sign the Declaration of Independence, how could Lorenzo Ricci not be present? How could he who had labored more than seventeen years for this superbly Bellarminian ambiance not participate in the excitement?

There is a story, usually told in conjunction with the Professor and the Flag Committee, involving another mysterious stranger, one who suddenly appeared in the legislative chamber of the old State House in Philadelphia on the night of July fourth.

The moment was tense. Independence had been resolved, but the document lacked signatures. Some were having second thoughts about the risks. Masonic historian Manly P. Hall writes:

> It was a grave moment and not a few of those present feared that their lives would be the forfeit for their audacity. In the > midst of the debate a fierce voice rang out. The debaters stopped and turned to look upon the stranger. Who was this man who had suddenly appeared in their midst and transfixed them with his oratory? They had never seen him before, none knew when he had entered, but his tall form and pale face filled them with awe. His voice ringing with a holy zeal, the stranger stirred them to their very souls. His closing words rang through the building: "God has given America to be free!" As the stranger sank into a chair exhausted, a wild enthusiasm burst forth. Name after name was placed upon the parchment: the Declaration of Independence was signed. But where was the man who had precipitated the accomplishment of this immortal task – who had lifted for a moment the veil from the eyes of the assemblage and revealed to them a part at least of the great purpose for which the new nation was conceived? He had disappeared, nor was he ever seen again or his identity established.[2]

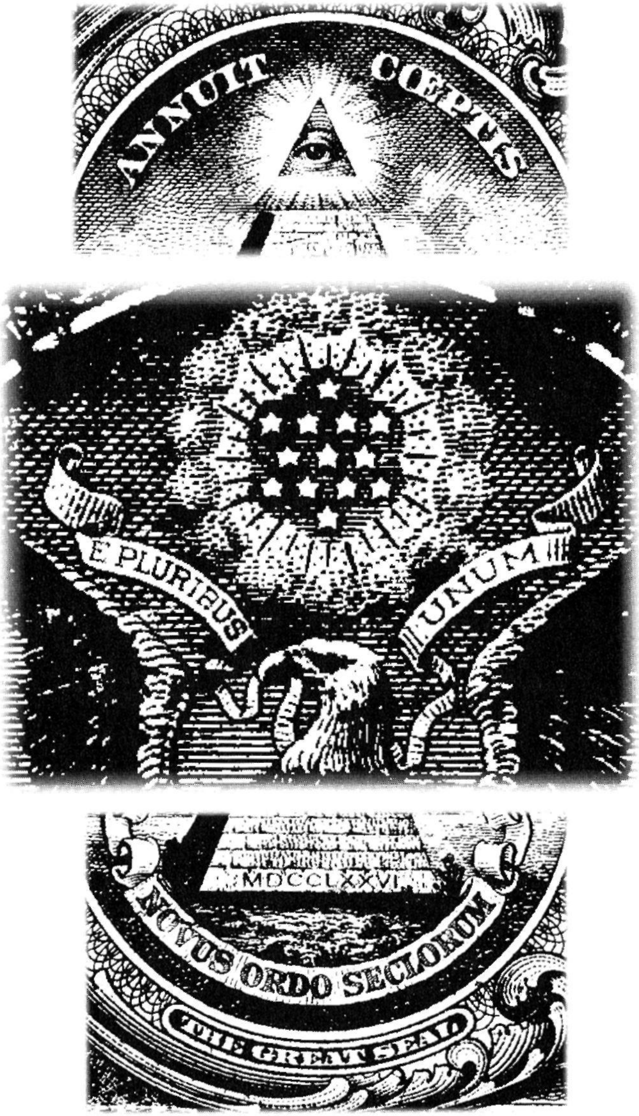
Be warned. This is only a story, unsupported by primary source material. John Adams, the most talkative of the framers, said not a word about it. But we know from Adams' own pen that some kind of gag order had been imposed upon the signers – "if I could write with freedom" he had told Abigail in that letter dated the third of July. Could Manly Hall have received the story through Freemasory's well-insulated oral tradition? Could the stranger whose voice rang "with a holy zeal" have been the Professor, Lorenzo Ricci? Could the "wild enthusiasm" with which the legislators signed the declaration have resulted not from Ricci's inspiring pep-talk but upon his disclosure of documents taken from the oaken chest, documents easy for the Vicar of Christ in his capacity as Freemasonry's Unknown Superior to obtain, guaranteeing that the international monetary network would indemnify the signers for their action? My mind, informed by an ever-increasing knowledge of how the greatest clandestine warriors fight, has no problem whatsoever believing this to be the case. It is exquisitely consistent with the formation of a Febronian union of thirteen Protestant colonies, ordained to be ruled from a federal city named "Rome," a city situated within the See of Baltimore, under the protection of the Patroness of the Society of Jesus.

One of the more intriguing clues that the United States of America was established under Regimini militantis ecclesiae is the new republic's Great Seal. As we shall see in the next chapter, the Seal is legal proof that America's true founding fathers were indeed priests of Rome.



ANNUIT COEPTIS
E PLURIBUS UNUM
MDCCLXXVI
NOVUS ORDO SECLORUM
THE GREAT SEAL

Chapter 20

AMERICAN GRAFFITI

THERE IS A UNIVERSAL legal tradition that requires acts of a governmental authority to be marked by a seal – otherwise the acts are not authentic. Typically, a seal discloses the character of the authority it represents by means of an image which can be, and usually is, amplified by some sentence, phrase, or word.

The first seal of the United States of America, designed to authenticate all governmental actions under the Declaration of Independence, was presented to Congress in August 1776. Created by an official committee consisting of Benjamin Franklin, John Adams, and Thomas Jefferson, the seal illustrates an event based on Exodus 14:19-27. It is a cameo of Moses leading the Israelites through the parted waters while a chariot-bound Pharaoh, wielding a sword and wearing the crown of tyranny, perishes in the maelstrom. Framing the picture are the words "REBELLION TO TYRANTS IS OBEDIENCE TO GOD."

REBELLION TO TYRANTS IS OBEDIENCE TO GOD.

THE MOSAIC SEAL
of August, 1776

When I first became aware of this seal many years ago, I thought it demonstrated how intensely biblical was the faith of the founding fathers. But once I began discerning the hidden makers of American nationalism, my thinking changed radically. I now see this seal, despite the biblical glow of the committee that designed it, as the profession of an intensely Roman Catholic faith. For there is a great disparity between biblical faith and Roman Catholic faith. Indeed, this disparity was the crux of the Protestantism which Pope Paul III commissioned the Society of Jesus to extirpate.

Biblical faith regards the Bible alone, sola scriptura, apart from any other source, to be a sufficient and infallible rule of life. In the Bible's own words: "All scripture is God-breathed, and is profitable for teaching, for counseling, for correction, and for training in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, completely outfitted to perform good works" (2 Timothy 3:16).

Roman Catholic faith, on the other hand, while agreeing that the Bible is God-breathed, considers scripture neither infallible nor sufficient in itself as a rule of life, unless so interpreted by the Magisterium (the teaching authority of the Church), and then so pronounced by the infallible pope.

At Paul III's Council of Trent (1545-63), which we have learned was closely supervised over its eighteen years of existence by the Jesuits, it was decreed that the Magisterium "receives and venerates, with a feeling of piety and reverence all the books of the Old and New Testaments, also the traditions [italics mine], whether they relate to faith or morals, as having been dictated either orally by Christ or by the Holy Ghost, and preserved in the Catholic Church in unbroken succession."[1] Over the centuries, Roman Catholic faith in Scripture, as modified by tradition, as pronounced by the Magisterium and pope, has bound millions of consciences to a thousand doctrines not found in scripture and either unknown or rejected by the apostles and early Christian fathers.[2]

The 1776 seal agrees with Roman Catholic teaching as much as it disagrees with the Bible. Whereas the caption "Rebellion to tyrants is obedience to God" is found nowhere in Scripture, it is the cornerstone of Bellarminian liberation theology. The Bible never condones rebellion, not even rebellion to those tyrants under whom God's own people, the Israelites, were obliged to suffer continuously. When Scripture mentions rebellion, it is almost always referring to the disobedience of the Israelites toward their God Yahweh. The seventeenth chapter of Proverbs teaches that "the evil man seeks rebellion," and 1 Samuel 15:23 admonishes that "rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft." The God of Scripture cannot be obeyed by evil-doing and witchcraft. He will not be honored in the breach. However, sacred tradition authorizes anything in the service of Rome – Cum finis est licitus, etiam media sunt licita, the end justifies the means.

Depicting rebellion as a salvational act, the 1776 seal further harmonizes with the Magisterium on how the sinful soul of man is saved from eternal punishment. The Magisterium concurs with the Bible that salvation is the free gift of God's grace, but adds the nonscriptutal teaching that salvation can be lost if good works are not performed through the "sacred channels" of Baptism, Confession, and the Mass. Scripture (Ephesians 2:8-10) says that Jesus Christ does not shate his saviorhood with anyone or anything ("You have been saved by grace through faith; and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God; not as a result of works, so that no one should boast"), yet the Magisterium says that Christ is no savior without the sinner's cooperation with the Church and its traditions.

In fact, Scripture's account of the Exodus shows the departure from Egypt not to be a rebellion at all. When called by Yahweh to represent Israel before Pharaoh, Moses pled himself incapable (Exodus 3:11), uninformed (3:13), unauthorized (4:1), ineloquent (4:10), unadapted (4:13), unproven (5:23), and uncredentialed (6:12) – hardly the audacious mindset of a great rebel leader. What Moses led was no rebellion but a sociological deliverance for which Yahweh alone claimed responsibility: "Come now, therefore, and I will send you to Pharaoh so that you can bring my people, the children of Israel, out of Egypt.... And I will stretch out my hand, and smite Egypt with all my wonders which I will do in the midst thereof: and after that he will let you go" (Exodus 3:10, 20). If Adams, Franklin, and Jefferson had wished the 1776 seal to express the true teaching of Scripture, they might have written "YAHWEH REMOVES TYRANTS FOR HIS FAITHFUL."

But even with a biblically correct motto the seal fails the biblical standard. For it is after all a seal, authority represented by a graven image. Although the use of seals and images is one of Roman Catholicism's proudest sacred traditions, Scripture prohibits it. The only Israelite shown to rule with a seal is king Ahab, who "did evil in the sight of the Lord above all that were before him" (1 Kings 16:30). Ahab's seal, apparently appropriated from ancient pagan tradition, was employed by his wife, the quintessentially wicked Jezebel, to commit fraud and murder (21:8-16). Scripture warns of an unlimited potential for evil inherent in graven-image seals. The apostles of Christ understood this principle well. They saw the pharisees demand Jesus show them a token of His authority, and what Jesus showed them was not an image but Scripture – the book of Jonah (Matthew 12:39). Paul the apostle had no seal except the people he'd evangelized: "for the seal of my apostleship are those of you in the Lord" (1 Corinthians 9:2). Indeed, the seal of the Body of Christ is represented in Scripture not by the miter and crossed keys of the Holy See, or the doves, flames, Bibles, bare crosses, and sunbursts of the Protestant denominations, but by Scripture alone: "The foundation of God stands sure, having this seal: THE LORD KNOWS HIS OWN; AND LET CHRIST'S FAITHFUL DEPART FROM INIQUITY" (2 Timothy 2:19).

The early Christian leaders, whose faith is historically regarded as the best-informed of any generation's, rigorously opposed the making of images or likenesses of any kind. Scripture had taught them well that Yahweh's people always suffered terrible calamity whenever they violated the commandment not to identify themselves or their God with "any graven images or any likeness of any thing" (Exodus 20:4). Edwyn Bevan's Holy Images: An Inquiry into Idolatry and Image Worship in Ancient Paganism and in Christianity cites three important early churchmen who forbade images. Clement of Alexandria taught that images were "not true," and were forbidden by Yahweh "in order that we might not direct our attention to sensible objects, but might proceed to the intelligential." Origen held that images "drag the soul down instead of directing the mind to a divine invisible reality." Tertullian instructed the servants of God to avoid every form of imagery, even secular art. Indeed, as Bevan points out, Christians of the first and second centuries placed visual artists in a class with harlots, drunkards, brothel-keepers, and actors.

But for thousands of years Mediterranean cultures had been receiving their religious and political information from myths narrated by visual art. Paulinus, Bishop of Nola, said of his congregations, "They are not devoid of religion, but not able to read." This was Paulinus' excuse for beseeching the Bishop of Rome to permit him to teach with graven images. Paulinus had forgotten, or perhaps had never learned, that the basis of the Gospel of Christ was above all literary – else why had its Author prohibited graphic likenesses? Knowing this, the apostles devoted a large part of the evangelical process to spreading literacy – "blessed is he who reads" (Revelation 1:3). Even so, the apostle Peter foresaw the time of Paulinus, Bishop of Nola, a time when "false teachers among you shall bring in damnable heresies denying the Lord" (2 Peter 2:1). What more damnable heresy could there be than depicting a God who condemns images... with an image? Could such a God even be depictable by an image? Wouldn't an image purporting to be Him have to be in reality, by sheer force of logic, the image of another God? The apostle Paul, aware of the compelling nature of images, and their definitive incapacity to teach Jesus and the Gospel, warned the Corinthians how easily a false teacher could lead them to "another Jesus, another gospel" (2 Corinthians 11:4). The time was very close, Paul knew, when Christians "will not endure sound doctrine, but will heap to themselves teachers who will switch them from truth to myths" (2 Timothy 4:3,4). And what are graven images but the very grammar of myths?

The switch began noticeably happening in the third century, when teachers like Paulinus of Nola began instructing from pictures (for which Paulinus was canonized by the Roman Catholic Church). With Constantine a century later, as we've seen, a powerful new "Christian" visual language developed. Old mythic icons were renamed to fit Bible stories, and an iconic Christianity was spread through pagan images processed by missionary adaptation. What the new converts were not taught is that Scripture categorically rejects such attempts to iconize its contents, and that therefore (again, by sheer force of logic) the likenesses upon whom they reverently gazed were no more than the gods and goddesses originally pictured, other gods of other gospels. Archaeology traces these gods and their gospels back to the very earliest Babylonian cathedrals. It was in these cathedrals, erected nearly four thousand years before the Christian era, that the Roman Catholic sacred iconographic tradition was born. We shall explore this subject in some detail in a forthcoming chapter.

CONGRESS refused to adopt the 1776 seal. We may never know why. There is no record of any debate, only the notation that the seal was ordered to lay "on the table." Five years later, in the summer of 1781, a fleet of twenty-five French war vessels arrived in Chesapeake Bay with more than twenty thousand soldiers accompanied by ninety Roman Catholic chaplains and God only knows how many secularized Jesuits. A month later, the British army surrendered to General Washington at Yorktown. The legend-spinning visible war was over at last.

In June 1782, Benjamin Franklin and John Adams were meeting in Paris to perfect a treaty with envoys of the newly-elected British Prime Minister – Robert Petty. We recall Petty, Lord Shelburne, the ubiquitous "Jesuit of Berkeley Square" who teamed with Lord Bute to conclude the French and Indian Wars in terms that had made the Revolution inevitable. Franklin and Adams found themselves approaching the negotiating table without a national seal. Nothing they might do on behalf of the United States could be valid without a seal. This was the exigency that moved Congress to adopt, on June 28, the seal designed by Charles Thomson and William Barton.

The Great Seal is "written" in cabalah, that style of allegorical communication composed of seemingly unrelated symbols, numerals, and phrases. A piece in Le Charivari No. 18 (Paris, 1973), discussing certain symbolic motifs used by the enlightened French artist Nicolas Poussin, explains the practical advantage of cabalistic works:

> A single word suffices to illumine connections which the multitude cannot grasp. Such works are available to everyone, but their significance addresses itself to an elite. Above and beyond the masses, sender and receiver understand each other.

Cabalah goes beyond mere secret communication. Supposedly, it thrusts the sender "into direct contact with the living powers and forces of the Universe, and through them with the eternal source of all manifestation," explains Henrietta Bernstein in her Cabalah Primer. "In other words, you make contact with God." To a cabalist gnostic illuminatus whose special knowledge has liberated him from the clutch of matter and is speeding him toward the pure light of godliness, cabalah is "the royal art, a closed body of knowledge sacred to the elect."

Since the Great Seal is written in the language of cabalah, it appears to be a veritable Gnostic Constitution. In terms well known to initiates and God Almighty, it sets forth the origin, nature, purpose, and plan of American government. Of course, as Charles Thomson and Manly Hall have intimated, the initiates will never disclose to outsiders the meaning of the Seal's elements. But God Almighty is not so aloof. He does not resist inquiries. Nor is He a respecter of persons. Contrary to the cabalist's boast of privileged access, Scripture promises more light to any mind that seeks it from God in person. Shining that light on commonly available histories of rulers and religions, anyone can trace the Seal's elements back to their ancient origins and in the end know as much as, if not more than, the gnostics.

On the front or obverse side of the Seal we find an eagle clutching an olive branch and thirteen arrows, with a banner in his beak inscribed with the motto "E PLURIBUS UNUM." The earliest images of sacred eagles have been found in that region of present-day Iraq once known as Babylon. The eagle was identified with the Babylonian sky-god Annu. When Annu entered sacred Roman iconography as Jupiter, the eagle was still his mascot. For the more than two thousand years since the death of Rome's first emperor, Julius Caesar, Jupiter's eagle has signified Rome's imperial power – "imperial" meaning the right of the Caesars to make laws and enforce them. In many a church, Roman Catholic and Protestant alike, the Bible from which lessons are publicly read rests on a hardwood lectern carved in the shape of a magnificent eagle. Yet in the pages of this very Bible, God forbids carved images of eagles. What, then, does the eagle signify, if not a power indifferent to Scripture?

The brilliant cloud hovering over the eagle's head in the Great Seal is the aegis. The aegis is a goatskin. (We have already examined how Scripture equates the goat with worldly power and separation from God.) When Jupiter was a baby he was nursed by a she-goat named Amaltheia. (The priestly artists often portrayed the adult Jupiter as a satyr, having a man's body with the horns, hair, and legs of a goat.) When Amaltheia died, Jupiter made the aegis out of her hide.

The aegis of the Great Seal glorifies thirteen five-pointed stars, or pentagrams. Each pentagram represents an original State. In gnostic symbology, the pentagram is identified with Jupiter's wife, Venus. There is a natural reason for this. A dedicated observer, from a fixed location over an eight-year period, will discern that the planet Venus travels a unique celestial pathway that exactly describes a pentagram. Carl Ljungman, in Dictionary of Symbols, has written:

> As the orbit of Venus is closer to the sun than the earth's position, she is never seen more than 48 degrees from the sun. During a period of 247 days, Venus is visible as the Evening star that is, within 48 degrees or less of the sun after the sun has set. Then Venus comes too close to the sun for us to see her. She > remains invisible for 14 days, then reappears as the Morning star (or Eastern star) immediately before the sun rises in the east. For 245 days we can see Venus each morning at dawn before she again disappears into the sun's light by getting too close to the sun. Venus is now invisible for 78 days. On the 79th evening, she appears again in the west immediately after the setting sun. Now she is the Evening star once more.

>
> If one knows the ecliptic [that is, the great circle of the celestial sphere that is the apparent path of the sun among the stars] and can pinpoint the present position of the planets in relation to the constellations of fixed stars in the zodiac, one can mark the exact place in the 360 degrees of the zodiac where the Morning star first appears shortly before sunrise after a period of invisibility. If we do this, wait for the Morning star to appear again 584 days later [the synodic orbital time of Venus] and mark its position in the zodiac, and then repeat this process until we have five positions of Venus as the Morning star, we will find that exactly eight years plus one day have passed. If we then draw a line from the first point marked to the second point marked, then to the third, and so on, we end up with a pentagram.
>
> Only Venus possesses the five-pointed star sign. Not one of the innumerable stars above us can recreate this by its own orbit.[3]

Charles Thomson, the Great Seal's co-designer, led a group of dedicated observers of Venus. The first coordinated scientific experiment of the American Philosophical Society, the club Thomson founded for politically radical young professionals, focused on Venus' celestial pathway. On the evening of June 3, 1769, with colleagues stationed at three sites in Pennsylvania and Delaware, Thomson and five others watched, from the Public Observatory on State House Square in Philadelphia, an eclipse caused by "the transit of Venus across the Sun."[4]

The goddess Venus, as we've seen, was absorbed by missionary adaptation into the Roman Catholic sacred tradition as the Virgin Mary. The adapters even ascribed to Mary the Venusian epithet "Queen of Heaven," a title never ascribed to Mary in the Bible.

"Queen of Heaven" in Scripture names only one personage, and that is Ishtar, the Babylonian Venus. Most faithful Catholics, historically insulated from Scripture by the Magisterium and the Inquisition, have not known this. Jeremiah 44 explains how the Israelites violated their covenant with Yahweh by praising the Queen of Heaven, and in turn lost their dignity, property, freedom, everything to the Babylonians. Scripture teaches, also, that the Babylonian interests have much to gain from inducing souls to praise the Queen of Heaven. And as we shall later see, their gain is divinely approved.

The term "Queen of Heaven" appears nowhere else in the Old and New Testaments but at Jeremiah 44, and there exactly five times. Did Jeremiah know that Venus' celestial trail delineated five points? And did the other thirty-five writers of the Bible's sixty-six books know as well? Did all these men, who wrote in different languages over a period of more than a thousand years, conspire not to mention "Queen of Heaven" in order to preserve Jeremiah's five mentions, so that the link between (a) the Queen of Heaven, (b) the five-pointed path of Venus, and (c) the curse resulting from praising her would stand as a divine lesson for the rest of eternity? Or did it just happen that way by accident? Or, as the Bible teaches, were Jeremiah and his co-authors inspired by the Author of all creation to say (and not say) things for reasons beyond their individual understanding?

THE Great Seal's eagle holds a banner in its beak inscribed "E PLURIBUS UNUM." This phrase, which appears on American coinage as well, is popularly understood to signify the melting of many people into one nation, "of many, one." Or to identify the coin as one of many identical coins. The gnostic understanding of this phrase, however, borders on the psychedelic. According to Manly Hall, e pluribus unum refers to the ancient Bacchic Rites, which he says was "a forerunner to Freemasonry." Mysterious and fantastic, the Bacchic Rites are built upon the following story line:

In a time before the creation of mankind, the twelve Titans cause Bacchus, Jupiter's beautiful son, to become fascinated by his own image in a mirror. Enthralled by himself, Bacchus is seized by the Titans. They kill him, tear him to pieces, boil the pieces in water, and afterwards roast and eat them. This grieves all his loved ones, hence his name, from bakhah, "to weep" or "lament." The strewn body parts of Bacchus become the four elements of matter.

One of Bacchus' sisters, the virgin Minerva, rescues his sacred heart from the four elements and places it before Jupiter in Heaven. From Heaven, Jupiter hurls thunderbolts at his son's murderers and reduces the Titans to ashes. The rains further reduce the ashes, mingling with the four elements, to slime. From this evil slime Jupiter forms mankind, a "Titanic embodiment" from which the "Bacchic idea," or rational soul, must be released. The Bacchic idea is released by evil slime's sexual energy, especially when facilitated by alcoholic drink – hence Bacchus is associated with grapevines, wild dancing, phallic symbols, and fornication.

When death and sex have rescued the rational soul from the four slimy corners of the earth, a transfigured, eternal Bacchus is resurrected as the flaming Sun. He is E PLURIBUS UNUM, One from Many, a resurrection symbolized by the pentagram, the one rising out of the four to make five. This, says Manly Hall, is "the magical formula of man," > the human soul rising from the bondage of the animal nature. The pentagram is the true light, the Star of the Morning, marking the location of five mysterious centers of force, the awakening of which is the supreme secret of white magic.

With "E PLURIBUS UNUM" flowing from his beak, Jupiter's eagle preaches the Bacchic Gospel. It is a gospel of salvation that antedates that of Jesus Christ by many, many centuries. The Bacchic Gospel was preached and played out in the pagan cults. A Holy Virgin would ritually rescue the Son of God's Sacred Heart from the slime of humanity imprisoning the Son's soul. Each cult initiate – a fractional part of the Son's soul – supposedly gained increasing amounts of knowledge from mind-altering substances and sexual ecstasy administered for money, of course, by the temple priests and priestesses. The initiate looked forward to being released from his slimy humanity by ever-increasing knowledge. He yearned to be reunited ultimately with the Sacred Heart in Heaven, resurrected and transfigured for all eternity.

This salvational plan, or some variation of it, can be found at the core of all the secret or mystery religions – cults of empire. It persists from the earliest Babylonian prototype right on down through the Great Seal. It has succeeded not because it calls for repentance from sin, but because it makes sin an asset in a process of self-deification. The Bacchic Gospel serves an economy of sin management, in which sins are forgiven upon the payment of money or performance of some act of contrition valuable to society. It is about people control. Because it prospers on the addictive nature of fornication and mind-altering substances, it naturally facilitates sex and booze and drugs and all their destructive fallout in order to have a context in which to make itself useful. Unlike the Christian Gospel, which conditions forgiveness of sins upon repentance – "and if he repents, forgive him" (Luke 17:3) – the Bacchic Gospel forgives upon the tendering of appropriate sacrifices to the priest of the appropriate deity. The congeniality of this gospel to secular government and Roman Catholicism speaks for itself.

THE reverse side of the Great Seal contains four elements. First, the motto "ANNUIT COEPTIS;" second, a thirteen-coursed topless pyramid with MDCCLXXVI engraved in the foundation; third, a disembodied eye forming the pyramid's capstone, and fourth, the motto "NOVUS ORDO SECLORUM." These elements define exactly the "divine providence" upon whose protection the signers of the Declaration of Independence firmly relied.

The land of the Pyramid, Egypt, is where Caesarean Rome was inaugurated. By "Caesarean" I mean the empire whose head commands not only affairs of state but those of religion as well. Caesarean Rome officially began in Alexandria, Egypt, at the temple of Jupiter, on the winter solstice – December 25 – in the year 48 BC, when a fifty-two-year-old priest of Jupiter was declared to be Jupiter's incarnation, thus "Son of God." His name was Caius of the family of Marius, Caius Maria. After deification, and occasionally before, Caius Maria was referred to as "Caesar," a cabalism formed by the letter "C" (for Caius) attached to "Aesar," the Etruscan word for "God." The God Caius. (Suetonius, the first-century biographer of the Caesars, suggests that the title was formed from prefixing Aesar with the numeral "C," meaning "hundred." God of the Hundred, or Hundreds.)

According to Scottish theologian Alexander Hislop, Caesar consented to deification in order to inherit the huge kingdom of Pergamum.[5] Consisting of most of Asia Minor (present-day Turkey), Pergamum was bequeathed to the Roman people in 133 BC by its king, Attalus III. But there was a catch: the people of Rome had to regard their leader as God.

The Pergamenian kings had begun ruling as God when the title of Pontifex Maximus fled the fall of Babylon in 539 BC. In that eventful year, Persian invaders assassinated the Babylonian king Belshazzar. Just moments prior, Belshazzar had seen his assassination prophesied by the famous handwriting on the wall: "Mene Mene Tekel Upharsin," ("the Numberer is numbered").[6] Ruling as God by divine appointment, Belshazzar had profaned the sacred vessels of the Israelite temple. This was the unpardonable sin of blasphemy, for which God sent the Persians to destroy him.

Belshazzar's priests were evidently spared. Rather than submit to the Persian conquerors, they furtively gathered together all their portable treasures, entitlements, codes, inscriptions, astrology, sacred formulae, and insignia and fled with them northwesterly to Pergamum. Since the rulers of Pergamum were already practicing Babylonian religion, they were honored to receive the fugitive Babylonian College and their great endowment.

Pergamum, the new residence of Pontifex Maximus, became a showplace for despotism. The neighboring Greeks reflected its sudden transformation with the myth of Midas, the king whose touch turned everything to gold. Babylonian rule graced Pergamum with the world's greatest medical complex, the Asklepion, dedicated to the god of pharmacological healing, Asklepios. Pergamum became the most important humanist learning center, its library housing more than two hundred thousand scrolls. (Marc Antony would later move these assets to Alexandria as a gift to Cleopatra. Many of them eventually found their way from Alexandria to the Medici Library in Florence.)

When Attalus III died in 133 BC, he bequeathed all his kingdom's Babylonian grandeur to the Romans. But no Roman emperor was deemed fit to receive it because the Roman constitution had never suffered a man to be deified. The bequest lay unclaimed until 48 BC, when Caius Maria Caesar was declared God Almighty in the Serapion, Alexandria's temple of Jupiter.

Deification entitled Caesar now to assume the title Pontifex Maximus. To indicate his infinitely holier status, he took the name "Julius."[7] The name was a claim of descent from Julius Ascanius, the legendary son of legendary Aeneas, Virgil's maritime hero who sailed westward with a band of his Trojan fellow-countrymen fleeing the sack of Troy by Greek marauders. Assisted by the whole heavenly network of mythic deities, Aeneas led his followers to sacrifice their individuality for a glorious collective existence that would one day be called "Rome."

Aeneas was considered the offspring of a union between a human being, Anchises, and Jupiter's wife Venus. (When Anchises boasted of his intercourse with the goddess, Jupiter struck him blind with a thunderbolt. The Aeneid opens with Aeneas carrying blind old Anchises out of Troy on his shoulders.) By taking the name of Aeneas' son Julius and claiming descent from him as well, Caesar was able to trace his lineage back to the Queen of Heaven. The divine lineage supposedly flowed through his mother, Maia, who was purported to have conceived him without losing her virginity. Maia also claimed to have remained a virgin even in childbirth by having her son delivered from the side in a surgical operation that still bears Caesar's name.

All of this "fable and endless genealogy," which Paul taught the church not to heed, is foundational to American secular government. For it is Julius Ascanius, grandson of Venus and claimed ancestor of the original Caesar, who inspired "ANNUIT COEPTIS," the upper motto on the flip side of the Great Seal of the United States. The phrase, which the U.S. Department of State interprets to mean "God hath favored this undertaking," was spoken by young Julius Ascanius in the Ninth Book of Virgil's Aeneid.

The scene is a battleground. The Trojans are outnumbered and fearful. Young Julius Ascanius takes a position in front of his shrinking countrymen. He looks up at an evil giant named Remulus, King of the Rutulus. Remulus mocks the Trojans for sending a boy to fight him. While the giant quakes with derisive laughter, Julius slips an arrow onto his bowstring and cries toward the heavens:

> Almighty Jupiter, favor this rebellious undertaking (AUDACIBUS ADNUE COEPTIS)! Each year, I shall bring to thy temple gifts in my own hands, and place a white bullock at thy altar!

Jupiter then hisses an arrow from the sky that strikes Remulus in the head with such force that it passes clean through his temples. The Trojans "raise a cheer and laugh aloud; their hearts rise toward the stars." Apollo, from his throne of cloud, shouts the gnostic credo: "By striving so, men reach the stars, dear son of gods and sire of gods to come!"

A thrilling story. And one that leaves no doubt as to the identity of the god who favored the undertaking of the United States. It was a pagan deity, the god of Julius Ascanius, and not the God of the Bible. Surely, if Congress had wanted to show that the new nation was underwritten by Yahweh, God of the Bible, it could have referred to the boy-downs-giant story told in the Old Testament. Who doesn't know David and Goliath? Charles Thomson's biblical scholarship could easily have produced a motto based on I Samuel 17:47, where David says to Goliath:

> "The Lord saves not with sword and spear: for the battle is the Lord's, and He will give you into our hands!"

Reduced to an original-language motto at least as comprehensible as "ANNUIT COEPTIS," the passage might have appeared in the Seal as the Hebrew or even in translation, "THE BATTLE IS THE LORD'S."

והוה מלהמה

But establishing a national government directly on biblical scripture was not the intent, I believe, of the founding fathers. Far more useful to them, and acceptable to the souls they knew would be populating America in good time, were the fabulous vanities of Roman religion. These souls required the sacred icons of burgeoning humanity and uninhibited sexual energy, legends that inspired hotblooded heroism and patriotism. Consent to images of this character presumed obedience to the omnipotent intelligence hovering inscrutably above the ESTABLISHMENT of ancient, stone-heavy, well-ordered pyramidic hierarchy.

LESS than four years after his deification, Julius Caesar was assassinated by an executive conspiracy. For another four years, civil war raged as two of the assassins, Brutus and Cassius, struggled for control against Caesar's immediate successor, a Triumvirate comprised of Lepidus, Marc Antony, and Caesar's adopted son (his biological grand-nephew), Caius Octavian Capias.

The Triumvirate defeated the assassins only to war against each other. Poets lamented that Rome, against whom no foreign enemy had ever prevailed, was being destroyed by the strength of her own sons. Obligations of every kind dissolved. Class fought against class. A fog of guilt and despair settled in. The poets yearned for escape beyond the world's borders, to a place of innocence and peace, perhaps to a new order of things. In his book about Rome's revolution from republic to Babylonian autocracy, Oxford historian Ronald Syme writes:

> The darker the clouds, the more certain was the dawn of redemption. On several theories of cosmic economy it was firmly believed that one world-epoch was passing, another was coming into being. The lore of the Etruscans, the calculations of > astrologers and the speculations of philosophers might conspire with some plausibility and discover in the comet that appeared after Caesar's assassination the sign and herald of a new age. Vague aspirations and magical science were quickly adopted for purposes of propaganda by the rulers of the world. Already coins of the year 43 BC bear symbols of power, fertility and the Golden Age.[5]

The most influential and enduring celebration of Golden Age optimism was Virgil's prophetic-sounding Fourth Eclogue. This work was addressed to one of Virgil's chief benefactors, Caius Asinius Pollio, who was Consul (roughly equivalent to the office of President) when Caius Octavian, Antony, and Lepidus were reconciled in 40 BC by the Peace of Brindisi. Pollio, who represented Octavian at the Brindisi negotiations, introduced Virgil to Caius Maecenas, the media mogul of his day. He had risked his fortune supporting Julius Caesar's rise to absolute dictatorship, and he would risk no less to put Caesar's adopted son, Caius Octavian, in the same place. He scouted and subsidized the most highly talented artists, sculptors, and poets to create a totally new kind of communication. Virgil gave him the most for his money. Virgil developed a new "civic" literature whose pious rhetorical style gently guided public opinion toward accepting the rule of a deified Babylonian autocrat. In writing the Fourth Eclogue, Virgil borrowed heavily from the messianic verses of Isaiah, whose writings were freely accessible through the Jewish rabbis of Rome:

> Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and call his name 'God With Us'.... [Isaiah 7:14] For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace. [9:6]

Six hundred years after Isaiah, Virgil solemnly announced in the Fourth Eclogue that the Prince of Peace would be produced by the unrolling of a New World Order ("NOVUS ORDO SECLORUM"):

> Now returns the Golden Age of Saturn, now appears the Immaculate Virgin. Now descends from heaven a divine Nativity. O! Chaste Lucina [Goddess of Maternity], speed the Mother's pains, haste the glorious Birth, and usher in the reign of thy Apollo. Thy consulship, O Pollio, shall lead this glorious Advent, and the new world order [NOVUS ORDO SECLORUM] shall then begin to roll. Thenceforth whatever vestige of Original Sin remains, shall be swept away from earth forever, and the Son of God shall be the Prince of Peace!

The billionaire Maecenas exploited the Fourth Eclogue in the media as though it were a divine summons for Caesar's adopted son Octavian to take the throne and begin sweeping the world free of Sin. A fabulous resume of Octavian was already going around – about how a thunderbolt had blasted the city wall of his birthplace, Velitre, just prior to his birth. And how the priests interpreted this to be Jupiter's way of saying the future ruler of the world would arise from the spot. And about how the Senate, upon hearing this, had decreed that all male babies should be executed. And how Octavian was saved by his mother, who pilfered the stone tablet on which the decree was engraved.

Octavian's mother was Atia of the family of Marius, Atia Maria, a vestal virgin, niece of Caius Maria, the man who would become Julius Caesar. When Octavian reached the age of twelve, great-uncle Caius became his legal father through adoption. Three years later, in Octavian's fifteenth year, his adoptive father was deified as Julius Caesar, Pontifex Maximus. That's when the propagandists of Maecenas got busy promoting the Son's divine origins – about how the child was born September 28, 63 BC in humble circumstances: the butler's pantry at his grandfather's mansion at Velitre. About how he had been conceived on December 25 by Apollo, who came in serpent form and impregnated the virgin Atia Maria as she lay sleeping on the floor of the Apollonian temple. About how, just prior to the child's advent, the virgin Maria had dreamed that her body was scattered to the stars and encompassed the universe. About how her husband, too, had dreamed that from within her shone the bright beams of the sun, which then "rose from between her thighs." About how the toddler Octavian's head was often seen being licked by golden solar flames.

The propaganda circulated the story of how the great astrologer Theogenes, when told Octavian's birth sign (Capricorn), rose and flung himself at the lad's feet. Theogenes knew the astrological ruler of Capricorn was Saturn, whose second Golden Age was at hand – Saturn, the celestio-mythical Father-God of Rome and father of Jupiter. Octavian, as the incarnation of Jupiter, would be ruled by Saturn, the most dictatorial house in the zodiac, terrible for his restriction, limitation, control, even to the excesses of fornication and cannibalizing of his own children. No wonder Theogenes flung himself at Octavian's feet!

In 28 BC, twelve years after the publication of the Fourth Eclogue, Octavian entered Rome triumphantly as the Prince of Peace. Like Julius had done, the new Pontifex Maximus received a new and holier name, Caesar Augustus ("since sanctuaries and all places consecrated by the augurs are known as 'August,'" according to Suetonius). And like Julius, he was hailed as "Son of God." Historian Alexander Del Mar describes the universal acceptance of the divine Octavian in these excerpts from his landmark exposition of Roman political deification, The Worship of Augustus Caesar (1899):

> In the firm establishment of the Messianic religion and ritual, Augustus ascended the sacred throne of his martyred sire and was in turn addressed as the Son of God (Divi filius), whilst Julius was worshiped as the Father.... This claim and assumption appears in the literature of his age, was engraved upon his monuments and stamped upon his coins.... It was universally admitted and accepted throughout the Roman empire as valid and legitimate, according to chronology, astrology, prophecy, and tradition.... His actual worship as the Son of God was enjoined and enforced by the laws of the empire, accepted by the priesthood and practised by the people.... Both de jure and de facto it constituted the fundamental article of the Roman imperial and ecclesiastical constitution.
>
> As supreme pontiff of the Roman empire, Augustus lawfully acquired and exercised authority over all cardinals, priests, curates, monks, nuns, flamens, augurs, vestal virgins, temples, altars, shrines, sanctuaries and monasteries, and over all religious rites, ceremonies, festivals, holidays, dedications, canonizations, marriages, divorces, adoptions, benefices, wills, burying grounds, fairs, and other ecclesiastical subjects and matters.... The common people wore little images of Augustus suspended from their necks. Great images and shrines of the same god were erected in the highways and resorted to for sanctuary. There were a thousand such shrines in Rome alone.

Augustus wore on his head a pontifical mitre surmounted by a Latin cross, an engraving of which, taken from a coin of the Colonia Julia Gemella, appears in Harduini, de Numiis Antiquis [1689], plate I.... The images of Augustus upon the coins of his own mintage, or that of his vassals, are surrounded with the halo of light which indicates divinity, and on the reverse of the coins are displayed the various emblems of religion, such as the mitre, cross, crook, fishes, labarum, and the Buddhic or Bacchic or Dionysian monogram of PX [the Greek chi-rho, "Cairo," site of the great pyramid].

The Augustan writers furnished materials showing that [Augustus'] Incarnation was the issue of a divine father and mortal mother, that the mother was a wife-virgin, that the birth occurred in an obscure place, that it was foretold by prophecy or sacred oracle, that it was presaged or accompanied by prodigies of Nature, that the divinity of the child was recognized by sages, that the Holy One exhibited extraordinary signs of precocity and wisdom, that his destruction was sought by the ruling powers, that his miraculous touch was sufficient to cure deformity or disease, that he exhibited a profound humility, that his deification would bring peace on earth, and that he would finally ascend to heaven, there to join the Father.

So universally were his divine origin and attributes conceded, that many people, in dying, left their entire fortunes to his sacred personal fisc, in gratitude, as they themselves expressed it, for having been permitted to live during the incarnation and earthly sojourn of this Son of God. In the course of twenty years he thus inherited no less than 35,000,000 gold aurei [nearly $1 billion at 1996 values].... Many potentates bequeathed him not > only their private fortunes, but also their kingdoms and people in vassalage.... The marble and bronze monuments to Augustus still extant contain nearly one hundred sacred titles. Among them are Jupiter Optimus Maximus, Apollo, Janus, Quirinus, Dionysus, Mercurius, Volcanus, Neptunus, Liber Pater, Savus [Saviour], and Hesus.

>
> At his death, Senator Numericus Atticus saw his spirit ascend to Heaven. The Ascension of Augustus is engraved upon the great cameo, from the spoils of Constantinople, presented by Baldwin II to Louis IX, and now in the Cabinet of France. A facsimile of it is published in Duruy's History of Rome....

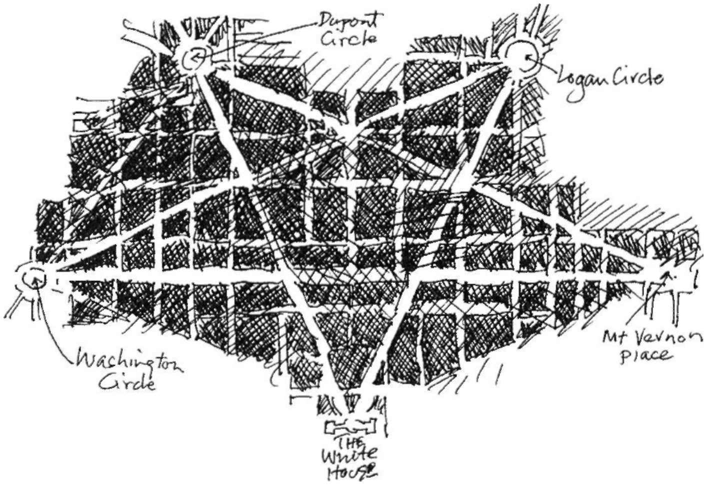
America's Great Seal, with its obsessive fidelity to Caesarean Rome, cannot represent a nation more moral than the source of its scripture. The icons and mysterious cabalistic language of this Seal introduce a preposterous Babylonian gospel. Taken seriously (and shouldn't a government's solemn statements be taken seriously?), the Seal's gospel teaches that America's high spiritual purpose is to assist in the resurrection of the Son of God's mutilated parts from the evil slime of human flesh. It tells us that already the Holy Virgin has rescued the Son's Sacred Heart from the slime – E PLURIBUS UNUM, "one from many" – and has placed it high in the vault of Heaven, as her five-pointed celestial path describes for all to see. It calls for America to exert fervent sexual energy so that the Son's many parts on earth might be reunited with the UNUM in Heaven. It promises that America will rise toward the pure light of sinlessness and Godliness, into eternal life as part of the solar body of the Son – the Sun – of God. It signifies that this cosmic resurrective process is administered by a pyramidic hierarchy conceived in ancient Babylon, exported to Asia Minor, and bequeathed to Rome. At the top of the hierarchy sits an unseen chieftain, an unknown superior, a God of the Seal who possesses universal intelligence and authority over every soul who confederates with, or subscribes to, the Seal.

The God of the Seal wields the fasces to sweep the earth clean of the last traces of Original Sin. He is assisted by a new priestly order, a "new world order" charged with destroying all individual identity deemed inconsistent with the resurrection to godliness. Uncooperative governments and dissident citizens alike are cut down by arts of war so frugal that the liquidation increases popular faith in the fasces. Because they function in a Golden Era of Saturn, the chief and his hierarchy can be depended upon to mimic Saturn's strictness, cruelty, licentiousness, even cannabilism as the situation requires. To the charge that such is impossible in America, one comparison should be sufficient. No sooner was Augustus Caesar deified than he sacrificially murdered three hundred Senators in Perugia to atone for the assassination of his adoptive father Julius.[9] Likewise, no sooner was an American president inaugurated than he, as Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces, authorized the sacrificial murder of nearly a hundred misguided Christians near Waco, Texas, to atone for what? A growing popular disenchantment with federal government?

What the Seal of the United States of America represents, to anyone who takes it seriously, is a Ministry of Sin. A speech by Jesuit political scientist Michael Novak, published in the January 28, 1989 issue of America, the weekly magazine of American Jesuits, sums it up eloquently enough:

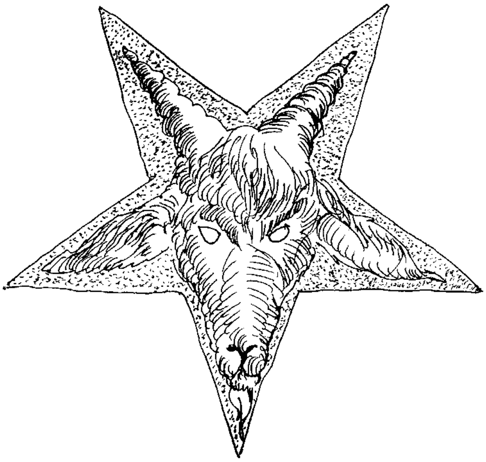
> The framers wanted to build a "novus ordo" that would secure "liberty and justice for all".... The underlying principle of this new order is the fact of human sin. To build a republic designed for sinners, then, is the indispensable task.... There is no use building a social system for saints. There are too few of them. And those there are are impossible to live with!... Any effective social system must therefore be designed for the only moral majority there is: sinners.

In the next chapter, we shall examine how faithfully the founding fathers reconstructed Babylonian Rome on the banks of the Potomac.



Dupont Circle
Logan Circle
Washington Circle
Mt Vernon Place
The White House

L'Enfant's celebrated plan of Washington, D.C., conforming to the cabalistic Baphomet, arranged so that the Goat's mouth (see below) is the White House.



Chapter 21

JUPITER'S EARTHLY ABODE

ROME'S GOD OF GODS, Jupiter, was served in temples called capitolia, from the Latin word meaning "head." As we've seen, America's temple of Jupiter was erected on land that had been known as "Rome" for more than a hundred years before it was selected by Daniel Carroll's "federal city" committee from properties owned by Carroll himself.

Subdividing the federal city, or District of Columbia, into plats was the task of an artistic Parisian engineer named Pierre-Charles L'Enfant. According to Dr. James Walsh in his book American Jesuits, L'Enfant got the job through the intercession of his priest, John Carroll.

L'Enfant was a Freemason. He subdivided the city into a brilliant array of cabalistic symbols and numerics. Perhaps his best-known device is the pattern that is discerned when a straight line is drawn from the White House along Connecticut Avenue to Dupont Circle, then along Massachusetts Avenue to Mount Vernon Square, then back across K Street to Washington Circle, then up Rhode Island Avenue to Logan Circle, then along Vermont Avenue back to the White House. What results is a perfect pentagram, the Queen of Heaven's eight-year-and-one-day celestial journey.

But L'Enfant's pentagram points downward, forming the shape of Baphomet, the gnostic "absorption-into-wisdom" goat's-head icon of the Knights Templar. Gnostic historian Manly Hall says the upside-down pentagram "is used extensively in black magic" and "always signifies a perverted power." The Baphomet imposed upon the federal city by Pierre-Charles L'Enfant puts the mouth of this "perverted power" exactly at the White House.

The Congressional Medal of Honor, depicting Aeneas within a Baphomet, rewards Americans who have sacrificed most for the Roman ideal.

The presence of perverted power is underscored in L'Enfant's numbering of Washington's city blocks.[1] The 600 series of blocks runs in a swath from Q Street North through the Capitol grounds down to the mouth of James Creek below V Street South. All the numbers between 600 and 699 are assigned to blocks within this swath, except for the number 666. That number is missing from the map. It must have been secretly affixed to the only unnumbered section of blocks in the 600 series. That section, we find, includes the Capitol grounds that once were called "Rome." Of course, 666 is the "number of the name of the Beast" mentioned in the thirteenth chapter of Revelation. If America's temple of Jupiter sits upon the Beast named 666, could it be that the true founding fathers soberly recognized Congress as "the great whore" of Revelation 17:1?

The Latin historians Ovid, Pliny, and Aurelius Victor all tell us that the prehistoric name for Rome was Saturnia, "city of Saturn." Saturnia's original settlers came from the east, from Babylon. In the Babylonian (or Chaldean) language, according to Alexander Hislop, Saturnia was pronounced "Satr" but spelled with only four characters, Stur. Now, Chaldean, like Hebrew, Greek, and to a limited extent Latin, had no separate numbering system. Their numbers were represented by certain characters of their alphabet. The cabalah derives its power from mathematical energies conveyed from these languages. Hislop reported a phenomenon that he said "every Chaldee scholar knows," which is that the letters of Stur, Rome's earliest name, total 666:

S = 60; T = 400; U = 6; R = 200 := 666

Hislop further reported that Roman numerals consist of only six letters, D (500), C (100), L (50), X (10), V (5), and I (1) – we ignore the letter M, signifying 1,000, because it's a latecomer, having evolved as shorthand for two D's. When we total these six letters, we discover a startling link with the Beast of Revelation embedded in the very alphanumeric communication system of the Romans:

D = 500; C = 100; L = 50; X = 10; V = 5; I = 1 := 666

Demonism, black magic, and perverted power formatted into the streets of the federal city? Well, as Michael Novak observed, the indispensable task of the founding fathers was to build a republic designed for sinners. Not all sinners can be governed with a loving call to repentance, with reason, logic, patience, understanding, and forgiveness. Sin develops cunning villains who steal, rape, destroy, torture, and kill. A republic designed for sinners must be up to the villainy of its meanest subject. This is why the great revolutionary pamphleteer Tom Paine candidly characterized human government as "a necessary evil." A government must necessarily be as evil as the evildoers it's charged with regulating or it cannot protect the innocent. This just stands to reason. Scripture shows the principle as divinely ordained. Yes, God ordained the evil to rule the good. But the details of this gracious ordination, which we'll be examining presently, are so embarrassing to the flaunted piety of rulers that they must be concealed in cabalah.

Soon after completing his master plan for the federal city, Pierre-Charles L'Enfant became embroiled in a flagrant dispute with Bishop Carroll's high-ranking brother Daniel. The young engineer wanted an avenue to go where Daniel Carroll intended to build his new manor house. When Carroll refused to build elsewhere, L'Enfant ordered the work crew to tear the new house down. Before any significant damage could be done, however, President Washington dismissed L'Enfant. The whole affair diverted attention away from the demonic symbolism in L'Enfant's designs while conveniently removing him from public scrutiny. Again, blown cover as cover. The designs were executed by his successor, Andrew Ellicott, without significant alteration.

The formal creation of Jupiter's American Abode on Wednesday, September 18, 1793 was a jubilant affair. President George Washington and Capitol Commissioner Daniel Carroll departed from the White House, marching side by side. They led a magnificent parade "with music playing, drums beating, and spectators rejoicing in one of the grandest Masonic processions which perhaps ever was exhibited on the like important occasion."[2]

Arriving at the construction site on Lot 666, Commissioner Carroll presented "Worshipful Master Washington" a large silver plaque engraved with the following words:

> This South East corner stone, of the Capitol of the United States of America in the city of Washington, was laid on the 18th day of September, in the thirteenth year of American Independence, in the first year of the second term of the Presidency of George Washington, whose virtues in the civil administration of his country have been as conspicuous and beneficial, as his military valor and prudence have been useful in establishing her liberties, and in the year of Masonry, 5793, by the President of the United States, in concert with the Grand Lodge of Maryland, several lodges under its jurisdiction, and Lodge No. 22 from Alexandria, Virginia.

President Washington then descended into a builder's trench prepared for the Capitol's foundations, laid the plaque on the ground, and covered it over with the cornerstone. The cornerstone was a massive rock cut from Eagle Quarry, a property in Acquia Creek, Virginia, owned by the family of Daniel Carroll's nephew, Robert Brent.

Then, just as the priests of Jupiter might have blessed their capitolia two millennia ago three Worshipful Masters consecrated the stone with corn, wine, and oil. Washington and the other Masters stepped out of the trench, and joined the assembled throng to listen to a patriotic speech. Afterward, said the Gazette, > the congregation joined in reverential prayer, which was succeeded by Masonic chanting honors, and a 15-volley from the artillery. Then the participants retired to a barbecue, at which a five-hundred-pound ox was roasted, and those in attendance generally partook, with every abundance of other recreation....

Reading of the barbeque, I was reminded of the passage in the Aeneid where Julius Ascanius promised a sacrifice to Jupiter for favoring his rebellious undertaking: "I shall bring to thy temple gifts in my own hands, and place a white bullock at thy altar..." Could it be that the silver plaque, the corn, the wine, the oil, the chanting, the roasted ox, and the reverential prayer were the fulfillment of that promise – a burnt sacrifice to Jupiter, on the altar of his capitolium, upon land called Rome, land formally consecrated by Pontifex Maximus to the protection of the goddess Venus? Historians who believe the government of the United States was founded by Christians will certainly disagree. But the ceremony, as reported in the press, was anything but Christian. Moreover, the plaque itself reckoned time according to three systems: (1) the years of independence of the United States, (2) the years of George Washington's administration, and (3) the years of Freemasonry. It completely ignored the system that reckons time in the years of Jesus Christ.[3]

Eight years after the sacrifice, Congress met in the Capitol for the first time. Washington gave the appearance of a Roman Catholic settlement. The most imposing houses in the city belonged to Daniel Carroll and his brother-in-law, secularized Jesuit priest Notley Young. The city's mayor was Carroll's nephew, Robert Brent, who was also purveying stone for most of the federal buildings. Over on the west side of town stood Georgetown College, established by Bishop John Carroll in 1789. Georgetown quickly became the foremost incubator of federal policy, foreign and domestic. It is still administered by the Society of Jesus.

Seal of the Black Papacy's Georgetown University, as it appears today on a campus security vehicle. The Roman eagle grasps both the world and the cross, State and Roman Catholic Church, the banner in its beak declaring "UTRAQUE UNUM," – "Both together."

When Pope Pius VII restored the Society of Jesus in August 1814, former presidents John Adams and Thomas Jefferson exchanged comments. "I do not like the resurrection of the Jesuits," wrote Adams.

> They have a general now in Russia [Tadeusz Brzozowski], in correspondence with the Jesuits in the United States, who are more numerous than everybody knows. Shall we not have swarms of them here, in the shape of printers, editors, writers, schoolmasters, &c? I have lately read Pascal's letters over again [Blaise Pascal's Provincial Letters helped bring about the suppression of the Society], and four volumes of the History of the Jesuits. If ever any congregation of men could merit eternal perdition on earth and in hell it is this company of Loyola. Our system, however, of religious liberty must afford them an asylum; but if they do not put the purity of our elections to a severe trial, it will be a wonder.

Jefferson's reply indicates (or pretends) that he, too, was unaware that America's destiny had been shaped by the hands of Rome: "Like you, I disapprove of the restoration of the Jesuits, which seems to portend a backward step from light into darkness."

During the next seventy years, Superior Generals John Roothaan (1829-1853) and Pieter Jean Beckx (1853-1883) would pump the Society up to its original greatness, swelling the membership from a few hundred to more than thirteen thousand. In those same seventy years, the Protestants who had fought for America's independence would vastly diminish in proportion to the influx of fresh Roman Catholic refugees from European tyrannies. (There is evidence these tyrannies were Jesuit-fed, for the express purpose of populating America. Perhaps a new scholarship will investigate more thoroughly than I have time or inclination for.)

As America's public became increasingly Catholic, Generals Roothaan and Beckx were able to signify Washington's debt to the black papacy with much bolder iconographic and architectural symbols. This little-explored material is the subject of our next chapter.

Persephone, Goddess of the U.S. Capitol Dome.
Said by her priests to have been immaculately conceived, she was renamed "Freedom" for American consumption. Abducted by Hades, son of Saturn, she ruled the dead and all else that is within the earth, namely metals and precious stones.
At daybreak of May 9, 1993, helicopters lowered the Queen of the dead to ground level for her first cleaning in more than a century. The author attended this historic event and snapped the above photograph. Significantly, May 9, 1993 was...
Mother's Day.

Chapter 22

THE IMMACULATE CONCEPTION

As IF IT WEREN'T enough that Christopher Columbus had dedicated the New World to her, and that Andrew White had dedicated Maryland to her, and that Bishop Carroll had dedicated his See of Baltimore to her, the 1846 convention of American Roman Catholic bishops declared the Virgin Mary to be "Patroness of the United States."

The first two years under her patronage enriched the national government considerably. The Oregon territory and the Southwest joined the Union. As did California, with its bursting veins of gold. The blessings had their downside, however. They precipitated a corresponding increase in intersectional tensions that erupted in a devastating interstate bloodbath some historians call the Civil War. In that war, the Patroness of the United States dealt as cruelly with the enemies of her protectorate as the vengeful goddess Ishtar did with the enemies of ancient Babylon.

In February 1849, "Pio Nono" (the popular name for Pope Pius IX; there's a boulevard named after him in Macon, Georgia) issued an encyclical that colored America's Patroness with the fearsome aspects of Ishtar. The encyclical, entitled Ubi primum ("By whom at first"), celebrated Mary's divinity, saying:

> The resplendent glory of her merits, far exceeding all the choirs of angel, elevates her to the very steps of the throne of God. Her foot has crushed the head of Satan. Set up between Christ and his Church, Mary, ever lovable, and full of grace, always has delivered the Christian people from their greatest calamities and from the snares and assaults of all their enemies, ever rescuing them from ruin.

Holy as she may sound, a Satan-bashing, life-saving Virgin Mary is a fabrication of sacred pagan tradition. The Bible does prophesy that Satan's serpentine head will be violated. But not by Mary. At Genesis 3:15, we read God's vow that Satan's seed will be bruised by the seed of Eve. It may be argued that Eve's seed was Mary. But according to the inspired understanding of the apostles, it was Jesus. At Romans 16:20 Paul promises a Roman congregation that "the God of peace shall bruise Satan under your feet." Nor was Mary given power to deliver people from their enemies. Only the "one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus" (1 Timothy 2:5), "a name which is above every other name" (Philippians 2:9), is a divinely-authorized deliverer.

No, the Mary of Ubi Primum will not be found anywhere in the Bible. But then Pio Nono, the first pope ever to be declared Infallible, carried about a rather famous theological ignorance. His private secretary, Monsignor Talbot, defended Pio's ineptitude in a letter cited by Jesuit author Peter de Rosa in his Vicars of Christ:

> As the Pope is no great theologian, I feel convinced that when he writes his encyclicals he is inspired by God. Ignorance is no bar to infallibility, since God can point out the tight road even by the mouth of a talking ass.

The truth of the matter, according to J.C.H. Aveling, is that throughout Pius IX's long reign (1846-1878), most of his theology was written by Jesuits. On December 8, 1854, Superior General Beckx brought three hundred years of Marian devotion to a glorious climax with Ineffabilis Deus ("God indescribable"), the encyclical defining the Immaculate Conception, the extrascriptural doctrine that Mary, like Jesus, was conceived and remained free of sin:

> The doctrine which holds that the most blessed Virgin Mary, in the first instant of her conception, by a singular grace and privilege granted by Almighty God, in view of the merits of Jesus Christ, the Saviour of the human race, was preserved free from all stain of original sin, is a doctrine revealed by God and therefore to be believed firmly and constantly by all the faithful.

Ineffabilis Deus mobilized the United States Congress to pass extraordinary legislation. Congress became suddenly obsessed with expanding the Capitol's dome. According to the official publication The Dome of the United States Capitol: An Architectural History (1992), "Never before (or since) has an addition to the Capitol been so eagerly embraced by Congress." Within days of Pio Nono's definition of the doctrine of Immaculate Conception, legislation was rushed through Congress that effectively incorporated the new Vatican doctrine into the Capitol dome's crowning architectural platform, its cupola.

A week following Ineffabilis Deus Philadelphia architect Thomas Ustick Walter, a Freemason, completed his drawings for the proposed dome. It would be surmounted by a bronze Marian image which would come to be recognized as "the only authorized Symbol of American Heritage."[1] Her classical name was Persephone, Graeco-Roman goddess of the psyche, or soul, and leading deity in the Eleusinian Mysteries of ancient Greece. Persephone was abducted by Saturn's son, Hades, and made queen-consort of his dominion, the underworld. Persephone was distinguished for her Immaculate Conception – described by Proclus, head of the Platonic Academy in Athens during the fifth century of the Christian era, as "her undefiled transcendency in her generations." In fact, most of the statues of Persephone in the Christianized Roman Empire had been simply re-identified and re-consecrated as the Virgin Mary by missionary adaptation.

Congress appropriated $3,000 for a statue of Persephone. President Franklin Pierce's Secretary of War, Jefferson Davis, awarded the commission to a famous young American sculptor named Thomas Crawford. Crawford lived and worked in Rome. His reputation had been established with a statue of Orpheus which, when exhibited in Boston in 1843, was the first sculptured male nude to be seen in the United States. Since another of Persephone's ancient names was Libera ("Liberty"), Crawford named his Persephone "Freedom." His work has worn this title ever since.

After two years of labor in the shadow of the Gesu, Crawford completed a plaster model of Freedom. Her right hand rested on a sword pointing downward. Her left hand, against which leaned the shield of the United States, held a laurel wreath. She was crowned with an eagle's head and feathers mounted on a tiara of pentagrams, some inverted, some not. When ultimately cast in bronze, Freedom would reach the height of nineteen feet, six inches – a sum perhaps deliberately calculated to pay homage to the work's final destination, the Beast of Revelation at Lot 666, for nineteen feet, six inches works out to 6+6+6 feet, 6+6+6 inches.

Freedom would stand upon a twelve-foot iron pedestal also designed by Thomas Crawford. The upper part of the pedestal was a globe ringed with the motto of the Bacchic Gospel, E PLURIBUS UNUM, while the lower part was flanked with twelve wreathes (the twelve Caesars?) and as many fascia, those bundles of rods wrapped around axe-blades symbolizing Roman totalitarianism.

Crawford wanted his sculpture to be cast at the Royal Bavarian Foundry in Munich (where Randolph Rogers' great ten-ton bronze doors leading to the Capitol rotunda were cast), while architect Thomas U. Walter preferred Clark Mills' foundry, near Washington. Their transatlantic argument ended abruptly when Crawford died in London on September 10, 1857, of a tumor behind his left eye.

In that same year, 1857, the United States Supreme Court handed down Dred Scott vs. Sanford, a decision which most historians agree ignited the Great American Civil War. The opinion was written by the Roger Brooke Taney, who succeeded John Marshall as Chief Justice. A devout Roman Catholic "under the influence of the Jesuits most of his long life" according Dr. Walsh's American Jesuits, Taney held that Negro slaves and their descendants could never be State citizens and thus could never have standing in court to sue or be sued. Nor could they ever hope to be United States citizens since the Constitution did not create such a thing as "United States citizenship."

Taney's opinion was widely suspected of being part of a plot to prepare the way for a second Supreme Court decision that would prohibit any state from abolishing slavery. American slavery would become a permanent institution. This is exactly what happened, although not quite as everyone supposed it would. First, slavery was abolished by the Thirteenth Amendment (1865). Then, the Fourteenth Amendment (1868) created a new national citizenship. Unlike State citizenship, which was denied to Negroes, national citizenship was available to anyone as long as they subjected themselves to the jurisdiction of the United States – that is, to the federal government, whose seat is the District of Columbia, "Rome." What is so remarkably Jesuitic about the scheme that proceeded out of Roger Taney's opinion is that slavery was sustained by the very amendment that supposedly abolished it. Amendment Thirteen provides for the abolition of "involuntary servitude, except as punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted." In our time the federally regulated communications media, with their continually exciting celebration of violence and drug-use, have subtly but vigorously induced youthful audiences to play on a minefield of complementary criminal statutes. The fruit of this collaboration is a burgeoning national prison population of men and women enslaved constitutionally. American slavery has become a permanent institution.

Reaction to Taney's decision animated Abraham Lincoln to immerse himself in abolitionist rhetoric and challenge Stephen A. Douglas for the Senate in 1858....

MEANWHILE in Rome, Freedom's plaster matrix was packed into five huge crates and crammed, with bales of rags and cases of lemons, into the hold of a tired old ship bound for New York, the Emily Taylor. Early on, the Emily sprang a leak and had to put in to Gibraltar for repairs. Once the voyage was resumed, stormy weather caused new leaks. Despite attempts to lighten her load by jettisoning the rags and the citron, things got so bad she put in to Bermuda on July 27, 1858. The crates were placed in storage, and the Emily was condemned and sold.

In November, Lincoln lost his bid for Douglas' seat in the Senate, and in December, another ship, the G.W. Norton, arrived in New York harbor from Bermuda with some of the statuary crates. By March 30, 1859 all five crates had been delivered to the foundry of Clark Mills on Bladensburg Road, on the outskirts of the District of Columbia, where the process of casting the Immaculate Virgin into bronze and iron was begun.

Lincoln opposed Stephen Douglas again in 1860, this time for the Presidency, and this time victoriously. The northern states rejoiced. The southern states, fearing Lincoln would abolish slavery, prepared to secede. "The tea has been thrown overboard!" shouted the Mercury, of Charleston, South Carolina, capital of American Scottish Rite Freemasonry. "The revolution of 1860 has been initiated!"

By Lincoln's inauguration in March 1861, six states had seceded from the Union. In April, General Pierre Beauregard, a Roman Catholic who resigned his Superintendency of West Point to join the Confederacy, fired on the United States military enclave at Fort Sumter and brotherly blood began flowing. Jefferson Davis, who five years earlier had commissioned Crawford to sculpt the Immaculate Virgin, served as President of the rebellious Confederate States of America. In historian Eli N. Evans' book on Judah P. Benjamin, I happened upon a strange and interesting link between Davis and the Vatican.

While a young Protestant student at the Roman Catholic monastery of St. Thomas College in Bardstown, Davis had pled to be received into the Catholic faith, but was "not permitted to convert." He remained "a hazy Protestant" until his confirmation into the Episcopal Church at the age of fifty. Despite outward appearances of rejection, the Confederate President maintained a vibrant communion with Rome. No one was more aware of this than Abraham Lincoln. At an interview in the White House during August 1861, Lincoln confided the following to a former law client of his, a Roman Catholic priest named Charles Chiniquy, who published the President's words in his own autobiography, Fifty Years In The Church of Rome:

> "I feel more and more every day," [stated the President] "that it is not against the Americans of the South, alone, I am fighting. It is more against the Pope of Rome, his Jesuits and their slaves. Very few Southern leaders are not under the influence of the Jesuits, through their wives, family relations, and their friends.
>
> "Several members of the family of Jeff Davis belong to the Church of Rome. Even the Protestant ministers are under the influence of the Jesuits without suspecting it. To keep her ascendency in the North, as she does in the South, Rome is doing here what she has done in Mexico, and in all the South American Republics; she is paralyzing, by civil war, the arms of the soldiers of liberty. She divides our nation in order to weaken, subdue and rule it....
>
> "Neither Jeff Davis not any one of the Confederacy would have dared to attack the North had they not relied on the promises of the Jesuits that, under the mask of democracy, the money and the aims of the Roman Catholics, even the arms of France, were at their disposal if they would attack us. I pity the priests, the bishops, and monks of Rome in the United States when the people realize that they are in great part responsible for the tears and the blood shed in this war. I conceal what I know, for if the people knew the whole truth, this war would turn into a religious war, and at once, take a tenfold more savage and bloody character....[2]

The Great Civil War rampaged for another year. In autumn of 1862, the Confederacy's invasion of the Union was defeated at the Battle of Antietam in Sharpsburg, Maryland. As if in celebration, the Immaculate Virgin was moved from the foundry and brought to the grounds of the Capitol construction site. The lower floors of the building were teeming with the traffic of a Union barracks and makeshift hospital. Above all this loomed Thomas U. Walter's majestic cast-iron dome, patterned after that of St. Isaac's Cathedral in St. Petersburg, Russia.

In March 1863, Freedom was mounted on a temporary pedestal, "in order that the public may have an opportunity to examine it before it is raised to its destined position," as stated in Walter's Annual Report dated November 1, 1862. One would expect photographers to be climbing all over themselves to make portraits of "the only authorized Symbol of American Heritage" while she was available for ground-level examination. America's pioneer photographer, Matthew Brady, had shot a comprehensive record of the Capitol under construction, including portraits of both Capitol architect Thomas U. Walter and Commissioner of Public Buildings Benjamin B. French. But neither Brady nor anyone else photographed Freedom while she was available for closeups.[3] Why? Was there a fear that perhaps some Protestant theologian might raise a hue and cry about the pagan icon about to dominate the Capitol building?

Apparently, not too many Protestants ever examined Freedom at ground-level. The District of Columbia was still virtually a Roman Catholic enclave. Moreover, the nation in 1863 had been drastically reduced in size. The secession of the southern states had left only twenty-two northern states, and these twenty-two were heavily populated by Catholic immigrants from Europe and Ireland. "So incredibly large," we recall from Sydney E. Ahlstrom's Religious History of the American People, "was the flow of immigrants that by 1850 Roman Catholics, once a tiny and ignored minority, had become the country's largest religious communion." Thus, Crawford's towering goddess was being examined mostly by Roman Catholic eyes, eyes that could not help but see in her the dreadnaught Mary described by Pius IX in Ubi Primum: "ever lovable, and full of grace, set up between Christ and his Church, always delivering the Christian people from their greatest calamities and assaults of all their enemies, ever rescuing them from ruin."

The war rapidly advanced to conclusion while Freedom held forth on the east grounds of the Capitol. The Union forces under Burnside lost to Lee at Fredericksburg, but Rosecrans defeated the Confederates at Murfreesboro, and Grant took Vicksburg. In summer, Lee's second attempt to invade the North failed at Chancellorsville and Gettysburg. By fall, Grant won the Battles of Chattanooga and Missionary Ridge with Sherman and Thomas. By the end of November 1863, the Union had taken Knoxville, and the Confederacy found its resources exhausted and its cause hopelessly lost.

On November 24, a steam-operated hoisting apparatus lifted the Immaculate Virgin Mother of God's first section to the top of the Capitol dome and secured it. The second section followed the next day. Three days later, in a driving thunderstorm, the third section was secured. The fourth section was installed on November 31.

At quarter past noon December 2, 1863, before an enormous crowd, the Immaculate Virgin's fifth and final section was put into place. The ritual procedure for her installation is preserved in Special Order No. 248 of the War Department. Her head and shoulders rose from the ground. The three-hundred-foot trip took twenty minutes. At the moment the fifth section was affixed, a flag unfurled above it. The unfurling was accompanied by a national salute of forty-seven gunshots fired into the Washington atmosphere. Thirty-five shots issued from a field battery on Capitol Hill. Twelve were discharged from the forts surrounding the city. Reporting the event in the December 10 issue of the New York Tribune, an anonymous journalist echoed the qualities that Pius IX had given Mary:

> During more than two years of our struggle, while the national cause seemed weak, she has patiently waited and watched below: now that victory crowns our advances and the conspirators are being hedged in, and vanquished everywhere, and the bonds are being freed, she comes forward, the cynosure of thousands of eyes, her face turned rebukingly toward Virginia > and her hand outstretched as if in guaranty of National Unity and Personal Freedom.

If Tribune readers felt more nationally united and personally free because Freedom was glaring at rebellious Virginia and outstretching her hand to her beloved America, they were deceived. For the goddess faced in precisely the opposite direction! She faced east, as she does to this day, faced east across Maryland, the "land of Mary," across the Atlantic, toward her beloved Rome. In fact, neither hand outstretches in any direction. Both are at rest, one on her sword, the other holding the laurel wreath.

And her forty-seven Jupiterean thunderbolt-gunshots? They were a tribute to the Jesuit bishop who had placed the District of Columbia under her protection. For December 2, 1863 tolled the forty-seventh year from John Carroll's last full day alive, December 2, 1815!

ONCE the pressures of the installation were over, an exhausted but relieved Capitol Architect Thomas U. Walter wrote his wife, Amanda, at their Philadelphia home, to say that "her ladyship looks placid and beautiful – much better than I expected, and I have had thousands of congratulations on this great event, and a general regret was expressed that you were prevented from witnessing this triumph." Someone else had missed the triumph, too, someone who by all the rules of protocol should have been there no matter what: the Commander-in-Chief of the United States Armed Forces, whose War Department had engineered the whole Capitol project from top to bottom – President Abraham Lincoln. At noon on the day the temple of federal legislation was placed under the patronage of Persephone, Freedom, Wife of Hades, Queen of the Dead, Immaculate Virgin of Rome, Protectress of the Jesuits, Protectress of Maryland, and Patroness of the United States, the record shows that Lincoln sequestered himself inside the White House, touched with "a fever." A telling detail.

But the sacred iconography was still not complete. The engineers began now preparing the interior of the dome, its canopy, for a massive painting Congress had approved back in the spring of 1863. This painting would depict George Washington undergoing the secular version of the canonization of Ignatius Loyola. It contains even more data useful to our understanding of the character and provenance of American government. We examine this masterpiece in our next chapter.

APOTHEOSIS OF WASHINGTON.
(Photograph: Architect of the Capitol)

Chapter 23

THE DOME OF THE GREAT SKY

“”It’s like St. Peter’s!“” — Tourists describing the rotunda fresco, as quoted in the official Capitol guidebook
WE, THE PEOPLE

ARCHBISHOP JOHN HUGHES of New York sailed for Rome in the autumn of 1851, just after Congress had approved funds to enlarge the Capitol. Hughes had laid the cornerstone for St. Patrick’s Cathedral in Manhattan, and had helped the Jesuits establish Fordham University in Westchester. Now he was helping them decorate the Capitol’s interior.

In Rome, Superior General John Roothaan introduced the Archbishop to Constantino Brumidi, an artist boasting an impressive list of credits. Brumidi had painted an acclaimed portrait of Pio Nono (which the Vatican still exhibits), an Immaculate Conception in the little Sanctuary of the Madonna dell’Archetto in Via San Marcello, and the restoration of three sixteenth-century frescoes in the Vatican Palace. Brumidi was good. General Roothaan had determined to make him America’s Michaelangelo. Archbishop Hughes let it be known that Brumidi would be welcome to paint some frescoes in churches of the New York bishopric. General Roothaan then went about making the Vatican's artist acceptable to American egalitarianism.

Constantino Brumidi

Soon after the Archbishop left Rome for New York, the Vatican accused Constantino Brumidi of criminal acts. Supposedly, Brumidi had committed crimes during his membership in the Republican Civil Guard under Giuseppe Mazzini, the Italian Freemason who had recently led ill-fated nationalist revolutions against the papacy. These crimes were said to have included (a) refusing to fire on his Republican friends, (b) looting several convents, and (c) participating in a plot to destroy the Catholic Church – acts reasonably sure to merit a hero's welcome in Protestant America. The Architect of the Capitol's unpublished dossier on Brumidi, which I was permitted to examine during 1993, notes that "several widely divergent accounts suggest that Constantino Brumidi himself was probably the source of at least some of the legends."

Vatican justice found the artist guilty in December 1851 and sentenced him to eighteen years in prison. Several weeks later the sentence was reduced to six years. And within two months, on March 20, Pio Nono himself quietly granted Brumidi an unconditional pardon. General Roothaan then placed his newly-created republican freedom fighter on a ship bound for America.

Brumidi arrived in New York harbor on September 18. On November 29 he filed for state citizenship with the New York Court of Common Pleas. Although the invite had come to paint New York churches, there was no such work to be done there. Instead, the Archbishop sent him to Mexico City – by way of Washington, D.C. In Washington, Brumidi was received by his Masonic brother Thomas Ustick Walter. For two years Walter had been serving President Millard Fillmore as Architect of the Capitol. When the cornerstone for Walter's Capitol expansion plan was laid on the Fourth of July of 1851, President Fillmore and Commissioner of Public Buildings Benjamin B. French, who also happened to be "Grand Master of the Masonic fraternity," led a colorful ceremony. Washington's popular National Intelligencer reported the occasion was "welcomed by a display of National flags and the ringing of bells from the various churches and engine houses."[1]

Thomas Walter needed Constantino Brumidi. An edifice as important as the United States Capitol – like the palaces of Augustus and Nero, the Baths of Titus and Livia, the Loggia of Raphael at the Vatican – required the most noble and permanent interior decoration possible. Only fresco painting, in which pigments are mixed with wet mortar immediately before application to the surface, would suffice. And only Constantino Brumidi, of all the artists living in America, knew how to paint fresco. But the dome was not yet ready to be frescoed. So the artist was routed to the sunny, Italianate climate of Mexico City to enjoy life, to ponder his subject matter at a casual pace, to wait for the call.

Two years later, on December 28, 1854, less than three weeks following Pio Nono's decree of the doctrine of Immaculate Conception, Constantino Brumidi appeared in the office of Montgomery C. Meigs, Supervising Engineer of the Capitol extension project. The Capitol's unpublished dossier on Brumidi relates that as the two men conversed in broken French, Brumidi struck Meigs as "a lively old man with a very red nose, either from Mexican suns or French brandies." The immediate upshot of their conversation was a commission to paint a fresco covering an elliptical arch at one end of Meigs' office in the Capitol. It was the first fresco ever painted in the United States, as well as Brumidi's first in five years. The fresco celebrated the coming Civil War in terms of Roman history. According to the commission's report it depicted "a senator, who points to Rome and appeals to Cincinnatus to come to the help of his country." Cincinnatus, the fifth-century BC Roman dictator, was called to defend Rome twice, first from foreign invaders, then from his own common people. Likewise, American heroes first defended their Rome against foreign British invaders, and were now about to be called to defend the same Rome against her own seceding states.

Brumidi completed the Cincinnatus in March 1855. Meigs invited various Congressmen to behold it. They were impressed. Thomas U. Walter was "much delighted." On March 20, Jefferson Davis approved of the Cincinnatus and authorized Meigs to negotiate a salaried contract with Brumidi. Constantino Brumidi's lifetime career spent decorating the Capitol began on a salary of $8.00 a day. His contract allowed him to accept other artistic projects but not to leave Washington. In November 1855 he began a canvas painting of the Blessed Virgin for St. Ignatius' Jesuit church in Baltimore, but was not present for its December 4th installation, on the occasion of the Feast of the Immaculate Conception.

IN the summer of 1862, even as Thomas Crawford's statue was being cast at the Mills foundry, Thomas U. Walter wrote to Brumidi asking him to paint something monumental "in real fresco" to cover the 4,664-square-foot inner surface of the Capitol's dome. Three weeks later, Brumidi submitted sketches of something he entitled "Apotheosis of Washington." The word "apotheosis" was then commonly understood by its definition in Webster's 1829 Dictionary:

> Apotheosis – the act of placing a prince or other distinguished person among the heathen deities. This honor was often bestowed on illustrious men of Rome, and followed by the erection of temples, and the institution of sacrifices to the new deity.

Walter responded ecstatically to the "Apotheosis," writing the artist that "no picture in the world will at all compare with this in magnitude." He praised the design before Worshipful Master and Commissioner of Buildings Benjamin French as "probably the grandest, and the most imposing that has ever been executed in the world." French enthusiastically agreed, adding that the Secretary of Interior was also greatly impressed. Final approval of "Apotheosis" at a price of $40,000 came on March 11, 1863, just as the Immaculate Virgin was being placed on her temporary pedestal on the Capitol's east grounds. "Frustrating delays in manpower," according to official histories, would hold the fresco in abeyance until December 1864.

On April 9, 1865, Richmond fell and the Confederacy surrendered to Ulysses S. Grant. Less than a week later, on the evening of April 14 at Ford's Theatre, during an instant of hilarious laughter, one of the country's leading actors, John Wilkes Booth, cried out an oath summarizing the liberation theology of Cardinal Robert Bellarmine: "Sic Semper Tyrannis" ("Always this [i.e., death] to tyranny"), and fired a shot into the head of President Abraham Lincoln. Sic Semper Tyrannis is also the motto of Virginia, then considered a State in rebellion. Might Booth's cry have been intended to give the assassination the look of an official act of the Confederacy, much in the way Lee Harvey Oswald's much-touted sympathy for Cuba initially gave the Kennedy assassination the look of communist revenge? An illusion of official Confederate responsibility for a beloved president's assassination justified the elaborately cruel revenge which the federal government inflicted upon the southern states in order to bring all the states under the jurisdiction of Washington D.C. (The inferiority of states to the federal "Rome" is expressed in the law of flag. Wherever state and national flags are flown together, the national is always higher.)

Booth had associated with seven people who were brought to trial less than a month following the assassination. It was not a civilian trial but a special eleven-man military tribunal appointed by President Andrew Johnson called "The Hunter Commission."

Counsel for the defendants objected to the Commission, arguing that the military had no jurisdiction over civilians, and therefore the proceeding was unconstitutional. The objection was overruled and the trial moved forward. Within seven weeks, the Commission (a two-thirds majority, not the unanimity required of a civilian jury) found four of the conspirators guilty. On July 7, 1865 they were hanged.

"The great fatal mistake of the American government in the prosecution of the assassins of Abraham Lincoln," wrote Rev.

Charles Chiniquy, the excommunicated priest whom Lincoln had successfully defended in his early law career (see note 2, Chapter 22), > was to cover up the religious element of that terrible drama. But this was carefully avoided throughout the trial.[2]

The religious element – the fact that all seven of the conspirators were devoted Roman Catholics – was carefully avoided because of who controlled the trial. As Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces, it was Johnson himself who quite constitutionally reigned supreme over the Hunter Commission. But Johnson was also a Freemason, which meant that he followed the wise directives of the Unknown Superior. Thus, the real power behind the Hunter Commission was Superior General Pieter Jean Beckx, a relatively young Belgian who was a great favorite of Pio Nono, Pope Pius IX, the only head of state in the world to recognize the Southern Confederacy as a sovereign nation. Obedient to the will of General Beckx, President Johnson issued an executive order closing the courtroom to the working press. At the end of each day, officials would ration to selected reporters from the Associated Press news carefully evaluated to keep "the religious element" out of the public consciousness.

Charles Chiniquy

Charles Chiniquy tirelessly investigated the assassination. After the conspirators were executed, he went incognito to Washington and found that > not a single one of the government men would discuss it with me except after I had given my word of honor that I would never mention their names. I saw, with a profound distress, that the influence of Rome was almost supreme in Washington. I could not find a single statesman who would dare to face that nefarious influence and fight it down.[3]

One official told him: “This was not through cowardice, as you might think, but through a wisdom you ought to approve, if you cannot admire it.” Had there not been censorship, had the witnesses been pressed a little further, “many priests would have been compromised, for Mary Surratt’s [one of the four executed conspirators] house was their common rendezvous; it is more than probable that several of them might have been hanged.”

Thirty years after the assassination, a member of the Hunter Commission, Brigadier General Thomas M. Harris, published a small book revealing that Lincoln’s assassination had actually been a Jesuit murder plot to extirpate a Protestant ruler. Harris stated:

> It is fact well established that the headquarters of the conspiracy was the house of a Roman Catholic family, of which Mrs. Mary E. Surratt was the head; and that all of its inmates, including a number of boarders, were devoted members of the Roman Catholic Church. This house was the meeting place, the council chamber, of Booth and his co-conspirators, including Mrs. Mary E. Surratt, and her son, John H. Surratt, who, next to Booth, were the most active members of the conspiracy.[4]

Commissioner Harris went on to relate that Mary Surratt’s son John had been a Confederate spy for three years, “passing back and forth between Washington and Richmond, and from Richmond to Canada and back, as a bearer of dispatches.” John’s mentor during this period was a Jesuit, Father B.F. Wiget, president of Gonzaga College and a priest noted for his sympathies for the Confederacy. John introduced Father Wiget to his mother and the priest became Mary Surratt’s confessor and spiritual director. As well, Father Wiget gave spiritual direction to the famous John Wilkes Booth who, though “a drunkard, a libertine, and utterly indifferent to matters of religion,” was spiritually attracted to him. “The wily Jesuit, sympathizing with Booth in his political views, and in the hope of destroying our government, and establishing the Confederacy ... was able to convert him to Catholicism.” Hard evidence of that conversion was found on the assassin’s corpse: “On examination of Booth’s person after his death, it was found that he was wearing a Catholic medal under his vest, and over his heart.”

At the conspiracy trial, Father Wiget testified to Mary Elizabeth Surratt's "good Christian character." Even assuming her complicity in the assassination, Wiget as a Jesuit could truthfully say Surratt was a good Christian simply by reserving mentally (a) that by "Christian" he meant "Roman Catholic;" (b) that under the terms of the Directorium Inquisitorum (see Chapter 8), "Every individual may kill a heretic;" and (c) that President Lincoln was twice a heretic: for his Protestantism and for his having successfully defended an excommunicated priest.

But Mary after all "kept the nest that hatched the egg," as President Johnson put it, and was hanged. Conditional to her death sentence was a provision that a petition for mercy would be attached and sent to Johnson. By execution day, July 7, 1865, Surratt's daughter Anna had heard nothing from the President. Distraught, she appeared at the White House to beg him for clemency. Two government men stood in her way. Preston King and Senator James Henry Lane denied her access to the President, who later declared he had never received any petition for mercy. The following November, Preston King drowned, his body laden with weights. In March, Senator Lane shot himself. (In the judgment of one modern investigator, "Some person or persons were apparently determined that Mary Surratt should not live."[5]) Shortly thereafter, the Supreme Court rendered a landmark decision that would have won all the conspirators a jury trial. Ex parte Milligan held that military courts have no jurisdiction over civilians. Milligan lent Mary Surratt's death at the hands of Protestants an aura of tragedy and Catholic martyrdom.

Charles Chiniquy obtained important testimony supporting the widely held suspicion of Jesuit responsibility for the assassination. He received from Rev. Francis A. Conwell, Chaplain of the first Minnesota Regiment, a sworn affidavit saying that on April 14, 1865, he was visiting St. Joseph, Minnesota, location of a Roman Catholic seminary. Rev. Conwell swore that at about six o'clock that evening the man in charge of the seminary, a storekeeper by the name of J.H. Linneman, told him and another visitor, Mr. H.P. Bennett, that President Lincoln had "just been killed."

The next day, Rev. Conwell journeyed ten miles to the town of St. Cloud. As soon as he arrived, he asked the hotelier, Mr. Haworth, if he had heard any news of a presidential assassination. Mr. Haworth had heard nothing, as St. Cloud had neither railroad nor telegraph. On the following morning, April 16th, on his way to preach a sermon in church, Rev. Conwell was handed a copy of a telegram brought up by stagecoach from Anoka, Minnesota. The telegram announced that President Lincoln had been assassinated on Friday evening at about nine o'clock.

On the morning of Monday the 17th, Rev. Conwell hurried to St. Paul and reported to the newspaper that in St. Joseph he had been informed of President Lincoln's assassination three hours before the event took place. The paper published his report.

"We have now before us," wrote Commissioner Harris, > positive evidence that these Jesuit Fathers, priests of Rome, engaged in preparing young men for the priesthood away out in the village of St. Joseph, in far off Minnesota, were in correspondence with their brethren in Washington City, and had been informed that the plan to assassinate the President had been matured, the agents for its accomplishment had been found, the time for its execution had been set, and so sure were they of its accomplishment, that they could announce it as already done, three or four hours before it had been consummated. The anticipation of its accomplishment so elated them that they could not refrain from passing it around ... as a piece of glorious news.

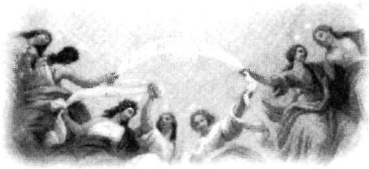
MEANWHILE, through the Lincoln assassination and its aftermath, the Vatican's artist, Constantino Brumidi, along with some seventy French and Italian assistants, applied pigmented mortar to the interior canopy of the Capitol dome. They were still working when the first session of the Thirty-ninth Congress met on December 4, 1865. Not until the following January did the scaffolding come down. When it did, viewers were awestruck by what they beheld. Brumidi had crowned the ceiling of America's legislative center with a glorious, panoramic visualization from Book VI of Virgil's Aeneid, where Aeneas' blind father, Anchises, explains

> "Here is Caesar, and all the line of Julius, all who shall one day pass under the dome of the great sky. This is the man, this one, of whom so often you have heard the promise, Caesar Augustus, son of the deified, who shall bring once again an Age of Gold to Latium, the land where Saturn reigned in early times. He will extend his power beyond the Garamants [Africans] and Indians, over far territories north and south of the zodiacal stars, the solar way...."

The epicenter of "Apotheosis of Washington" is a solar orb, the Sun-God into which Augustus Caesar was said to have been absorbed when his body died. From the Capitol's highest interior point Augustus radiates his golden light outward and downward to the next in the "line of Julius," the deified George Washington. The god Washington occupies the judgment seat of heaven, sword of Justice firmly clasped in his left hand. Basking in the light of Augustus – Pontifex Maximus – he rules "over far territories north and south of the zodiacal stars, the solar way." Like his Caesarean forebears, Washington is God, Caesar, Father of his Country.

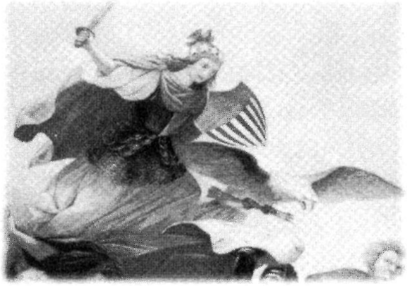
On the right hand of the Father sits Minerva, holding the emblem of Roman totalitarianism, the fasces. Minerva, we recall, was the virgin goddess of the Sacred Heart – it was she who rescued the heart of the Son of God, and placed it with Jupiter in heaven. She was called "Minerva" when praised for her justice and wisdom. When praised for her beauty and love, Minerva was known as Venus, the Queen of Heaven. She and Venus were often identified with each other, just as statues of both were reconsecrated "Mary" through Roman Catholic missionary adaptation. Minerva's most persistent role in ancient paganism was Dea Benigna, "The Mediatrix." She heard the prayers of sinful mortals and passed them on to Jupiter, in the same way the Roman Mary is believed to pass Catholic prayers on to Christ.

Completing the circular composition around the solarized Augustus are thirteen nubile goddesses. These are the original States. They dance weightlessly in space, supporting a white banner inscribed with the soul of the Bacchic Gospel, "E PLURIBUS UNUM." Above the head of each State-goddess floats a magical white pentagram.



The States

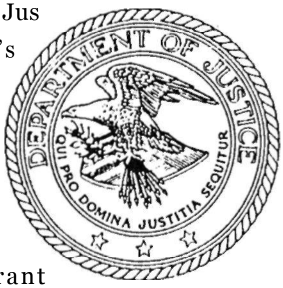
Beneath all this celestial revelry, Brumidi painted more Roman gods mingling with American mortals. Here is Vulcan, the god of fire and craftsmanship, planting his foot on a cannon, while his workers prepare munitions and weapons of death and destruction. And over here Neptune rises with his trident from the sea in a horse-drawn scallop-shell chariot. And here the wise Mediatrix communicates with American scientists Benjamin Franklin, Samuel F. B. Morse, inventor of the Code, and Robert Fulton, inventor of the steamship.



The Virgin pursues evildoers

And here, the Goddess Immaculately Conceived, the Dreadnaught Mary. Wearing the pentagrams and eagle headdress of Thomas Crawford's statue atop the dome's exterior, she mobilizes her sword and shield against a pack of fleeing sinners labeled "Tyranny" and "Kingly Power." Jupiter's mascot, the Roman eagle, glides just behind her clutching a bunch of thunderbolts in his talons. Innocent in her flowing scarlet cape, the Goddess is situated exactly beneath the deified George Washington, coming between him and the embattled viewing public gazing up from ground level. It is the graphic realization of Pio Nono's Ubi primum, which decreed the Virgin Mary was "set up between Christ and his Church, always delivering the Christian people from their greatest calamities and from the snares and assaults of all their enemies."

The eagle gliding behind Mary explains the otherwise inscrutable seal of the United States Justice Department, which contains a wingspread eagle surrounded by the motto "QUI PRO DOMINA JUSTITIA SEQUITUR" ("He who follows the Goddess Justice"). Persephone, or Minerva the Mediatrix, when judging the sinfully dead in Hades was called Justitia, or Justice. The "HE" of the Justice Department's motto identifies the eagle, symbol of Rome. Rome follows the Goddess Justice – that is, the Immaculately Conceived Mother of God in her judicial capacity.



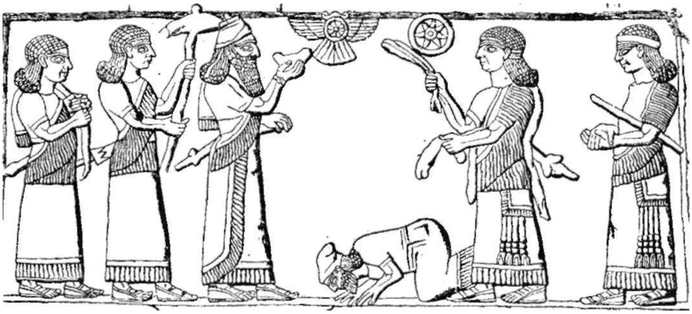
DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE
QUI PRO DOMINA JUSTITIA SEQUITUR

A rainbow sweeps across the lower quadrant of the Dome of the Sky from Benjamin Franklin to a young boy wearing a Smurf-cap and a toga. The boy attends a goddess who reclines on a large horse-drawn reaper. She is Persephone's mother Ceres, who was reconsecrated by early missionary adaptation as Anna, mother of the Virgin Mary. The golden boy is officially designated "Young America." Although Brumidi has hidden the boy's face from us, he deserves our careful scrutiny for one very important reason. Bearing the name "America," he is the only element in the sacred national iconography that defines the character of the American person as perceived by government.

YOUNG AMERICA

Young America's Smurf-cap is a style of headgear known as the "Phrygian cap." Phrygia was a district in the Kingdom of Pergamum. We remember Pergamum. It was the middle point in the transfer of Babylonian religion westward to Rome. Phrygia is a Greek word meaning "freemen" (our English word "free" comes from the first syllable, "phry-"). Phrygian caps were given to freed Roman slaves to indicate their new liberated status. Roman law regards liberty as a conditional status. Once granted by a patron, it could be revoked at any time for cause. Phrygian-cap freedom, then, means liberty (freed Roman slaves, by the way, were called "liberti") to please Caesar. We remember from Chapter 8 how Ignatius described such freedom in Section 353.1 of his Exercises: "We must put aside all judgment of our own, and keep the mind ever ready and prompt to obey in all things the hierarchical Church." Of course, those liberti bold enough to protest what their superiors commanded lost their freedom, no matter how lucid and reasonable their own judgment might have been. They were reverted to slavery. Since the advent of the Febronian State Church, the reversion of protestant liberti, or Protestants, to slavery has been so methodically insidious that it's hardly noticeable. The shackles are psychological, humanely fitted by increasing varieties of spiritual exercise. Like Aeneas, Anchises, Julius Ascanius and their Trojan followers, most Americans are indeed Phrygian-cap freemen, free to sacrifice their individuality to the greater glory of Rome.

The Black Obelisk of Calah, which stands in the Babylonian-Assyrian Wing of the British Museum, records the great accomplishments of the ninth-century BC god-king Shalmaneser II. In a scene depicting various monarchs paying obeisance to Babylon, we see one monarch kneeling before Shalmaneser, worshiping him. Shalmaneser in turn offers a sacrifice to an eight-pointed star set within a bird's wings and tail-feathers. Inscriptions identify this kneeling monarch as King Jehu of Israel. Remarkably, according to the New Catholic Encyclopedia, Jehu's likeness here is the only known contemporaneously-rendered portrait of a biblical personage. More remarkably, Jehu is wearing the Phrygian cap. Like Brumidi's Young America, Jehu's liberty is subject to the mood of his god-king.



THE FREEDOM CAP
Jehu submitting to Shalmaneser

The Bible confirms the testimony of the Black Obelisk. At II Kings 10:31 we read: "Jehu took no heed to walk in the law of the Lord God of Israel with all his heart." Scripture further tells us that Jehu worshiped the golden calf, a sacred Babylonian icon made fashionable in tenth-century-BC Israel by Jehu's predecessor, Jeroboam. Jeroboam renounced "the law of the Lord God of Israel" and instituted... democracy. Democracy opened the Israelite priesthood, originally appointed by Yahweh exclusively to the family of Levi, to all applicants. Consequently, Yahweh's priesthood was infiltrated by non-believers and foreign sympathizers. They prepared the way for Jehu to make of himself a Phrygian freeman, obligated to concur with obedience of the understanding in all things which his superior, Shalmaneser II, commanded – exactly as the Black Obelisk explains in lucid visual terms. As a direct result of Jehu's departure from the God of Israel, the Israelite nation began falling apart. It was ultimately destroyed by Caesarean Rome, the legitimate heir to Shalmaneser's Babylonian authority as it passed down through Pergamum.

Running throughout this cosmic Battle of the Faiths is a highly refined cabalah involving the concept of "golden calf." The word "calf" in Hebrew, the language of Jehu and Jeroboam, is צגל, pronounced "eagle." Whereas Jehu gave his people Shalmaneser's golden צגל to worship, the Church Militant has trained the American public to worship Rome's golden eagle, which surmounts every flagpole. Could it be that if we show respect, affection, or loyalty toward the national eagle we create the presumption of worshiping the golden calf, and so alienate ourselves from the God of the Bible and in the vacuum find ourselves under the rule of the Church Militant?

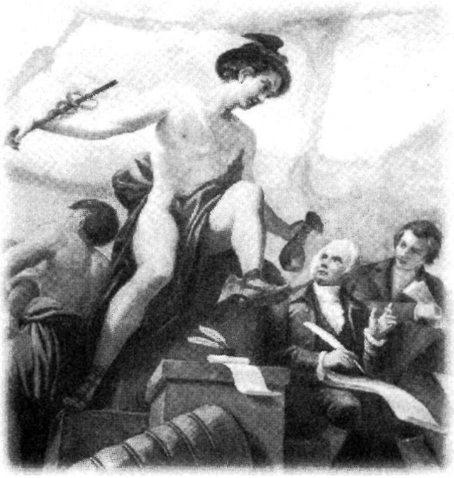
ACCORDING to J.C. Judson, in his Biography of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence, as General Washington was planning his famous expedition against Cornwallis at Yorktown, "the army was destitute, the government treasury was empty, her credit shivering in the wind." Suddenly, a miracle in the annals of philanthropy occurred. Robert Morris, Superintendent of Finance, the highest officer in the United States under the Articles of Confederation (1781), personally raised eighty cannon and a hundred pieces of field artillery. In addition, he raised "all other necessary supplies not furnished from other sources" and became personally > responsible to the amount of $1,400,000 upon his own notes, which were promptly paid at maturity. This enabled the American army to give the finishing stroke to the revolution, and triumph, in victory complete, over a proud and merciless foe.

So goes a historian's version of how Robert Morris saved America. The official version is revealed in Constantino Brumidi's "Apotheosis of Washington." Here we see Superintendent Morris gazing up from his accounts ledger at yet another Roman deity. We recognize the deity from the familiar caduceus in his right hand, from the winged sandal he's thrust to within kissing distance of Morris' lips, and from the shadowy bag of gold he tantalizingly dangles in Morris' face. The deity is Mercury, the Psychopomp, the Trickster, the patron deity of commerce, deceivers, and thieves. Mercury, the brilliant, lovable Pied-Piper deity who deceives the souls of sinful humanity into following him exuberantly down into the oblivion of Hades. Just as Sebastiano Ricci's painting subtly established Mercury as the guiding spirit of modern Roman Catholicism, Brumidi's painting acknowledges the same deity's ascendancy over the fulfillment of the American Revolution.



Mercury & Robert Morris

Amazing stuff, these pictures. And like so many of the testimonies presented in this book – the supremacy of the Church Militant, the publication of Sun-Tzuan strategies in a western language, the names, the numbers, the dates, the locus and layout of the federal city, the architecture, the statuary, the monuments, the emblems, the frescoes, the ceremonies – they come not from the Trickster's victims, but from the Trickster himself. It's as if the point of the trick is to warn the victim beforehand, in words and pictures, that he or she is about to be tricked. A con is much sweeter when the mark actually consents to the con. That way, the Trickster's conscience is clear.

CONSTANTINO Brumidi continued decorating the Dome of the Great Sky well into his seventies. In 1879, at the age of 74, while painting "Penn's Treaty with the Indians" on the Rotunda frieze, he slipped from a scaffold. Dangling fifty-eight feet from the marble floor, he held on until help came. He escaped a deadly fall. But the shock of the experience killed him a few months later.

Chapter 24

THE MARK OF CAIN

“The mark of Cain is stamped upon our foreheads. Across the centuries, our brother Abel has lain in blood which we drew, and shed tears we caused by forgetting Thy love.”

—Pope John XXIII, A Prayer (1960), cited in VICARS OF CHRIST

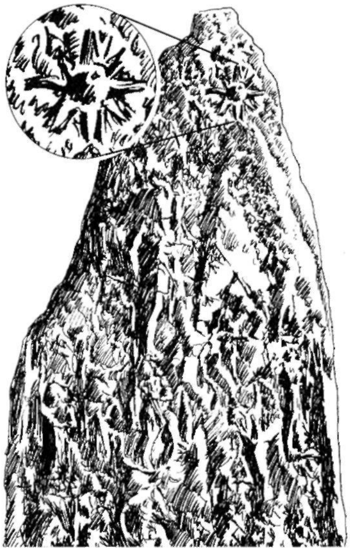
WE LIVE IN THE New World Order, just as people under Augustus Caesar did. Not a future thing to be feared or avoided, the New World Order is a present reality to be identified, understood, and dealt with in a way most pleasing to God. It was God, after all, who established the New World Order. We can read about it in the Bible. In fact, the Bible is the only record we have that publicly and truthfully sets forth the essentials of the Order’s origins and development through time.

The Bible records the great decisive events in the progress of human life up to the close of the first century AD. Creation of earth and the fullness thereof, creation of man and woman, their turning away from God, the first conception, the first birth, the first sacrifice, the first murder, the first insignia, the first city, the first and only great flood, the surviving family and its peculiar relationship through time with God – all of this momentous data is given in the Bible with a stark truthfulness that is invariably supported, often to the surprise of many, by the results of scientific inquiry. The writers of the Bible, Israelite prophets inspired by their God Yahweh, held no monopoly on reporting these events. Priests of other nations reported them, too. But in doing so, they cunningly adapted them to fit prevailing administrative needs. The result of their adaptations is what we call mythology.

One very persistent myth, based on a crucial event accounted for in the Bible, explained to people under Babylonian rulership the divine origin of their government. This was the myth of Marduk.[1]



The Naram-Sin [Enoch] Stele, with Annu's name over the mountain-top.

The myth of Marduk begins with Annu, "the head deity of Babylonian mythology,"[2] looking down upon earth in dismay. The land is in chaos, overrun by flood-waters and monstrous serpents. Annu senses that bringing order to such chaos is a job for Marduk, the first-born son of the moon goddess Ea. So Annu summons Marduk and asks him to organize the earth. Marduk agrees to the task, but "only on the condition that he be made first among the gods and that his word shall have the force of the decree of Annu."[3] Annu accepts Marduk's terms and vests him with "the powers and insignia of kingship – and Marduk's word was declared to have the authority of Annu." Armed with divine power, Marduk goes to earth and separates dry land from sea. He polices the monsters, and any evildoer foolish enough to oppose him receives the wrath of God.

The result of Marduk's ordination was depicted in the Stele of Naram-Sin, now in the Louvre. In this very ancient Babylonian monument, Annu is shown imbuing Naram-Sin (Enoch to the Marduk policing the evildoer Tiamat with thunderbolts. From a bas-relief on the walls of the palace of the Assyrian king Assur-nasir-pal (9th century bc at Calah, now in the British Museum). Note the repeated Annu signature in the sacred hem of Marduk's garment. And the scythe under his left arm: is the artist subtly revealing that Marduk was once a farmer?

Hebrews) with power over a mass of other beings. Annu's name, seen in the tip of the stele, is the cuneiform symbol for "heaven," the double-cross, or ✳ Marduk wears the Annu signature like a cop with his badge. It makes him a god. In fact, the ordination-of-power iconography of ancient Babylonian nations was never without it. Even today (see Appendix: "Fifty Centuries of the Annu Signature"), we find it in the flag of Great Britain, said to be the union of St. Andrew's Scottish cross and St. George's English cross. We find it prominently displayed in the decor of government buildings, especially courtrooms. It forms the motif for much of the decorative architecture of the U.S. Supreme Court Building, interior and exterior. The pavement surrounding the Obelisk of Caligula in St. Peter's Piazza, where the multitudes stand to receive papal edicts and blessings, is inlaid with a gigantic Annu signature. No doubt about it: a very ancient symbol has remained consistently identified with the presence of rulership. Could it be that a symbol of so much power is based on a myth? Or is it based on the fact from which the myth sprang?

THE sensitive Bible-reader immediately sees in the myth of Marduk a missionary adaptation of the biblical account of Cain. The two protagonists are remarkably similar. Both Cain and Marduk were firstborn sons of mothers bearing almost the same name: Marduk, son of Ea; Cain, son of Eve. Both firstborns were appointed to rule over evil, albeit for different reasons: Marduk because of his heroism, Cain because of his own wickedness.[4] So that they might move effectively among evildoers, both were given protective seals of immunity by the God of Heaven. God said to Cain,

> Therefore whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him sevenfold. And the Lord set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him.[5]

In Marduk's case, the evildoers were chaotic beings ruining Annu's earth. Cain's evildoers were persons who might slay him because he had become a homeless trespasser. The Bible details exactly why Cain became homeless. His farm refused to yield harvests because he had defiled the soil with the blood of his brother. Cain "rose up against Abel his brother and slew him." We're not told why. It may have been jealous rage, and it may not. Nothing in Scripture indicates that Cain hated Abel. The most we know of their relationship is that "Cain talked with his brother," and afterward, in a field, murdered him.[6] Nor are we given details of the murder, except that it was bloody.[7] The blood is an important clue as to motive.

We know that Cain was first crestfallen then angry at God for preferring Abel's sacrifice to his own.[8] Abel, the shepherd, sacrificed lambs from his flock.[9] Cain, the farmer, apparently thinking sacrifice was about returning the best of his productivity to God, sacrificed the best of his harvest. God found Cain's sacrifice offensive and Abel's pleasing.[10] Elsewhere in Scripture we learn why. It involves a principle that is very difficult for many of us to comprehend. The principle is this: without shedding of blood there is no remission of sin.[11] Abel pleased God because he shed blood, the blood of sacrificial animals.

The great teaching of the Bible is that the death sentence mankind has inherited from the original breaking of God's Law by Cain's parents ("Thou shalt not eat of the fruit...") is pardonable only by death, by the extreme act of shedding blood fatally. This teaching is the bedrock of the Old Testament and the whole point of the New. In the Old Testament, the people of God were pardoned the sinfulness inherited from Adam by shedding the blood of animals, as Abel had dutifully done. In the New, the people of God were pardoned this same sinfulness by doing exactly as Cain had done, shedding the blood of a man. To this day, according to the Scriptures, all who believe that Jesus Christ's blood has power to remit sins are imputed sinless by God.[12] Imputed sinless, their sentence of eternal separation from God is commuted, and they are given eternal life in Heaven.[13]

Now, Scripture does not tell us that God ever explained the purpose of blood sacrifice to Cain.[14] But we know that God is the greatest of all teachers. And we know he wants the best for mankind. It's unthinkable, then, that He would want Cain ignorant of the life-saving effect of blood sacrifice. He must have taught Cain as thoroughly as he taught Abel. And Cain must have listened attentively, for we know he was anxious to please God – otherwise, why would he have been angry and crestfallen at learning of God's dissatisfaction with his sacrifice? But Cain was more creative than obedient. It's entirely consistent with his character for him to have decided > Okay, if it's blood sacrifice He wants, I'll give Him the sacrifice He deserves, a better sacrifice than lambs: I'll give Him the blood of an innocent man!

Cain's intent was evil only in that he sought to improve on what God had commanded, in the way Saul improved on God's commandment to annihilate the Amalekites by sparing their king and certain valuable livestock.[15] Cain knew the logic of God – he was, after all, the first human being born with the knowledge of good and evil. And we know from what happened to Jesus that God's logic calls for the sacrifice of the only One whose perfect innocence overcame death. In his obsession to please God, wouldn't Cain have regarded spilling Abel's blood as the ultimate godliness?

What I am suggesting is that, in Cain's mind, Abel was not so much murdered as sacrificed, nailed to Annu's very name — — hanged upon a cross! Wouldn't this explain why Scripture shows no evidence that Cain sensed any guilt? Wouldn't it also explain the hundreds of ancient, pre-Christian myths of young shepherds (such as Tammuz, Bacchus, Attis, Mithras) who were slain in cold blood by various villains only to rise from the dead, their shed blood having supposedly propitiated original sin and resurrected them to eternal life? The myths, obviously based on the fact of Abel's crucifixion, all pointed to a universally anticipated event foretold by the Israelite prophets: Messiah's death and resurrection, which would pardon the sins of mankind and restore eternal life.

Thus emerges the possibility that the "lamb slain from the foundation of the world" mentioned at Revelation 13:8 might have indeed been Abel, God's first obedient servant. For it is a fact that "the World" – by which the New Testament writers meant the ordering of human institutional systems which God admitted into existence – did actually begin, as we are about to see, in the immediate aftermath of Abel's death. If this is the case, then mankind owes a strange debt to Cain. No Cain, no death of Abel. No death of Abel, no World. No World, no incarnation of God as only begotten Son. No Son of God, no true death and resurrection. No true death and resurrection, no hope of mankind for eternal intimacy with God.

IT was the complaint of an earth outraged by Abel's spilt blood that moved God to banish Cain from his accustomed habitat forever. Just as Marduk demanded protection from the monsters he had been asked to control, Cain demanded protection from possible assailants in his exile. God graciously accommodated Cain by "set[ting] a mark" upon him which made Cain seven times more powerful than any mortal competitor. The mark served as the very "powers and insignia of kingship" Annu had granted Marduk. It empowered Cain to rule all human beings likely to challenge his protective mark, beings unafraid of Yahweh's name,[16] beings who shared Cain's environs "out from the presence of the Lord."[17]

Armed with his mark, Cain began the rulership of evil. The Bible accounts for Cain's movements after his ordination. He took a wife and sired a son. Then, he built a city and named it after his son, "Enoch."[18] Centuries later, Enoch disappeared under the silt of Noah's flood. It passed from memory to mystery to oblivion, until the 1840s, when archaeologists following the Bible's descriptions of Babylonia began excavating in present-day Iraq. Along the Euphrates River, near Al Khidr, they discovered numerous strata of ancient settlements. The deepest stratum, beneath which there was nothing but bedrock, had called itself Unuk. "Unuk was founded on the oldest bricks," declared one of the leading archaeologists, a renowned classical linguist from Queens College, Oxford, named Archibald Sayce.

Having deciphered and evaluated large numbers of clay tablets from the site, Professor Sayce issued the opinion in 1887 that Unuk was indeed biblical Enoch, the city built by Cain and his son.[19] Lecturing at Oxford, Sayce also pointed out that one of Cain's mythological names was Marduk[20] – an important contribution to the Marduk-equals-Cain hypothesis. Unuk's dominant temple bore the title "house of Annu," further enhancing the probability that Marduk's myth was spun from Cain's murder of Abel. As ruler of Unuk, Cain was known as Sargon – or, as other translators have rendered the spelling, Shargani, Sarrukinu, Sargoni, etc.[21] These variations of Sargon are composites of the Babylonian shar, meaning "king" and gani, kinu, or goni, meaning "Cain."[22] It would be hard to say Sargon means anything other than "King Cain."

Unuk had been no primitive village. Encyclopedia Britannica noted that "transparent glass seems to have been first introduced in the reign of Sargon."[23] Sargon built a metropolis of enormous complexity. But what astonished the archaeologists most was the city's miraculous historical suddenness. Unuk seemed to have materialized from out of nowhere:

> We have found, in short, abundant remains of a bronze culture, but no traces of preceding ages of development such as meet us on early Egyptian sites.[24]

The suddenness factor severely challenged those scholars who viewed history through Darwinian anti-biblicalism, which had become the fashion in Jesuit-influenced academic circles. To fit evolutionary theory, Unuk should have evidenced development from a much older civilization. As a contributor to the London Times' prestigious Historians' History of the World grumbled,

> Surely such a people as this could not have sprung into existence as a Deus ex Machina [a person or thing introduced or appearing unexpectedly so as to provide an artificial or contrived solution to an otherwise insoluble problem]. It must have had its history – a history which presupposes development of several centuries more.[25]

But Unuk as a social organization had no previous history. This maddening circumstance drove the British Museum's H. R. Hall to rationalize that its "ready-made" culture must have been "brought into Mesopotamia from abroad."[26] Modern anti-biblicists find it easier to accept that Unuk's sudden complexity came from other galaxies than from something as simple as... acquiring divine intelligence from biting into a piece of forbidden fruit. Of course, eating the fruit of disobedience is how the Bible explains the suddenness factor. Cain had extraordinary powers because he inherited from his parents the knowledge of good and evil which the Trickster had encouraged them to obtain at the price of eternal life.[27] In Mrs. Bristowe's words: "Cain was born and bred in the atmosphere of the miraculous; his parents were possessed of supernatural knowledge, some of which must have been imparted to their children."[28]

King Cain was no primitive chieftain. On one of his many autobiographical inscriptions, he boasted that "in multitudes of bronze chariots I rode over rugged lands … I governed the upper countries," and "three times to the sea I have advanced."[29] A brilliant, well-organized military emperor – the prototypical Caesar – Cain controlled a "vast empire." The Cambridge History tells us he divided his imperium > from the [Persian Gulf] to the [Mediterranean], from the rising to the setting of the sun into districts of five double hours march each, over which he placed the 'sons of his palace.' By these delegates of his authority he ruled the hosts of the lands together.[30]

Cain's empire was founded on slavery[31] – the inevitable result of one man's retributive power exceeding all others sevenfold. For the most part, however, it appears that Cain exercised his advantage in the public interest. Professor Sayce tells us that his empire was "full of schools and libraries, of teachers and pupils, and poets and prose writers, and of the literary works which they had composed." Furthermore, > the empire was bound together by roads, along which there was a regular postal service, and clay seals which took the place of stamps are now in the Louvre bearing the name of Sargon and his son…. It is probable that the first collection of astronomical observations and terrestrial omens was made for a library established by Sargon.[32]

The insignia of power and kingship did not vanish with Cain's death. That Cain built the original city with his son implies that the mark was intended to be an hereditary entitlement. The son's name implies that he received the power of the mark from his father. "Enoch" in Hebrew means "the initiated" – to be inducted by special rites, to be instructed in the rudiments or principles of something." Scripture implies that Enoch and perhaps Cain in turn initiated other deputies and successors. Four generations after Cain's birth, we find Enoch's great-great grandson Lamech still exercising, in fact augmenting, the prerogative of divine vengeance:

> Lamech said to his wives, "Adah and Zillah, listen to me; wives of Lamech, hear my words. I have killed a man for wounding me, a young man for injuring me. If Cain is avenged seven times, then Lamech seventy-seven times."[34]

Receiving authority to govern requires taking an oath which binds the initiate to a code of rights and responsibilities. Interestingly, our word "oath" is cognate with the Hebrew אות (pronounced "oath"), which is the word translated "mark" at Genesis 4:15, "the Lord set a mark upon Cain." Knowing this, we may accurately say "the Lord put Cain under oath," an oath visibly represented by the various insignia governments display. The mark, then, stands for a covenant between God and Cain. It is not the all-encompassing sort of covenant which God struck with the humbly obedient Abraham – "And I will establish my covenant between me and thee and thy seed after thee in their generations for an everlasting covenant, to be a God unto thee, and to thy seed after thee."[35] Cain's unwillingness to obey the letter of Yahweh's commandments made him unfit for intimacy with the divine. In Cain's own words, "from thy face shall I be hid."[36] The exile covenant was strictly limited to assuring God's vengeance against anyone who would threaten Cain's life. In matters of wisdom, correction, instruction in righteousness, Cain was on his own. He was on his own, also, if he should try to attack the peaceful. The mark was a covenant of retribution only.

Early on, Cain saw there was great profit in provoking assailants. The more enemies, the more spectacular the displays of vengeance. The more vengeance, the more justice; the more justice, the more power to Cain; a more powerful Cain could do more excellent public works. Thus, it became essential to the self-interest of the bearer of the mark – which remains to this day a first principle of ordered government – to provoke and encourage evildoing, particularly the form that manifests itself in rebellion.

Cain terrorized evil with awesome dependability. His faith that God would avenge his enemies made him a highly reliable public protector. Down through the ages, righteous people could live secure in the knowledge that the mark-bearer would stop at nothing to persecute evildoers. This fact is marvelously declared in Scripture. In the seventh century BC, the mark-bearing Babylonians were appointed by God to capture the wayward Israelites and show them some harsh discipline. Israel couldn't understand why God would put a vain, evil Babylonian king over His own chosen people. God explained saying: "See, he is puffed up, and his desires are not upright, but the righteous shall live by his faith."[37]

How has the mark managed to remain vibrant for nearly six thousand years? Grand Commander Albert Pike, in his influential Morals and Dogma, threw valuable light on the subject. He declared that "from the earliest time," Freemasonry has been the "custodian and depository" of the "symbols, emblems, and allegories ... erected by Enoch."[38] The Commander was careful to say he meant not Cain's son Enoch, but the Bible's other Enoch, Enoch-2, the good Enoch, the Enoch "who walked with God."[39] However, his attempt to dissociate his institution from Cain puts the Commander at variance with Masonic and biblical chronology. For if a biblical Enoch erected the earliest imagery of Freemasonry, it could not possibly have been Enoch-2. It had to have been Enoch-1. Let's examine the chronology.

Enoch-2 was descended from Seth, whom Eve conceived after the death of Abel – "for God, said she, hath appointed me another seed instead of Abel, whom Cain slew."[40] When Eve conceived Seth, Adam was 130 years old.[41] According to the scripturally faithful computations of the Archbishop of Armagh, James Ussher (1581–1656), Adam was created in 4004 BC. Thus, Seth was born in 3874 BC. Genesis 5:6–20 gives us an exact toll of the years between Seth and his great-great-great-great grandson Enoch-2:

Father	Son	Age of father at son's birth
Seth	Enos	105
Enos	Cainan	90
Cainan	Mahaleel	70
Mahaleel	Jared	65
Tared	Enoch-2	162
	Total years	492

According to the Bible, Enoch-2 was born 492 years after the birth of Seth, or in 3382 BC. NOW, Commander Pike's book, Morals and Dogma, reckons its date of publication in both Christian (1871 AD) and Masonic (5680 AM) chronology. To find out the beginning of Masonic history – that "earliest time" in which Enoch erected his "symbols, emblems, and allegories" – in terms of Christian chronology, we subtract the given Christian year from its Masonic equivalent (1871 from 5680). This gives us a first Masonic year of 3809 BC.[42] But the figures show that Enoch-2 was not born until 3382, some 427 years after Freemasonry's "earliest time"! Enoch-2 could not possibly have erected the prototypical symbolic devices of which Freemasonry has ever been custodian and depository. However, Cain's son, Enoch-1, very well could have!

Cain began his wandering after Abel's death, which the Bible marks with Seth's conception and Adam's age, 130 years, in about 3876 BC. If we give Cain ten years to find a wife, settle down, and sire a child, Enoch-1 would have been born in 3866 BC. This would make him a 55-year-old man in the first Masonic year, 3809. At that age, Enoch-1 would have been fully equipped to erect symbols and allegories memorializing his father's divine appointment to rule populations "out from the presence of the Lord."[43]

Incidentally, Professor Sayce placed Cain in Masonry's early years against his previous determinations. Sayce admitted to being compelled by the scholarly diligence of a latter-day Babylonian king to accept the evidence that Sargon lived as early as four thousand years before Christ:

> The last king of Babylonia, Nabonidas, had antiquarian > tastes, and busied himself not only with the restoration of the old temples of his country, but also with the disinterment of the memorial cylinders which their builders and restorers had buried beneath their foundation. It was known that the great temple of the Sun-god at Sippara … had originally been erected by Naram-Sin [Enoch], the son of Sargon, and attempts had been already made to find the records which, it was assumed, he had entombed under its angles. With true antiquarian zeal, Nabonidas continued the search until he had lighted upon 'the foundation stone' of Naram-Sin himself. This 'foundation-stone' he tells us had been seen by none of his predecessors for 3200 years. In the opinion, accordingly, of Nabonidas, a king who was curious about the past history of his country, and whose royal position gave him the best possible opportunities for learning all that could be known about it, Naram-Sin and his father Sargon lived 3200 years before his own time, or 3750 BC.

What we see in the Bible's account of how Unuk came about is nothing less than the foundation of the world's legal system. That God would ordain an evil man to administer the law makes sublime sense to me.

In our final chapter, I shall ask your indulgence in a few personal reflections of my own as to how a system designed to process evil can do as much good as it does.

Chapter 25

THE TWO MINISTRIES

> "The years pass so quickly – where do they go? – so quickly, and then we get old. We never knew what any of it was about."
>
> —WOODY ALLEN, RADIO DAYS

WHAT, TO ME, makes the Bible such an inviting resource is the vigor with which the rulers of evil have suppressed its unlicensed reading. It's been my experience that as predictably as such rulers play with truth, the Bible forthrightly tells it.

The previous chapters have been written in the presumption that ruling institutions are what they say they are (under the Cain covenant they must truthfully identify their origins, which they do with cabalah). It's only fair, then, that I write this chapter in the presumption that the Bible really is what it says it is. It claims to be the unique, revealed Word of God,[1] and the veritable literary embodiment of Jesus Christ.[2] If we disbelieve that claim, we must disbelieve all the mottoes, insignia, bulls, encyclicals, laws, acts, ordinations, constitutions, oaths, and decrees of the rulers of evil.

According to God (as given in Scripture), the purpose of law is to regulate evildoers. Hear the apostle Paul:

> We also know that law is made not for the righteous but for lawbreakers and rebels, the ungodly and sinful, the unholy and irreligious; for those who kill their fathers or mothers, for murderers, for adulterers and perverts, for slave traders and liars and perjurers – and for whatever else is contrary to the sound doctrine that conforms to the glorious gospel of the blessed God.[3]

In other words, any behavior not conforming to "the glorious gospel" of God belongs to the law, which, obviously from its subject matter, is a jurisdiction foreign to Jesus Christ.

Scripture teaches us that the glorious gospel commands (1) repenting of sinful lifestyles,[4] (2) loving neighbor as oneself,[5] (3) loving and blessing one's enemies,[6] (4) giving freely without thought of reward,[7] (5) forgiving debts and injuries,[8] and (6) preaching that whoever believes the evidence of Christ's life, death, and resurrection enters the royal family of God for all eternity.[9] Not every personality is drawn to the glorious gospel,[10] although Scripture tells us that everyone is asked (in some way) to know it.[11] For the protection of those drawn to the glorious gospel, and for the management of those foreign to it, there exists the "rule of law." Rule of law is the system by which authorities bearing Cain's "powers and insignia of kingship" rule the World. Very briefly, it compares with the glorious gospel in the following ways:

Glorious gospel	Rule of law
Repent of sinful lifestyle	Manage sinful lifestyle
Love neighbor as oneself	Achieve advantage over neighbor
Love and bless one's enemies	Conquer one's enemies by legal means
Give freely without thought of reward	Give requiring reward
Forgive debts and injuries	Enforce payment of debts and injuries with interest
Preach that whoever believes the evidence of Christ's life, death, and resurrection enters the royal family of God for all eternity	Preach the absentee, impersonal God of Cain, Deism, and other faiths

The following table shows how readily the Roman Catholic Church-State organism conforms to the rule of law:

Rule of law	Secular Government	Roman Catholicism
Manage sinful lifestyle	Legislation, police, criminal justice, philanthropy, media	Pontification, Inquisitioi the Holy Sacraments, media
Competition: Achieve advantage over neighbor	Self-interested political action, competition, partisanism, nationalism	Self-interested political action in the guise of eci menism (e.g., Trent)
Conquer one's enemies by legal means	War and emergency powers, Darwinian survivalism, patriotism	"End justifies the means" rationale of the Church Militant (Regimini militantis ecclesiae)
Give, requiring reward	Profit-based trade and commerce	Salvation earned by good works; the selling of indulgences
Enforce payment of debts and injuries with interest	Judiciary, police	Forgiveness of sins in exchange for payments and penances
Preach the absentee, impersonal God of Cain, Deism, and other faiths	Preaching "In God We Trust" while prohibiting Bibles in schools	Praying to saints for intercession with an absentee, impersonal Saviour

The rule of law is what Scripture calls a "ministration of condemnation."[12] The "strength" of the rule of law is sin.[13] This is observable in how law is at its most vibrant when ferreting out, prosecuting, and punishing crime. Officials of the rule of law are called "ministers of righteousness, whose end shall be according to their works."[14] (I take this to mean "Good works, good end; bad works, bad end.") As might be expected of a ministry appointed to Cain, who Scripture tells us was "of that wicked one,"[13] the ministration of condemnation – the rule of law – belongs to Satan. It is a shocking thing to realize that, according to Scripture, world law is Satan's province. But surprisingly, Scripture also teaches that a certain degree of cordiality exists between God and Satan.

We learn from the book of Job that Satan is welcome in God's heavenly throne room,[16] even though he has led a rebellion in Heaven for which one third of the angelic population were cast out.[17] His business consists of "going to and fro in the earth, walking up and down in it."[18] Since he is an angel, and therefore incapable of a bodily existence, Satan can only affect human affairs by (1) providing spiritual direction to human beings who consent to him as "the god of this world,"[19] and (2) manipulating the forces of nature as "prince of the power of the air."[20] To secure popular consent to his spiritual direction, he employs his supernatural abilities to make himself irresistibly attractive. He's an angel of light,[21] the author of the humanist extravaganza – pomp and circumstance, breathtaking visual experience, disorienting emotionalism, architecture that overwhelms. He means to convince us (1) that he wields the power of God Almighty on earth, and (2) that we are therefore bound to follow his moral guidance.[22] Jesus Christ agreed with the first proposition (and in so doing affirmed, in my opinion, the covenant between God and Cain), but admonished Satan that only the written word of God is fit to guide mankind and Trickster alike.[23] Quite apart from its infallible moral guidance, the written word of God appears to be the only truthful disclosure of Satan's origin, scope, and purpose. Its potential for damaging his appeal is why the highest rulers of law have traditionally prohibited, or at least not diligently encouraged, Bible reading.

THE earliest Christians well understood Rome's indispensable satanic role in human affairs. In the legal process which Christ established for members of his Church, the harshest sentence an offender could receive was abandonment to Caesarean authority:

> If your brother sins against you, go and show him his fault, just between the two of you. If he listens to you, you have won your brother over. But if he will not listen, take one or two others along, so that 'every matter may be established by the testimony of two or three witnesses.' If he refuses to listen to them, tell it to the church; and if he refuses to listen even to the church, treat him as you would a pagan or a tax collector.[24]

Writing about "Hymenaeus and Alexander, whom I have handed over to Satan to be taught not to blaspheme,"[25] the apostle Paul was not talking about committing unruly churchmen to some satanic cult. Nor did he mean by the following counsel that the church at Corinth should engage in demonic incantations:

> When you are assembled in the name of our Lord Jesus and I am with you in spirit, and the power of our Lord Jesus is present, hand this man over to Satan, so that the sinful nature may be destroyed and his spirit saved on the day of the Lord.[26]

In both cases, Paul was heeding Christ's commandment concerning brethren who rejected both the glorious gospel and the rule of law: turn them over to the Caesarean criminal justice system for their own good and for the good of the church. Thus, the earliest Christians were keenly aware that Rome's purpose, as the spiritual heir of Cain and the incarnation of the satanic spirit, was (1) to teach the people of God not to blaspheme, (2) to destroy the sinful nature, thereby (3) to save man's spirit from eternal damnation on judgment day. This violent good-working spirit is characterized at Psalm 2:9 and again at Revelation 2:27 as a "rod of iron" with which Christ rules nations and dashes them to pieces. The Judaean political leaders, anticipating a Messiah who would overthrow Caesar, didn't understand that Rome was Christ's rod of iron. Because He would not dash Rome to pieces, they declared Him an impostor, demanded His crucifixion, and gloated when He failed to come off the cross. They could not fathom His consenting to suffer under the violent justice of His own rod. Nor could they foresee that He would use this same rod on September 8, 70 in the person of the Roman general Vespasianus Titus, who captured their rebellious city, Jerusalem, and dashed it to pieces.

Paul, whom his non-believing Israelite brethren continually mugged, persecuted, jailed, tortured, and hounded throughout his Mediterranean and Aegean ministry, understood the rod of iron. It was in his letter to the Romans that we find perhaps the most eloquent statement on the New World Order ever written (I cite from the New International Version):

> Everyone must submit himself to the governing authorities, for there is no authority except that which God has established. The authorities that exist ["powers that be" in the King James Version] have been established by God.
>
> Consequently, he who rebels against the authority is rebelling against what God has instituted, and those who do so will bring judgment on themselves.
>
> For rulers hold no terror for those who do right, but for those who do wrong. Do you want to be free from fear of the one in authority? Then do what is right and he will commend you.
>
> For he is God's servant to do you good. But if you do wrong, be afraid, for he does not bear the sword for nothing. He is God's servant, an agent of wrath to bring punishment on the wrongdoer.
>
> Therefore, it is necessary to submit to the authorities, not only because of possible punishment but also because of conscience.
>
> This is also why you pay taxes, for the authorities are God's servants, who give their full time to governing.
>
> Give everyone what you owe him: If you owe taxes, pay taxes; if revenue, then revenue; if respect, then respect; if honor, then honor.
>
> Let no debt remain outstanding, except the continuing debt to love one another, for he who loves his fellowman has fulfilled the law.[27]

Since the epoch of Emperor Constantine, the Roman papacy has fostered the concept that the ruler who terrorizes wrongdoers is necessarily a Christian. Pope Sylvester, the Bishop of Rome who supposedly converted Constantine to Christianity, saw nothing strange in a warrior coming to faith in a crucified Christ by slaughtering his enemies."[28] This thinking pervaded Sylvester's successors, as well as the Crusades, the Holy Roman Empire, European nationalism, the American Revolution, the War of Southern Secession, and the wars of the twentieth century. Indeed, perhaps the black papacy's most admirable psychological conquest is that Protestants generally agree that armed rulership is an authority instituted by God for Christians to exercise. Since there is no scriptural authority for a member of the Body of Christ to bear any kind of armament whatsoever other than the figurative weaponry of God's Word, agreeing to such a principle signifies prima facie adherence to the moral guidance of him who bears the power of Almighty God on earth, the person who legitimately bears the mark of Cain in a long succession begun with Peter. Yes, the popes can truthfully declare that "Peter" is their foundation by holding in mental reservation that the Hebrew פטר, pronounced "payter," means... firstling,[29] which of course is Cain's primary attribute as firstborn of Eve.

Supporters of the argument favoring lethal-force Christian rulership usually stand on a single scriptural passage. It's that verse in Luke 22 wherein, as the betrayal nears, Christ admonishes his disciples, "If you don't have a sword, sell your cloak and buy one."[30] I have often heard Christian militiamen (some of whom I am not ashamed to call my friends) use this to justify arming themselves against the minions of unjust rulers. But Jesus explained otherwise in the very next verse: "It is written: 'And he was numbered with the transgressors' [see Isaiah 53:12]; and I tell you that this must be fulfilled in me." In order to fulfill prophecy, Christ had to be numbered among lawbreakers, which bearing swords would certainly make of the disciples of any true Prince of Peace. As soon as the disciples produced two swords – the minimum number constituting the plural "transgressors" – prophecy was fulfilled. Christ then told them "It is enough." From then on, no more cloaks were sold, no more swords bought.

ROMAN Christianity's success at avenging evil has resulted in a world that severely mistrusts the Christian gospel. It's to Rome's advantage that the Christian gospel be mistrusted, for any soul that mistrusts Christ is Rome's lawful prey. It's to Rome's advantage that governing bodies be rebelled against as tyrannical, for rebellion against tyrants is disobedience to the glorious gospel. Much as I despaired over the vicious taking of innocent life in the Waco massacre, I had no choice but to see it as a rather standard Church-Militant inquisitorial procedure against perceived rebelliousness. ATF Special Agent Davy Aguilera's affidavit,[31] which resulted in the warrant under which governing bodies invaded the Davidian compound, dutifully listed the scriptural errors of David Koresh. According to the affidavit, Vernon Howell adopted the name David Koresh because he "believed that the name helped designate him as the messiah or the anointed one of God" (p2). Yet one group member stated that Koresh's teaching "did not always coincide with the Bible" (p11). This allegation is supported by Aguilera's finding that the "anointed one of God" and his followers had spent at least $44,000 on guns and explosives during 1992 alone, including hand grenades and rifle grenades, gunpowder and potassium nitrate (p6). Where in Scripture are the anointed ones of Christ told to stock up on destructive weaponry? According to Aguilera's inquisition, "David Koresh stated that the Bible gave him the right to bear arms" (p15). Where in the glorious gospel is an anointed one of God given the right to bear arms? Koresh prophesied the immanent end of the world, "that it would be a 'military type operation' and that all the 'non-believers' would have to suffer" (p9). Where in Scripture are Christians commanded to make war against non-believers?

From the Inquisition's standpoint, the Davidians paid lip-service to Jesus Christ but demonstrated a substantive infidelity to Him by infringing upon the ancient Cain franchise – the mark – which flows through the United States government from the black papacy. Against Christ's commandment, even while professing scriptural knowledge, the Davidians chose to brandish deadly weapons – weapons that Cain could envision pointed at himself someday. How could any mark-bearing ruler resist mobilizing sevenfold vengeance in self-defense? How could Cain resist holding these professed Christians responsible under Christ's warning at Revelation 13:10: "He that killeth by the sword must be killed by the sword"? Is it any wonder that government regards memories of Waco as little more than annoyances to be stonewalled?

YET one can live intelligently, freely, and safely in a World legitimately governed by the Trickster. The secret is revealed in the resource which the Trickster has labored so tirelessly to marginalize: the Holy Bible. I cite again that remarkable verse in Habakkuk (2:4), in which God tells us that although governing bodies have the wrong desires, we can live safely in their faith that God will not punish them for annihilating their mortal enemies.

Scripture reduces all human interaction to two great ministries: the ministry of Condemnation"[32] and the ministry of Reconciliation.[33] Condemnation is the rulership of evil by law; it judges and does justice. Since its subject is the criminal mind ("the strength of the law is sin"), Condemnation requires the brilliance of the firstling, Cain, along with the deviousness of Jesuitry and Sun-Tzu. Condemnation enforces its authority with deadly force – it "does not bear the sword for nothing."

The ministry of Reconciliation teaches and administers the glorious gospel of Christ. Reconciliation does not judge executably or do justice. Rather, it judges spiritually, it loves, nurtures, suffers patiently, forgives, and rejoices in the truth. Reconciliation never fails because its strength is not sin but the power of God.

The ministry of Condemnation operates "out from the presence of the Lord." Its only proof of divine association is an inert substance, a seal, a pallium, a miter, a collar, a badge, the mark of Cain, the insignia of its authority to terrorize evildoers. The ministry of Reconciliation is directly animated by the Lord operating within. It proves divine association by everything it does: its mere existence is its seal.

There are exceptions, of course: Condemnors who Reconcile and Reconcilers who Condemn. Many loving Roman Catholic priests dedicate their lives to a form of reconciliation, Confession and Absolution. But aren't these sacraments really a process of Condemnation in which the confessant pleads guilty and is sentenced on the spot by the priestly judge to certain penitential acts which pardon the guilt? Reconciliation according to Scripture forgives the sin free of charge and directs the confessant's energies not to punishments but toward a repentant, constructive life within the mind of Christ. I suspect there are lots of Catholic priests who do true Reconciliation, even though it's technically heretical. My elderly British Jesuit friend stationed at the Gesu was a Reconciler of sorts: he took confession every weekday afternoon by the clock in Italian, a language he didn't understand.

My father was a good lawyer who denied himself many a handsome legal fee by trying to reconcile marriages out of divorce court. He was a minister of Condemnation by trade, yet the word of God written on his heart made a Reconciler out of him almost in spite of himself. This, I believe, is what Scripture calls "every knee bow[ing] at the name of Jesus Christ, in heaven and on earth, and under the earth."[34] It's proof of the great power of Reconciliation that the World highly esteems Condemnors who Reconcile, Condemnors for whom the name of Jesus Christ may not be important or even credible. (My private opinion is that many who find Christ uninteresting have been sold an inferior gospel by hypocritical preaching. I tend to agree with G.K. Chesterton's remark, "It's not that Christianity has been tried and found wanting, but that it's hardly been tried at all.")

Despite crossovers, Condemnation and Reconciliation work together as opposites, like male and female, sea and land, night and day, yin and yang. Condemnation punishes us for alienating God; Reconciliation lovingly brings us together with God. Condemnation cannot bring us to God, but it can drive us to Him. Reconciliation cannot punish us for alienating God, but it can release us to Condemnation, which walks to and fro in search of corrupt Reconcilers to persecute along with the usual suspects. Release is a conciliatory operation. The spiritual judgments of Reconciliation are executed in release, while the natural judgments of Condemnation are executed by the opposite of release: restriction – restriction of body, comfort, freedom, property, options, life.

Restriction is the flexure of Condemnation's muscle, and this is good for Reconciliation. It provides God a captive audience. I saw it in a dozen jail cells in Tennessee, Oklahoma, Georgia, Mississippi, and California. Condemnation can so restrict that its subject cries out for Reconciliation. In jail, God is not a philosophical proposition to be deliberated at leisure. He's a vivid benefit grasped as though He were a key to the jailhouse lock. I have seen it so often, under so many circumstances, that I have to regard it as a principle: The More Restriction, the Closer to God.[35] So even though the ministry of Condemnation is directed by Satan to do justice among evildoers (and what could be more just than for Satan to rule evil?), the ultimate beneficiary is He who ordained the whole system in the first place.

For, just as Paul says, Satan is an angel of light and his ministers are ministers of righteousness whose end shall be according to their works. Scripture is a catalog of satanic ministers who were absolutely necessary for Christ to perform His finished work: the Serpent, Cain and Enoch, Ham, Nimrod, Esau, Pharaoh, the Amalekites, Nebuchadnezzar, Belshazzar, Cyrus, Ahasueras, Haman, Judas, and many, many others. Some were deplorably wicked, other surprisingly moral – it was Judas' sense of guilt that drove him to suicide. The Jesuit priest who inaugurated my prosecution on the Feast Day of St. Ignatius was a satanic minister, and he was absolutely necessary for my maturity as a Christian. He sent me on a fifteen-year journey that has brought me to this page.

ONCE I understood the two ministries, hard questions answered themselves. What can a responsible citizen do to restore moral, fair, constitutional government? First, realize that no judgment that government is immoral, unfair, or unconstitutional can be executed unless by an authorized person. Only Condemnation has authority to alter government's patterns of conduct. To change government by conventional means, I must become a Condemnor. (Can anyone name a true Reconciler who is great in the World?) To gain influence among Condemnors, I must master the arts of Sun-Tzu and the Trickster. Little good this will do, for as my investigation has tended to show, always the preponderance of Condemnation's resources go into keeping the system evil. If I build forces capable of meaningfully altering the system, the masters will terminate me because they are authorized by God to avenge sevenfold those who would slay Cain. In short, the potential for improvement within the system of Condemnation appears to be limited to cyclical periods of pretty good times, pretty bad times. Isn't this obvious from history and the news?

Of course, God could change government by a simple miracle, and Revelation says He will, on the "last day," the fearful day of cosmic shakedown when unrepentant evildoers will burn with their beast and only the perfect will remain. Scripture is silent as to when that day will come. In the meantime, Reconcilers are told that improving human rulership is their responsibility. Not by taking control of the system, and not by sealing themselves off in well-fortified communes, either. Reconcilers improve the system by making themselves... available. Reconcilers are attractive to Condemnation because they don't judge or attempt to do justice. They don't put down, attach blame, or pin guilt. Consequently, Reconcilers are not perceived as a threat. They are wise as serpents and harmless as doves.[36]

This is not to say that Reconcilers condone evil. Their posture toward sin is this: People know right from wrong. People don't need to be told they're sinful. People know. God's law written on their hearts continually reminds them. What the World needs is the friendship of someone who is God-minded (if not well-versed in the Word of God), someone confident in the Love of God who can patiently and non-judgmentally hold the most evil of souls in friendship while helping it work through repentance to healthier values at its own pace.

Many years in Condemnation have driven me into the ministry of Reconciliation, and the heart of Reconciliation is love. I now appreciate the simple wisdom in Felix Mendelssohn's question, "Why should any man offend the people in power?" Offending people in power – offending anyone – is no longer attractive to me. I do good, or at least try to with our Lord's help. The most reliable instruction I've yet found for this purpose is the Bible with its glorious gospel, and the Bible tells me that if I do good (not good as I see it, but good as the gospel defines it: Love God with all your heart, soul, and mind; love your neighbor as yourself), the rulers of evil will commend me.

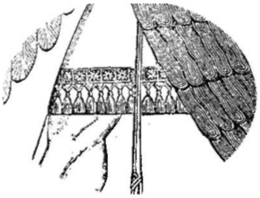
And so I freely subject myself to Condemnation for examination of my conscience. Who knows? I might just interest the examiner in the joys of Reconciliation. Taxes? I continue to pay every tax for which I am liable, and none for which I'm not.

Finally, I anticipate that some may disagree with certain of the conclusions in this and other chapters. I welcome disagreement. Disagreement is the mother of this book. Nobody is paying me to market any particular doctrine. I'm not the kind of person who has to be right. I let the evidence lead me. The evidence shaped my conclusions. The evidence wrote this book. To anyone who knows of countervailing evidence, evidence that might point me in a different direction, this is my request to see it. I'm not above repenting again, nor would I shrink from printing retractions. I want Reconciliation, and I want Truth.

If St. Francis Xavier can say "I would not even believe in the Gospels were the Holy Church to forbid it," with no less commitment I can say that I would not believe even the Bible were Truth to forbid it.

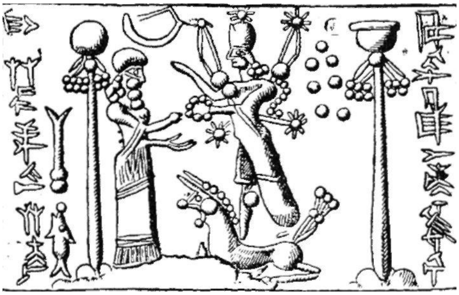
Appendix A

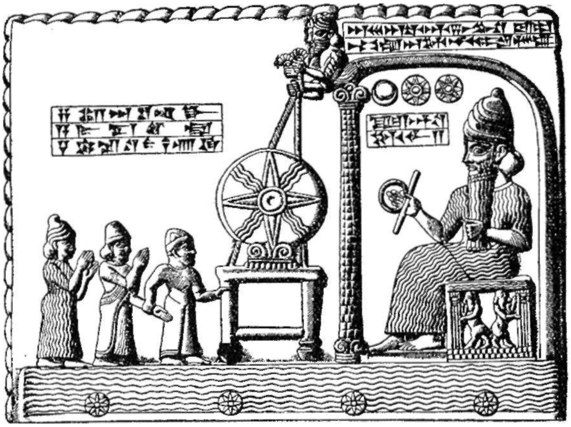
FIFTY CENTURIES OF THE ANNU SIGNATURE



Above. The hem of Marduk's garment (see page 267) consists of the Annu signature, authorizing Marduk to rule evildoers.

Right. Ancient Babylonian cylinder in the British Museum depicts the Queen of Heaven, Ishtar, empowered by four Annu signatures.





Left. Stone tablet in the British Museum depicts Nabonidas, the scholarly Babylonian Pontifex Maximus, supervising the placement of the ancient Annu signature during the restoration of Annu's temple at Sippara eight or nine centuries before Christ.

Left. St. Peter's Piazza at Rome, where throngs gather to give audience to the popes, is inlaid with the Annu signature Below. Front and back-side of an ancient Assyrio-Babylonian bronze tablet "representing the world in the clutches of an evil demon" (1959 Britannica Vol. 7, p 190). The "demon" is just a dog, who shepherds unruliness for Annu, as does Satan for Yahweh "by going to and fro in the earth, and walking up and down in it." Note the Annu signature just below and to the left of the dog's gaping mouth. Canines are a favorite metaphor for Cain. There's no brighter star in the heavens than the "dog star," named Canis Major after Cain. The Egyptians called Canis the "second sun" because it ruled the mysterious world of night, a ruler of what Paul calls "the darkness of this world" (Ephesians 6:12). Homer called Canis "the evil star" because its rising brought on the hot summer season and its attendant pestilence. Human sacrifices were offered to appease the dog star, believed by many scholars to be the "Lucifer" of Isaiah 14:12.

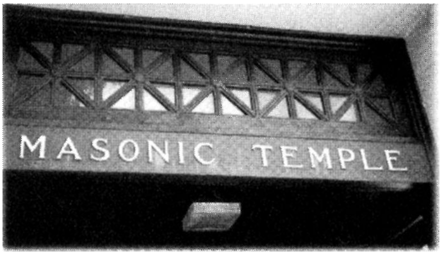
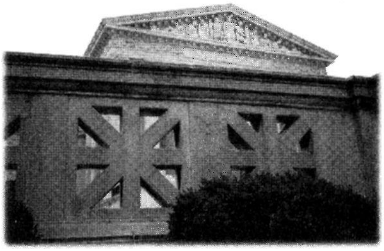
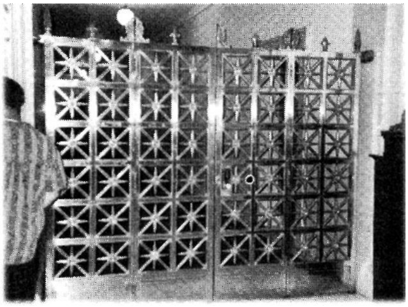
Right. The Annu signature declares the entrance to Harvard Law School.

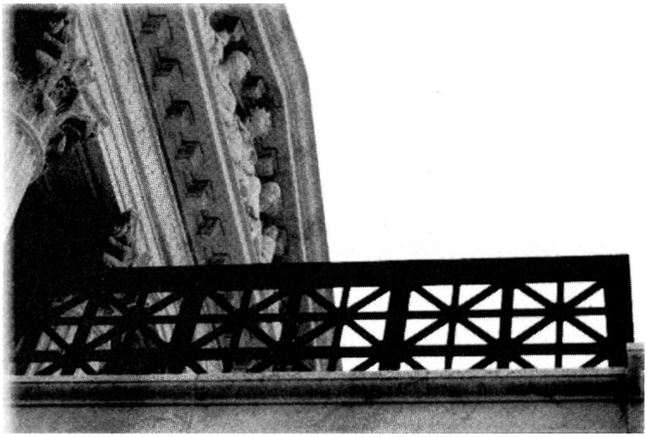


Left. As the Commander Albert Pike attested, the Annu signature and other emblems representing Cain's authority to rule have been protected by Freemasonry since their creation by Enoch. Every Masonic temple proclaims its devotion to Annu.

Below. The U.S. Supreme Court Building reveals the Annu signature in its exterior stone and bronze work, as well as its interior throughout. American justice avenges its offenders at least sevenfold not because it is corrupt but because it has inherited Cain's divine empowerment to do so.







1. Ignatius Loyola, 1 April 1541 – 31 July 1556 (65 yrs at death)
2. Diego Laynez, 2 July 1558 – 10 Jan 1565 (53)
3. Francis Borgia, 2 July 1565 – 1 October 1572 (62)
4. Everard Mercurian, 23 April 1573 – 1 August 1580 (?)
5. Claudius Aquaviva, 19 Feb 1581 – 31 Jan 1615 (72)
6. Mutius Vitelleschi, 15 Nov 1615 – 9 Feb 1645 (82)
7. Vincent Caraffa, 7 Jan 1646 – 8 June 1649 (65)
8. Francis Piccolimini, 21 Dec 1649 – 17 June 1651 (69)
9. Alexander Gottifred, 21 January 1652 – 13 March 1652 (58)
10. Goswin Nickel, 17 March 1652 – 31 July 1664 (82)
11. John Paul Oliva, who had been elected Vicarius Generalis perpetuus cum jure succedendi 7 Junii 1661 was immediately invested with the government of the Society at Nickel's death. He died 96 November 1681 (81)
12. Charles de Noyelle, 5 July 1682 – 12 Dec 1686
13. Thyrsus Gonzales, 6 July 1687 – 19 Nov 1705 (78)
14. Michaelangelo Tamburini, 31 Jan 1706 – 28 February 1730
15. Francis Retz, 30 Nov 1730 – 19 Nov 1750 (78)
16. Ignatius Viconti, 4 July 1751 – 4 May 1755
17. Luigi Aloysius Centurioni, 30 November 1755 – 2 October 1757
18. Lorenzo Ricci, 21 May, 1758 – 24 Nov 1775 (72)

The brief of Clement XIV for suppressing the Society, dated 21 July 1773 was put in execution 16 August.

Superior Generals of the Society of Jesus according to The Historical Catechism, chiefly relating to the English Province of the Society, Ed. by George Oliver, St Nicholas Priory, Exeter, 1838; amplified by current research)

IN RUSSIA

19. Stanislaus Czerniewicz, permitted by Catherine the Great to feign for life as “Superior General for Russia” 17 Oct 1782 – 21 Oct, 1785 (57)
20. Gabriel Lenkiewisz, 8 October, 1785 – 21 October 1798 (77)
21. Francis Karew, 12 Feb 1799 – 4 Aug 1802 (71)
22. Gabriel Gruber, 22 Oct 1802 – 6 April 1805 (67)
23. Thaddeus Brzozowski, elected in 1805, would serve as head of the whole Society when it was restored 7 August 1814 by the Bull of Pope Pius VII Solicitudo omnium Ecclesiarum, but would never remove to Rome because the Russian Government refused him permission to leave, died 5 Feb 1820

24. Aloysius Fortis, 18 Oct 1820 – 29 Jan 1829 (81)
25. John Roothaan 1829 – 1853
26. Pieter Jean Beckx, 1853 – 1887
27. Ludovico Martin, 1892 – 1901
28. Franz XavierWernz, 1907 – 1914
29. Vladimir Ledochowski, 1915 – 1942
30. Jean-Baptiste Janssens, 1946 – 1964
31. Pedro Arrupe, 1965 – 1981 (removed by Pope John Paul II)
32. Paolo Dezza, Giuseppe Pittau, 1981 – 1983 (appointed by John Paul II)
33. Peter Hans Kolvenbach, 1983 –

Appendix C

GLOSSARY

absolution: a remission of sins pronounced by a priest acronym: a word formed from the initial letter or letters of each of the successive parts or major parts of a compound term anathema: a ban or curse solemnly pronounced by ecclesiastical authority and accompanied by excommunication

Assyria: an ancient west Asian empire extending along the middle Tigris River and over foothills to the east, identified with Babylonia autocracy: government in which one person possesses unlimited power

Babylon: the ancient civilization spawned on foundations built by the historical Cain and his son Enoch; a metaphor for Rome black pope: informal name for the Superior General of the Society of Jesus bull: a solemn papal letter sealed with a bulla or with a red-ink imprint of the device on the bulla cabalah: (cabala, qabbala, etc): a system of signs, letters, numbers, and images believed to put one in private communication with God and like-minded persons; a gnostic system marked by mysticism, magic, and a belief in creation through emanation; esoteric doctrine or mysterious art

Caesar: a powerful, autocratic ruler, dictator, head of religious and civil governments but limited in Matthew 22:21 to the civil power. First to hold the title was Gaius Julius Maria (100-44 BC)

Calvinism: the theological system of John Calvin (c. 1570) and his followers marked by strong emphasis on the sovereignty of God, the depravity of mankind, and the doctrine of redestination casuistry: a resolving of specific cases of conscience, duty, or conduct through generally false interpretation of ethical principles or religious doctrine; specious argument, rationalization

Christendom: the part of the world in which Christianity prevails

Christian: one who professes belief in the teachings of Jesus Christ

Christianity: the religion derived from Jesus Christ, based on the Bible as sacred scripture, and professed by Eastern, Roman Catholic, Protestant, and nondenominational bodies condemnation: authoritatively judging a matter and rendering an enforceable opinion

Deism: a movement or system of thought advocating natural religion independent of scriptural revelation, emphasizing morality, and denying the personal involvement of the Creator in human affairs or with the laws of the universe

Diet: (from Middle English diete, day's journey, day set for a meeting, from Medieval Latin dieta, daily regimen): a formal deliberative assembly of princes or estates; any of various national or provincial legislatures ecumenical: of, relating to, or representing the whole of a body of churches; promoting or tending toward worldwide Christian unity or cooperation empire: from Latin imperium, absolute authority; a major political unit having a territory of great extent or a number of territories or peoples under a single sovereign authority encyclical: a papal letter to the bishops

Encyclopedists: the writers of the French Encyclopedia of Sciences, Arts and Trades (1743–51) who were identified with the Enlightenment and advocated deism and scientific rationalism

Enlightenment: a philosophic movement of the 18th century marked by a rejection of traditional social, religious, and political ideas and an emphasis on rationalism equivocation: to use tricky language especially with intent to deceive; to avoid committing oneself in what one says; lying extirpate: to destroy completely, to wipe out, to pull up by the roots, to cut out by surgery, to exterminate fascism: a political philosophy, movement, or regime that exalts nation above the individual and that stands for a centralized autocratic government headed by a dictatorial leader, severe economic and social regimentation, and forcible suppression of opposition

Gesu, the: the international headquarters of the Society of Jesus, at

No. 5 Borgo Sancto Spiritu, Rome

gnosticism: the thought and practice especially of various cults of late pre-Christian and early Christian centuries distinguished by the conviction that matter is evil and that emancipation comes through gnosis ("knowing") gospel: sacred writing, the message or teachings of a religious teacher, something accepted as infallible truth or as a guiding principle; the message concerning Christ, the kingdom of God, and salvation hierarchy: a ruling body of clergy organized into orders or ranks each subordinate to the one above it: a body of persons in authority; the classification of a group of people according to ability or to economic, social, or professional standing

Holy Roman Empire: the commonwealth of Europe ruled by papacy and Holy Roman Emperor as coordinate sovereigns. At various times, the Emperor claimed authority over the German states and Hungary, Poland, France, Spain, the Scandinavian peninsula, and the British Isles. However, the "effective empire" embraced only Germany, Burgundy, and the old Lombard kingdom in Italy's Po Valley

Ignatian: noun: a person under special oath to perform services, usually clandestine, for the Superior General of the Society of Jesus

Illuminati: any of various groups claiming special religious enlightenment; persons who are or who claim to be unusually enlightened illuminism: belief in or claim to a personal enlightenment not accessible to mankind in general

Inquisition: an investigation conducted with little regard for individual rights; a severe questioning; a Roman Catholic tribunal for the discovery and punishment of heresy, presently functioning under the title Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith

Israel: a complex identifier, being (1) the name given by Yahweh to Jacob, signifying Jacob's acquiring his twin brother Esau's birthright to lead God's chosen people; (2) the ancient Hebrew nation which, after the death of Solomon, divided into two kingdoms, Israel to the north, Judah to the south; (3) the biological nation of which the man Jesus Christ was a descendant through his mother; (4) a modern state occupying the rough geographical perimeters of Caesarean Judaea and Samaria, having an official policy of denying the New Testament Gospel; (5) the amorphous body of those who, through studious belief in and love for Jesus Christ, have been grafted by divine surgery to the ancient Hebrew nation

Judaea: Greek term for Judah, the southern Hebrew kingdom whose inhabitants were called Jews learning against learning: concept advanced by Cardinal Thomas Wolsey that pitted humanist doctrine against scriptural Christian teaching liberation theology: a religious movement especially among Roman Catholic clergy in Latin America that combines political philosophy usually of a Marxist orientation with a theology of salvation as liberation from injustice

Majesterium: the teaching authority of the Roman Catholic Church mental reservation or reserve: intentional withholding of truth when it is regarded as inconvenient to disclose it (as from people who are regarded as unable to understand it or receive it with benefit) missionary adaptation: process by which populations are brought under subjection to the Roman papacy by harmonious cultural integration notariqon: cabalistic technique in which the initials of an acronym create a word that enhances the acronym's meaning pagan: a follower of a polytheistic religion (as in ancient Rome); one who delights in sensual pleasures and material goods pallium: a white woolen band with pendants in front and back worn over the chasuble by a pope or archbishop as a symbol of full episcopal authority papacy: the office of pope; a succession or line of popes; the term of a pope's reign; the system of government of the Roman Catholic Church of which the pope is the supreme head

Papal States: lands ruled directly by the popes in central Italy between 755-1870 penance: an act of self-abasement, mortification, or devotion performed to show sorrow or repentance for sin philosophes: the deistic or materialistic writers and thinkers of the 18th century French Enlightenment

Pontifex Maximus: ancient title first applied to head of Babylonian civil and religious government, meaning "supreme (or sovereign) bridgebuilder;" first assumed by Roman autocrats at the deification of Gaius Maria as Julius Caesar in 48 BC; title owned by the Roman popes

Protestant: one who makes or enters a protest; any of a group of German princes and cities presenting a defense of freedom of conscience against an edict in 1529 intended to suppress the Lutheran movement; a member of any of several church denominations denying the universal authority of the Pope and affirming the Reformation principles of justification by faith alone, the priesthood of all believers, and the primacy of the Bible as the only source of revealed truth; a Christian not of a Catholic or Eastern church

Psychopomp: from Greek psychopompas, “soul director;” a name often applied to Mercury, Roman god of commerce, communication, and thievery ratio studiorum: Latin “method of study;” the educational process by which the Jesuit schools and colleges obscure the moral supremacy of the Holy Bible and secure tacit obedience to the will of the black papacy reconciliation: restoration of harmony and friendship; in Roman Catholicism: penance, the result of the sacrament of absolution salvation: deliverance from the power and effects of sin; the agent or means that effects salvation sacrament: a Christian rite (in Roman Catholicism: baptism, Holy Eucharist or Mass, penance, matrimony, anointing of the sick, confirmation by the Church, and holy orders) that is believed to have been ordained by Christ and that the Magisterium holds to be a means of divine grace sodality: from Latin sodalitas, “comradeship”: an association of Roman Catholic laity

Sibylline prophecies: utterances of any of several prophetesses usually accepted as ten in number and credited to widely separate parts of the ancient world (as Babylonia, Egypt, Greece, and Italy)

Spiritual Exercises: Loyola’s 30-day intensive program of psychological indoctrination designed to align individual thought with papal authority

Vulgate: a Latin version of the Bible authorized and used by the Roman Catholic Church

Appendix D

NOTES

PP 1-16

Chapter 1: Subliminal Rome

1. "Holy Alliance: How Reagan and the Pope conspired to assist Poland's Solidarity movement and hasten the demise of Communism." Time, February 24, 1992.
2. An updating of this list will not reflect a significant change in the presence of Roman Catholic lay-persons in the higher legislative reaches. According to the Association of Jesuit Colleges and Universities, in the 106th Congress there are 40 Jesuit alumni who graduated from 17 Jesuit institutions. There are 5 alumni in the US. Senate and 35 alumni in the House of Representatives. Out of these 40 alumni, 23 received graduate or professional degrees from Jesuit Universities. Georgetown University has the most graduates, boasting 15 alumni in the U.S. Congress. President William J. Clinton is a graduate of Georgetown University and Secretary of Commerce, William M. Daley, is a graduate of Loyola University of Chicago.
3. Scharf, History of Western Maryland, Baltimore (1882), pp 27-30
4. We, the People: The Story of the United States Capitol: Its Past and Its Promise, U.S. Capitol Historical Society, p 56.

Chapter 2: Missionary Adaptation

1. 1989 Catholic Almanac, p 175.
2. U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, Case No. 85–1309.
3. Just as the Roman priests traditionally took as their own the name of the god or goddess they served, judges on the United States Supreme Court ceremonially adopt the appelation of the goddess Justitia, as in "Mr. Justice Antonin Scalia."
4. Alexander del Mar, Middle Ages Revisited, California 90250: Hawthorne, Omni Book Club (orig. pub. 1899), pp 101–102.
5. Ibid., p 86
6. Ibid., pp 144–146
7. Chadwick, The Early Church, Eerdmans (1967), p 243
8. The New Catholic Encyclopedia, "Missionary Adaptation."

Chapter 3: Marginalizing the Bible

1. J. Edwin Hendricks, Charles Thomson and the Making of A New Nation 1729-1824, Fairleigh Dickinson University Press (1979), pp 136-137

2. Council of Toulouse, 1229.
3. Peter de Rosa, SJ, Vicars of Christ: The Dark Side of the Papacy, New York: Crown Publishers (1988), p 162 ff.
4. Pontifex Maximus has laundered the Inquisition's name twice. In 1908, Pope Pius X renamed it "the Holy Office," which Paul VI transformed into "Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith" in 1965,

Chapter 4: Medici Learning

1. Peter de Rosa, Vicars of Christ, p 116—118
2. Ibid.
3. De Rosa, Vicars of Christ, p 120
4. "Since printing cannot be put down, it is best to set up learning against learning, and by introducing all persons to dispute, to suspend the laity between fear and controversy. This at most will make them attentive to their superiors and teachers." Quoted in Lord Herbert's Life of Henry VIII.

Chapter 5: Appointment At Cyprus

1. In constructing this brief biography of Loyola, I draw from the following sources: Barthel's Jesuits, Martin's Jesuits, Aveling's Jesuits, Meissner's Ignatius, Caraman's Ignatius, Letson & Wiggins' The Jesuit Mystique, Paris' Secret History of the Jesuits, Catholic Encyclopedia, New Catholic Encyclopedia, and Encyclopedia Britannica. In certain needful instances, an individual source will be endnoted.
2. W.W. Meissner, SJ, MD, Ignatius of Loyola: The Psychology of A Saint, New Haven, London: Yale University Press (1992), P55.
3. Louis J. Puhl, The Spiritual Exercises of St. Ignatius, Westminster, MD: The Newman Press (1959)
4. Ibid.
5. Manfred Barthel, transl. by Mark Howson, The Jesuits: History and Legend of the Society of Jesus, New York: Quill, William Morrow (1982-84), p 29.
6. Michelet, Life of Luther, p 70, 71
7. Philip Caraman, SJ, Ignatius Loyola: A Biography of the Founder of the Jesuits, San Francisco: Harper & Row (1990), p 48

Chapter 6: The Epitome of Christian Values

1. While the unanimously-acclaimed Celestine II was being installed, "the Frangipani family, with the connivance of Chancellor Aimeric, broke into the assembly and at sword-point had Cardinal Lamberto acclaimed Honorius II." The Oxford Dictionary of Popes, p 165 ff.
2. Encyclopedia Britannica, "China."
3. Piquet, Des Banqiers au Moyen Age: les Templiers, Paris, (1931), as cited in Holy Blood, Holy Grail, p 451
4. Daraul, History of Secret Societies, pp 46ff.
5. J. M. Ragon, Cours Philosophique et Interpretatif des Initiations anciennes et modernes, edition sacree a l'usage des Loges et des Macons SEULEMENT (Masonic year 5,842) p 37.

6. J. B. Fabre Palaprat, Recherches historiques sur les Templiers, (1835) p 31
7. Michelet, Procès des Templiers, II, 404. This work largely consists of the publication in Latin of the Papal bulls and trials of the Templars before the Papal Commission in Paris.
8. Jules Loiseleur, La doctrine secrète des Templiers, p 141
9. Leviticus 16:6–10
10. I Kings 11:4
11. The Zohar, Section Ahre Moth, folio 70a.
12. I Kings 3:12.
13. Ibid, 11:4.

Chapter 7: The Fingerstroke of God

1. The Statute of Uses (27 Henry VIII, c. 10) Parliament concurred in Henry's assumption of Rome's clerical power with its Act of Supremacy, which stated: "Albeit the king's Majesty justly and rightfully is and ought to be the supreme head of the Church of England, and so is recognized by the clergy of this realm in their convocations, yet nevertheless, for corroboration and confirmation thereof, and for increase of virtue in Christ's religion within this realm of England, and to repress and extirpate all errors, heresies, and other enormities and abuses heretofore used in the same, be it enacted, by authority of this present Parliament, that the king, our sovereign lord, his heirs and successors, kings of this realm, shall be taken, accepted, and reputed the only supreme head in earth of the Church of England, called Anglicans Ecclesia; and shall have and enjoy, annexed and united to the imperial crown of this realm, as well the title and style thereof, as all honors, dignities, pre-eminences, jurisdictions, privileges, authorities, immunities, profits, and commodities to the said dignity of the supreme head of the same Church belonging and appertaining; and that our said sovereign lord, his heirs and successors, kings of this realm, shall have full power and authority from time to time to visit, repress, redress, record, order, correct, restrain, and amend all such errors, heresies, abuses, offenses contempts and enormities, whatsoever they be, which by any manner of spiritual authority or jurisdiction ought or may lawfully be reformed, repressed, ordered, redressed, corrected, restrained, or amended, most to the pleasure of Almighty God, the increase of virtue in Christ's religion, and for the conservation of the peace, unity, and tranquillity of this realm; any usage, foreign land, foreign authority, prescription, or any other thing or things to the contrary hereof notwithstanding." [From: Milton Viorst, ed., The Great Documents of Western Civilization (New York; Barnes and Noble, 1965) pp. 97-98]
2. Peter de Rosa, Vicars of Christ, page 28
3. Part IX, Sections 764 and 765

4. J. Huber, Les Jesuites, Paris: Sandoz et Fischbacher (1875), pp 71ff

Chapter 8: Moving In

1. Fourth session, April 8, 1546, The Canons and Decrees of the Council of Trent, translated by H.J Shroeder, Rockford IL: TAN Books (1978)

2. Barthel, The Jesuits, p 101
3. II Timothy 3:16.
4. Encyclopedia Brittanica, Livy ii, 21, 7; 27,5.
5. Barthel, The Jesuits, p 49

Chapter 9: Securing Confidence

1. La Chaize probably directed the King through the Fifth Exercise, the famous "meditation on hell," which became the centerpiece of Protestant "hellfire and brimstone" preaching. The Fifth Exercise, in its entirety, is as follows: "First point. This will be to see in imagination the vast fires, and the souls enclosed, as it were, in bodies of fire. Second point. To hear the wailing, the howling, cries, and blasphemies against Christ our Lord and against His saints. Third point. With the sense of smell to perceive the smoke, the sulphur, the filth, and corruption. Fourth point. To taste the bitterness of tears, sadness, and remorse of conscience. Fifth Point. With the sense of touch to feel the flames which envelop and burn the souls. Colloquy. Enter into conversation with Christ our Lord. Recall to memory that of those who are in hell, some came there because they did not believe in the coming of Christ; others, though they believed, because they did not keep the Commandments. Divide them all into three classes: 1. Those who were lost before the coming of Christ; 2. Those who were lost during His lifetime; 3. Those who were lost after His life here on earth. Thereupon, I will give thanks to God our Lord that He has not put an end to my life and permitted me to fall into any of these three classes. I shall also thank Him for this, that up to this very moment He has shown Himself so loving and merciful to me. Close with an Our Father."
2. Samuel Smiles, The Huguenots, New York: Harper & Brothers (1869), p 153
3. James J. Walsh, MD, American Jesuits, New York: The Macmillan Company (1934), P 174
4. Manfred Barthel, The Jesuits, p 125
5. Henry Foley, SJ, Records of the English Province SJ, VII, Part 2, London (1877-1883), pp 1162ff.
6. Garry Wills, Witches & Jesuits: Shakespeare's Macbeth, New York: Oxford University Press (1995), p 20.
7. Barthel, The Jesuits, page 42
8. Ibid.
9. Edmond Paris, The Secret History of the Jesuits (translated 1975, original publisher and publication date unknown), distributed by Chino CA: Chick Publications, pp 127-8
10. Peter de Rosa, Vicars of Christ, p 5
11. Ibid., p 138
12. Barthel, The Jesuits, p 260
13. Education Reporter, May 1996, published monthly by Eagle Forum Education & Legal Defense Fund, St. Louis, MO 63105

Chapter 11: The Thirteen Articles Concerning Military Art

1. Estimation in 1784 of then Father Superior of the American Mission, John Carroll, a Jesuit priest and brother of Daniel Carroll, upon whose land, “Rome,” the U.S. Capitol building was erected.

2. M. Martin, SJ, The Jesuits: The Society of Jesus and the Betrayal of the Roman Catholic Church, New York: Simon & Schuster (1987), p 490. Prof. Martin concludes that since the currently-reigning Supetior General, Peter Hans Kolvenbach, “sanctions” a book by Jesuit Juan Luis Segundo, Theology and the Church (1985), the book constitutes Kolvenbach’s “ultimate answer to the continued dissatisfaction of Popes with the new Society.”

Chapter 12: Lorenzo Ricci’s War

1. J.C.H. Aveling, The Jesuits, p 225
2. Hyneman and Lutz, editors, American Political Writing During the Founding Era 1760-1805, Indianapolis: Liberty Press (1983), Vol. I, p 383.
3. Ibid. The anonymous author of this 1776 material on the Penn Charter and the city of Philadelphia was, in the editors’ opinion “probably a lawyer – or at least had considerable knowledge of legal matters.”
4. Aveling, The Jesuits, p 225
5. Martin, The Jesuits, p 215
6. Aveling, p 278
7. Barthel, The Jesuits, p 208
8. Martin, p 212

9. Catholic Encyclopedia, “Lorenzo Ricci”

Chapter 13: The Secret Bridge

1. Martin, The Jesuits, p 23
2. Oxford Book of Popes
5. Sidney Hayden, Washington and His Masonic Compeers, New York: Masonic Publishing and Manufacturing Company (1868)
3. Hendricks, Charles Thomson and the Making of A New Nation, p. 189
4. Rush, Autobiography, p. 155

Chapter 15: The Madness of King George III

1. Koch and Peden, The Selected Writings of John & John Quincy Adams, New York: Alfred A. Knopf (1946), letter of July 3, 1776
2. In 1779, they would divide Bute County into two new counties, named Warren and Franklin, after patriots Joseph and Benjamin. Bute County no longer exists.
3. John G. Miller, Origins of the American Revolution, New York: Little, Brown (1943), p 190
4. S. Bullock, Revolutionary Brotherhood: Freemasonry and the Transformation of the American Social Order, 1730-1840, Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press, (1996), p 106
5. David S. Muzzey, Our Country’s History, Boston: Ginn &Company (1961), p 92

Chapter 16: Tweaking the Religious Right

1. Denis Gwynn, Bishop Challoner, London:Douglas Organ (1946), p 192
2. Gwynn, Challoner, p 191
3. Finke & Stark, The Churching of America, New Jersey: Rutgers University Press (1993), p 25
4. Theodore Sedgwick, Jr., A Memoir of the Life of William Livingston, New York (1844), p 136
5. The Literary Diary of Ezra Stiles, New York (1901), Vol I, p 490
6. Jonathan Boucher, in Miller, Origins, p 195
7. Thomas O'Gorman, History of the Roman Catholic Church in the United States, New York (1895), p 208
8. Sidney Hayden, Washington and his Masonic Compeers, New York: Masonic Publishing and Manufacturing Co., (1868), p 371. Before the Provincial Grand Lodge of New York, Rev. Seabury delivered an address December 27, 1782, as seen by the following record of that body: "Resolved unanimously, that the thanks of this Lodge be given to our Rev. Bro. Dr. Seabury, for his sermon delivered this day, before this and other Lodges, convened for the celebration of St. John the Evangelist."

9. Ahlstrom, Religious History of the American People, pp 368-70

Chapter 17: A Timely Grand Tour

1. The Barony of Stourton, according to Burke's Peerage, is "the oldest surviving barony created by Letters Patent." A "letter patent" is a royal grant.
2. The John Catroll Papers, Georgetown University,
3. J.C. Papers, Letter to Thomas Ellerker, October 26, 1772
4. Matthew 24:24
5. Garcia's manuscript translation from the French of Amiot's Thirteen Articles Concerning Military Art, used by permission of La Belle Eglise.

Chapter 18: The Stimulating Effects of Tea

1. As such, East India seems likely to have been the source of funding for Amiot's translation of Sun-Tzu. Perhaps someday this connection can be investigated.
2. Country Life, October 10, 1968
3. Ibid.
4. Geoffrey Holt, S.J, St. Omers and Bruges Colleges, 1593-1773: A Biographical Dictionary, London (1979)
5. Black's Law Dictionary, 5th edition, page 709
6. Pat Shannan, who investigates clandestine government involvement in great public catastrophes such as the bombing of the Murrah Building in Oklahoma City, suggests that the mysterious shot might have been fired by Sam Adams himself. When I spoke with Shannan in July 1999, he had just returned from several weeks of sleuthing around Lexington Green. He told me the following: "Sam Adams and John Hancock had big prices on their heads and were hiding out during the early morning hours of 19 April in the home of Rev. Jonas Clarke. Clarke's house is less than a quarter mile from Lexington Green. Adams delivered many of his rabble-rousing speeches at the meeting-house near the Green. It was from behind this meeting-house shortly after daybreak that the initial shot was fired on the redcoats. As to who was responsible for firing that shot, really the first of the Revolution, my number one suspect since my first visit to Lexington years ago has always been Sam Adams. He had motive, he had access, and he, more than anyone else, had been in the King's face for a long time with his firebrand speeches. He was always urging the people to value liberty more than life itself – which is really what that shot was about."

Chapter 19: The Death & Resurrection of Lorenzo Ricci

1. Hall, The Secret Teachings,etc., p CLXVIII
2. Ibid., CC

Chapter 20: American Griffiti

1. Council of Trent, Decree Concerning the Canonical Scriptures, Fourth Session.
2. The best-documented, most reasoned, and certainly most energetic analysis of the conflict between Roman Catholicism and Scripture is regularly published by Dave Hunt, of Bend, Oregon. His monthly newsletter, "The Berean Call," is studiously researched, wonderfully written, and free for the asking. Other finely reasoned works on the subject are James R. White's The Roman Catholic Controversy, and Roman Catholics and Evangelicals: Agreements and Differences by Norman Geisler and Ralph MacKenzie.
3. Dictionary of Symbols, Malmo, Sweden: Merkur International KB
4. Pennsylvania Gazette, June 8, 1769
5. Hislop, The Two Babylons, pp 240,241. Hislop cites the Phocica of Pausanius (Book x, chap xv, p 833)
6. Daniel 5:25, 26
7. Del Mar, The Worship of Augustus Caesar, p 306. "In all the earlier works referring to [Julius] he is called Caius Caesar, and sometimes simply Caius."
8. Syme, The Roman Revolution, p 218 ff
9. Del Mar, Worship of Augustus Caesar, p 318

Chapter 21: Jupiter's Earthly Abode

1. As published in Senate Document 332, 71st Congress, 3d Session, and available through the Library of Congress as "Johnson's Map of Georgetown and Washington." This phenomenon was first pointed out to me by Daniel Salmons, who has explored the cabalism of the federal city's layout with incredible fervor and imagination.
2. Maryland Gazette for September 26, 1793
3. According to the office of the Architect of the Capitol, the silver plaque has been lost, along with the cornerstone, despite two scientific excavations in recent years.

Chapter 22: The Immaculate Conception

1. National Republic, March 1960
2. Chiniquy, Fifty Years in the Church of Rome: The Conversion of a Priest, orig. pub. London, 1886, by Protestant Literature Depository. Abridged version published 1985 by Chick Publications, Chino CA. For refusing to obey his bishop's order to send a rich parishioner to a nunnery (thereby expropriating her wealth for the Church), Rev. Chiniquy was first excommunicated, then criminally prosecuted in Urbana, Illinois, on trumped-up sexual impropriety charges. Young Abraham Lincoln won his acquittal in 1856 by exposing perjury in the testimony of several priests. Chiniquy and Lincoln remained good friends.
3. I was personally informed by the Architect of the Capitol in 1992 that "no ground-level photographs of Freedom are known to exist."

Chapter 23: The Dome of the Great Sky

1. See The Dome of the United States Capitol: An Architectural History (U.S. Government Printing Office, 1992), and We, the People: The Story of the United States Capitol (U.S. Capitol Historical Society, in association with the National Geographic Society, 1985). Most of the material relative to Brumidi's association with the Capitol project is derived from these two handy resources.
2. Chiniquy, Fifty Years in the Church of Rome, p 312
3. Ibid.
4. Brig. Gen. Thomas Harris, Rome's Responsibility for the Assassination of Abraham Lincoln, orig. pub. 1897, repub. by Petersburg OH 44454: Pilgrim Brethren Press (1989), p 19.

5. John Cottrell, Anatomy of an Assassination, New York: Funk & Wagnalls (1966)

Chapter 24: The Mark of Cain

1. S.H. Hooke, Babylonian and Assyrian Religion, Norman OK: University of OklahomaPress (1963), p 15
2. George Smith, The Chaldean Account of Genesis, New York: Scribner, Armstrong & Co. (1876), pp 54–55
3. Hooke, Babylonian Religion, p 61
4. Genesis 4:7. God cautioned Cain that if he failed to do well, the Evildoer would lie at his door. "And unto thee shall be his desire, and thou shalt rule over him."
5. Genesis 4:15
6. Genesis 4:8
7. Genesis 4:10
8. Genesis 4:5
9. Genesis 4:2
10. Genesis 4:4
11. Hebrews 9:22
12. Matthew 26:28, Acts 20:28, Romans 3:25, 5:9, Ephesians 1:7, 2:13, Colossians 1:14, Hebrew 9:12, 9:20, 10:19, 13:12, I Peter 1:2, 19, I John 1:7, Revelation 1:5, 7:14, 12:11.

13. Ephesians 2:6
14. Genesis 4:6, 7
15. I Samuel 15:9
16. Genesis 4:26. Only upon the birth of Seth's son Enosh did "men [begin] to call on the name of the Lord." Up to that time, most of humanity apparently ignored or denied the Holy Name. These were Cain's lawful subjects.
17. Genesis 4:16
18. Genesis 4:17
19. Sayce, The Hibbert Lectures on Babylonian Religion (1887), p 185
20. Mrs. Sidney Bristowe, Sargon the Magnificent, Canada: Burnaby, B.C., Association of the Covenant People (undated, but estimated c. 1925), p 83. Sayce used the term Merodach, which is the Hebrew variant of Marduk.
21. H. S. Williams, Editor, The Historians' History of the World, A Comprehensive Narrative of the Rise and Developlment of Nations As Recorded by the Great, London: The Times (1980), Vol I, p 373. See also George Smith, The Chaldean Account of Genesis: Containing the description of the creation, the fall of man, the deluge, London: Sampson Low (1976), p 295.
22. Ibid. See also Bristowe, Sargon, for a well-documented presentation favoring the identification of Cain with Sargon and numerous mythological personages.
23. Edition 2, Vol. 3, "Babylonia"
24. Leonard King, Egypt, Babylon and Palestine, p 28 (noted in Bristowe)
25. Williams, Times History, Vol. I p 356.
26. H.R. Hall, The Ancient History of the Near East, London: Mithuen & Co. (11th Edition, 1950), p 172
27. Genesis 3
28. Bristowe, Sargon, pp 39-40
29. Ragozin, Zenaide A., Chaldea from the Earliest Times to the Rise of Assyria, London: T. Fisher Unwin (1886), pp 205-207
30. Cambridge History, Vol I, p 406 (noted in Bristowe)
31. "Slavery was part of the foundation upon which Babylonian society rested." Sayce, Babylonia and Assyria, p. 67
32. [London] Times History, Vol. I, p 362
33. Webster's definition.
34. Genesis 4:23-24
35. Genesis 17:7-8
36. Genesis 4:14
37. Habakkuk 2:4
38. Pike, Morals and Dogma, p 210
39. Genesis 5:17
40. Genesis 4:25
41. Genesis 5:4
42. There is a discrepancy of 191 years between Pike's reckoning and that inscribed into the plaque of the Capitol Cornerstone (1793 AD from 5793 AM) I am inclined to believe Pike's is more scientifically determined.
43. Genesis 4:16

Chapter 25: The Two Ministries

1. Hebrews 1:1
2. John 1:1-14
3. 1 Timothy 1:9-10 (NIV)
4. Matthew 3:8
5. Matthew 19:19
6. Matthew 5:44
7. Matthew 10:8
8. Matthew 6:12; 18:22
9. Mark 16:15
10. John 6:44
11. I Timothy 2:4
12. II Corinthians 3:9
13. I Corinthians 15:56
14. II Corinthians 11:15
15. I John 3:12
16. Job 1:6,7
17. Isaiah 14:12, Revelation 12:12
18. Job 1:7
19. II Corinthians 4:4
20. Ephesians 2:2
21. II Corinthians 11:13
22. Matthew 4:1-10
23. Ibid.
24. Matthew 18:14-17. In other words, “Respect his wish to avoid you, as the pagans do.” The tax collectors known to the Israelites were disloyal brethren hired by Romans to tax other Israelites for personal profit. Today’s equivalent might be undercover agents working to create tax liability for a church.
25. 1 Timothy 1:20
26. 1 Corinthians 5:4-5
27. Romans 13:1-8
28. De Rosa, Vicars of Christ, p 36
29. Strong’s Hebrew Lexicon, no. 6363
30. Luke 22:36
31. U.S. District Court, Western District of Texas, filed February 26, 1993, No. W-93-15M.
32. II Corinthians 3:9
33. II Corinthians 5:18

54. Philippians 2:10

35. The principle is proved by its reverse: The Less Restriction, the Farther from God, which is borne out by high recidivism statistics. The free world tends to dilute the intimacy with God which restriction has established.
36. Matthew 10:16

Appendix E

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Ahlstrom, Sydney E., A Religious History of the American People, New Haven & London: Yale University Press (1972)

Aveling, J.C.Hugh, The Jesuits, New York: Stein 6k Day (1981)

Barthel, Dr. Manfred, transl. by Mark Howson, The Jesuits: History and Legend of the Society of Jesus, New York: Quill, William Morrow (1982-84)

Baigent, Michael, Richard Leigh and Henry Lincoln, Holy Blood, Holy Grail, New York: Delacorte Press (1982)

Black's Law Dictionary, 5th edition

Bristowe, Mrs. Sidney, Sargon the Magnificent, Canada: Burnaby, B.C., Association of the Covenant People (undated, but estimated c. 1925)

Bullock, Steven C., Revolutionary Brotherhood: Freemasonry and the Transformation of the American Social Order, 1730-1840, Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press (1996)

Caraman, Philip, SJ, Ignatius Loyola: A Biography of the Founder of the Jesuits, San Francisco: Harper & Row (1990)

Carroll, John (edited by Thomas O'Brien Hanley), The John Carroll Papers, 1755-1791, in 3 volumes, University of Notre Dame Press (1976)

Catholic Almanac

Chadwick, The Early Church, Eerdmans (1967)

Chiniquy, Rev. Charles, My Fifty Years in the Church of Rome: The Conversion of a Priest, orig. pub. London, 1886, by Protestant Literature Depository. Abridged version published 1985 by Chick Publications, Chino CA

Cottrell, John, Anatomy of an Assassination, New York: Funk & Wagnalls (1966)

Daraul, Arkon, A History of Secret Societies, Citadel Press (1995)

Del Mar, Alexander, Middle Ages Revisited, California 90250: Hawthorne, Omni Book Club (orig. pub. 1899); The Worship of Augustus Caesar, Hawthorne, CA: Christian Book Club of America (1976)

De Rosa, Peter, Vicars of Christ: The Dark Side of the Papacy, New York: Crown Publishers (1988)

Dictionary of Symbols, Malmo, Sweden: Merkur International KB

Dillenberger, John, ed., Martin Luther: Selection from his writings, New York: Doubleday Anchor Press (1961)

Dome of the United States Capitol, The: An Architectural History, U.S. Government Printing Office (1992)

"Education Reporter," published monthly by Eagle Forum Education & Legal Defense Fund, St. Louis, MO 63105

Fabre Palaprat, J.B, Recherches historiques sur les Templiers, (1835)

Finke & Stark, The Churching of America, New Jersey: Rutgers University Press (1993)

Foley, Henry, SJ, Records of the English Province SJ, London (1877-1883)

Geisler & MacKenzie, Roman Catholics and Evangelicals: Agreements and Differences, Grand Rapids: Baker Book House, (1995)

Gwynn, Denis, Bishop Challoner, London:Douglas Organ (1946)

Hall, H.R., The Ancient History of the Near East, London: Mithuen & Co. (11th Edition, 1950)

Hall, Manly P., The Secret Teachings of All Ages: an Encyclopedic Outline of

Masonic, Hermetic, Qabbalistic & Rosicrucian Symbolical Philosophy, Philosophical Research Society, (1988)

Harris, Brig. Gen. Thomas, Rome's Responsibility for the Assassination of Abraham Lincoln, orig. pub. 1897, repub. by Petersburg OH 44454: Pilgrim Brethren Press (1989)

Hayden, Sidney, Washington and His Masonic Compeers, New York: Masonic Publishing and Manufacturing Company (1868)

Hendricks, J. Edwin, Charles Thomson and the Making of A New Nation 1729-1824, Fairleigh Dickinson University Press (1979)

Herbert of Cherbury, Edward, Lord, The Life and Raigne of King Henry the Eighth, London: Printed by E. G. for Thomas Whitaker (1649)

Hislop, Alexander, Two Babylons, Neptune, New Jersey: Loiseaux Brothers (1916)

Holt, SJ, Geoffrey, St. Omer's and Bruges Colleges, 1593-1773: A Biographical Dictionary, London (1979)

Hooke, Samuel H., Babylonian and Assyrian Religion, Norman OK: University of Oklahoma Press (1963)

Huber, J., Les Jesuites, Paris: Sandoz et Fischbacher (1875)

Hunt, Dave, Editor, "The Berean Call," P.O. Box 7019, Bend, Oregon 97708

Hyneman and Lutz, editors, American Political Writing During the Founding Era 1760-1805, Indianapolis: Liberty Press (1983), two volumes

Kaster, Joseph, Putnam's Concise Mythological Dictionary, The Putnam Publishing Group (1963)

Kelly, J.N.D.,The Oxford Dictionary of Popes, Oxford & New York:Oxford University Press (1986, 1989)

King, Leonard W., A History of Babylon, London: Chatto and Windus (1919)

Koch and Peden, The Selected Writings of John & John Quincy Adams, New York: Alfred A. Knopf (1946)

Letson & Wiggins, The Jesuit Mystique, Chicago: The Loyola Press (1995)

Martin, Malachi, SJ, The Jesuits: The Society of Jesus and the Betrayal of the Roman Catholic Church, New York: Simon & Schuster (1987)

Meissner, W.W., SJ, MD, Ignatius of Loyola: The Psychology of A Saint, New Haven, London: Yale University Press (1992)

Michelet, M., Life of Luther, written by himself, London: David Bogue (1846). Luther's texts collected, arranged, and translated by Michelet

Miller, John G., Origins of the American Revolution, New York: Little, Brown (1943)

Muzzey, David S., Our Country's History, Boston: Ginn & Company (1961)

Needham, Guil. (Imprimatur), A Brief Historical Account of the Behaviour of the jésuites and their Faction, for the First twenty five Years of Q. Elizabeth's Reign, with an Epistle of W. Watson, a Secular Priest, shewing, How they were thought of by the other Romanists of that Time, London: James Adamson (1689)

New Catholic Encycyclopedia (1967)

O'Gorman, Thomas, History of the Roman Catholic Church in the United States, New York (1895)

Paris, Edmond, The Secret History of the Jesuits (translated 1975, original publisher and publication date unknown), distributed by Chino CA: Chick Publications

Piquet, Des Banqiers au Moyen Age: les Templiers, Paris, (1931)

Pike, Albert Commander, Morals and Dogma of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite of Freemasonry, Richmond, Virginia: Jenkins, Inc. (1871, 1923)

Puhl, Louis J., The Spiritual Exercises of St. Ignatius, Westminster, MD: The Newman Press (1959)

Ragon, J.M., Cours Philosophique et Interpretatif des Initiations anciennes et modernes, edition sacree a l'usage des Loges et des Macons Seulement (Masonic year 5,842)

Ragozin, Zenaide A., Chaldea from the Earliest Times to the Rise of Assyria, London: T. Fisher Unwin (1886)

Rush, Benjamin (Ed. by George W. Comer), The Autobiography of Benjamin Rush, Princeton University Press, (1948)

Sayce, Archibald, The Hibbert Lectures on the Origin and Growth of Religion, as Illustrated by the Religion of the Ancient Babylonians, London: Williams & Norgate, (1909)

Scharf, History of Western Maryland, Baltimore (1882)

Sedgwick, Jr., Theodore, A Memoir of the Life of William Livingston, New York (1844)

Shroeder, H.J., trans., The Canons and Decrees of the Council of Trent, Rockford IL: TAN Books (1978)

Smiles, Samuel, The Huguenots, New York: Harper & Brothers (1869)

Smith, George, The Chaldean Account of Genesis, New York: Scribner, Armstrong & Co. (1876)

Stiles, Ezra, The Literary Diary of Ezra Stiles, New York (1901)

Strong's Exhaustive Concordance with Hebrew & Greek Lexicons

Syme, Ronald, The Roman Revolution, Oxford University Press (1966)

U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, Case No. 85-1309

We, the People: The Story of the United States Capitol: Its Past and Its Promise, U.S. Capitol Historical Society

Viorst, Milton, ed., The Great Documents of Western Civilization, New York; Barnes and Noble, 1965

Walsh, James J., MD, American Jesuits, New York: The Macmillan Company (1934)

White, James R., The Roman Catholic Controversy, Minneapolis: Bethany House Publications (1996)

Williams, H. S., Editor, The Historians' History of the World, A Comprehensive Narrative of the Rise and Development of Nations As Recorded by the Great, London: The Times (1908)

Wills, Garry, Witches & Jesuits: Shakespeare's Macbeth, New York: Oxford University Press (1995)

INDEX

A

Abel 268, 269,270,271,275,276
Abigail 198, 200
  Adams 196
abolition 239
Abraham 77
Abraham Lincoln 240, 241, 244, 251
Acadia 150
Acquaviva, Superior General Claudio 69 actors 72, 207, 251
Adams, John 104, 139, 140, 179, 184, 194, 196, 198, 200, 203, 208, 232
Adams, Samuel 140, 143
Addison, Judge 151
Admiralty 139, 141, 184
adultery 80
Aeneas 15, 121,216, 228, 256, 259
Aeneid, The 15, 16, 216, 231
Aguilera, ATF Special Agent Davy 286
Ahlstrom Sydney E. 242
Aimeric of Santa Maria Nuova, Cardinal 36
Alacoque, Ste. Margaret-Marie 108, 197
Albany congress 122
Alissiardi, Fathers 70
American colonists 85, 89, 126, 133, 139, 141, 142, 143, 148, 149, 161, 184, 195 American Inquisition xvi
American Jewish Congress 9
American Revolution 66, 85-86, 109, 115, 125, 129-131, 140, 156, 159, 173, 176, 261, 284
Americans United for Separation of Church and State 9
Amiot, Josef-Marie 86, 87, 88
Anacostics 176
Anathema 57
Anathematized 57
Andrea Gritti 32
Anglican 148, 151, 152, 184 annals 260
Annapolis 178
Annu 210, 266, 267, 268, 270, 271
Annuit Coeptis 5, 15, 214, 217, 218
Annunciation Day 197
Annunzio, Frank 3
Antietam 242
Antioch, Ignatius of 44
Apollo 11, 60, 217, 220, 223
Apostolic Nunciature of the Holy See 9 apotheosis 35, 69, 250, 256, 261
Appeal to the Ruling Classes 24, 65
Aquinas, St. Thomas 130
Aragon 110
Aranda, Count de 118
Aranzazu, Virgin of 30
Archbishop John Hughes 247
Archibald Sayce 271
Aristotle 14, 130
Ark 175
Articles of Confederation 260
artillery 111, 150, 231,261
Arundell, Earl of (Thomas Howard) 123
Arundell, Lord (Henry Howard) 172
Asher 77
assassination 115, 215, 219, 224, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255
Athens 23, 237
Atonement, Day of 39
Augsburg
  Confession 55
  Peace of 56
Augusta of Saxony 135
Avignon 38

B

Bacchus 11, 12,213
Baltimore 146, 151, 152, 174, 201, 235, 250 banking 37, 57, 161, 169, 188
Baptist Joint Committee on Public Affairs 9
Barcelona 30, 32, 43, 44
Barton, William 124, 209
Basel, Council of 197
Basque country 24

Batso Furnace 179
Bavaria 64, 70, 170
Beauregard, Gen. Pierre 240
Beckx, Superior General Pieter Jean 233
Beijing 167
Belgium 44, 67, 123
belli legum dormit 82
Benjamin, Judah P. 241
Berkeley Square 139, 168, 208
Berkeley, Dr. Edmund xiii, xiv
Bernard, Abbot of Clairvaux 35
Bernstein, Carl 1, 2
Berthier, the Jesuit 107
Beza, Theodore 130
Biden, Sen.Joseph 2, 3
Bidermann, Jacob 66
Bishop of Rome (pope) 85, 104, 207
Black Madonna of Montserrat 30, 70
Black Papacy 57, 82, 95, 97, 103, 120, 123, 133, 137, 139, 152, 159, 161, 177, 187, 194, 196, 232, 233
Black Pope 6, 47, 59, 71, 87, 103, 184 blood 20, 29, 39, 50, 51, 94, 121, 162, 182, 240, 241, 265, 268, 269, 270 Bohemia 31, 176
Boleyn, Anne 46
Boling, Kenneth 124
Booth, John Wilkes 251, 253
Bordeaux 38, 170
Boscawen, Admiral Edward 100
Boston 140, 141, 142, 143, 150, 162, 171, 173, 174, 177, 178, 181, 184, 185, 190, 193,238
Boston Massacre 143
Boston Tea Party 171, 173, 178, 185
Bourbon(s) 109, 111, 112, 118
Braddock, General Edward 100
Brady, Matthew 242
Branch Davidians 286
Braschi, Cardinal Giovanni 180
Brent, mayor Robert 4, 232
Briand, Bishop 194
Bristowe, Mrs. Sidney 272
Britannus Americanus 142
British colonies 82, 85, 147
British Empire 88, 89, 138, 140 broadcasting 70, 71, 72
Brown 1
Bruges 155, 157, 164, 171, 172, 177, 184
Brumidi, Constantino 5, 247, 248, 249, 250, 255, 257, 258, 259, 261, 262
Buddha 59
Bullinger, E. W. 198
Busenbaum, Hermann 79, 81
Bute, third Earl of (Lord Bute) 134, 136 137, 138, 139, 140, 155, 168, 184
Butterbriefe (indulgence) 21

C

cabalah 23, 31, 33, 36, 38, 39, 175, 196, 199 209, 230, 260
Caesar
  Augustus 5, 221, 224, 256
  Julius 6, 152, 210, 218, 219, 220
Cain 265, 267, 268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273, 274, 275, 276, 277, 279, 280, 281, 282, 283, 285, 286, 287, 289
Caius Maecenas 5, 219
Calvert 174, 175, 176, 177
Calvert, Cecilius 175, 176
Calvert, George (Lord Bute) 174
Calvert, Leonard 175
Calvin, John 44, 130
Cambridge 130, 177, 182, 189, 190, 191, 195
Campbell, Robert Allen 189,190
Canada 98, 100, 185, 194, 195, 253 canonization 10, 69, 245
Capitol (capitolium), U.S. 70, 234
Cardinal Thomas Wolsey 23, 102, 117
Carroll
  Charles 104, 156, 177, 178, 179, 181, 194
  Daniel 227, 230, 231, 232
  John xvii, 65, 123, 146-164, 169, 172, 88, 193,227,232,244
Casey, William 2
Cassio 150, 188
Castel Sant'Angelo 114, 171, 180, 185, 187, 188, 190
Castille 110
Castle William 143
Casuist 78, 81
casuistry 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 120, 150, 157
Catholic Action 70, 71, 72
Catholic Almanac 12
Catholic Church of the United States 152
Catholic Encyclopedia 1902 edition 4
  New (1967) 4
Celebrano, Father 70
Cenodoxus 66
Centurioni, Superior General Luigi 103
Ceres 5, 258
Chaize, Francois de la 64
Challoner, Bishop Richard 147
Champagne 36
Charles Habsburg 18, 27, 30, 32, 55

Charles Stuart 137, 174
Charleston 141, 171, 240
Chase, Samuel 194
Chattanooga, Tennessee xiv, xv, 243 children 24, 27, 46, 64, 93, 102, 103, 135, 206,221
Chinese 37, 86, 87, 88
Chiniquy, Rev. Charles 241, 252, 254
Christ, Jesus 15, 49, 50, 62,68, 150, 151, 205, 213, 231, 237 Christian Corurot'ers)' (Bellarmine) 130
Christianity xvi, 11, 12, 71, 208
Christopher Columbus 27, 235
Christopher Dodd 2, 3
Church Militant 51, 74, 103, 260, 261
Church of England 101, 102, 103, 129, 136, 148, 149, 152, 158, 174 Cincinnatus 249, 250 cinema 70, 71, 72
Civil War, American 239
Civitavecchia 111
Clark Mills 239, 240,250
Clark, Judge William 2
Clinton, William J. 3
coadjutors (lay agents) 52, 191 coin xvii, 59, 212, 222
College of Cardinals 112
Collegio Anti-Bellarminianum 130
Colombière, Claude de la 108
Columbine murders 73 commerce 2, 37, 57, 58, 59, 65, 167, 188, 196, 261 Company of Jesus 42, 45 condemnation 68, 121, 281, 287, 288, 289, 290, 291
Confederacy 240, 241, 242, 243, 251, 252, 253
Confederate States of America 240
confession 10, 28, 57, 63, 64, 107, 205
confessor, Jesuit 64, 98, ill
Confucius 118
Congregation for the Propaganda 97
Congregationalist 148
Connecticut 152, 173, 178, 227
Constantine, Emperor 11, 16, 206, 284
Constitution of the United States 66
Constitution of the United States Article VI, section 3 86
Constitution of the United States First Amendment 86
Conte, Silvio Rep. 3
contemplativus in actione 47
Continental Congress 124, 178, 179, 181, 185, 194 cowboys 70
Coxe, Jr., Daniel xix, 121-122
Coxe, Sr., Dr. Saniel 122
Crawford, Thomas 5, 238, 250, 257
Creighton, Bishop Mandell 1 critics 72
Crown 52, 94, 99, 101, 102, 106, 122, 142, 149, 156, 160, 169, 172, 173, 182,203
Cuellar, Juan de 44, 45
Cybele 11
Cyprus 12, 27, 29,31,32,33

D

Dark Ages 16
Darnall, Eleanor 104, 174, 176
David 12, 217, 286
Davidians 286
Davis, Jefferson 238, 240, 250
Declaration and Resolves of October 14, 1774 179
Declaration of Independence 40, 66, 78, 132, 133, 185, 193, 195, 198, 199, 200, 203,214, 260
Declaration of the Causes 182
Declaratory Act 142
Deism 118
Delaware 85, 124, 211
Diatriba theologica 112
Diet of Nuremberg 22
Dionysus 10, 12, 223
Directorium inquisitorum 57, 254
Discourses concerning Government (Locke) 131 Disestablishment 94, 114, 118, 169, 170, 180, 187, 188 divine right 120, 129, 130, 133
Dominus ac Redemptor noster 113, 169
Dorset coast 151
Douglas, Stephen A. 240
Dove 128, 130, 131, 132, 133, 150, 175, 251
Dover, Treaty of 122
Dr. Benjamin Rush 125
Dred Scott vs. Sanford 239
Due de Choiseul 118
Duties 141, 143, 172, 179, 184

E

Ea 266, 268
eagle 5, 210, 213, 231, 232, 257, 258, 260
East India Company 164, 167, 168, 169, 171, 173, 185, 186, 192, 193, 194
Edinburgh 40

Edison, Thomas Alva 70 education 4, 10, 41, 44, 66, 73, 102, 138 Egham races 136
emotional 73, 74, 82, 137, 183
emotions 74
Encyclopedia of Sciences, Arts, and Trades 117
Encyclopedists 117
England ii, 4, 23, 31, 36, 44, 45, 46, 49, 64, 67, 68, 69, 89, 94, 98, 101, 102, 103, 104, 108, 111, 113, 114, 121, 122, 123, 131, 132, 133, 137, 138, 139, 140, 142, 143, 148, 149, 151, 155, 157, 160, 161, 164, 168, 171, 172, 173, 174, 176, 180, 182, 184, 185, 195, 196, 197
English College 114, 170, 171, 177, 185
Enlightenment, the 102, 117, 119, 120, 126
Enoch (Unuk) 59, 266, 272-276, 294 entertainment 66, 73 Episcopal Church 153, 241 equivocation 78, 79, 80, 82, 101, 120, 157
Erasmus, Desiderius 20
Escobar, Antonio 81
esoteric experience 43
Eton 136
Etruscans 6, 219
euse 138, 141, 142, 143, 164, 168, 169, 182
Evangeline 150
Eve 31, 236, 268,275
evil 21, 22, 31, 39, 70, 72, 73, 123, 150, 170, 205, 206, 213, 217, 223, 229 Exercises 29
Exercises, Spiritual 28, 30, 31, 43, 45, 47, 66, 73, 108, 157

F

Family Compact 109
Farnese, Alessandro (Paul III) 46
Farnese, Giulia 46, 167
Farnese, Ranuccio 59
fasces 6, 153, 224, 256
Fascism 6
Faust, Dr. Johannes 19
Fazio, Rep. Vic 3
Feast Day of St. Ignatius Loyola xiv, 289
Febronianism 158, 159
Febronius, Justinius (see Hontheim) 113, 154, 157
Fillmore, Millard 248
Filmer, Sir Robert 130, 131, 133
Fiorentini 188
Firth of Clyde 136
Fitch, Ralph 168
Flag Committee 189, 193, 199
Flanders 4, 36, 164, 175
Floquet, Father Pierre 194
Florence 23, 157, 164,216
Florida vii, 98, 122
Florio, Rep.James 3 flying money (fei-chi'en) 37
Foley, Rep. Thomas 2
Fort Sumter 240 founding fathers 5, 66, 201, 204, 218, 224, 228,229 Fourteenth Amendment 239
Fox, George 101
France 11, 12, 28, 31, 36, 37, 38, 45, 46, 64, 71, 85, 98, 102, 106, 108, 109, 122, 137, 138, 139, 170, 174, 177, 184, 223, 241
Franciscan 112, 152
Franklin, Benjamin 100, 103, 107, 122, 139, 142, 172, 179, 180, 189, 190, 194, 195, 203, 208, 257, 258
Frederick II of Hesse-Hanover 160
Frederick William, Prince of Wales 135
"Freedom" 234
"Freedom" (see Libera, Justitia) 5
Freemason 36, 118, 123, 124, 152, 160, 169, 191, 195, 227, 237, 248, 252
Freemasonry 40, 58, 98, 100, 115, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 135, 140, 155, 160, 170, 173,194, 200,212,231,240
Freemasons 119, 120, 168, 170, 173, 185
French and Indian War 100
French, Benjamin B. 242, 249 fresco 5, 247, 249, 250, 251
Fromm vs. Carroll 152
Fullam, Judge John 10

G

Gadsden, Christopher 139
Ganganelli, Lorenzo 112
Garcia, Hermine F. 87
Garza, Rep. Kika De la 3
George William (George III) 137
Georgetown College 232
Georgetown University 81, 146, 170, 232
Germanicum, the 56
Germany xiv, 31, 36, 40, 45, 49, 56, 63
Gesu 114, 120, 175, 188, 238, 288 glorious gospel 280, 283, 285, 286, 287, 290 Gnosticism 23, 101
Goa 168
goat 39, 210, 226, 228
god 5, 12, 15, 19, 20, 21, 24, 28, 29, 30, 31, 38, 39, 40, 42, 43, 44, 46, 51, 57, 59, 69, 72, 82,93, 101, 105, 110, 113, 115, 125,

129, 130, 132, 159, 161, 169, 193, 194, 196, 197, 198, 200, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 213, 215, 216, 217, 219, 220, 221, 223, 224, 227, 229, 236, 237, 238, 243, 244, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260
Gonzalez, Henry 3
Got, Bertrand de 38
Governor Richard Penn 178
Governor Thomas Hutchinson 143
Grand Union Flag of Great Britain 192
Grant, Ulysses S. 251
Great Britain vii, 68, 71, 82, 86, 95, 98, 99, 104, 122, 126, 139, 140, 142, 149, 178, 184, 191, 192, 195 Guillotin, Dr. Josef 112 guillotine 112
Gulf of Mexico 98, 122
Gunpowder Plot 68, 69
Gury, Father 80, 81
Gutenberg, Johannes 17,19

H

Hades 60, 234, 237,258, 261
Haifa 32
Haig, Alexander 2
Hall, Manly P. 123, 199
Hamilton, Alexander 157
Harkin, Sen. Thomas 3
Harnett, Cornelius 139
Harris, Brigadier General M. Thomas 253
Harrison, Benjamin 189
Harriton 124
Harvard 149, 150
Hayden, Sidney 122
heaven 5, 30, 39, 45, 48, 62, 69, 212, 213, 216, 220, 222, 223, 228, 256 Hebrew 77, 118, 218, 229, 260 hell 24, 29, 50, 64, 73, 232
Hendricks, J. Edwin 124
Henry, Patrick 139, 142, 143, 181, 184
Hermes 59
Hesse-Hanover 160, 161, 180
Hierarchy 57, 70, 106, 121, 148, 218, 223, 224
High Church Party 174
Historians 22, 40, 44, 74, 106, 111, 115, 131, 176,194,199, 229, 231,235,239 history ix, x, xii, xvii, xix, 22, 46, 71, 73, 74, 109, 123, 124, 125, 136, 169, 171, 174, 190, 196, 223, 232, 237, 242, 249 Hitler, Adolf 40, 71
Holland 49, 143
Holy Land 30, 35, 36,37,45
Holy Roman Emperor Charles V 32, 40, 44
Holy Roman Emperor Maximilian 27
Hontheim, Nikolaus von xix, 154, 157, 158, 159, 160
Howard, Edward 155
Howard, Rev. Simeon 150
Howard, Thomas 123, 135
Huguenots xiii, xiv, xvi, 49, 85 humanism 65, 159
humanist 46, 69, 121, 159, 216
Hunter Commission 251, 252, 253

I

Iago 150
idolatry 80, 149, 207
Illuminati 31, 40, 68, 170
illuminism 44
Immaculate Conception 237, 239, 241, 243, 245, 247, 249, 250
In eminenti 119
Indian 99, 100, 107, 139, 168, 176, 184, 208 indulgences 21, 22, 57
infallibility 236
Ingolstadt College 70
Inquisition
  American xvi
  Roman xvi, 52, 57
  Spanish 44, 52
Inter mirifica 72, 73
Intolerable Acts 174, 185
IRS, income tax system xv, xvi
Isaiah 15, 219
Islam 32

J

Jacobite 137, 152
Jacobite Rebellion 137
Jerusalem 30, 32, 40, 43, 45
Jesui 77
Jesuit drama 67
Jesuit schools and colleges 65, 68
Jesuit theatre 66, 67, 69, 70, 71, 73
Jesuit warfare 83, 104
Jesuited78, 106, 120, 159, 184
Jesuitess 78
Jesuitic 78, 89, 121, 195,239
Jesuitry 78, 107
Jesuits xviii-xvi, xix, 45, 51, 52, 56, 57, 58, 63, 64, 65, 68, 69, 70, 72, 77, 78, 82, 83, 101, 102, 104, 105, 106, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 117, 118, 120, 123, 126, 131, 133, 137, 147, 150, 157,

160, 161, 167, 169, 171, 174, 175, 176, 177, 180, 181, 184, 185, 187, 191, 192, 195, 204, 208, 224, 227, 232, 233, 237, 239, 241,244, 247,286, 289
Johannites 38
John MacCoon xiv, xv, xvi, xix
John Mattingly 170, 185
John the Baptist 38, 197
Johnson, Andrew 251 journalists 72
Jupiter 5, 11, 67, 210, 213, 215, 216, 217, 220, 221, 223, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 238, 256, 257
Justinian, Emperor 23
Justitia 10, 258

K

Kao-tsung, Emperor 37
Kaunitz, Prince von 118
Kennedy, Sen. Edward 3
Kerry, Sen. John 2, 3
Keystone Cops 107
King
  Charles I (England) 4, 133, 174, 175
  Charles I (Spain) 27
  Charles II (England) 101, 131
  Charles III (Spain) 184
  Ferdinand V (Spain) 40
  Francis I (France) 46
  Frederick the Great (Prussia) 118
  George II (England) 100
  George III (England) 113, 166
  Henry III (England) 37
  Henry III (France) 63
  Henry VIII (England) 46, 129
  James I (England) 68, 99, 174
  James II (England) 152
  Louis XIV (France) 64, 85, 122, 131
  Louis XV (France) 63, 98, 108, 112, 113, 118, 184
  Philip IV (France) 37, 109
  William of Orange 152
Kino, Eusebio 70
Kircher, Athenasius 69
Knights Hospitallers of St. John 32
Knights of Christ 35, 40
Knights of St. John of Jerusalem 40
Koffler, Father 111, 112
Koresh, David 286

L

LaFalce, Rep. John 3
Lainez, Diego 56
Lambeth 148
LaValette, Father 106, 107, 108
laypersons 3, 10, 70
Leahy, Patrick 3
Ledochowski, Superior General Vladimir 71
LeFevre 46, 56
Leicester House 136, 137, 138
LeJay, Claude 56
Lexington Green 181, 185
Libera 10, 238
liberation theology 130, 132, 133, 150, 157, 197, 205, 251 line of demarcation 167 Liturgical Calendar xvi, 12, 196, 197 liturgical year 175
Livy 59
Llull, Raimon 33
Locke, John 131
London 37, 97, 100, 101, 103, 104, 121, 137, 142, 148, 152, 153, 162, 164,167, 172, 175, 177, 182, 184, 185, 239
London Coffee House (Philadelphia) 142
Longfellow, H.W. 150
Lorenzo Ricci's War 97, 99, 100, 101, 103, 105, 107, 109, 111, 113, 115, 139
Louis-le-Grand (college) 104, 107, 177
Loyola St. de Ignatius 44, 46, 51, 69
Ludolph of Saxony 28
Luis Vives 44, 45
Luken, Rep. Charles 3
Lulworth Castle 151
Lynch, Thomas 189

M mace 5

Madigan, Rep. Edward 3 magic lantern (laterna magia) 70 Magnificat 197
Main Street Journal xvi-xvii
Mainz (mentz) 20, 40, 156, 157, 160, 161
Majorca 33
Malone, Bishop James W. 10
Malta 32, 111
Manes, Grand Master Diego 32, 33
Manresa 31, 40
Maraniss, David 81
Marco Polo 168
Marduk 59
Maria-Theresa, Empress 111
Marie-Antoinette 112
Maritime War 100, 139
Mark of Cain 265, 267, 269, 271, 273, 275, 277, 285, 287

Markey, Rep. Edward 3
Mars 11, 161
Marshall, Justice John 239
Martin Luther 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 29, 30, 65, 199
Martin, Malachi 87
Martinique 106, 108
Mary, Virgin 22, 28, 48, 175, 197, 198, 212, 235, 236, 237, 238, 257, 258
Maryland 4, 86, 104, 147, 151, 156, 170, 174, 175, 176, 177, 184, 185, 196, 197, 198, 230, 235, 242, 244
Masons 119, 121, 123
Massachusetts 1, 8, 10, 138, 142, 173, 178, 181, 182, 185, 189, 227
Mayhew, Rev. Jonathan 149, 150
Mazzini, Giuseppe 248
McDade, Rep. Joseph 3
Medici learning 33, 68, 124
Medici Library 23, 24, 73, 120, 216 d'Medici
  Catherine xii
  Cosimo 23
  Giulio (Clement VII) 18, 23
  Lorenzo "the Magnificent" 22, 46
Medulla theologiae moralis 79
megaphone 69
Meigs, Montgomery C. 249-250
Mein Kampf 71
Mendelssohn, Felix 290 mental reservation 50, 78, 79, 80, 82, 101, 120, 187 merchants 47, 51, 63, 82, 141, 142, 143, 144, 161, 164, 168, 169, 170, 171, 173
Mercury 5, 59, 60, 67, 240, 261
Merodach 59
Merrie Land 175
Messiah 38, 197
Michaelangelo 24, 247
Mifflin, Thomas 179
Mikulski, Sen. Barbara 3 milice du Christ 187, 199 militiamen 100, 181, 285
Miller, Rep. George 3
Miracle On Main Street xii, xvii-xviii Miranda prorsus 71, 72
missionary adaptation 11, 13, 208, 211, 238, 256, 258
Mitchell, Rep. George 2
Molay, Jacques de 40
Moliere 67
Moneta 10
monetary system xii, xvii-xviii, 82 Montaigu 44
Montgomery C. Meigs 249
Montreal 194, 195
Morals and Dogma 118
Moses 203, 205
Mount Rothesay 137
Moynihan, Sen. Daniel P. 2
Mozart 67
Munich 40, 66,67, 156, 238
Murtha, Rep John 3
Muslim 35, 36

N

Nabonidas 276, 277
Najera, Duke of 28, 30
Nantes, Edict of 64, 85
Naples 40, 111
Naram-Sin 266-267, 277
National Association of Evangelicals 9
National Association of Scholars 73
National Council of Churches 9
National Portrait Gallery (UK) 152
Navarette 30
Navarre 30, 110
Negrona 32
New Deal 107
New England 98, 104, 111, 122, 140, 164, 184, 195
New France 98
New Orleans xv, 139
New Testament 20, 22, 29, 31, 32, 39
New Wardour Castle 172
new world order 15, 220, 224, 265, 283
New York 142, 147, 148, 173, 178, 240, 243, 247, 248
Niccolo Machiavelli 23
Ninety-five Theses 22, 29
Noah Webster 78
nonjuring bishops 152
Norfolk, Eighth Duke of 123, 135
Norfolk, Ninth Duke of 135, 136
North Carolina 139
North, Lord 143, 174, 185
notariqon 51, 161
Nova Scotia 150
Novus ordo seclorum 15, 214, 220, 256
Number In Scripture 198
nuncios 97

O

O'Gorman, Thomas 152
Oakar, Rep. Mary Rose 3 oath xiv, 40, 48,51,52,57,95, 119, 121,

152, 168, 187, 251, 274 oath of obedience 48, 51, 187
Obey, Rep. David 3
Odin 59
Ohio 99, 100, 108, 138
Oliva, Superior General John Paul 133
Olive Branch Petition 182, 185
On the State of the Church 113, 157, 159 opium 167
Osiris 11
Oswald, Lee Harvey 251
Othello 150
Otis, James 138
Our Flag 189, 192
Oxford 23, 102, 103, 112, 1 15, 177, 218

P

Paine, Tom 180, 185, 229
Pamplona 28, 32
Papal States 106, 111 paper currency 37, 100, 141
Paraguay 106
Paris 12, 19, 37, 40, 44, 67, 97, 104, 106, 139, 140, 157, 162, 164, 169, 170, 177, 184, 185, 208, 209
Paris, Treaty of 139, 141, 168
Parlement 106, 107, 108, 184
Parliament 68, 94, 106, 138, 141, 142, 143, 169, 171, 173, 175, 178, 181, 184, 185
Parma 111
Pascal, Blaise 79, 107, 232
Pastoral Letters 79, 106
Patriarcha (Robt. Filmer) 130, 131, 132, 133
Patuxents 176
Payen, Hugh de 35
Peculari quadam 70
Pell, Sen. Claiborne 3
penances 31, 43, 184
Penn, Admiral Sir William 101
Perm, William 100, 101, 102
Pennsylvania 85, 86, 100, 103, 121, 124, 139, 147, 152, 177, 178, 179, 181, 182, 184, 185, 211 pentagram 39, 210, 211, 213, 228, 257 Persephone 5, 234, 237, 238, 244, 258 personal liberty 85, 150
Petty, Robert (Lord Shelburne) 139, 168, 208
Pharaoh 203, 205, 206
Philadelphia 9, 102, 103, 141, 142, 162, 171, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 185, 194, 195, 197, 199, 211, 237, 244
Philadelphia, Charter for the City of 102 philosopher's death 190
